Mrs. Lathrap moved that "as it was a foregone conclusion that but one woman will be the choice of this Convention for president, and that one the woman who has led us so long, that the secretary be instructed to cast the ballot for Miss Frances E. Willard for president for the ensuing year." This motion was seconded, but as the constitution declared the officers, with the exception of vice-presidents and assistant recording secretary, should be elected by ballot, it was regretfully ruled out of order, the motion withdrawn, and the Convention proceeded to cast the ballot for president.

The result was as follows:

Whole number of votes cast	338
Frances E. Willard	333
Mary A. Woodbridge	2
Mrs. S. S. Fessenden	1
Mrs. C. B. Buell	1
Miss Esther Pugh	1

The secretary was unanimously instructed to cast the ballot of the Convention for Miss Frances E. Willard as President of the National W. C. T. U., and the following ladies were appointed to conduct the newly elected president to the chair: Mrs. Burt, of New York, Mrs. Cassel, of Colorado, Mrs. Lathrap, of Michigan, Mrs. Riggs, of Oregon, and Mrs. Goodale, of Louisiana. The audience sang "How Firm a Foundation" as the ladies came forward, and Mrs. Goodale presented Miss Willard in the following words: "It is with a good deal of pleasure and pride that I present to you our new president, our always president, Frances E. Willard."

Miss Willard made this tender response:

Beloved, as I stood before you and saw those waving handkerchiefs, as I have seen them many years, I said to myself, she does not know it. Then my heart said to itself, she knows it more than ever. Beloved, I pray God to make me not unworthy of my mother and not unworthy of your motherly hearts, and I ask Him to make you frank with me and me with you that we shall tell each other wherein each one can be truer to God and to humanity. When such speakers as Robert McIntyre and our bright women speak words of praise, we take it not to ourselves, but to our work. Even when the journalists say severe things we do not look upon it as personal; why should we take the blame any more than the praise? We will put it all on our great sacred cause. The words of Second Timothy come to my mind: "That under the harness no man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. And if man also strive for masteries yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully. Consider what I say. "And the Lord give thee understanding in all things." I said as our dear sister from Florida read these verses, I can apply that to my heart as words of electric fire burning into my heart and every heart. Pray that God will keep me and save every W. C. T. U. woman. I thank you and lift my heart in aspiration and prayer for every one of us here.

Mrs. Hoffman then said with an intense feeling which was echoed by every heart in that great, quiet audience:

It has always been our custom for many years immediately after receiving our new president to have a telegram sent to the mother of our president, and we always received a telegraphic response, containing such strong, ringing words as those that might have come from the noble woman whose sons were sent out to conquer. We cannot send a telegram to day, because we cannot touch the places that lie beyond as we do those that are here, but we believe that those that have passed beyond the vale are still near, and so I ask that the hymn, which was the favorite hymn of Madam Willard, and which during the last two years of her life again and again she asked might be sung at the family worship. I ask that we join heartily in singing this hymn, and who knows that she does not hear us? Who knows that she is not with us in spirit, touching our spirit and our hearts. It is on the 124th page of the White Ribbon Hymnal.

"There is a land of pure delight
Where saints immortal reign,
Infinite day excludes the night
And pleasures banish pain."

Miss Pugh referred to three of the general officers who had lost their mothers since they came into the white-ribbon work, and Miss Willard added that she had no doubt that those mothers were cognizant of what the daughters were doing to make the world more like the Heaven to which they had gone.

A rising vote of thanks was given Lady Henry Somerset for presiding over the Convention during the election of officers, to which she replied:

"Madam President, will you permit me to thank the Convention for having done me the great honor of allowing me to preside in this Convention. I fear I made but a poor president, having constantly to be prompted and not knowing the order of the business, but it is an honor that will remain in my heart, and I appreciate it most deeply."

Upon carrying a motion to send a telegram to the inmates of Rest Cottage and a letter to Mrs. Mary B. Willard, of Berlin, Miss Willard remarked: "Who so rememberful as the white ribboner, and what they can't think of, of kindliness and good will, I think would have to be searched for with a lighted candle."

The tellers' report on the vote for corresponding secretary was as follows:

Whole number of ballots cast	335
Mrs. Caroline B. Buell	288
Miss Mollie Hay	16
Miss Frances Griffin	10
Mrs. Woodbridge	7
Scattering	14

Mrs. Buell was declared duly elected and the tellers announced the votes for the other officers to be as follows:

For recording secretary	336
For Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge	308
For Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens	19
Scattering	9
For treasurer	330
For Miss Esther Pugh	296
For Miss Mollie Hay	11
For Mrs. Ellen Denny	10
Scattering	23

These officers were all declared elected, and expressed their thanks to the Convention. On the nomination of Mrs. Woodbridge, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, of Maine, was elected assistant recording secretary by acclamation.

The sweet devotional hour was participated in by Miss Greenwood, Mrs. R. J. Trego and Mrs. Woodbridge, and the benediction was pronounced by Mrs. Esther Frame.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

This session convened promptly at 2 o'clock with sweet-faced Mother Monroe in the chair than whom no one presides with greater dignity and equity. After the singing of the hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," Mrs. MacFarland, of St. Johns, N. B., offered prayer, and Mrs. Evans, of Kansas, sang by request, "The Battle Song of the Y's."

The report of the National Temperance Hospital was then given by Mrs. J. B. Hobbs, of Chicago, for the board and was in part as follows:

The National Temperance Hospital, formerly located at 3412 Cottage Grove Ave., Chicago, has been removed to 1619 Diversey Ave. The present building was erected for hospital purposes, and consequently has much better facilities for taking care of patients than the one formerly occupied. It is pleasantly located on a lot of one hundred by two hundred feet, and only three blocks from Lincoln Park. On the east side of the building, and overlooking a large, shady lawn, are three long verandas, where patients can enjoy the morning sun, or the cool of the summer afternoon. There is also a long, vine-covered arbor, not seen in the cut of the hospital, for the use of the patients. The building and its surroundings are very attractive, and would make a delightful permanent home for the temperance hospital.

None the less pleasing is the home-like interior. Of the forty-three rooms, several have been furnished by individuals, others by unions and states, and there still remains a number to be furnished. Also, a ward of five beds. Will not some state, union or individuals volunteer to furnish these?

There is great need of more such beds so that more free patients can be accommodated. The cost is only $350 annually to endow a bed, and the one doing this can designate who shall occupy it.

The house physician reports one hundred and fifty-seven diseases and one hundred and thirty-one surgical cases, a number of the patients had more than one disease, and others one or more surgical operations; eleven states, twelve nationalities and twenty-nine occupations were represented. The non-alcoholic treatment of disease is meeting with great success, as only two and one-half per cent. of the patients have died the past year—a record not made by any other hospital. The principles of this treatment are being more generally understood and approved, and its influence extended. March 29th, nine nurses graduated from the training school connected with the hospital. At present there is a class of eleven pupils, two of whom are Japanese girls from Tokio, Japan, who have come here to receive temperance training, and when their studies are completed they will return to practice their profession. They were sent by the W. C. T. U. of Tokio. The nurses are thoroughly taught the injurious effects of alcohol upon the human system, and are also taught the use of remedies in emergencies. There were forty-five applicants for admission to the training school during the past year, and still others on file from the previous year, which shows the desire to learn temperance methods. So far as we know the nurses have given good satisfaction. The street costume is to be of navy blue. There have been 121 in the hospital during the year, women, 103; men, 18. Some have remained a week or two, others months.

Mrs. Hobbs urged the importance of this work upon the white ribboners present and at the close of her remarks, a New Jersey delegate arose and announced that her state would furnish a room. The Convention pledged its help to this great practical temperance work.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the president of the Temple Trustee board, was next called upon and gave in glowing words an account of this monumental structure which has fulfilled the hopes of its projector in its utility and beauty. Mrs. Carse was received with hearty applause. In regard to the prospect for getting control of the stock she said:

The outlook is most promising. A contract was entered into the first of last February with Marshall Field, who is the largest stockholder, to purchase his entire block of stock, amounting to $251,000, the terms being $50,000 down February first, and $10,000 every three months thereafter. This, as you will see, gives us about two years to pay it in. Eight months of the time has not yet elapsed, and we have paid Mr. Field up to present date in round figures, $163,000. We expect to pay him the balance soon, probably by February 1st, if not sooner. We will then have the controlling interest of the stock; $301,000 would give us this, but we will have by that time about $350,000.

The question will be asked, where did we get the money to pay Mr. Field? A small part of it comes from gifts, but the larger proportion of it comes from the sale of Temple trust bonds, of which we have but $50,000 of our issue of $300,000 left unsold. The next question which will logically follow is if these bonds mature in ten years and must be paid, how are you going to meet them? From gifts and rentals; even if we depend entirely on the income from the building we would have enough from this source alone in ten years to pay off the bonds with interest, beside sufficient to pay for the balance of the capital stock. We do not expect nor intend to be driven to such an alternative, as it would keep the National and state unions from receiving any benefit from the income from the building during all these years.

There are scores of unions bravely at work raising their quota of $100, and the panels of the different states in Willard Hall bearing the names of individual donors will have more names upon them than those that have been set aside for the gifts of unions to be inserted upon them, as 189 persons have given $100 each. There has been received $1,000 from Mr. Schumacher, of Akron, Ohio, and $1,000 from Mr. Austin, of Chicago, Illinois. If there had been concerted action in each state in this matter there would have been no need of issuing our Temple trust bonds, but there was no other course open, as sufficient money had to be secured in some way to get control of the stock. The marvel, however, is that under existing circumstances where there is so much misunderstanding, misstatement and ignorance in regard to the plan of the Temple so large a sum could have been received. . . . .

The names of the Temple trustees are as follows: Miss F. E. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, Mrs. W. H. Munnell, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Mrs. W. Jennings Demorest, Mrs. H. B. Kells, Miss Helen L. Hood.

After urging upon the Convention the necessity to gain control of the stock in order that the income from the rentals may be secured for the temperance work, Mrs. Carse concluded her simple and straightforward account by giving the following statement:

Receipts for 1881-1889	$17,263.00
Receipts for 1890	16,740.00
Receipts for 1891	18,080.00
Receipts for 1892	25,535.00
Grand total	$77,618.00

At the close of this report, Mrs. Rounds arose and made a statement, concurred in by Mrs. Bullock, of New York, concerning a Saturday afternoon four o'clock Republican meeting which she said had been held in Willard Hall. This they were assured was entirely unknown to the agents of the building or to Mrs. Carse, who said the matter would be investigated.

Mrs. Hoffman, as chairman of the committee appointed for the purpose, then offered the following resolution, prefacing it by saying:

Before I present this resolution I desire to say that I want it to be known that I shall stand firmly for the Temple. I always believed and I believe now the women can own it, and ought to own it, and I shall stand by it. Your committee recognizing that the National W. C. T. U. has as yet no legal control over the Temple in Chicago, which is under a separate corporation, and therefore no jurisdiction in the renting of the same, still believes it incumbent upon this Convention to make the following declaration:

WHEREAS, The constituency of the National W C. T. U. has stood back of the building of the Temple at Chicago with its money, influence and prayers until it is held as a shrine sacred to the great reform represented by this organization, and

WHEREAS, The world outside believes the Temple—and especially Willard Hall, to be under our control—and holds us morally responsible for the use made of the assembly room which bears the name of our National President: therefore,

RESOLVED, That we hereby express our amazement and sorrow, and record our united protest, that the first meetings held within its walls should be the campaign rallies of a political party whose principles and policy regarding the liquor traffic are utterly opposed to the spirit and purpose of this organization, but we rejoice that the explanation which was offered in this Convention and was accepted, gives assurance that the same will not be repeated.

The resolution called forth a number of pertinent remarks which are given in full in THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL

Rev. Henry A. Delano, of Illinois, a visitor to the Convention, being granted permission to speak, voiced his sympathy as a Christian clergyman with the great project of the Temple, pledging his aid and influence. The motion of Mrs. Carse that he be made chairman of an advisory committee to confer with the committee from the trustees in regard to paying for the Temple was passed.

Miss Willard said, "The very first voice lifted in the Temple was that of Amanda Smith, the poet evangelist, who sang 'Coronation.'"

The report of the standing committee on home and foreign missionary work among the colored people was presented in pamphlet form by the superintendent, Mrs. Dr. Ray and read by Mrs. Woody.

Mrs. E. A. Russell, of Minnesota, who incorporated in her report, from the vantage point of her experience, many valuable hints on this line of work, said among other things:

Since I last stood before you to speak of the coffee houses of the United States, there have been many changes.

Schools of cookery are springing up here and there throughout our land and with no mushroom growth, for they have entrenched themselves within the walls of our public schools. The W. C. T. U. has no little part to play in this; it is through their influence that this has been accomplished in many places.

Of the inauguration of new work, allow me to speak of two new coffee houses, one at Sparta, Wisconsin, where the brave women bought out a saloon and now serve over the counter a food to build men up, instead of a beverage to send them reeling through the streets. At Newark, New Jersey, the coffee house is growing. In ten months they have given to the needy over 500 meals and are reaching out in works of helpfulness along many lines. New York still leads, but many others are coming into line. In towns where it is impossible to establish coffee houses, the thought may find expression in the fireman's coffee cart, which has now become a moving reality.

Mrs. Ole Bull's excellent prospectus for the cookery department was read, which is as follows:

Articles on this subject are now ready for publication in THE UNION SIGNAL. The information gathered and given in these articles is that held in common by scientific people regarding nutrition and cookery as related to a mixed diet—meats, cereals, fruits and vegetables.

My associate, Miss Shapleigh, is now a fellow at the college settlements in Philadelphia and Chicago, in residence for the year. This is an opportunity for study of this subject that will teach us much as to what is practicable and possible in walks of life other than our own homes.

In the plan of the coming year's work it may be mentioned that it is proposed to have six or more twenty-minute talks from specialists. These are to be given, at Miss Willard's request, in Chicago next June. Among those who speak will be Mrs. Ellen H. Richards of the Institute of Technology, Boston, and Mrs. Mary Hinman Abel, of Ann Arbor, Michigan. Besides these women especially distinguished in this line of work we hope to secure Miss Addams of Hull House, Miss Talbot of Boston and the University of Chicago, and to have the Aladdin oven exhibited and explained.

Leaflets giving information in compact, scientific form will be prepared. For instance, wheat, its food elements, preparation in flours, places for purchase that can be recommended, and recipes for the cookery of breads. For the rest, the needs felt and interest awakened must guide largely the direction the work shall take.

Mrs. Benjamin then made a motion, which carried, to reconsider the previous action of the Convention concerning the Loyal Temperance Legion in order to introduce one which should conform to the rules and constitution. The amendment proposed was as follows:

An amendment, to be known as Sec. 1, Art. III: "Juvenile organizations known as Loyal Temperance Legion, in any auxiliary state or territory or District of Columbia, shall be entitled to one voting delegate for every one thousand members having paid fifty dollars into the National treasury; said delegate to be a member of the W. C. T. U. and an active worker in the L. T. L.

A lengthy and interesting discussion was held, participated in by Miss Anna Gordon, Mrs. Rice and Miss Willard who, calling Mrs. Buell to the chair, strongly advocated the representation of the young people in the National Convention, with a view to the future filling up of the ranks of the W. C. T. U. with devoted and earnest and well-trained members.

After the passage of the amendment the regular order of business of the day was taken up, and the list of superintendents, as nominated by the executive committee, was read and accepted. Just here another of those bright and unexpected interludes which characterize our National gatherings, took place. At the request of Rev. Ada C. Bowles, of Massachusetts, a verse from the "Old Oaken Bucket" was sung, and as the notes died away she stepped forward on the platform displaying a crystal water bottle and a couple of dainty tumblers, explaining that the water was from the old well in Scituate county, Mass., which was the inspiration of the song. At her request, Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset arose with glasses in hand to drink the health of the Convention in the health giving fluid, and the picturesqueness of the scene was emphasized by the soft repetition of the words of the song. The temperance doxology was sung, and the benediction was pronounced by Mrs. Woodbridge and the session was closed.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Dr. Anna Shaw, who occupied the president's chair, in opening the meeting explained that owing to important business which held the executive committee in evening session, the evening's program of two minute speeches from state presidents would not be carried out. Instead, stirring addresses were given by such well known orators as Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney, of Oregon, on narcotics; Mrs. Mary McGee Snell, from the text, "Avenge me of mine adversary"; Mrs. Katherine Lente Stevenson, of Massachusetts and Miss Frances Griffin, of Alabama, in her own inimitable vein. All of these speeches have already been published in THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. The Trinity orchestra rendered delightful selections; Mrs. Clevenger, of Ohio, read the Scripture lesson, Mrs. Blair, of Nebraska, led in prayer and the audience joined in singing, "Onward, Christian soldiers," at the beginning of the session. Miss Eva Shontz, the white ribbon elocutionist, charmingly rendered "Old Soapy," a temperance selection, responding to the encore with James Whitcomb Riley's "The goblins will git ye." Miss Mary Lathbury's poem, "The White Ribbon" was sung to the tune of "The Kerry Dance" by Miss Ruth Warren, of Denver. The brightness within made the audience forget the storm without, and all departed well satisfied, after the benediction, which was pronounced by Dr. Whitney, of Washington.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The opening of this session found a good audience assembled and the weather fair. Mrs. Buell announced the opening exercises, conducted by Mrs. Hitchcock, of Nebraska, who read the ninety first Psalm and led in prayer, after the audience had sung, "Let us anew our journey pursue." Some business was brought before the meeting relative to the time and place of the next Convention, the matter being referred to a committee which consists of the National officers and three other ladies appointed by our National president: Mrs. Rounds, of Illinois, Mrs. Hoffman, of Missouri, and Mrs. Burt, of New York. A motion to do away with a bit of unnecessary machinery—the plan of work committee—prevailed by a two-thirds vote which is necessary in order to change a by law.

The reports of the evangelistic department [illegible] tendents were resumed, our sturdy, true-hearted Jennie Smith giving her last report as National superintendent of work among railroad employés, which she has resigned to become an evangelist. A circular letter which she had prepared for distribution among railroad men was unanimously indorsed by the Convention, and on motion a vote of thanks was given her for her fourteen years of faithful work as superintendent of the railroad department. The workers in the railroad department present at the Convention presented her with a beautiful Crusade souvenir spoon.

The report of the committee on presentation of prize banners contained the recommendation that hereafter the banners be awarded to the six states having the greatest percentage of increase, without regard to geographical location, and that no state or territory of less than five hundred members be allowed to compete. The banners were awarded for largest per cent of increase to the following states: Maine, for the New England group; New York, for the Middle states; North Carolina, for the Southern states; Texas, for the southeast; Indiana, Middle West; New Mexico, West. Each of these was received with appropriate remarks by the presidents of the respective states and the territory. Two beautiful temperance education banners were presented by the National superintendent of that department to New York and Missouri, the former for the greatest gain in number of local superintendents, and the latter for the greatest gain in substituting books that teach total abstinence for the old books that teach moderate drinking.

The Loyal Temperance Legion banners were awarded to Idaho and Indiana. Some interesting presentations and introductions took place, after which the hymn, "Oh, Could I speak the Matchless Worth" was sung. The Bible reading was conducted by Miss Greenwood, who led in prayer, followed by Mrs. Carse and Lady Henry Somerset. A number gave brief personal testimonies. "Praise the Lord, oh, My Soul," was then sung. Prayer was offered by Mrs. Hammer, and after singing the doxology, the benediction was pronounced by Miss Greenwood.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

The Convention met at 2 o'clock, as usual. The devotional exercises were in charge of Mrs. Frame, who read the 91st Psalm.

The order of the day was continued in the reading of the report of work among soldiers and sailors, by Mrs. Sarah A. McClees.

"Work Among Lumbermen," by Mrs. Mary C. Upham, was next in order, and as it was distributed in printed form, it is not necessary to publish it here.

"Work Among Miners," by Mrs. Winnie F. English, followed:

During the two years preceding this the department was kept on probation as associate, and aggressive work was not attempted, but now at the close of its first year as a regular department we give you this excellent report: Twenty-four states have entered this important field and twenty have appointed state superintendents.

Alabama state president writes: We have one of the most capable and efficient superintendents, Miss Julia Tutwiler; she has worked untiringly and accomplished much. I have had no direct word from Miss Tutwiler, but learn from state reports that Birmingham union has a committee to collect literature, which is sent to the convicts in the Coalburgh and Pratt mines. The union raised $317, and donated it for an organ to the men in Coalburgh mines. They also visit the mines.

Arizona wheeled into line in the beginning of the year with Mrs. Elia Searle, state superintendent, who is doing faithful work. The nine unions in this state have a large field for work with their hundreds of miners, and it would not be amiss if some state having no mines would help them. Literature is distributed near Phœnix in the corrals, where the miners keep their teams. There are 500 miners in Bisbee, where the Copper Company furnish a large library and reading-room, in which the union keeps temperance literature.

California (South) has added this department and appointed Miss Tracy state superintendent.

A letter in August from Mrs. S. A. Killy informed me that she had been made state superintendent for Georgia. She pledged herself to do faithful work.

The great silver mining state comes into line with this department and has for its superintendent Mrs. M. L. Merideth, of Montrose, Colorado.

Work among miners was added to the Illinois state work in 1887; Mrs. W. F. English has been its superintendent for five years, but resigning, at the close of the present year, was succeeded by Miss Irene Smith. The work has steadily advanced, and each year has reported increased interest. Illinois has had 125 local, 10 county and 13 district superintendents. This year they reported 892 mines in 48 counties and 33,000 miners; 110,000 pages of literature distributed, 200 miners' children in Sunday school, 64 public meetings for miners, 137 visits made in their homes, 97 signed the pledge this year. This report does not show all the work done, as not more than one-fourth of the superintendents sent in a report.

In Indian Territory Mrs. Denny, special organizer, says, "The miners in the mining towns, Lehigh and Caddo, are pleading that evangelists be sent among them."

For Indiana, Mrs. Helen Sherfy reports: Six thousand five hundred and fifty miners in the coal mines, besides many in the salt mines and quarries. I cannot give a full account of literature distributed, as eight unions send into the mines quantities of literature, of which no account is kept. Personally, I have given out 2,400 leaflets, and spent six afternoons in my buggy, leaving packages of

This state has for two years had an evangelist among miners, Miss Sarah B. Whistler, who reports for this year: Three hundred and twenty days in the field, 648 addresses, 697 public meetings held with miners, 1,264 visits; many signed the pledge; 128 conversions, 12 societies organized, and W. C. T. unions in five mining towns.

Kansas: Mrs. T. J. Lewis writes, I have received your letters of instruction, and will do the best I can with this new work, hoping to learn as I go along. The third and fourth districts have superintendents and are doing good work.

Missouri has added this department and at her late state meeting made Miss Alice Kirkpatrick, of Bonne Terre, superintendent. She will take up the work at once.

Massachusetts has combined this department with that of lumbermen, but has reported no work among miners.

Nevada in July appointed as superintendent, Mrs. Capt. Pitts. I sent instructions to her, but have had no reply.

New Jersey, Mrs. S. Robbins, Hamilton Square, has taken up this work.

In Oregon Mrs. Belle Kennedy was appointed in August. The state president writes: "The department is gaining ground in our state." We hope to have a good report further on.

Pennsylvania is the pioneer in the work, having carried the department seven years, six of which were superintended by Mrs. Paull, who did good work. Last year it was combined with that of foreign work and lumbermen. There are 80,000 miners in Pennsylvania.

In Utah, Mrs. Griffith, state evangelist, says many miners attend her meetings. She will direct the work until a superintendent is appointed.

Washington East has taken up this work, with Mrs. O. H. Brown, superintendent. We look for a good report next year.

In Ohio the union at Groveport has taken up the work.

Mrs. Stoddard writes from Texas: "I will see that the unions at Colorado City, where the great salt mines are, and the unions in Eastland and Palo Pinto counties where the coal mines are, take up active work for miners."

Mrs. Upham, state superintendent for Wisconsin, says: "G. W. Roberts, cowboy evangelist, has been preaching among the miners in this state with good success."

Kentucky is interested in the work and has appointed a superintendent. At Drakesboro good work is being done by Mrs. Pierce.

For Idaho, Mrs. Black says: "We consider this department especially needed in this state and have appointed Mrs. Hampton of Bellevue, superintendent."

The presidents of Iowa and New Hampshire write favorably for the adoption of the work by their states.

The states of Delaware, North Dakota, Louisiana, Florida, Oklahoma having few if any mines, think best not to add this department. When we consider the many successive steps to be taken even in the initiatory of this work, we are filled with joy and gratitude that so much has been accomplished in one year.

I have written 200 letters, published 500 circular letters of instruction and 3,200 blanks for reports, published two tracts for the department and one responsive reading, prepared one chart and one banner and given two addresses.

The report of Mrs. Bateham on Sabbath Observance being called for and no response made, Miss Willard stated that it is well known in the Convention that her work is marching on.

The report of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association by Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the president, was listened to with unabated interest:

Steadily and surely the W. T. P. A. is unfolding into one of the largest publishing houses of the country. It has been well said it is the right arm of the W. C. T. U.

Cash receipts for 1891	$210,755.68
Cash receipts for 1892	230,565.27
Cash expenditures for 1892	229,609.96

Of course these figures do not show what we have made or lost during the year. The amount of assets must determine that point. Property inventory, which includes machinery, type, etc.:

October 1, 1891	$62,232.68
October 1, 1892	78,933.56

Books and subscription inventory:

October 1, 1891	$59,091.77
October 1, 1892	57.655.98

An increase in property of $16,700.88. Our property account figures up an increase, largely on account of the supposed increased value of our web press, which was purchased for $11,000 cash, but our business manager now finds it could not be replaced for less than $19,000, and enters it at that price on the inventory. Our property account has also been lessened on account of the sale during the year of the foundry. This was sold at a loss because we found it was an expensive luxury to make our own plates, which has been a losing enterprise from the first. There has been a loss this year in the inventory of books and subscriptions of $1.435.79.

Our receipts from advertising have largely increased. The amount earned and collected for the current year over and above expenses being $18,699.34, while there is now due in good and collectible accounts about $10,000.

We are printing a weekly edition of The Union Signal of 64,000. Our actual subscription list Oct. 1st, is 60,021 as against 65,081 Oct. 1st, 1891, showing a falling off of 5.068. We have had an average edition, however, during the year of 80,000, as we have printed so many special numbers, the weekly edition often running up to 100,000, and sometimes, as in the case of the memorial number of Madam Willard it runs as high as 135,000. We do not like to report a falling off in the subscription list of The Union Signal. This should not be so. As well might a soldier go to battle without ammunition as a white ribboner attempt to do effectual temperance work without the knowledge and inspiration The Union Signal imparts.

The semi monthly Young Crusader was consolidated January, 1892, with The Monthly Sunday-school Crusader, and now has a circulation of 34,170, an increase of 10,239.

The principal matter of interest in connection with it is its change of form at the time of its change of issue. The magazine formed for the monthly issue proves very acceptable, and a large number of new subscriptions have been gained. The paper as the organ of the Loyal Temperance Legion attempts to hold a middle course so as to meet the needs of both the older and the younger members of the Legion. This year and next it makes a specialty of the children's work for the World's Fair. Its quarterly Temperance Sunday-school lessons have reached a very large circulation. The Oak and Ivy Leaf shows an increase in circulation of about 1,500, the present subscription list being 5,826. Great credit is due its talented new editor, Miss Jennie A. Stewart, for the able manner in which she has conducted the paper.

There are 13,688 persons who take the responsive readings; 5,423 take the Bible readings. We print for outside parties the following magazines and papers:

OUTSIDE PUBLICATIONS.

Our Day, ninety page magazine, monthly.
Kindergarten, ninety page magazine, monthly.
National Corporation Reporter, twenty-four pages, weekly.
Unity, eight pages, weekly.
Christ Science, twelve pages, monthly.
Refuge Journal, twelve pages, quarterly.
Sunday-school lessons, weekly (Unity.)

PRESSWORK AND MAILING.

Clay Record, forty pages, fortnightly.
Pravda (Bohemian) weekly.
Hemfried (Swedish Temperance) weekly.
Pravda, Supplement, monthly.

Cash receipts, subscription book department, $3,359.21—an increase averaging $66.77 per month. Agents for books have increased from 270 to 400, or 130 increase.

Miss M. L. Mosser, who is in charge of the superintendence of literature, reports a greatly increasd business. The receipts from this department during the year amount to $17,607.57 as against $14,144.28, last year, an increase of $3,463.31. We have a total of 1,137 local superintendents of literature, an increase of 476, and we have forty-eight state superintendents.

The following report of new publications is given by our editor of publications, Miss Alice M. Guernsey.

"In leaflets there have been issued fourteen National leaflets, two of them on the World's W. C. T. U., one on suffrage and several important ones in the L. T. L. division, including one on gambling and one on the Band of Mercy. In the Total Abstinence series, one, and another of the Loyal leaflets have been prepared.

"Bible readings and responsive readings slightly changed in form from previous issues have been continued with increasing acceptance. The bulletin of these, which was issued at the beginning of the year has made it possible for unions to anticipate work and to order leaflets each month bearing on the topic under consideration.

"A new departure is the issue of department leaflets. These now include five for railroad work, four for the peace department, two for miners and one each in the departments of narcotics, literature and systematic giving. In response to the demand of the times a new series called 'Voters' Leaflets,' has also been issued, prefaced by a Signal Light by Miss Willard entitled, 'Why I am a Prohibitionist'; there are five in the series, four of them being written by Mr. Woolley, and the other by our staunch friend, Rev. Dr. Delano, of Evanston. It is intended for the use of young men who are about to cast their first vote, and is entitled, Wanted: Your First Vote on the Right Side.

"The Library Series has taken on new shape and date of issue, and now appears monthly as The Advance Guard, forming the basis of work in the temperance societies of young people who have completed the use of the manuals, or who wish advance study in the temperance line.

"In the way of pamphlets there is a telling satire entitled, 'The Defence of the Jericho Robbers.' A series of flower mission cards have been prepared, and a beautiful Christmas souvenir in the shape of a letter from Santa Claus asserting his temperance principles.

"More has been done in the line of books than ever before. One new book in the Library Series has been issued, entitled 'Child Life Abroad.' 'Lady Gay and her Sister' is a bright children's story by the well known writer, Mrs. George Archibald, and 'Bright Eyes,' or 'Pleasure and Profit for Sunday Afternoon' is an attempt to solve the problem of what the children shall do on Sunday. It contains pictures and sufficient help to enable the children to find Scripture verses illustrated by the pictures which they are to write in the spaces left for that purpose. One of the strongest temperance books that has ever been written is the 'Junior Partners,' also issued this year. It touches a new phase of the temperance question that is rarely presented—moderate drinking as a cause of insanity, and is a book that will command the attention of thoughtful men and women. It is more than a mere story book. 'A Young Woman Journalist' is a memorial of the gifted young editor who left us nearly a year ago for the land where the leaves of the tree of life are for the healing of the nations. It is as exquisite in form and style as loving care could make it, and is, we think, a fitting memorial of the dear young life. The White Ribbon Hymnal has come to full completion after its many delays, and speaks, or rather sings, for itself. The year has been an exceedingly busy one, and its results exceed the number of pages of that of any previous year. We trust they are not one whit behind the others in the good they may do."

The amount of pages of temperance literature sent out by the W. T. P. A. during the past year is 235,000,000 pages. The number of employés on our pay-roll is 124; the number of letters, containing orders for supplies received during the year, 61,958, an increase of 6,316 over the year preceding. The amount of insurance carried is $65,000. The postage bill for the year amounts to $10,-355.45. The amount of stock sold during the year, $17,-210, leaving a balance unsold of $10,400. When this is taken it will close out our entire capital stock of $125,000.

The amount of rent paid this year for the premises occupied by our plant at the Temple and at 161 La Salle street is $8,500. This, however, does not cover the rental of the building on Michigan street, which our business manager leased for a term of years, and then found it was not inhabitable for a printing establishment on account of its being next door to a hide and leather concern. She has now rented to different firms almost the entire space in the building. There is a shortage, I believe, of about twenty dollars a month in the rent.

The changes in the editorial staff of The Union Signal during the year have been very remarkable. Death chose a shining mark when in December last he struck down our young, beautiful and gifted Miss Julia A. Ames, who gave promise of being one of the brightest editors this country has produced. To say that she has been greatly missed from the editorial corps but faintly expresses our deep grief and bereavement at her loss, which still seems irreparable. Heavily did the blow fall on our veteran editor, Miss Mary Allen West, already almost broken down with years of long and faithful service as editor-in-chief. By a resolution of the board of directors of the W. T. P. A. December last, Miss Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset (the latter was at that time spending the winter in Chicago) were asked to become editors of The Union Signal, in order not only to fill the gap made by the death of Miss Ames, but also to allow Miss West the opportunity of spending the winter in California, that she might recruit her failing strength. They kindly accepted the position and generously refused any salary, except that we were to furnish Miss Willard with a stenographer. Miss Margaret A. Sudduth was made office and since then managing editor, which position she has filled with remarkable ability under most trying circumstances, as Miss Willard's sad bereavement and consequent absence from the country placed upon Miss Sudduth's shoulders greatly added responsibilities, which she has fully met. Mrs. Harriet B. Kells has also been added to the editorial staff. She brings to the position fine literary ability and much editorial knowledge, as she was for several years editor of the Mississippi White-Ribboner.

With such an able corps of editors, Miss West with the consent of the board (as she is still at the head of the editorial staff with Miss Willard) asked for a continued leave of absence to visit Japan, a country she had long desired to see. Consent was accorded her and she is now there. We expect her editorial correspondence from Japan will add as greatly to the interest of The Union Signal as the articles which have appeared for the last few months from the gifted pen of our illustrious English editorial correspondent, Lady Somerset.

At the close of Mrs. Carse's report, by consent, Mrs Fanny H. Rastall addressed the Convention as follows:

I only wish a few moments, dear sisters, to lay before you the advantages to which Mrs. Carse alluded in the possible purchase of stock in the W. T. P. A. It is our earnest desire to place all the unsold stock at once. And I think a great deal of it might be taken in this Convention if a few minutes were devoted to that purpose. It is not only possible for the individual members of the W. C. T. U. to become stockholders, but the local unions, county unions and state unions can also become stockholders, and I should be very glad indeed if you would at this time subscribe the ten thousand dollars which remain unsold. The shares are twenty five dollars each.

The subscription list being opened, shares to the number of 170 were disposed of.

On motion, the report of the W. T. P. A. was adopted, and a vote of thanks tendered to Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset for their services as editors in connection with The Union Signal without remuneration.

It was moved and carried that a memorial be sent by this Convention to Congress, urging that a more strict supervision be placed upon our ports of entry, with a view to restricting immigration.

The report of Mrs. Mary F. Lovell, superintendent of the department of mercy, was read by Mrs. Hoffman:

This branch of evangelistic work is gradually appealing to the kind hearts and the good sense of the women of the W. C. T. U. They are learning to realize and act upon the truth that disregard of the life of the beast is unrighteous, unchristian in all; and they recognize the beginnings of crime in the often thoughtless cruelties of youth, if unchecked. But there is a still higher plane which the much occupied minds of many have not yet reached; that is the clear realization of the influence on human souls of the beneficent teachings of mercy; of the fact that such teachings may, and do, open wide the way for the entrance of the Holy Spirit.

Nine states and one territory have taken up the department and appointed superintendents: Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas, Maine, Iowa, New York, Oregon, Utah, Nevada and Minnesota. Minnesota has only recently appointed a state superintendent, but already has women who are displaying an interest. Nevada appointed a superintendent in June last, but up to this time I have received no word from her. The department was taken up in Utah, March, 1892. The superintendent speaks of personal work in interesting ministers of the gospel; of work in public and other schools; distribution of copies of laws against cruelty and other literature; but reports no local workers yet appointed.

Oregon adopted the department and appointed a superintendent last year, who has done much excellent personal work. She has spoken herself, and influenced others to speak on the subject publicly, and has reached all W. C. T. U. county conventions, either in person or by paper, and has the cordial coöperation of her state president, who furthers the work wherever she goes. The superintendent has organized five Bands of Mercy and knows the children to be much interested. She finds it easy to interest people generally, if personally present with them, but cannot so well make them see the importance of this work without a personal appeal, and intends while traveling to include organization for this department in her evangelistic work; a most commendable plan.

In New York, the department was taken up one year ago and a superintendent appointed. She reports nine county superintendents, but cannot give number of locals. The subject of mercy has been agitated through the press, addresses have been made and literature distributed. An "Appeal to Women not to Wear Birds" has been vigorously circulated at county conventions, of which the superintendent has been present at many. She says great progress has been made in Band of Mercy work.

Iowa also took up this work one year ago, and appointed a superintendent who promised good work; but no report has as yet reached me.

The superintendent in Maine reports several county superintendents and some local superintendents, a large number of Bands of Mercy in connection with the Loyal Temperance Legions, and one Band numbering ninety members. The "Appeal to Women" has been widely circulated. The superintendent finds many who are interested in the department. She presented the subject as effectively as she could at her state convention, and says, "We are now just ready for good work."

From Kansas the superintendent reports that she has heard from nine local superintendents only, but thinks there are more. Much literature has been distributed; copies of laws against cruelty; Black Beauty; bird pledges, etc., amounting to many hundreds of pages. One local worker spoke of children growing more conscientious as a result of the education on the subject. The superintendent has had resolutions concerning the wearing of birds, and against the practice of vivisection published in a religious paper; has supplied eight ministers of the gospel with various humane leaflets; and has also circulated the "Appeal to Women" not to wear birds.

In Ohio the work is now well established. The state superintendent has this year sent out one hundred and ninety eight packages of literature, has written ten articles for publication, given seven public addresses, five of which were in Minnesota, has written two hundred and thirteen letters and eighty-seven postal cards. She received reports from ten counties. All have distributed literature largely. Six sermons on mercy were preached in one county. Some superintendents have written articles for the press, and much teaching of children seems to have been done. One county superintendent sent a package of literature to every pastor in her county, and to a large number of teachers and others. Another put copies of laws against cruelty in the hands of editors, teachers and others, and endeavored to create sentiment through the use of the press. Still another sent packages of humane literature to the value of thirty cents to every local union in her county; put extracts from "Our Dumb Animals" in her county paper, and has seen good results. Some superintendents have put humane calendars in suitable places, such as reading rooms, barber shops, etc. One woman presented the mercy pledge to the Epworth League and secured one hundred and twenty five signatures. Another takes check rein leaflets with her everywhere, and gives to drivers, and places them in carriages. Thousands of leaflets seem to have been distributed by the superintendents to ministers, doctors and teachers. A rising vote was taken at one county convention from the women who pledged themselves not to wear bird plumage.

In Pennsylvania fourteen counties have reported superintendents. Forty two local superintendents have been heard from, all reporting Bands of Mercy in Loyal Temperance Legions or humane teaching given in some way. Several speak of the willing coöperation of public schoolteachers when they find that the Band of Mercy does not interfere with the course of study. A number of ministers have, at the request of superintendents, preached on the duty of mercy to all God's creatures. The state superintendent has made five public addresses on the same subject.

Good has been done by the efforts of superintendents in Pennsylvania among people guilty of cruelty. In two places humane agents have been appointed through the instrumentality of superintendents. Most of the workers have been faithful in the effort to develop anti-vivisection sentiment by giving pamphlets and leaflets to the physicians within their reach, and to editors, and a few have made use of the press. One local superintendent published newspaper articles against the check-rein, and on the kind treatment of balky horses. Children are reported as much interested in the Band of Mercy. The main work this year of the department in Pennsylvania has been the preparation and circulation of petitions asking for an amendment to the law against cruelty, which shall prohibit painful experiments on live animals. Nearly 8,000 of the petitions (4,000 for the Senate and 4,000 for the House of Representatives) have been sent out with letters and suitable literature. This part of the work has been done in coöperation with the American Anti-Vivisection Society. It is hoped that the wishes of the people expressed on these petitions may have due weight with the legislature, and put a stop to some of the most barbarous cruelties in existence. It is a fact that many physicians uphold the practice simply because the realities of it are unknown to them.

A new leaflet showing how to organize and conduct a Band of Mercy has just been prepared for this department by the National superintendent, and an attractive new pledge card in colors is now in course of preparation.

Interest in the work of the department has been shown by women in a number of states which have not yet appointed superintendents. It is much to be desired that these willing ones should have the help of a state organization and work systematically. More system is needed in reporting. All state superintendents should send out report blanks which are in accord with those of the National department, and should persistently urge that the questions thereon be answered on the blanks with the additions necessary; and such vague answers to direct questions as "a number," or "several" should be discontinued. A superintendent who has her work well in hand should be able to tell how many Bands of Mercy are in her territory, how many ministers have preached sermons, how many articles have been written and addresses made, and to give other facts of interest concisely.

Your superintendent earnestly begs that more attention be given to the organizing and keeping up of Bands of Mercy. Grown people, as well as children, should unite in these bands, signing the pledge "I will try to be kind to every living creature, and will try to protect them from cruel usage;" and, by their example, show the hardened and the brutal ways of mercy and gentleness, and set forth the love and compassion of our Father by lessons drawn from His creatures.

How consoling it is to think that, by our efforts to enforce the Divine law of compassion we may not only be protecting God's helpless creatures, but drawing precious human souls to Him. May we not all be glad to share in such lowly work, if yet it is so exalted?

At the close of the report Mrs. Hoffman said: Miss Willard says I may exhort. I could not exhort on this subject. I should get so perfectly outrageous that nobody would listen to me. One of the most distinguished medical men of all Europe declares that science has never been advanced one single iota by these experiments. I speak of Dr. McKenzie. He says that this matter of vivisection is a sort of ambition that exists among medical men that no one shall excel them in experiments. He says these experiments do not bring the physician into touch with nature to help him to know what is to be done with the human body, and the very best utterances of medical men and experts are wholly and entirely against this.

A delegate remarked: I want to say in defense of a great many ladies who are here that they need not make themselves uncomfortable about the aigrettes that are in their bonnets. They are not plucked from the birds in the way that is spoken of in this paper, but are all manufactured.

The Chair stated that the famous Crusade Bible had arrived from Hillsboro, that it had a very interesting history, has been used at the opening of several of the National Conventions and it would be used at the close of the Convention that evening.

Mrs. Hoffman offered for Mrs. Lovell the following resolution:

Resolved, That we respectfully ask the honorable commissioners to recall the offer for all exhibits of birds or their eggs, and to furnish the education contemplated by the exhibition of some of the fine ornithological plates which can be so readily obtained.

Carried.

The next in order was the department of purity, and Miss Willard announced that by request Dr. Mary Wood Allen, the author of that remarkable book, "The Man Wonderful in the House Beautiful," would be made superintendent in that department for the future.

After singing "A Psalm of Peace," the committee on resolutions reported through Mrs. Beauchamp, its chairman. (See page 20.)

It was moved and carried that they should be considered seriatum, and then adopted as a whole.

Mrs. Babcock moved to amend the last clause of the first resolution by substituting the word "the" for "our American" before the word "Sabbath."

A member opposed the striking out of the word "American" on the ground that this is an American W. C. T. U., while Mrs. Babcock supported her motion, saying "The Sabbath is not a national but a divine institution. It was given at the creation of the world, not for one nation, but for all people and for all time. We have in our membership in the W. C. T. U. those of all nations and of all religious beliefs."

Mrs. Sickles spoke to the point, that this word "American" affords a contrast to the kind of Sabbath that is kept all through the heathen world, and for that reason she opposed the amendment.

Dr. Anna Shaw said: "I am in favor of the amendment. If the Sabbath was ours and American only, I should see nothing especially sacred in it. It is not ours, neither is it American, and I think we ought not to claim the Sabbath, even if we do try to claim the world as American. We ought not to make a distinction between our Sabbath and somebody else's Sabbath."

The amendment was put to the house and carried, and no further changes offered until the Convention reached the fifth resolution, when Miss Pugh moved that in its preamble the words, "Lord's day" be changed to "Sunday."

A member thought that if a change were made at all, it should be to the "Sabbath," because Sunday is a name which comes to us from the heathen world.

Miss Pugh explained that the Sabbath is the seventh day in the week. Every day is the Lord's day. Sunday is the day which has been specially set apart.

It was stated by different members that there is Bible authority for calling it the Lord's day and also the Sabbath.

Mrs. Campbell said: "I sincerely hope that this change will not be made. We have people in Wisconsin who will think it is Saturday if it is changed to the Sabbath."

The motion to change from "Sunday" to "Sabbath" was lost, while that to change from the "Lord's day" to "Sabbath" was carried.

Mrs. Dunham moved to strike out in number 17 the words: "That sit in heathen darkness," substituting the words "to other nations," and supported her amendment as follows: "I make this motion in the first place because all the lands our missionaries have visited do not sit in heathen darkness. Other nations have their religions, and I should hate to see that go forth in that shape from a W. C. T. U. convention."

Miss Gordon moved as amendment to the amendment to insert after the words "'have gone forth from us" the words "to build up the World's W. C. T. U. and to teach the principles, etc."

The amendment offered by Miss Gordon was accepted by consent.

Miss Willard said: I will ask Mrs. Buell to take the chair and speak a moment on this amendment. Pundita Ramabai was in our home three weeks. She said to me going to church one night, "I do hope they will not sing 'From Greenland's icy mountains,' where they say that 'every prospect pleases and only man is vile.'" She said, "My father was a Brahmin priest, and walked three thousand miles to try to get nearer God. I don't like to hear that every man is vile when I know that my father was so true and so good that he had me taught to read, and to read such books." We went along over to the hall and found them in full swing, singing "And every prospect pleases, and only man is vile."

Miss Shaffner, of Madras, being accorded the privilege of speaking said: Allow me to say that heathenish darkness means a great deal of which you American women have no idea. A few Brahmins may go forth to seek the light. I do not say but there may be some conscientious people there, but there are many millions of men and women who do not desire the light of the gospel.

Mrs. Hoffman remarked: The same may be said of America. Thousands of men and women do not desire the gospel of temperance teaching.

At the close of the printed list of resolutions a large number of resolutions were added.

Mrs. Frances J. Barnes offered one on young women's work which carried. (See Res. 13, page 20.)

Mrs. Rastall moved that the words be added to resolution number six, "In mercantile business," and urged every Christian woman in the line of trade to refuse to accept or appear to accept something for nothing. "One of the most troublesome things in the publishing business," she said, "is the coming in contact with advertisements which are forever educating our men and women and boys and girls to gamble, by inserting the word, 'free': the wanting of something for nothing is the foundation of the gambling spirit." Carried.

Mrs. Hoffman offered the following resolution:

WHEREAS, The financial standing of the Temple has never before been so secure and the outlook so hopeful as now, and the report given and accepted here shows that by united effort we can, within one year, hold a controlling amount of Temple stock, therefore, resolved,

1. That we will not cast doubt upon this enterprise, that we will not create distrust, that if any cannot help, they shall at least allow those who will do so peace of mind in the doing of it.

2. That it is the sense of this Convention that for the sake of the W. C. T. U., and the great work to which it is pledged, and for the sake of the cause of women's advancement in the world, there is but one just and reasonable course to pursue; that we stand with solid front and united effort until we reach the successful and permanent completion of this great enterprise.

Mrs. Cranmer moved to strike out the words, "Peace of mind," and the other words in connection with it.

Mrs. Hoffman rejoined: I wish to protest against the amendment. It is well known to the ladies of this Convention that we have suffered great lack of peace of mind and we want it, and want it bad, and I want the words "peace of mind" left, and I hope they will be left. Amendment lost.

Mrs. Benjamin moved to amend by adding the words "and we urge special efforts for the Temple during this, our Columbian year." The amendment was accepted.

By consent of the Chair Lady Henry Somerset was allowed to make the following explanation: Mr. W. T. Stead, who was unable to be present at this Convention, desired me to bring over a number of copies of the Review of Reviews and present them to the president of each state, as it contained matter that was liable to be of interest to the W. C. T. U. They have, I believe, been distributed through this assembly, and will you kindly take them as a gift from him? He expressed the deepest sympathy with this Convention, and as you know, I think, he is in great sympathy with many of your movements. I believe that some of the World's W. C. T. U. pamphlets have also been distributed, as I thought it might be interesting to the delegates, and I hope that you will accept any that have been given as from myself.

On motion of Mrs. Benjamin, the report of the committee on resolutions as read and amended up to the resolutions of thanks, was adopted.

The resolutions of thanks were finished and read as a whole, the vote taken and the resolutions and preamble adopted.

A reconsideration of the resolutions of thanks was moved by Mrs. Stevenson to strike out of No. 20 the words "a sweet uplifting influence" and to insert the word "an."

Mrs. Benjamin moved to substitute for the word "sweet" the word "hallowed," which was accepted by the original mover, and the motion carried by a rising vote.

Lady Somerset, in recognition, responded: I have always been taught that it was more blessed to give than to receive. I have long ago come to the conclusion that it is much more blessed to receive than to give, and I have been in that blessed state ever since I came to America, for I have always been receiving on all sides kindness and expressions of sympathy and sisterly feeling; so much so, that I really have no words to tell you how deeply indebted I am to you. But I should like just here to say that although I am most grateful to you for the insertion of the phrase which speaks of what I have been able to do for your National president, there is not one single woman in this hall that would not have done everything that I have done and ten thousand times more whenever the opportunity occurred, and I am well aware of it.

The following resolution was also adopted:

That we express our deepest regrets that William T. Stead and daughter were prevented from being present in the Convention as we had hoped and that we express thanks for the copies of the "Review of Reviews" donated to the Convention, and give him a hearty Godspeed in all his word and work, and that Lady Henry Somerset bear this message to him.

On motion of Mrs. Benjamin the resolutions of thanks as a whole were unanimously adopted by a rising vote.

On motion of Mrs. Beauchamp Mrs. Fitzgerald was requested to present the resolutions of thanks to the full house at the evening session.

Mrs. Law, of Michigan, presented the following notice:

Since the National organizers have deemed it wise to organize themselves into a board of organizers for the purpose of systematic and harmonious work, we therefore ask that there be an article inserted in the by-laws of the National by-laws, providing for a meeting of the National organizers prior and subsequent to the National Convention.

SEC. 1. That the board of organizers shall annually elect a chairman and secretary by ballot.

SEC. 2. And that they be permitted to bring plans of work before the plan of work committee for their indorsement.

MRS. BULLOCK, Chairman
MRS. LAW, Secretary.

Mrs. Benjamin stated that the plan of work committee has been abolished.

Mrs. Law agreed to make it read "before the Convention."

Mrs. Buell gave notice that for the coming year she should not stand at the head of the department of organization, thereby resigning.

The chair stated that the by-laws regulate that.

On motion of Mrs. Benjamin it was adopted as a standing rule of the Convention that hereafter no announcements of meetings of departments to be held during Convention sessions shall be read from the platform.

Mrs. Hunt moved that the executive committee shall not withdraw either, but after considerable discussion Mrs. Hunt's amendment was lost and Mrs. Benjamin's motion carried.

The Convention adjourned to meet at half past seven in the evening.

WEDNESDAY EVENING SESSION.

The Convention met at 7:30, and after singing the Crusade hymn, "Give to the winds thy fears," Mrs. A. S. Benjamin read the Crusade Psalm from the original Crusade Bible, and the Rev. Anna Shaw led in prayer.

A fine organ solo by Prof. Pfeffercorn was received with much applause, as was likewise a solo by Mrs. Whiteman.

Mrs. Fessenden moved that owing to the lateness of the hour, the report of the plan of work committee, and also of the superintendents be omitted, and that the program for the evening be taken up. This motion was seconded and carried.

On motion of Mrs. Benjamin the unfinished business of this Convention was referred to the executive committee.

The first on the program was Mrs. Ellis, of New Jersey, whose spirited address was followed by another on "The Opium Curse," by Mrs. Narcissa White Kinney.

"Jerusalem," was sung by Miss Camilla Avery.

In introducing Mrs. S. E. V. Emery, who spoke upon "Significance of Labor Troubles," Miss Willard said: "There are very few persons in this or any other country, who have written a book of which three hundred thousand copies have been sold, but the lady who is now to speak to us enjoys that honor. Her book is 'The Seven Great Financial Conspiracies.'"

Miss Willard called Mrs. Buell to the chair, and offered a resolution to be added to the list of resolutions reported by the committee.

Mrs. Fitzgerald read the full list of the resolutions of thanks, which were unanimously adopted, and "Blest be the tie that binds," was sung.

The last address of the Convention was appropriately delivered by Lady Henry Somerset. This, with the other significant and thought inspiring speeches of the evening, our readers will enjoy in a later number of THE UNION SIGNAL, which will also contain much of the aftermath of the Convention.

Miss Willard said that the Chair would like to call to the platform the local committee of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Colorado, of the county and of the city, "those good and dear comrades who have made this such a delightful Convention, whose preparations have been unexcelled in their completeness, variety and good will. It is our custom at the close of the Convention, just before adjournment, to introduce the local committee, so that they and those whom they have taken care of may come together face to face. While they are coming to the platform, I will introduce Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, who is at the head of the young women's work, as a request has come to the platform that she should be introduced."

Mrs. Barnes responded by saying: "We took pains, on Saturday, to invite a good many young women, who are busy through the day, to be with us in the evening and regretted that they could not all come. I want to say to those same young ladies as well as all the other young ladies here, that we extend to you a most cordial invitation to become members of the Y. W. C. T. U. and every young man present to become an honorary member."

Miss Willard remarked: "You will notice a band of earnest white ribboners upon the platform. They are here by invitation and include the president of the county and the local union, Mrs. Cassell, and the chairman of the committee of arrangements and the chairman of other committees of which there were at least a dozen. These ladies are in themselves about as lively a local union as there is between the oceans, and they have come by our invitation, because we wish to say that these are the ladies who have been thinking of us for a whole year, who have surrounded us with benevolence and loving kindness as an atmosphere. I know you desire that the Convention shall give to these ladies the Chautauqua salute."

Mrs. Cassell responded: "We thank you for your courteous attention," to which Miss Willard added: "Now, as we look into their faces, let them remember that we shall think of them all tenderly and gratefully and shall remember them in our prayers, as we hope they will us."

"Now, as has been our custom in these conventions," said Miss Willard, "we will close by the responsive readings which you will find in this little book. Then we will sing our closing hymn, 'God be with you till we meet again,' and Mother Benedict will make the motion for adjournment after which Mrs. Hammer will close with a word of prayer and benediction."

The program being carried out according to the suggestion of the chairman, the Nineteenth Convention of the National W. C. T. U. was adjourned on the motion of Mother Benedict, made in these words: "With the solemn and certain thought, that when we meet again, it will be in the upper kingdom, I move that the Nineteenth Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union be now adjourned."

Annual Sermon.

BY MRS. MARY MCGEE SNELL.

The Bible story I shall give you is old as men count time, but it is as young and new to-day with God's truth as when it was first written, and is as much suited to our need as if God had sent it to us as a special message. Words that men write go soon out of date, but His word is the same yesterday, to day and forever.

I was turning the pages of an old volume recently when there fluttered out a paper yellow with age. It was the proclamation of the governor of Mississippi thirty years ago. I read it to see if it contained any reference to questions in which the people are now interested. I found no mention of any such subject. It was a dead message, perhaps a good proclamation at the time it was printed, but as it contained only human words, it could only live its short life and then be lost even to memory.

When I thought of it, as representative in its mortality of all human words, I felt my soul growing jubilant with praise as I took my Bible and read again the proclamation from the Governor of the Universe given thousands of years ago, and which is as full of life this hour as when it first came freighted with love from God to man.

In the National Museum in Washington, in one of the glass cases containing presents sent to General Grant, there is an invitation to a banquet given in his honor by the Republicans of California. The envelope is of silver, the card of invitation of solid gold, the floral designs are wrought with pearls, rubies and emeralds and diamonds. It is as fine as artistic skill and wealth could make it and it was sent to one of the greatest of earth's generals; but because it was only a human invitation, it could only live its fleeting moment, and now lies among the mummies and relics of the dead past in a museum.

But there is another invitation, it is in this Bible. It begins in Genesis and trails its tender call through every sacred book until the climax of its loving entreaty is reached in Revelation. This invitation cannot go out of date. It has been sent by the Giver of a banquet, prepared at infinite cost, and the same sweet voice is saying: "All things are now ready. The Spirit and the Bride say come. Let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come."

Since God's Word cannot grow old, this Scripture I shall read you from first Kings, tenth chapter, has gathered no ancient tone as centuries have rolled upon centuries. In it we shall see One, who, although invisible, is "the chief among ten thousand and altogether lovely."

As the lily bulb holds in its center the undeveloped flower that shall come forth so white in purity, so fine in texture, so rare in perfume as to excel the robes of kings, so this Scripture contains Christ: but we cannot see Him unless our hearts answer to His heart, as octave to octave, as rhyme unto rhyme.

One of our friends has said:

"I shall never forget my wedding day. Mary and I had just left the church, when she said to me: 'John, did you ever hear such glorious music? The very air was tremulous with harmonies.'

"And I said: 'Was there music, Mary?'

'Why of course there was, John; but surely you did see the decorations, the roses and lilies and the great wreaths of smilax?'

"And I said: 'Were there flowers, Mary?'

"Oh! John, how could you have failed to see them, why, there were great banks of them! But I know you did see the bridesmaids. Were not Jennie and Annie lovely in their soft white dresses?'

"And I said. 'Were there bridesmaids, Mary?'

"Oh, John,' she replied reproachfully, 'then what did you see?'

"And I, with all my love beaming from my eyes and pulsing through my voice, said: 'I saw only you, Mary.'"

Dear friends and comrades, let us draw in every wandering thought and be unmindful for awhile even of all these glorious surroundings that we may see in this Scripture Jesus only.

The chapter I select begins: "When the Queen of Sheba heard of King Solomon." No mention is made of how she heard. The message is more important than the messenger. It was only a little maid in the home of Naaman, the leper, who said: "Would God, my lord were with the prophet, who is in Samaria, for he would recover him of his leprosy." It was only a woman, whose name is not mentioned, who, after talking with Jesus at the well, stirred the whole city of Sychar by saying: "Come and see a man which told me everything that ever I did. Is not this the Christ?"

"When the queen heard of Solomon." That was a good day in the life of the queen. The hour that has in it the news of Christ for any soul is lighted with the revelation of a "new Heaven and a new earth."

But the blessing would have ended with the hearing, if the queen had not believed in the message. So to hear of Christ will not bring salvation if there is not added faith. What is meant by faith in "The Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world"?

A man whose soul had grown beautiful through years of Christian service was called aside from the busy scenes of life, to suffer from a malady that puzzled the minds of many physicians. After months of drifting nearer and nearer death, it was decided that a surgical operation was necessary. Then followed six long months of hospital life, during which the skill of medical science was spent in trying to build up the man's system enough to stand the shock of the operation. The days were spent in complete, cheerful acceptance of pain and trial of separation from home and children.

When the operation was performed it was found to have been useless, and the sufferer only came from unconsciousness to know that he must die within the next few hours. The old surgeon who performed the operation was not a Christian, he stood by the bedside of his dying patient weeping. "Doctor," said the sick man, "I want to give you my dying message—have faith in Christ! Eight months ago I heard of you, of your great skill as a surgeon, and upon a mere report I came to you, for I was desperately in need of your help. For six months I have lived here according to your advice. I have obeyed your every direction. I have done exactly as you wished. This morning I reached the climax of my faith in you, when I took the ether knowing that when unconscious, my body would be yielded to your knife. Doctor, years ago I heard of Christ, the Great Physician. I heard of all of His power to save, to cleanse, to keep. I came to Him upon a mere report, for I was in need of a Saviour. For years I have lived according to His law, and now while death comes near, as I gave my body to you without a quickening of my pulse, so now, without a fear, I give my soul to Christ."

The Queen of Sheba had faith like this. "A cry for something more and more divine" had come into her heart. She hungered and thirsted after righteousness for she wanted to "talk with Solomon concerning the name of the Lord." This desire was strong enough to make her willing to brave the dangers of a country filled with robbers, to travel with camels, slow of step, for over a thousand miles. We do not have to go so far to see Christ. He says, "Behold! I stand at the door and knock."

Before the queen went to Solomon she prepared many fine presents for him. Had she ever seen the extent of his kingdom and his riches, she might have thought: "I will not take him any gifts, for he is too rich to care for anything I could give." It is well for us that Christ has not told us of all of His power and wealth; we could never approach Him with our gifts if we could know how rich is our King, it would crush us with its weight of glory. Therefore, to encourage us to come with our offerings of love to Him, He became "flesh and dwelt among us," constantly saying, "Give me your heart"; "Your Father loveth you"; "You are of more value than the lilies and the sparrows"; "The very hairs of your head are numbered." It is this reassuring comfort of Christ's words that make us as the queen of Sheba did, get ready our presents to place at His feet. "But," you say, "we can't give Jesus such rare gifts as the queen gave Solomon." Is it not after all the love that makes valuable the gift?

I saw a child playing in the yard. She found a piece of broken red glass. She held it up and was filled with delight as she saw all the clouds and trees were rosy tinged. To her the glass was a great jewel. She would have liked to have had it for her own, but she loved her mother too much to keep it. She ran into the house and gave it to her mother with exclamations of joy over its beauty. I saw the mother clasp the child to her heart and kiss the upturned face as she said: "Did my daughter love me well enough to give me this?" What would you have thought if she had frowned, and scolding said: "Take that out at once. It is only a piece of an old decanter. If you bring such trash as that to me again I shall punish you."

We bring our lives to Christ. He does not throw them back upon us and say angrily: "Those years are broken and stained with sin. They have been growing ugly and useless in the neglect and waste of the past." Instead of that, He folds His everlasting arms about us and joyfully greets our coming with: "I came not to destroy but to save men's lives. I am the restorer of men's souls."

The Queen of Sheba came to Solomon to prove him with hard questions. They come to us as they did to her. They come and continue to come all along our way and we would be miserable indeed if we did not have Christ to answer them for us. Here is the hard question of the licensed liquor traffic, with all of its woe and crime; we take it to Christ and He says to us out of His deep sympathy: "Shall not God avenge His own elect who cry unto Him night and day? I tell you He will avenge them speedily." We talk to Him about our thorn in the flesh and thrice implore its removal, and He answers: "My strength shall be made perfect in your weakness."

We confide in Him our weariness of all life's jar and fret, and He lovingly says: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength."

We whisper to Him our fear in the dark and stormy day, and He answers, "I am the light."

We take to Him the hard questions of our sins, and He repeats again and again, "Though they are crimson I will wash them as white as snow."

We tell Him our sorrows, and He soothes us with saying, "As one whom his mother comforteth so will I comfort you."

We ask Him about death and separation from loved ones slipped away from our reach, and He says, "I am the resurrection and the life."

We ask Him, "Where shall we go when we die?" And He answers, "I go to prepare a place for you. And there shall be no night there, and no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

We say, "How long, oh, Christ, how long?" And He answers, "Behold! I come quickly!"

When the queen came to Solomon she communed with him of all that was in her heart. And Solomon told her ALL her questions, there was not anything hid from the King that he told her not. This is the saint's communion. It is our privilege to so commune with Christ. After coming to Him, giving Him our lives and proving Him with hard questions, then there should be established a communion with Him as clear and as plain as language between the best of friends. How can we talk with Jesus and how do we know He talks with us?

The blind man could only say, "I know not how He gave me sight. I only know that whereas I was blind I now see." I need not to understand the secrets of electricity or the workings of the telephone, or who invented it, to receive the benefit of its usefulness. I need only to know how to be put in connection with the one with whom I wish to communicate. The words may run along wires that stretch through tunnels, along mountain sides, over valleys and rivers and crowded streets, but the messages are sent and received accurately and quickly. So knowing how to be put in touch with God through Christ, the immensity of space and the onward trend of all the stars can neither hinder nor confuse my talk with my King.

Then Solomon showed the queen the house that he had built. When we are in this relation to Christ, we see the house that God has built, this body the temple of His Holy Spirit, in a way we never saw our body before.

Then Solomon showed the queen the meat upon his table. Isaiah says, "I found thy words, and I did eat them." Christ says, "Unless you eat of my flesh, you have no part in me." The flesh of Christ is the Word of God. "The queen saw all of Solomon's wisdom." "Unto you," said Jesus to His disciples, "it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom of God." "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God," but the soul that believes in Jesus sees that "even the trees clap their hands praising God."

Solomon showed the queen "the sitting of his servants, and the attendants of his ministers and their apparel, and his cup-bearers." Saint Paul says, "Seeing that we are surrounded by such a cloud of witnesses."

Not many weeks ago the beloved mother of our dear leader was almost in the heavenly home. When the end was near she opened wide her eyes and said: "I see a beautiful spirit in spiritual dress! I cannot tell you exactly, but it is beautiful and diamonds are all about her. I think she is sent to show me what it is like over there." You remember the telegram that came to us from her while we were in convention in Boston:

"As one who stands upon the shore,
And sees the life-boat speed to save,
But all too weak to take an oar
I send a cheer across the wave!"

Now that she has joined the hosts of God who wear the spiritual dress, there can come no earthly telegram, but as an attendant of our King (but for the blindness of human sight we might this moment see her glorified body) she cheers and helps us on, as she could not before, and we know it by the strange, sweet uplift of soul that has come to us all since she went away to make heaven more of a home country for each white ribboner.

These cup bearers of the Lord! They come to us as they did to Elijah under the juniper bush, and bringing to remembrance some promise of Christ's, say unto us, "Arise and eat for the journey is too great for thee." Elisha, when surrounded in the city of Dothan by the enemy that came in the night and encamped on all the circling hills was full of courage, for between himself and them he saw the army of our God and His chariots of flame.

A dying husband said to his wife, "I'll tell you what I'll do, wife! I'll ask God to let me walk with you all the way, until you come."

"We see through a glass darkly," else even now upon our enraptured sight would burst such a glorious vision of the attendants and cup bearers of our King that we, like the Queen of Sheba, would exclaim, "the half has never been told."

Then King Solomon showed "the queen the ascent by which he went up into the house of the Lord!"

That is the climax of this wonderful Bible story so typical of Christ. Surely it has been already crowded enough with the love of God, but this last is His crowning blessing to our earthly pilgrimage, when after our life of communion and service is over here, He shows us the ascent by which we shall go up into the house of the Lord.

Christ led His disciples out to beloved Mount Olivet. He was the same and yet not the same Jesus, for now He wore the gloried body. As He talked to them and gave them this old earth had no longer power to hold Him, for all the magnetism of heaven drew Him upward; as He went higher and higher, the disciples, with strange, glad awe watched Him ascend into the house of the Lord. God sent His chariot of fire down to take Elijah home. He has a way, a blessed way to show us how we shall make that ascent. They shall not see it, they, our earthly comrades who bend with breaking hearts over our body to catch the last words that we shall speak in human language. Their ears shall be too deaf to hear, but there shall break upon our sight a highway, a shining way leading up to the city of our God, and we shall hear the music from the angelic choir, and we shall see as earth's light grows dim, the convoy of the soul's guard, sent by our King to bring us rejoicing up the ascent that leads "into the House of our God." Because you cannot behold its glory and its throngs of living ones, do you doubt the reality? Ah, beloved, the unseen is more real than the seen!

HIS LOVING BENEDICTION,

I sat one day by the window of the city hospital in Nashville, Tenn. It was in the early morning and I looked away across the city to the hills in the west to get a view of the capitol of Tennessee. The fog had dropped like a curtain over it and I could only see one small part of the building. The other part of it was as blotted out as if it were not there. I said, "If I did not know better I should say that which I see is all of the capitol, and how insignificant it is for such a purpose." I waited and looked again; the sun had lifted the fog, and then I saw that the great capitol had been there all the time. There was more of the unseen than the seen. I behold the great glittering dome, the white marble building towering skyward with all its fluted columns, its spacious halls and chambers. So it is to-day, dear women of the white-ribbon army; the fogs are between us and our heavenly house, but God shall lift them in His own good time and we shall see that we have been closer than we thought to the mansions of the soul. "I fancy but thinly the veil intervenes between that fair city and me."

May God help each one of us to abide in Christ, that when all is finished here we shall ascend into our eternal home where He shall reveal to us more of his glory than King Solomon could possibly show the Queen of Sheba!

PLAN OF WORK.

At a joint session of the board of superintendents and the Executive Committee of the National W. C. T. U., October 27, the following recommendations from the board of superintendents were adopted:

1. WHEREAS, the department of press work is crippled because of the inadequate appropriation, we recommend that for the ensuing year the appropriation for this department be made two hundred dollars.

2. We recognize the importance of police matron work in police stations where women are under arrest, therefore we ask the earnest coöperation of our state presidents and state superintendents to have petitions presented to municipal authorities in the various cities of the United States which have a population of over ten thousand inhabitants, for appointment of police matrons.

3. The superintendents of almshouses and penal work recommend the division in the states of the work of these departments, believing it to be for their best interests that these departments be kept entirely separate.

4. That we strive most earnestly to improve the larger opportunity afforded by the provision of the quarterly temperance lessons in the regular course of the International Series, requesting that they be placed by themselves and not on the Review Sunday.

5. On the recommendation of one of the editors of THE UNION SIGNAL the plan of work committee requests each National superintendent to send to THE UNION SIGNAL one and one half columns per year, concerning her department work; and that each superintendent, on her return from the Convention shall write at once to THE UNION SIGNAL at what time she prefers to make her reports.

6. That we indorse the use of the "Literature Fund Card" prepared by the superintendent of that department, and that we urge the use of the same everywhere.

7. That an earnest and persistent effort be made to place our official organ, THE UNION SIGNAL, in the hands of every member of the W. C. T. U. so that greater intelligence and interest in our work may obtain.

WHEREAS, the National Temperance Hospital at Chicago, Illinois, has for six years successfully demonstrated the principle of non alcoholic medication, and has shown a satisfactory development in its work, and continued increase in favor; and whereas, it became necessary to secure larger and more commodious quarters to meet the growing demands,

8. Resolved, that we pledge our continued financial support and individual influence for the promotion of this important department of our work.

9. That at some time during every state, district and county convention there be held a "Model Local Union Meeting" as a means of educating in department reports and in the keeping of records.

10. That local unions be requested to adopt a by-law requiring that written reports from local superintendents be made to the union at least once in three months.

11. That the superintendent of the Department of Narcotics prepare a petition to be signed by the National Executive Committee, and state officers of the W. C. T. U. and the officers of all other women's organizations, who are in the habit of using the sleeping car service, requesting Mr. George Pullman and Mr. Webb, president of the Pullman, Wagner and drawing-room car service, to abolish the smoking compartments in their cars.

12. That hereafter the National superintendents shall present for the plan of work only new plans.

Additional recommendations adopted by the past Convention joint meeting were as follows:

1. We urge white-ribbon women to use their ballot to prevent saloon keepers, brewers or any persons connected with the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors, from holding any office in connection with the public schools, such as school committees, trustees, directors, superintendents or teachers.

2. We recommend to states with temperance education laws where no penalty is attached to the same, that they petition for a statute that shall make the non-enforcement of any law on the part of the officers entrusted with the same, an offense for which the fine of not less than $12 shall be imposed for the first offense, and not less than $25 for each subsequent offense.

3. We recommend that superintendents of department of mercy as a part of their duty endeavor to secure a place on programs of teachers' institutes, Sabbath-school institutes and farmers' institutes, and make, or get others to make brief, concise statements of the need and advantage of humane education.

4. That we coöperate with humane societies for the enforcement of existing laws relating to cruelty.

5. That the department of school savings banks, the teaching of every day economy and thrift, which appeals to all classes and meets general favor, be recommended to the careful consideration of each local union, and that they be asked to acquaint themselves, through the literature, with the easy method of lifting humanity to a self-responsible level, and communicate it to school officials near them.

6. WHEREAS, the plan of work committee has been abolished, therefore we recommend that the National superintendents shall bring their recommendations for plan of work directly before the Convention.

TELEGRAPHIC GREETINGS.

The following telegrams were read from the platform during the Convention sessions:

To the National W. C. T. U. Convention:

Greetings from loving English sisters.—Joshua 1: 9.
London, Eng. WORLD'S W. C. T. U.

To Lady Henry Somerset:

The women at Alliance send greeting and love.
Manchester, Eng. MAYORESS OF MANCHESTER.

The Alliance send greetings through you to the W. C. T. U. We coöperate with you in all efforts to elevate humanity. SIR WILFRID LAWSON.
(On behalf of the annual conference of the Alliance.)
London, Eng.

Grateful thanks for kind greetings. May the Lord watch over you, guide you and keep you. NEAL DOW.
Portland, Me.

Your greeting cordially received. The Christian Endeavor army condemns intemperance in every form; stands for abstinence, for the suppression of the saloon, for a dethronement of its power in the politics of our land, and joins you in the petition which is being sent to the governments of the world, asking them to raise the standard of law; to strip away the sanctions of the state from the drink traffic, and to protect homes by total prohibition of the heaviest curse that rests upon our civilization. Read Col. 1: 9, 10. JOHN WILLIS BAER, Sec.
Boston, Mass.

Telegram received. God bless America's queenly women. Rev. 19: 6. J. B. CRANFILL.
Waco, Tex.

The National Christian League for the promotion of social purity, at its last meeting, passed resolutions to send cordial greetings to the National W. C. T. U., now in convention at Denver.
New York. ELIZABETH B. GRANNIS, Pres.

The Buffalo Catholic Diocesan Temperance Union now in session, sends cordial greeting. Let us hasten the day when all good citizens will unite against alcoholism, the threatening foe of this progressive nation.
Buffalo, N. Y. REV. GEORGE ZEIGER.

Heartfelt salutations. God bless you. Gallant American manhood is waiting to crown American womanhood with the ballot as soon as a majority shall be intelligent and brave enough to ask it. Predictingly and faithfully yours, (Gen.) JOHN BIDWELL.
Chico, Cal.

Warmest fraternal greetings from Canada's National W. C. T. U. Greatly regret that other engagements prevent my being with you. ELLA F. M. WILLIAMS, Pres.

The Temperance Hospital sends greetings. The ultimate solution of the liquor question will be found in medical works. Who will endow beds for the poor?
Chicago, Ill. CHAS. GILBERT DAVIS.

Greetings from the Phœnix, Arizona, union. Read John 15:7. *

Kings County W. C. T. U. In Convention assembled, to National Convention greeting. Read Phil. 3:6. *

Thanks for greeting received. Read James 5: 7, 8.
New Jersey. MRS. MARY B. DENMAN.

Central Executive Committee, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Methodist Episcopal church, in session Springfield, Mass., send greeting to National W. C. T. U. Read 1st Thess. 3:12. *

Read Is. 4:17. MRS. HENRY SHEPTON,
President Oklahoma W. C. T. U.

District of Columbia sends greeting. Josh. 1:5, 6, 7. *

Affectionate greeting. Farewell. Read Phil. 1:3, 8–10.
Hillsboro, O. ELIZA J. THOMPSON.

Little Delaware sends love and loyal greetings. Read Col. 2:5. *

Telegrams were sent from the Convention to Helen L Hood, secretary World's W. C. T. U.; Sir Wilfrid Lawson, England; Mayoress of Manchester, Eng.; editor of the Golden Rule for the National society of Christian Endeavor; Hon. Neal Dow; Susan B. Anthony; Jennie Cassedday, National superintendent flower missiou; Ellen F. Williams, president Dominion W. C. T. U.; Gen. John Bidwell, Prohibition candidate for president; J. B. Cranfill, Prohibition candidate for vice-president; Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, Ohio; Mrs. Letitia Youmans, Canada's honorary president: Mrs. H. A. Hobart; Mrs. Mary R. Denman; Rev. Geo. Likens, Buffalo; The L. T. L. convention, Los Angeles, Cal., and others.

AFTER the children's welcome an enlivening incident of the Convention was the presentation of a handsome silk quilt from Mrs. J. P. Howe, of Pueblo, Colorado, by Miss Frances E. Griffin, in these cheerful words:

In giving our hearts' best wishes to a woman whom we have long acknowledged as our American queen, whom we hope some day to make president of the United States, and of whom bishops have grown nervous, lest, when represented fairly, she might occupy the bishopric—still there are other honors yet in store for her that come up as freely and as graciously as any she has yet received. I now present to her a great donation from a woman who has long been shut in from sunlight and health, and who, during long months of care and labor has quilted it. It is impossible to show you the wealth of this silken coverlet. There are squares from every noble character whose hearts beat in unison, from the east and the west, and across the sea; Lady Somerset gave the centerpiece; there is a piece from India; there is a piece of ex-President Hayes' necktie somewhere in the middle. It is not the first gift she has received of this kind, but when at Rest Cottage, I noticed that the other was somewhat worn, and in need of repairing, and it is with pleasure that I hand over this quilt for her delectation. The Crusade Bible book-mark is also in that quilt alongside of President Hayes' necktie.

Miss Willard said: As Lucy Webb Hayes was a Crusader at the White House, it is quite appropriate it should be in my quilt.

A lovely painting, representing the Rocky Mountains and Pike's Peak, done, it is said, by "the seventh artist in the world," was presented at the same time by Mrs. Glen Morse, daughter of the sister who made the quilt. This our president received with the remark: "It shall not remain long in my study at Rest Cottage, it shall be placed in the Memorial Temple."

REPORT OF RESOLUTIONS COMMITTEE.

PREAMBLE.

We, the members of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in nineteenth annual Convention assembled, desire to give grateful thanks to Almighty God for the tender, strong guidance with which He has led us through another year of toil and victory. We rejoice that though at times we have walked through the gloom of affliction, we have known even in sorrow that righteousness and judgment are the habitation of "God's Throne;" we rejoice in the increase of membership and in the manifold enlargement of our department work, but still more in that the knowledge of its purposes, scope and aim is deepening in the hearts of our great sisterhood.

We pledge ourselves anew to the mighty all of reform work; not narrowing its scope by definitions, but setting as our ideal nothing less than the fulfillment of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven."

GOVERNMENTAL.

1. Now, as in the past, every sentiment and every principle impel us to pledge our moral support to that political party which declares for protection of the home against the saloon; for the enfranchisement of woman, and the preservation of the Sabbath.

2. Because we are positive rather than negative, in sentiment and principle, we express earnest hope that the Prohibition party, always our stanch ally and friend, will, in the near future, adopt a name broad as its purpose toward humanity.

WHEREAS, The liquor traffic involves not only great moral and social, but great economic problems concerning the welfare of the whole country: therefore, resolved,

3. That it is the sense of this body that our national Congress should, at as early a date as practicable, make a thorough investigation of the entire liquor traffic of the United States, and ascertain and officially publish the amount manufactured, imported and consumed annually; and the per cent of poverty, ignorance, crime, insanity, disease and death resulting from the use of intoxicants.

WHEREAS, the spirit of our government is so different from that of foreign governments, resolved,

4. That the crown of citizenship should not be placed upon foreigners until they have a thorough knowledge of our laws and institutions, and that a uniform national naturalization law be placed upon our statute books.

5. That while we feel the necessity of more strenuous immigration laws, nevertheless we earnestly deprecate invidious distinction against any one nationality, as embodied in the Chinese Exclusion Act.

WHEREAS, The United States Marshals instruct their deputies in the Indian Territory not to arrest without a warrant for introducing intoxicants in quantities not exceeding one gallon, and

WHEREAS, The law provides that intoxicants shall not be introduced in any quantities, resolved,

6. That we urge the United States Attorney-General to instruct United States Marshals to order deputies to make arrests without a warrant for the introduction of intoxicants in any quantity in any Indian territory.

RELIGIOUS.

WHEREAS, A strong effort has been, and is still being made, to have the gates of the Columbian Exposition opened on Sunday; and

WHEREAS, We believe that to open any part of the exhibit upon that day would establish a precedent, the tendency of which would be to break down our Sunday laws all over the country, and bring to us a continental Sunday with all its demoralizing influences; therefore, resolved;

7. (a) That we are grateful for the action of our national Congress in ordering the gates to be closed upon the first day of the week, and we trust that no contrary action may be taken.

(b) That we extend to the Board of Lady Managers of the Columbian Exposition our hearty appreciation of its action with regard to the Sunday closing of the Fair.

8. That we protest against every form of gambling, whether in the parlor of refinement, in the halls of vice, or in mercantile business, and urge every Christian woman to refuse in the line of trade to accept or appear to accept something for nothing.

9. That as far as practicable the hour from 11 a. m. to 12 m., be preserved as the devotional hour for all conventions.

SOCIAL.

10. That we unqualifiedly condemn the wearing of long skirts on the street, and will sustain all influences which may tend to discourage the same; that we base our protest upon the opinions of physicians and scientists, that such skirts gather up the poisons from the street, and thus endanger public health. We hail with solid satisfaction every arrest of thought, every awakening of conscience, every leveling up of common sense that looks toward a dress for woman which will unite comfort with elegance.

11. Inasmuch as 1893 is the twentieth year since the Crusade, we call the attention of our workers to the fact, and recommend that suitable recognition and celebration of the anniversary be observed on the first day of the next annual Convention; and we also recommend that the local and state unions suitably observe this anniversary.

12. That we stand unflinchingly for an equal standard of purity for men and women, which shall protect the manhood of our sons as well as the womanhood of our daughters.

WHEREAS, Believing that the action of the National in changing the department of young woman's work to a branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and in making their general secretary a member of the executive committee will conduce to more united effort and a larger membership, therefore resolved;

13. That we recommend the states to take the same action, and that as young women, we show our appreciation of the position granted us beside our elder sisters by striving to become more earnest, consecrated workers.

MISCELLANEOUS.

14. That a memorial from National and state officers be sent to the Directory of the World's Columbian Exposition, representing to them that while necessity compels us to submit even gratefully to such restriction of the liquor power as has been voted us, viz.: that there shall be no bar and no saloon, we still adhere to the high standard of entire prohibition of the sale of liquor in any form on the ground of the World's Fair,

15. That THE UNION SIGNAL is necessary to the intelligent prosecution of our work, and that every member of the W. C. T. U. should read its columns, that a better equipment for more satisfactory work may be secured, and that we make an effort to secure an increased circulation outside our ranks because of its value as an educator.

WHEREAS, Tobacco and cigarettes are proving the mental and physical ruin of thousands of boys and girls, often causing insanity and death, and as many good men are blind to the power of their example as users of tobacco,

16. That we urge more agitation on this subject, through pulpit and press, and that we work to secure more effective legislation.

17. We rejoice in the liberty of citizenship which our sisters in Wyoming enjoy; and covet for ourselves such liberty and protest against the longer disfranchisement of American womanhood.

18. That we extend to those white-ribbon women who have gone forth from us to build up the World's W. C. T. U., and to teach the principles of total abstinence to other nations, our tenderest sympathies and our prayers, and pledge to them such financial support as we may be able to give.

WHEREAS, We feel that our name has been baptized into a sacredness which should confine its use to reform movements only, therefore,

19. That we heartily condemn the use of the name Woman's Christian Temperance Union, or the initials, W. C. T. U. as an advertising medium in any enterprise that has not been indorsed by the National W. C. T. U.

WHEREAS, The Polyglot petition signed in forty different languages praying all governments to put alcoholics and opium under ban of law, having originated in our National W. C. T. U.,

20. That we give it our hearty and immediate attention, and that all petitions be filled and returned on or before May 1, 1893.

21. That the white-ribbon is the badge of the W. C. T. U., and has become very sacred to our women, and no other organization has a right to wear it.

WHEREAS, We deplore the ignorance of the general public as to the great evil of the opium habit, and realize that in it we are facing a foe as corrupting, and more subtle than the liquor habit, therefore, resolved,

22. That all interested in the redemption of slaves from its bondage inform themselves as to its effects, and constitute themselves a committee to work against its use.

23. That we recommend the organization of the Inter-state W. C. T. U. Press Association, and its objects to advance the interests of state W. C. T. U. journalism.

WHEREAS, The financial standing of the Temple has never before been so secure, and the outlook so hopeful as now—the report given and accepted here showing that by united effort we can, within one year, hold a controlling amount of Temple stock, therefore, resolved,

24. (a) That we will not cast doubt upon this enterprise; that we will not create distrust; that if any cannot help, they shall at least allow those who will do so, peace of mind in the doing; further resolved,

(b) That it is the sense of this convention that for the sake of the W. C. T. U. and the great work to which it is pledged, and for the sake of the cause of woman's advancement in the world, there is but one just and reasonable course to pursue—that we stand with solid front and united effort until we reach a successful and triumphant completion of this great enterprise; and to this end we urge special and persistent effort for the Temple during this our Columbian year.

25. That we, as earnest students of the great labor movements now agitating all nations, rejoice that the enfranchisement of woman is so generally advocated in conventions of working men; also that the temperance question has received a strong impetus from the advocacy by labor leaders of total abstinence and prohibition; we suggest to all our state auxiliaries the wisdom of welcoming to our Conventions fraternal delegates from labor organizations that we may learn more of their plans, and the sending of fraternal delegates from our society to theirs that they may learn more about the temperance question.

26. That inasmuch as those living in the rural districts have not the means of becoming familiar with our organization, we recommend that a better system be arranged by our plan of work committee to meet this desirable end.

27. That we express our deep regret that Wm. T. Stead and daughter were prevented from being present in the Convention as we had hoped; and that we express our thanks for the copies of "Review of Reviews" donated the Convention; and that we bid them a hearty Godspeed in all good word and work; and that Lady Henry bear this message to them.

THANKS.

28. That we express to Lady Henry Somerset, our loving appreciation of her strong and tender ministry to our National President in her recent sad bereavement, and of her presence and inspiring words in this Convention, and assure her that the memory of these will linger with us as a hallowed, uplifting influence in the coming years; and that she will always receive from the White Ribbon Army the warmest welcome our hearts can cherish.

Nothing makes home so bright, comfortable and healthful as a "Garland" Stove or Range.

We call the attention of our Presbyterian and Baptist readers to the opportunity offered by J. A. Hill & Co. in our advertising columns. Those interested may find it to their advantage to communicate with this firm.

SOMETHING REALLY BEAUTIFUL AND USEFUL FOR NOTHING.

Messrs. Cornish & Co., whose advertisement appears in this paper, have just issued an entirely new catalogue and handbook of the pianos and organs manufactured by them at their mammoth factory at Washington, New Jersey. This new catalogue is exquisitely illustrated with portraits of the proprietors and photo-lithographs of every instrument made in the Cornish factory; it is double the size of the last celebrated catalogue issued by this old-established and enterprising firm, and is printed in colors after designs by the most eminent artists. It is well worth a dollar as an ornament to your parlor, and it can be had for nothing—all you have to do is to write and ask for it. An entirely novel plan has been adopted by Messrs. Cornish in this new catalogue. They have had printed in plain figures opposite every piano and organ cut, the exact factory cost of the instrument; this will show at once to all who are contemplating the purchase of a piano or organ what they can save by getting it from Messrs. Cornish. The immense profits made by agents and dealers are given to the people. Write for a catalogue to Messrs. Cornish, of Washington, New Jersey; it will cost you nothing, and you will be agreeably surprised with the result.

A COMPLIMENT TO THE KEYSTONE EXPRESS.

The close of a report of the recent International Homeopathic Congress, written by one of the Chicago delegates, reads as follows:

"The fitting introduction to the important work of the Congress was by means of the celebrated Keystone Express, running over the famous Pennsylvania Line.

"Leaving Chicago nestling on her inland sea, and fanning herself into that marvelous activity which characterizes her daily business life, we took the train shortly before the sun assumed its meridian height, and in a little more than twenty four hours of peaceful and rapid transit out into the distant east, we were safely deposited at the City by-the Sea. The memory of that happy ride; its gently gliding, rapid motion; its perfection of detail; its absolute safety; its picturesqueness of scenery; the genial courtesy of its officials, and its homelike comforts, all tended to rest and invigorate us. It was, indeed, a fitting introduction to the most important convention which the world of Homeopathy has ever seen.

"Then came the humming cadenza of the homeward wheels. We know of nothing more inspiriting than a rapid ride from Philadelphia to Chicago on this far-famed Pennsylvania line. In its fostering care we lived, we mused, we ate, we slept, and we formulated beautiful dreams. We were lulled to rest by the unceasing vigils of this gigantic corporation. We became its happy, loving and trusting ward. We left its sheltering roof and its palatial train with unceasing regret."

BEAUTIFUL QUEEN MAB'S

curious eccentricities are illustrated by fine original engravings, in Dr. O. P. Brown's unique Shakesperian Almanac for 1893. One or more sent for distribution among friends, on receipt of address on postal. J. GIBSON BROWN, 47 Grand Street, Jersey City, N. J.

SOMETHING NEW.

Leaving Chicago every Thursday at 3:00 p. m. on the fast express, the Wabash R. R. runs a Tourist Sleeper to Boston via Detroit, Montreal and the Canadian Pacific Ry. Rate per berth to Montreal, $1.25; to Boston, $1.50.

The Wabash also runs a Tourist Sleeping Car to Boston via Niagara Falls, leaving Chicago every Monday at 3:00 p. m. Same rate.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

DESIRED INFORMATION.

We desire to impress upon the minds of the public the superiority of the service offered by the Wisconsin Central Lines between Chicago and Milwaukee and St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and all points in the Northwest. Two fast trains leave Chicago daily for St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth with Pullman Vestibuled Drawing-Room Sleepers and Coaches of latest design. Its Dining Car Service is unsurpassed. This the public is invited to judge for itself. It is the only route to the Pacific Coast over which both Pullman Vestibuled, first-class and Pullman Tourist Cars are operated from Chicago via St. Paul without change.

Pamphlets giving valuable information can be obtained free upon application to your nearest ticket agent, or to JAS. C. POND, General Passenger and Ticket Agent. Chicago, Ill.

THE DULUTH AND SUPERIOR SPECIAL.

In full keeping with its well-known progressive policy the North Western Line (Chicago & North-Western Railway), has recently inaugurated through train service between Chicago and the Lake Superior region. This new train is known as the "Duluth and Superior Special," and it leaves Chicago daily at 5:50 p. m., arriving at Superior at 8:20 a. m. and Duluth at 8:52 a. m. the next day, making the journey in the remarkably quick time of fifteen hours. The train is made up of baggage cars, standard day coaches and palace buffet sleeping cars of the most modern and approved design, and all classes of passengers are carried through without change of cars. Supper is served in dining car after departure from Chicago, and breakfast is served from a well-stocked buffet before arrival at Duluth. To insure yourself a quick and comfortable journey be sure to ask for tickets via the North-Western Line. Any ticket agent can furnish full information regarding this railway, or it will be promptly furnished upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago.

The recent completion of The Youth's Companion building has given the public a more perfect comprehension of the magnitude of The Companion's business. The public has never imagined that it required five stories and a basement of a building which covers half an acre of land, nearly three acres of floor space altogether, to publish that paper which is best known in the American homes.

A closer scrutiny, however, of each floor and each department of the business does not reveal to the visitor a surplus amount of room. The paper's 450 employés, organized in different departments, its fourteen printing-presses, its folding machines, its stitching and mailing machines are kept busy fifty-two weeks in the year in order to send out the weekly supply of The Companions.

39,170 post-offices in the United States receive a package of Companions every week, and the postmasters find that the day of the week on which The Companion arrives is their busiest day. This is easily understood when it is known that it requires from forty five to seventy-five tons of white paper on which to print each week's issue, or more than 550,000 copies.

One very pleasant feature of the new building is its hospitality. The paper has room enough to keep "open house" to all the paper's friends; many visitors to Boston accordingly have already included in their plans a tour of this very interesting establishment.

The Companion reached that stage of its growth where this large building was demanded by the needs of the business; through its ample accommodations it will be better able still to serve the American people, whose appreciation of this old and cherished Boston journal made its erection possible.

The Union Signal

CONVENTION NUMBER.

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME. CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION. FOUNDED 1885. WORLD'S WOMAN'S AND EVERY LAND.

Hemmings

Volume XVIII.—No. 46.] CHICAGO, November 17, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs. Ursula D. Hemrick
711 N. Hoyne Ave.
Chicago

LIST OF HOLIDAY GOODS,

BOOKS, BOOKLETS, CARDS, NOVELTIES. The patrons of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association will be delighted with the fine list of Holiday Goods offered this year. Our purchase began early in the Spring, and the utmost care has been taken during the entire year to secure the most beautiful articles at reasonable prices. See below some of the choice things we have to offer.

Books.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Glimpses of Fifty Years.
Miss Willard's autobiography; made a specialty in the Topical Readings of the W. C. T. U. Course of Study for 1892.
Cloth.....$2 25
Half Morocco, gilt edges.....3 00
Full Morocco, gilt edges.....3 75
Sold by subscription. Agents wanted.

Woman and Temperance.
Interesting sketches of leaders in the temperance reform.
Price.....$1 50

Nineteen Beautiful Years.
The story of the life of Mary E. Willard—"my sister Mary," as she is yet tenderly called by the author.
Paper.....$ 10
Cloth.....75

How to Win.
A book for girls.
Cloth.....$1 00

Woman in the Pulpit.
A strong presentation of the arguments in favor of the ordination of women.
Paper.....$ 25
Cloth.....1 00

A Classic Town.
History of Evanston, Illino's. Of special interest, also, to all connected in any way with the Northwestern University. Profusely Illustrated.
Price, full gilt.....$1.50
Sold by subscription. Agents wanted.

The Year's Bright Chain.
A gift book of quotations from Miss Willard's writings. Illustrated. For young people.
Price, cloth.....$ 50

A Young Woman Journalist.
A life-sketch of Miss Julia A. Ames. Designed to stimulate young women to noble achievement. By Frances E. Willard and others.
Price.....$1 50

OTHER BOOKS.

White Ribbon Birthday Book. By Anna A. Gordon. Gilt edges, $1.25, plain edges.....$ 1 00

Childhood; Its Care and Culture. By Mary Allen West. An excellent book for parents and guardians. In cloth, marble edges, $3.00; in morocco, gilt edges.....4 25

Frances Raymond's Investment. By Mrs. S. M. I. Henry.....50

Unanswered Prayer. By Mrs. S. M I. Henry, (for gifts to parents) 50

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life. By Hannah Whitall Smith. The "Standard Edition," 12mo., 240 pages. The "Handy Classic" Edition, 18mo., 292 pages, each in separate box, gilt edge; round corners; except No. 3.

No. 1. Paper cover.....$ 50
No. 2. Cloth, fine.....75
No. 3. Cloth, full gilt edges.....85
No. 3½ Half White vellum.....1 00
No. 4. French morocco, seal.....1 50
No. 10. Persian Calf, broken glass pattern 1 75
No. 12. Best German calf-embossed.....2 25
" 12. " " " padded.....2 50

Addresses By Prof. Henry Drummond. With brief sketch of the author by Rev. W. J. Dawson also an excellent portrait. 12mo., cloth.....$ 75
16mo., white vellum cloth, silver top, in handsome box.....1 00
Contents:—I. Love: The Supreme Gift, the Greatest Thing in the World. II. The Perfected Life: the Greatest Need of the World. III. Dealing with Doubt. IV. Preparation for Learning. V. The Study of the Bible. VI. First an Address to Boys.
"The addresses are famous for their insight into relations of Christianity to the moral life, and their direct applications of the principles of Christianity to development of life spiritually. They rank among the best examples of the purity of English style."—The Boston Globe.

How to Learn How. Addresses. I Dealing with Doubt. II. Preparation for learning. 16mo., Popular vellum series.....$ 20
*Cheaper Edition, 10c.; per doz.....1.00
"Two admirable addresses. We recommend it to fathers and mothers whose sons and daughters are troubled with doubts, and to Ministers who have to meet doubt in their parishes. It will not remove doubt, but it will help to remove dread of doubt. Unshaken faith is not comparable to the faith that has been shaken."—The Christian Union.

The Perfected Life. The Greatest Need of the World. 16mo, Popular Vellum Series.....$ 20
*Cheaper Edition, 10c.; per doz.....1 00
"Procure it, realize your need, follow its advice, and live and enjoy the perfect life. Full of practical thoughts and suggestions."—Religious Telescope.

Love, the Supreme Gift. The Greatest Thing in the World. 16mo., Popular Vellum Series.....$ 20
*Cheaper Edition, 10c.; per doz.....1 00
"It is worth its weight in gold, so full is it of the spirit of Christ. Let all who can strive to secure it. It will do you and yours good."—The Christian at Work.

Modes of Sanctification: Being "The Perfected Life" and "Love," combined in cheap form for distribution. 12mo., paper.....$. 10
"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying: Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—The Evangelist (N. Y.).

Over 150 thousand copies of this work have been sold.

New Notes for Bible Readings. By S. R. Briggs. With Memoir by Rev. J. H. Brookes, D. D. 8vo. cloth flexible, 75c.; cloth.....$ 1 00

Every one of the many readers of "Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings" will welcome this entirely new collection containing selections from D. L. Moody, Maj. Whittle, Rev. J. H. Brookes, D. D., Prof. W. G. Moorehead, Rev. E. P. Marvin, Jno. Currie, Rev. W. J. Erdman, Rev. F. E. Marsh, Dr. L. W. Munhall, and many others.

"The readings are practical, helpful, full of suggestiveness, and bring out the most important points and truths in the subjects on which they are based. It is, in fact, the best thing of the kind which we have seen."—The Christian at Work.

A Plain Talk About The Theater. By Rev. Herrick Johnson, D. D. Sixth Edition. 16mo., paper, 20c; cloth.....$ 50
"As crushing as a charge of cavalry, and as convincing as logic can make truth. A terrible indictment of the theater."—The Advance.

A Song of Life. By Margaret W. Morley.
Profusely illustrated, with strong but exquisite touches, the author treats the delicate subject of life development. It may well follow Miss Lathbury's "Talks With a Child," and its teachings will but deepen the reader's reverence for the mystery of life.
Price.....$ 1 25

Poetical Works of Frances Ridley Havergal. Author's complete edition. The only unabridged authorized edition published in America. Each, 8vo., boxed.
1. Cloth.....$ 2 00
2. Cloth, full gilt.....2 50
3. Half white vellum, gilt top, uncut edges.....2 50
4. French morocco padded, gilt roll red under gold edges.....4 00
5. Persian calf, padded and embossed, gilt roll and red edges.....5 00
6. Crushed levant, elegant.....6 00
7. Full German calf, padded, elegant, gilt, round corners.....7 50

Miss Havergal stands without a peer in the English language in the department of religious poetry.
"The book in paper and binding is all that could be desired."—Publishers' Weekly.

WORKS OF REV. A. J. GORDON, D. D.

"Whatever Dr. Gordon writes we read with pleasure, for his spirit is always sweet, and his teachings always pure. We may not always agree with his interpretations of Scripture, but we are always impressed with his profound sincerity."—The Christian Inquirer.

Dr. Gordon is a writer with whom to differ is better and more suggestive than to agree with some others. He loves the truth, he gives his readers much that is true and deeply of the essence of Christianity."—The Independent.

Ecce Venit; or Behold He Cometh. 12mo., cloth, gilt top.....$ 1 25
* Paper.....50

Grace and Glory. Sermons for the Life that Now is and That which is to Come. 12mo., cloth, gilt top.....1 50
* Paper.....50

In Christ; or, the Believer's Union with his Lord. 12mo., cloth, gilt top.....1 00
* Paper.....35

The Ministry of Healing; or, Miracles of Cures in all Ages. With History of the Doctrine from the Earliest Times. 12mo., cloth, gilt top.....1 25
* Paper.....50

The Two-Fold Life; or, Christ's Work for Us, and Christ's Work in Us. 12mo., cloth, gilt top.....1 25
* Paper.....50

The First Thing in the World; or, The Primacy of Faith. 16mo., Popular Vellum Series.....20
* Cheaper edition, 10c; per doz.....1 00
"It is a clear testimony to the vital importance of faith, and we trust it may be read and circulated largely."—Episcopal Recorder.

The Larger Christ. By Rev. Geo. D. Herron. With introduction by Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., 12mo., cloth, gilt top.....$ 75
CONTENTS:—I. The Discovery of Christ—The Need of our Times: II Innocence Suffering for Guilt; III. The Growing Christ—The Dying Self; IV. The Resurrection of Life.
"This is not a large volume, but it is one that is vital in every page of it. It is full of deep and true thought, is pervaded by a profound and intense spiritual realism, and characterized by marked simplicity, directness and vigor of expression."—The Advance.
The Christian Union of September 26 ranks Mr. Herron with Maurice, Kingsley and Farrar, of England, and Bishop Huntington and Dr. Washington Gladden, of America, as one of the most eminent thinkers and writers of our times on applied Christianity.

How to Mark Your Bible. By Mrs. Stephen Menzies. With prefatory note by D. L. Moody. 8vo., paper.....$ 35
cloth.....75

"It is an excellent method for Bible students, teachers and preachers."—The Christian Union.

"Full of useful suggestions."—The Observer.

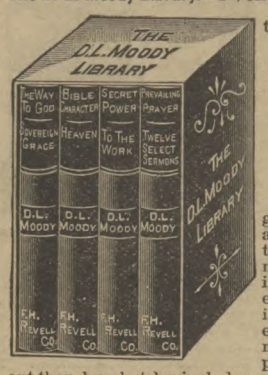
"The matter is full and the directions explicit. For those in search of a method the book is heartily commended."—N. W. Christian Advocate.

"An almost inexhaustible number of suggestions for marginal notes and markings. It is a book every Christian worker will do well to have among his Bible helps."—The Young Men's Era.

WORKS OF D. L. MOODY.

The D. L. Moody Library. 4 Vols. in box. 12mo., cloth.....$4 00
A new edition in new binding, containing the following eight books.



The Way to God and Sovereign Grace.
Secret Power. To the Work.
Bible Characters. Heaven.
Prevailing Prayer. Twelve Select Sermons.

"By the strenuous cultivation of his gift Mr. Moody has attained to a clear and incisive style which preachers ought to study; and he has the merit which many more cultivated men lack, of saying nothing that does not tend to the enforcement of the particular truth he is enunciating. He knows how to disencumber his text of all extraneous matter, and exhibits his wisdom as a preacher hardly less by what he leaves out than by what he includes. Apart from its primary purpose each of these books has a distinct value as a lesson on homiletics to ministers and students."—The Christian Leader.

Bible Characters. Embracing the lives of Daniel, Lot, John the Baptist, Joseph of Arimathea, and others. 12mo., paper.....$ 30
Cloth.....60

Prevailing Prayer—What Hinders It? 40th thousand. 12mo., paper, 30c.; cloth.....60

To the Work! To the Work! Exhortations to Christians. 40th thousand. 12mo., paper, 30c.; cloth.....60

The Way to God and How to Find It. A Book for the Inquirer. 130th thousand. 12mo., paper, 30c.; cloth.....60

Secret Power; or, the Secret of Success in Christian Life and Christian Work. 83d thousand. 12mo., paper, 30c.; cloth.....60

Twelve Select Sermons. 185th thousand. 12mo., paper, 30c.; cloth. 60
"These are popular works by our great Evangelist, and they deserve a large sale. There can be no need for us to commend the living, blazing speech of our brother Moody. Who can equal him in natural simplicity all aglow with holy passion?"—C. H. Spurgeon, in the Sword and the Trowel.

D. L. Moody at Home. His Home and Home Work. Eight illustrations, 12mo., paper, 50c.; cloth.....$1 00
Embracing a description of the educational institution established at Northfield, Mass., together with an account of the various noted gatherings of Christian workers at the place, and the most helpful and suggestive lectures and the best thoughts there exchanged; adding also many helpful hints and practical points.
"There is nothing in the career of this remarkable man more striking than the history of these establishments at Northfield."—The Independent.

The Gospel Awakening. 13 Illustrations. 8vo., cloth.....$2 50
Comprising 150 sermons, addresses, prayer-meeting talks, Bible readings and prayers of great revival meetings conducted by Moody and Sankey in Philadelphia, New York; Chicago and Boston, as well as in Great Britain. Also the lives of D. L. Moody, I. D. Sankey, P. P. Bliss, Maj. D. W. Whittle, Rev. Joseph Cook, Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost and Miss Frances E. Willard. Also sermons, Bible readings and lectures by Joseph Cook, George F. Pentecost, D. W. Whittle and Miss Frances E. Willard.

A Gift of Love. By Rose Porter. Long 18mo., cloth.....$1 00
White cloth, silver top.....1 25
Decorated silk, silver top, in box.....1 75
"Love" texts for every day of the year, with quotations from choice authors in poetry and prose, aptly fitting the text for the day.
"The work must have called for a great amount of patient toil. But it has not been spent in vain, for the volume will prove a blessing to many a soul. To use it day by day for a year thoughtfully and prayerfully, must result in a rich growth in love on the part of the user. The author is well known and esteemed for her previous works' sake."—The Observer (N. Y.)

Seed Corn for the Sower; or Thoughts, Themes and Illustrations for Pulpit and Platform, and for Home Readings. By Rev. C. Perrin, Ph. D. 12mo., cloth.....$1 50
Although no less than two hundred authors have been drawn upon to supply the material for this work, it is believed that the great mass of illustrative matter will be found entirely new and fresh—embracing between 300 and 400 pages of original and carefully selected illustrative excerpts covering a wide range of subjects.
"To teachers and all engaged in Bible instruction it will prove a volume of great help and usefulness, and furnish ready to their hand many a nail with which to fasten in a sure place the truths they may desire to drive home."—The Christian at Work.

Readings for Winter Gatherings. Edited by Rev. James Fleming, B. D. Series I, II. and III. 12mo., cloth, each.....$ 60

Recitation Poems. For Sabbath Schools, Mission Bands, Concerts, Easter, Children's Day, Harvest Homes, Christmas and other Festivals. By Mrs. Hannah More Kohaus. 16mo., boards.....50

The Browning Reciter. By Robert Browning, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, Adelaide Proctor, W. S. Gilbert, etc., etc., besides a number of Prose and Poetic Selections from the Repertoires of Mr. Samuel Brandram, Mr. Clifford Harrison and other high-class Elocutionists. 16mo., cloth.....50

The Overton Reciter. Character Sketches for Recitation. Robert Overton. 16mo., cloth.....50

What to Read at Entertainments. Edited and Arranged by the Rev. Frederick Langbridge, M. A. 12mo., cloth, each.....60
Vol. I. Verse.
Vol. II. Prose.
Vol. III. Sacred Verse.
Vol. IV. Sacred Prose.
The object kept in view by the editor of these books, himself a well-known writer, is to give a selection of poetical and prose readings specially suitable for Sunday school missionary entertainments and social gatherings.

Safely Home. By Charlotte Murray. A Word to the Bereaved. 12 pages, 32mo., paper.....$ 10
A simple message of consolation.

Leaning on Jesus. By Fanny Lonsdale. A poem beautifully printed on fine paper in two colors. 32mo., oblong, 12 pages and cover.....10
A rare gem in a beautiful setting—suitable for enclosure in letters to any one in trouble of whatever kind.

How to Keep Healthy. By Alfred T. Schofield, M. D. Familiar Chats on Hygiene of Daily Life. 12mo., cloth.....$ 80

"It is a remarkably well-balanced book, showing its author's scientific information, rare common sense, and belief in the co-operation of human and divine factors in physical soundness and strength. We should like to see the book given a place in every home library."—The Golden Rule.

In the Far East. By Geraldine Guinness. Letters from China; edited by her sister, with introduction by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor. Very fully illustrated. Quarto, cloth, ornamented.....$1 50

"This book was scarcely written—it was lived; for the breath of life is in it from cover to cover. . . . We have never read so wonderful an account of successful missionary effort."—The Presbyterian.

"We easily understand how this edition is the fifteenth thousand. This is a remarkable book."—The Golden Rule.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

The Pilgrim's Progress. (The Barnard-Linton Edition,) From this world to that which is to come. With 55 full-page illustrations by Frederick Barnard, J. D. Linton and others. Quarto, elegant cloth, boxed.....$1 50

The appearance of this handsome and artistic edition of Bunyan's immortal allegory at a moderate cost is well timed. Few works lend themselves better to illustration, and the above named artists have found a congenial subject in the vivid situations and clear-drawn characters of the book. "We have waited for years for just such an edition as this."—Youth's Companion.

The Library Edition. Illustrated by Frederick Barnard and others. 12mo., cloth, gilt top,$1 50

The Crown Edition. Fully illustrated. 12mo., cloth..... 1 25

The Dollar Edition. Forty excellent illustrations add value to this edition; bound in rich cloth, the cover printed in numerous colors. 12mo., cloth.....$1 00

The Scott Editions. With Explanatory Notes by Thomas Scott, D.D. 12mo., cloth..... 1 00
18mo., cloth..... 50

The Children's Edition. A new edition. Complete with Memoir and Portrait of author. Numerous illustrations. 12mo., cloth, 50

We believe this to be the best edition of Pilgrim's Progress at the price on the market.

Among the most attractive juvenile books we have to offer are:

Lady Gay and Her Sister. By Mrs. George Archibald; a sweet story for little folks by a very popular author, in which lessons of temperance and right-living are insensibly taught.....$ 75

Columbus and What He Found. By Mary A. Hull..... 1 00

Bright Eyes. Sunday entertainment for little folks..... 50

The Story of Jesus. For little children. 12mo., 316 pages, cloth, printed in colors..... 1 00

"A lovely book, and one that mothers and Sunday-school teachers may well turn to account. By all means give the little ones this 'Story of Jesus.'"—N. Y. Evangelist.

"Mrs. Morton has done a none too easy work in a most creditable manner. We heartily commend it."—Christian at Work.

"A successful attempt to adapt the life of Christ to the comprehension of children of four years and under. The charm of the story and the simplicity of the telling make this one of the very best books that can be given to a child."—New York Observer.

Girls of To-Day. Cloth, 40c.; paper..... 20

Boys and Other Boys. Cloth, 40c.; paper, 20

These admirable books by Mrs. Scott have had a great sale. For teachers to give to their Sunday School scholars (of ages from 9 to 18) there are no better books that we know of.

Missionary Biography Series. We urge the placing of this series of missionary books in all our Sabbath School libraries.

Thos. J. Comber, Samuel Crowther, Missionary Ladies, John Williams, John Griffith, Robert Moffatt, James Chalmers, William Carey, Robert Morrison, Bishop Patteson.

Ten vols., fully illustrated; fine cloth binding, each.....$ 75 or set in box..... 7 50

World's Benefactors' Series. 12mo., fully illustrated, 160 pages, cloth, extra, each..... 75

This series is uniform in style and price with the popular Missionary Biography series.

Each volume is finely illustrated with numerous engravings, maps, etc., and their popular character may be judged by the fact that repeated editions have been called for, Stanley alone having reached 20,000.

David Livingstone. His Labors and His Legacy. By Arthur Montefiore, F. R. G. S.

Charles H. Spurgeon. His Life and Ministry. By Jesse Page.

Florence Nightingale, the Wounded Soldier's Friend. By Eliza F. Pollard.

Wycliffe and Luther. Two Noble Lives.

Henry M. Stanley, the African Explorer. By Arthur Montefiore, F. R. G. S.

Michael Faraday; Man of Science. By Walter Jerrold. Portrait and illustrations.

"The tale is an inspiriting one. The illustrations of places connected with the philosopher's life give the book additional value and interest."—The Scientific American.

The Pilgrim Series. By Rev. W. W. Newton. Sermons to Children. 5 vols in box, 16mo., cloth.....$5 00

Containing the following, which may be had separately:

Little and Wise..... 1 00

The Wicket Gate..... 1 00

The Interpreter's House..... 1 00

The Palace Beautiful..... 1 00

Great Heart..... 1 00

BOOKLETS, FINE ART SOUVENIRS, ETC.

Every year this class of goods improves. Ingenuity is exhausted in devising attractive designs and artistic effects. Our list is much finer for the price than ever. See what we have FOR FIFTY CENTS.

God Bless You. A devotional book for every day, with introduction by Helen Marion Burnside. Beautifully illustrated, in box, 50

The Lord's Prayer. A poem on each principal petition, written by Helen Marion Burnside; illustrated and printed by the Rafolith process; in box..... 50

Golden Showers. By A. Manslip; containing the following poems, illustrated in color: The Builders, Charms and Knots, Tears, Records, The Force of Prayer, Sunshine and Cloud, Early Spring, Summer, Mountain Echoes, Wild Flowers, Friendship, Patience, A Wish, Joy and Sorrow, Angels, Evening Thoughts, Life, God's Goodness; bound in bright colored, stiff covers..... 50

A Souvenir of Jean Ingelow. Illustrated with eight etchings on India paper, and a portrait on satin with autograph..... 50

Secret of a Happy Day. By Frances Ridley Havergal. Exquisitely jeweled in floral relief, monotint illustrations..... 50

Chimes of Christmas. Selections from Longfellow, Lowell, Irving and others, similar in design to above..... 50

Sublime Thoughts. By Frances Ridley Havergal. Same in general design..... 50

Paths of Safety. By John Wesley. Exquisitely designed and copiously illustrated, with brilliant floral designs, in box..... 50

Grace and Faith for Every Day of Every Year. Selected and arranged by Helen Marion Burnside. Very fine. Decorative and monotint illustrations. In box..... 50

The Old, Old Story. By Charlotte Murray, elaborately illustrated in colors and monotint, in box..... 50

Songs of the Cornfield. Cover, a straw hat trimmed with poppies, ripe wheat, apple blossoms and a sickle. It contains the following poems: Seeds of Joy, Plough Song, Sowing Song, Bird's Song, Dream Song, Child's Song, Mother's Song, Father's Song. The finis says:

"All our life is a sowing and reaping,
Such as the seed is the harvest grows.
All who sow folly must gather weeping;
All who sow patience must reap repose,
For none sow thistles and reap the rose.
Safe in the earth all the seeds lie sleeping,
And all our deeds are in God's good keeping,
And what the harvest shall be He knows."

Illustrated..... 50

Toward the Light. A daily text-book for the young. Cover design, two white-robed cherubs singing. The designs are very appropriate and the coloring exquisite. In box..... 50

Faithful Friends. A booklet shaped like a horse's head. Color of cover, rich shades of brown. The poem is by Helen of Troy, illustrated by Helena Maguire. Just the thing for children, especially Band of Mercy children. In box.... 50

A Souvenir of John G. Whittier. With eight etchings on Japanese paper and a portrait on ivorine; very dainty, 50

A Souvenir of Henry W. Longfellow. With etchings on Japanese paper, and a portrait on satin; very dainty..... 50

A Souvenir of Frances Ridley Havergal. Illustrated by eight etchings on India paper and a portrait on satin with autograph..... 50

Beacon Lights for God's Mariners. Fine, large booklet with monotint illustrations; in box..$ 50

Green Pastures and Still Waters. Silvered cover, with violets, monotint; in box..... 50

Habitations of God. Gilded cover, in brown tints; in box..... 50

Long Shore. Same in style; in box..... 50

Alpine Summits. Illustrated in monotint; large..... 50

FOR FORTY CENTS.

Auld Lang Syne. With lovely floral cover in relief; colors, pink and silver.. 40

Comfort for All. By Charlotte Murray. Illustrated by A. Noether. Cover, pansies in relief in natural colors... 40

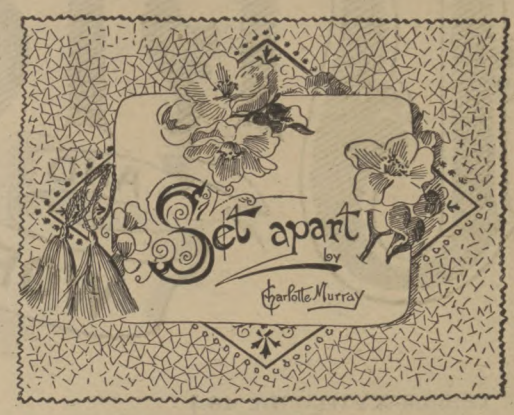
May He Keep Thee. Poems by Charlotte Murray. Illustrated. Cover, winter scene in relief. 40c.

FOR NEW YEAR.

Gems of Faith, Selected from the writings of Frances Ridley Havergal. Exquisite cover in pink and silver. Design in relief, 40

Happy Days. By Frances Ridley Havergal. Cover exquisite, embossed and lace work in gold and silver.. 40

Set Apart. By Charlotte Murray. "Set apart for royal service." Is an exquisite booklet in pink and silver.....$ 40



The Everlasting Hills. By Louise Harlowe. Very fine.....$ 40

River Sketches. Illustrated by C. G. Noakes..... 40

Fullness of Grace. By W. A. Garratt. Illustrated in tints..... 40

Led On. Companion to above. 40

Sea Sketches. Illustrated in tints and monotint..... 40

Country Sketches. Companion to above..... 40

Mountain Sketches. Companion to above..... 40

Winging Heavenward. Selections by Cecilia Havergal. Exquisite; stiff covers. 40

FOR THIRTY-FIVE CENTS.

Bells Across the Snow. By Frances Ridley Havergal. Brilliantly illustrated; in stiff covers.....$ 35

We Are Seven. By W. Wordsworth. Illustrations in color and monotint; stiff covers..... 35

Songs of the Shore. By Margaret Haycraft. Illustrated in monotint by Eleanor E. Manly..... 35

FOR THIRTY CENTS.

Everlasting Love. By Frances Ridley Havergal. A New Year token. Cover in relief, pale, pink and silver.....$ 30

Bright Leaves and Ruddy Berries. The Holly in relief. Illustrated throughout; in box..... 30

Yuletide Memories. By Margaret Haycraft. An artistic booklet: in autumn tints; profusely illustrated..... 30

Fairies. By E. Nesbit. Paintings by Pauline Suntee. A booklet shaped to large pink roses. Illustrated throughout; in box... 30

Moonbeams. A crescent-shaped booklet; silvered edges: illustrated in tints and monotint, with poems on Nocturn, To the Night, The Abbey, The Nightingale, An Evening Walk, A Reverie, and Song of the Brook... 30

Cathedral Echoes. A booklet, 8x10 inches, with frontispiece and seven fine illustrations, and quotations from archbishops, bishops and other church dignitaries..... 30

FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

The Ivy. A poem by Barton; illustrated and arranged by Bessie Simpson. Booklet shape of ivy leaf; profusely and brilliantly illustrated; tied with cord; in box.....$ 25

A Key to Nature's Lock. Booklet, shaped like padlock, with ivy vine straggling across poem and illustrations..... 25

Merry Christmas Bells. By Helen Marion Burnside. Fine booklet; illustrated in tints and monotint. Very nice for children..... 25

O Come, All Ye Faithful. Very artistic booklet, with illustrations; in box, 25

Gray's Elegy, with monotint illustrations; in stiff covers..... 25

Christmas Waits. By Helen Marion Burnside. Illustrated in tints and monotint. Booklet shaped like large weight; in box..... 25

Promises. By Charlotte Murray. Illustrated; very pretty..... 25

Flowers. By H. W. Longfellow. Illustrated. Companion to "Promises" in box..... 25

Blessings for All. By Frances Ridley Havergal. Companion to above; in box..... 25

Sweet Peace. By Geo. Herbert. Illustrated. Embossed cover in autumn leaves, with gilt; in box..... 25

Wild Roses. A booklet shaped like a basket of flowers, containing poem and many illustrations.....$ 25

Morning Chimes. Shaded cover, with golden bells pendant. Illustrated in tints and monotint..... 25

Evening Bells. Companion to above..... 25

Untold Mercies. By Cecilia Havergal. Illustrated in monotint..... 25

Christmas Hymns. With brilliant group of pansies in relief on cover. Illustrated..... 25

The Pure in Heart. By Rev. John Keble. Illustrations in monotint..... 25

Lead, Kindly Light. Very pretty..... 25

Glory to God. Companion to above.....$ 25

The Village Bells..... 25

Cups of Gold. Gold embossed cover, gilt edge, printed in gilt..... 25

Morning Glories. Companion to above..... 25

Xmas. A Child's Dream of a Star. By Charles Dickens. In terra-cotta and gilt..... 25

FOR FIFTEEN CENTS.

Cords of Love. By Johnston Beall, with monotint illustrations.... 15
Christmas Peace. Illustrated with delicate tints..... 15
Christmas Echoes. Companion to above..... 15
Safe Anchorage. Very pretty booklet, Illustrated in monotint... 15
Shining Stars. Star-shaped booklet, tied with ribbon; illustrated on every page..... 15
Alone with Thee. A lovely star-shaped booklet covered with marguerites, with poem and illustrations..... 15
Fair Thoughts for Happy Hours. A very fine booklet, full of choice selections. Cover, white with gilt..... 15
The Swan. A swan-shaped booklet. Illustrated in tints; in box... 15
Undertones. Compiled by Mrs. N. V. Walker. Printed in purple, 15
A Year in Heaven. By Lucy Larcom. Bound in delicate flesh tint, embossed in white and gold..... 15
Pearls of the Ocean. Booklet; sail-shaped; brilliantly illustrated, 15
Here and There. "We have no continuing city." Very dainty.... 15
Silver Bells. Illustrated by Noel Smith..... 15
Silvery Snowflakes. Very nice..... 15

FOR TWELVE CENTS.

O Paradise! O Paradise! In white and bronze. Illustrations in monotint..... 12
Bethlehem. By Phillips Brooks..... 12
The Changed Cross. White and gilt..... 12
Only a Little Brown Sparrow. (Not one is forgotten before God.) Tinted cover..... 12
The Golden Land. A text book for a month; very nice; in tints and monotint..... 12

FOR TEN CENTS.

Blossoms. Lovely little floral booklet. Illustrated throughout.... 10
Marguerites. Same as above..... 10
Love. A stiff-covered booklet, containing texts for every morning and evening in the week. Illustrated in monotint..... 10
Joy. Same as above..... 10
Peace. Same as above..... 10
These are nice gift books for Sunday-school classes.
Lead, Kindly Light. A 20-page booklet. Illustrated in tints..... 10
Thy Will Be Done. Illustrated in tints. 20 pages..... 10
The 23d Psalm. Companion to above..... 10
Star of the Morning. Companion to above..... 10
Music of Nature. Oblong illustrated booklet, flowers in relief on cover..... 10
On the Sea. Companion to above..... 10
Sweet Promises. By Charlotte Murray. Illustrated in tints..... 10

TORCHON TINT BOOKLETS.

Ranging in price from 10c. to 25c.

SPECIAL.

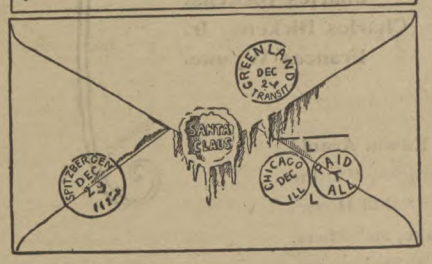
Our Armor for Every Day. Square booklet, ragged edge; cover design, gold cross entwined with pink apple blossoms. Exquisite illustrations. A devotional book for every day..... 60
Photographs on Satin, framed in heavy white board, ragged edge, of Frances E. Willard, Rev. Joseph Cook and Rev. Henry Drummond. Each..... 25
The Frost Spirit. By John G. Whittier. Padded satin-stripe cover; illuminated; beautifully illustrated. Lovely for parlor table..... 75
Snowflakes. By Nathaniel Hawthorne. Companion to above..... 75
The Beggar. By James Russell Lowell. Same as above..... 75
Woods in Winter. By Henry W. Longfellow. Same as above..... 75
These are lovely in design and contents.

BROCHURES.

In attractive form, chaste paper covers, 16mo., 32 pages each, viz.:

Love, the Supreme Gift. By Prof. H. Drummond.. 10
The Perfected Life. By Prof. H. Drummond..... 10
How to Learn How. By Prof. H. Drummond..... 10
The Message of Jesus to Men of Wealth. By Rev. Geo. D. Herron, 10
The First Thing in the World. By Rev. A. J. Gordon..... 10
Hope, the Last Thing in the World. By Rev. A. T. Pierson..... 10
The Fight of Faith. Talks to Young Men. By Rev. Theo. Cuyler, 10
The Four Men. By Rev. James Stalker..... 10
How to Become a Christian. By Rev. Lyman Abbott..... 10
The Dew of Thy Youth. By Rev. J. R. Miller..... 10
Temptation. An Address to Young Men. By Rev. Jas. Stalker ... 10

A Letter from Santa Claus to the children, dated at Arctic Way Station en route for North Pole. A real temperance letter, in which he repudiates the intimation that he drinks beer. "A pretty mess I should have made of it if I had not kept my head clear." Should be put in the hands of every child. Lithographed in delicate tints. Price, 10c.



The Midget's Christmas Party. A stocking-shaped booklet, descriptive of a Christmas Party, with its joys and its toys. Brilliantly illustrated, pink and white stripe with monotint foot.....$ 30

Electric Extension Cards. Three folds; very pretty when closed. When open and placed where the light can fall from behind they become luminous, and their beauty is greatly intensified. Exquisite..... 20

W. C. T. U. Bookmarks, in celluloid on white or light colored ribbon, fringed at either end; also L. T. L. Bookmarks of the same quality..... 25

CALENDARS.

We have a very fine line of Calendars—larger than ever. Read.

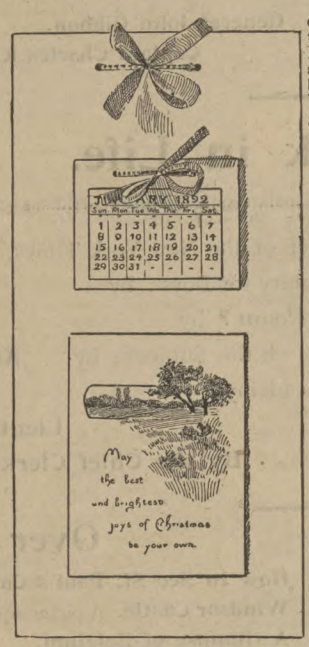
Language of Flowers Calendar. A floral-shaped extension Calendar. Very pretty..... 15
All the Year Through Calendar, A beautiful design. Six cards, two months and two texts on each, with floral and landscape designs. Suspended by ribbon..... 15
Happy Hours Calendar. Similar to above..... 15
Grace and Truth Calendar. Similar to above..... 15
Month by Month Calendar. Similar to above..... 15
Daily Light Calendar. A dainty Calendar; 12 cards, one for each month. Lovely floral designs..... 20
Daily Light Calendar. Same as above, with chain for hanging. In box..... 25

On the Wing Calendar. A large wall calendar, four cards, wall text on each, 25c.

Christian Graces Calendar. A devotional calendar, twelve cards, beautifully decorated, 40c.

The Havergal Calendar. Twelve cards suspended by ribbon; quotations from Miss Havergal for each month. 40c.

BLOTTERS.



Decorated blotters are a novelty. It is only a short time since they first were offered for sale. Exceedingly useful on the desk, at school or at home. They are bound to become very popular. We have quite a variety. See

3x7 inches, celluloid cover decorated with card and calendar, tied with ribbon.$ 12
4½x6½ inches, with celluloid cover, handsome card design, tied with ribbon..... 15
4x8 inches, celluloid, decorated with card and calendar, tied with ribbon..... 15
4¼x9 inches, celluloid cover, card, calendar, tied with ribbon..... 20
5¼x8¾ inches, celluloid cover, decorated with jeweled card, very nice..... 30
7¼x9¼ inches, celluloid cover, large card, tied with fine ribbon..... 35

CARDS.

We have a very fine line of cards. They should be seen to be appreciated. We have not room to enumerate all. Here are a few:

Lovely shaded tints in cream and blue, folding card or booklet, jeweled flowers in relief, in gilt.....$ 15
Embossed and jeweled, folding card or booklet, in gilt..... 15
Fine embossed and jeweled folding cards or booklets..... 12
Folding cards, enameled decorations, inscription on inside fold..... 12

A very fine selection of cards in a multitude of beautiful, artistic designs, very cheap, at 1c., 2c., 3c., 4c., 5c., 6c., 7c., 8c., 9c., 10c., to 15c. each.

For the convenience of our patrons we have arranged a number of cards in packages and offer them at the following prices:

Package No. 1 contains 12 cards at 2c. and 3c. 1 package, 15c; 3 packages, 40c.; 5 packages, 70c.
Package No. 2 contains 12 cards at 4c., 5c. and 6c. each. 1 package, 35c.; 3 packages, $1.00; 5 packages, $1.50,

BIBLES.

In great variety and at various prices. Send for information,

THE POPULAR ENAMEL TEXTS.

Highly finished enamel board, with indented texts in gold and silver, gilt beveled edge and silk cord attached. Very attractive and suitable for hanging in homes, hospitals, etc.

No. 1. Small Shields, 5x6 inches, 15c. each, $1.50 per doz.
No. 2. Cyprus Texts, 5x6 inches, 15c. each, $1.50 per doz.
No. 3. Large Shield Texts, 9x13 inches, 45 cents each, $4.80 per doz.
No. 4. Small Banner Texts, 5x6 inches, 15c. each, $1.50 per doz.
No. 5. Small Shield Texts, light colored boards, 5x6 inches, 15c. each, $1.50 per doz.
No. 6. Medium Banner Texts, 8½x6 inches, 25c. each, $2.50 per doz.
No. 7. Same as No. 2, with easel back, 5x6 inches, 15c. each, $1.50 per doz.
No. 8. Oblong Texts, lettering in colors and light colored board, 5½x12 inches, 25c. each, $2.50 per doz,
No. 9. Oblong Texts, 6¼x13 inches, 30c. each, $3.00 per doz.
No. 10. Large Tablet Texts, 16x9½ inches, 50c. each, $5.00 per doz.
No. 11. Medium Bell Texts, 5½x6 inches, 15c. each, $1.50 per doz.
No. 12. Scroll Texts, 6x8 inches, 25c. each, $2.50 per doz.
No. 13. Oblong Texts, same style as No. 8, 5¼x12 inches, 25c. each, $2 50 per doz.

Excepting No. 8, all the above have embossed lettering in gold or silver.

AND DON'T FORGET.

The beautiful Souvenir Spoon, with the history of the W. C. T. U. written all over it.

WALL ROLL.

Price..$ .75

Arranged with one leaf for every day in the month. It is neat, delicate, and will make an appropriate gift for the New Year. Printed in large, clear letters, easily read at a distance. Mounted on roller with cord to hang up.

For all the above, address

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

W. C. T. U.

HERE IT IS. WHAT?

WHY, THE BEAUTIFUL

SOUVENIR SPOON

Which we have been preparing for our workers and those making a collection of spoons. Here are our rates for the different styles, all made of Solid Sterling Silver:

Single teaspoon . . . $2.25; gilded $2.75
" orange spoon 2.50; " 3.00
After dinner coffee sp'n 1.50; " 1.75

Send all orders to

Woman's Tem. Pub. Ass'n,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL.

COMPILED BY
ANNA A. GORDON

OLD—NEW—TESTED—FRESH

OLD because it contains the favorites of White Ribboners everywhere, the songs which have become their watchwords.

NEW because rich treasures of word and song have been prepared for its pages.

TESTED because its hymns have borne the wear and tear of use.

FRESH because it rings clear and sweet for the home, the nation, and the truth of God.

It is divided into the following sections:

Devotional Meetings	Mass Meetings
Evangelistic Services	Prohibition Rallies
Gospel Temperance Meetings	Special Days
Memorial Services	Closing Hymns

Responsive Scripture Readings

PRICE, $ .35.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association,
The Temple, Chicago.

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS

With Its Stirring Music is just THE THING for Your Public Meetings It will help Immensely

YOUNG PEOPLE LIKE IT.
The CHILDREN ENJOY it.
Old Folks are Interested.

PRICE 35c. PER COPY.
Send for Sample Copy to

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
THE TEMPLE
CHICAGO.

The Youth's Companion

The last year has been the year of largest growth in the Sixty-five years of THE COMPANION'S history. It has now reached a weekly circulation of 550,000 subscribers. This generous support enables its publishers to provide more lavishly than ever for the coming Volume, but only a partial list of Authors, Stories and Articles can be given in this space.

Prize Serial Stories.

The Prizes offered for the Serial Competition of 1892 were the Largest ever given by any periodical.

First Prize, $2,000. Larry; "Aunt Mat's" Investment and its Reward; by Miss Amanda M. Douglas.
Second Prize, $1,000. Armajo; How a very hard Lesson was bravely Learned; by Charles W. Clarke.
Third Prize, $1,000. Cherrycroft; The Old House and its Tenant; by Miss Edith E. Stowe (Pauline Wesley).
Fourth Prize, $1,000. Sam; A charming Story of Brotherly Love and Self-Sacrifice; by Miss M. G. McClelland.
SEVEN OTHER SERIAL STORIES, during the year, by C. A. Stephens, Homer Greene and others.

Great Men at Home.

How Mr. Gladstone Works; by his daughter, Mrs. Drew.
Gen. Sherman in his Home; by Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch.
Gen. McClellan; by his son, George B. McClellan.
President Garfield; by his daughter, Mrs. Molly Garfield Brown.

The Bravest Deed I Ever Saw, will be described in graphic language by Officers of the United States Army and by famous War Correspondents.

General John Gibbon. General Wesley Merritt.
Captain Charles King. Archibald Forbes.

Your Work in Life.

What are you going to do? These and other similar articles may offer you some suggestions.

Journalism as a Profession. By the Editor-in-Chief of the New York Times, Charles R. Miller.
Why not be a Veterinary Surgeon? An opportunity for Boys; by Dr. Austin Peters.
In What Trades and Professions is there most Room? by Hon. R. P. Porter.
Shipbuilders Wanted. Chats with great shipbuilders on this Subject; by Alexander Wainwright.
Admission to West Point; by the Supt. of U. S. Academy, Col. John M. Wilson.
Admission to the Naval Academy; by Lieut. W. F. Low, U. S. N.
Young Government Clerks at Washington. By the Chief Clerks of Six Departments.

Things to Know.

What is a Patent? by The Hon. Carroll D. Wright.
A Chat With Schoolgirls; by Amelia E. Barr.
Naval Courts-Martial; by Admiral S. B. Luce.
Patents Granted Young Inventors; by U. S. Com. of Patents.
The Weather Bureau; by Jean Gordon Mattill.
Newly-Married in New York. What will $1,000 a year do? Answered by Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher and Marion Harland.

Over the Water.

How to See St. Paul's Cathedral; by The Dean of St. Paul.
Windsor Castle. A picturesque description by The Marquis of Lorne.
A Glimpse of Belgium. The American Minister at Brussels.
A Glimpse of Russia; by The Hon. Charles Emory Smith.
Adventures in London Fogs; by Charles Dickens.
London Cabs. "Cabbies;" their "hansoms." Charles Dickens, Jr.
A Boy's Club in East London. Frances Wynne.

"HOW I WROTE BEN HUR," by Gen. Lew Wallace, opens a series, "Behind the Scenes of Famous Stories." Sir Edwin Arnold writes three fascinating articles on India. Rudyard Kipling tells the "Story of My Boyhood." A series of practical articles, "At the World's Fair," by Director-General Davis and Mrs. Potter Palmer, will be full of valuable hints to those who go. "Odd Housekeeping in Queer Places" is the subject of half a dozen bright and amusing descriptions by Mrs. Lew Wallace, Lady Blake, and others.

All the well-known features of THE COMPANION will be maintained and improved. The Editorials will be impartial explanations of current events at home and abroad. The Illustrated Supplements, adding nearly one-half to size of the paper, will be continued.

FREE

New Subscribers who send $1.75 now will receive The Companion FREE to January 1, 1893, and for a full year from that date, including the Double Holiday Numbers at Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's, Easter and Fourth of July. The Souvenir of The Companion in colors, 42 pages, describing the New Building in all its departments, will be sent on receipt of six cents, or free to any one requesting it who sends a subscription. Please mention this paper.

to 1893

Specimen copies sent free on application.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, Boston, Mass.

Send Check or Post-Office Order at our risk.

A Ruddy Glow

on cheek and brow is evidence that the body is getting proper nourishment. When this glow of health is absent assimilation is wrong, and health is letting down.

Scott's Emulsion

taken immediately arrests waste, regardless of the cause. Consumption must yield to treatment that stops waste and builds flesh anew.

Almost as palatable as milk.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

CHOICE BOOKS.

Our Early Presidents, Their Wives and Children. From Washington to Jackson. By MRS. HARRIET TAYLOR UPTON. With 150 illustrations. 4to, gold cloth, $3.00.

A book that should be in every American home.

Old Concord: Her Highways and Byways. By MARGARET SIDNEY. 8vo, cloth, $2.00. New and enlarged edition. Fully illustrated from photographs and drawings made on the spot.

Concord's historic and world-famous homes appear in text and illustration.

The Sarah K. Bolton Success Series. Three volumes: Some Successful Women, How Success is Won, Social Studies in England. $1.00 each.

"Stimulating and helpful in every sense."

The True Story of Columbus. By ELBRIDGE S. BROOKS.

Initial volume of the new series, "Children's Lives of Great Men." History made delightful to young readers. 4to., fully illustrated with original pictures, and elegantly bound, $1.25.

The Shakspere Oracle; or, Wheel of Fortune. 50 cents.

A unique arrangement of diagrams and text, designed to familiarize young people with Shaksperian poetry, while affording social entertainment. The new game of the season.

D. LOTHROP COMPANY, Boston.

OUR PERFECTION

STAMPING OUTFIT FREE!

The Ladies' World is a mammoth Illustrated magazine, each issue comprising 20 or more large pages, including a handsome cover, and is devoted to stories, poems, ladies' fancy work, artistic needlework, home decoration, housekeeping, fashions, hygiene, juvenile reading, etiquette, etc., etc. It is one of the best and most popular of ladies' magazines, having a circulation of over 300,000. Its publishers, wishing to introduce it into thousands of homes where it is not already taken, now make the following unprecedented offer: Upon receipt of only 18 Cents in postage stamps, we will send The Ladies' World for Three Months, and to every subscriber we will also send Free and post-paid, our new Perfection Stamping Outfit, containing a great variety of new patterns, as follows: 1 Ornamented Alphabet, 1½ in. high; 1 Script Alphabet ½ in. high; 1 Spray of Daisies, 5 x 8 in.; 1 Dancing Girl, 4 x 7 in.; 1 Bunch of Violets, 4 x 5 in.; 1 Half Wreath of Wild Roses and Wheat, 7 x 10 in.; 1 Flying Bird, 4 x 4 1-2 in.; 1 Bunch of Pansies, 4 x 4 in.; 1 Peacock, 4 1-2 x 6 in.; 1 Scolloped Border for Flannel Skirt, 1 1-2 x 5 in.; 1 Braiding Border for Dress, 3 x 7 in.; 1 Border for Table Cover, 2 x 7 in.; 1 Border for Pillow Shams, 2 1-2 x 6 in.; 1 Bunch of Buttercups, 3 x 3 in.; 1 Wild Roses and Buds, 3 x 5 in.; 1 Design for Cushion, 6 x 6 in.; 1 Design for Napkins, 4 x 4 in.; 1 Design for Lunch Cloth, 6 x 6 in., and 25 other beautful designs, making in all 41 artistic patterns and two complete alphabets, perfcrated on the best quality of Bond or Parchment Paper, which can be used indefinitely without injury. With each Outfit we send free our Book of Complete Instructions for doing stamping, also instructions for making Blue, Black and White Powder and distributor. The patterns contained in this Outfit would cost over Two Dollars if purchased singly at retail, yet we send the whole free to anyone sending 18 cents for a three months' subscription to our charming magazine. Five subscriptions and 5 Outfits will be sent for 72 cts. Do not miss this chance! Satisfaction guaranteed. As to our reliability, we refer to any publisher in New York. Address:

S. H. MOORE & CO., 27 Park Place, New York.

MOTHERS! FATHERS! SUNDAY-SCHOOL TEACHERS!

Do you desire that boy or girl of yours to become interested in the Bible? If so, I wish to have a word with you. Moreover, quite likely you are beginning to be on the lookout for a useful Christmas gift for some child, and yet feel that you cannot afford a high price. Why not solve the three problems at once by acting upon this Unprecedented Offer; the remaining stock of "Mothers' Bible Stories" must be disposed of immediately. This book is 10½ x 8 inches, weight nearly 5 pounds, 625 pages, illuminated margins, full-page colored plates. Superb substantial cloth and gilt binding, large, clear type, fine quality of paper, 173 chapters, 74 elegant illustrations, introduction by Bishop Vincent and Dr. Henson. A wonderful, rare and fascinating book. Regular price, $3.50; the remainder will be sold at $1.75. You will not meet with such a "bargain" opportunity again. References if desired. Order at once of JOHN VANCE, 262 and 264 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

WANT 2 AGENTS! ONE PRESBYTERIAN BAPTIST

IN EVERY COMMUNITY.
A RARE OPPORTUNITY. GOOD PAY.
Address, for full particulars,

J. A. HILL & CO.,
44 E. 14th St., New York.

Publisher's Notes.

THIS NUMBER

Of THE UNION SIGNAL, known as the "Convention Number," is not only of great interest to you, but will do much good if broadly scattered. You know this, having read it. It should be placed in the hands of your pastor, your neighbor, your friends. We will send this large, 28-page paper to any address on receipt of the subscription price—five cents per copy.

TAKE NOTICE—New subscribers who send the subscription price, $1 per year, before December 1, 1892, can have their year commence with the "Convention Number" and expire with December 30, 1893.

One Year and Six Weeks for one dollar if received before December 1st. Any person sending in a new subscription during the remaining weeks of 1892 will receive THE UNION SIGNAL from the date of receipt until December 30, 1893, for one dollar.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

NEARLY GONE.

The "White Ribbon Hymnal" is proving very popular, and the first edition is nearly all sold. Another edition will be prepared immediately, however. It is receiving the warmest commendations everywhere. A letter from George Noyes Rockwell, under date November 25, says: "Allow me to congratulate you on the new 'White Ribbon Hymnal,' our first order of which has this week come to hand. It is, to my thinking, the best and most complete book of its size, etc., that has yet been published."

Besides everybody's favorite hymn, and a number of new and beautiful songs, it contains responsive Bible readings for use in local and public W. C. T. U. meetings, both for opening and closing services, and a list of Scripture selections for temperance meetings, chosen by our leading speakers. It should be owned by every member of the W. C. T. U. and their friends. Price 35c.; per dozen, $3.50.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

In the November Our Day, Mr. F. Perry Noble, of the Newberry Library, Chicago, has a brilliant article on "Africa at the World's Fair." Ex-Pres. Magoun writes on "Mr. Moody's Schools at Northfield and Chicago." Dr. Pentecost's great address at Chicago on "Aggressive Christianity in India" appears in full. Joseph Cook has a most timely lecture on "Fraudulent Elections, North and South." There are "Vital Points" from Dr. Storr's recent Chicago address, with Editorial Notes on the "Lake Mohonk Indian Conference" and "The Death of Tennyson." Price 25 cents a number; $2.50 a year. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

We have left from National Convention a number of badges, on white satin ribbon, sent from London, England, by Miss Helen L. Hood, to sell for the benefit of the British branch of the World's W. C. T. U. They have on them a picture of Lady Henry Somerset and the name of the organization. Will be valued as having come from England, and be useful as bookmarks. Only a limited number are left. Price 10c. each, Send for them to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

We devote a part of the advertising space in this issue to our Christmas goods, and take pleasure in saying that we have a finer selection to choose from than usual. We invite every present subscriber to secure orders for the same and send to us, together with as many new subscribers as possible.

Address all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

AGENTS WANTED

For

The Junior Partners,
Childhood, Its Care and Culture,
Glimpses of Fifty Years, and other books.

For particulars address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

From $35

WE DO IT EVERY TIME! Save you from $50 to $200

HOW DO WE DO IT?

We sell from our factory at wholesale prices direct to the public, saving them all agents' and dealers' exorbitant profits. We are doing a marvellous business. One thousand Pianos and Organs per month. WONDERFUL, but true! To prove it, send for our new catalogue, illustrated in colors. It is FREE to any address. Examine it, and you will see that we are selling at prices that are simply WONDERFULLY LOW. We have now some of the finest styles of Organs and Pianos ever manufactured. Our new catalogue shows all the latest. Our twenty-sixth annual special offers are now ready. We have bargains in all styles and at all prices. Organs from $35. Pianos from $175, for cash or on easy payment. We have the largest direct trade in the world. We have a larger factory and employ more men than any firm doing a direct business. You can visit our factory FREE if you live within 200 miles of us.

ORGANS and PIANOS For CASH and on EASY PAYMENTS

. . . NOTE . . .
We are absolutely responsible for all our contracts.

REFERENCES: First National Bank, and all the great Commercial Agencies.

NO SATISFACTION, NO PAY! All instruments shipped on free trial warranted for ten years.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE AT ONCE TO

CORNISH & CO. Old Established & Reliable Washington, NEW JERSEY.

From $175

WE MAIL FREE

OUR SPECIAL CATALOGUE

OF

Ladies' Fine Cloaks and Jackets.

Containing exact photographs, with prices, of sixty-five beautiful special style cloaks of our own manufacture, ranging in price from $7.50 to $50. Each one a decided and unmatchable bargain.

Over forty thousand cloaks sold by us through the mails last season, and our line this season is much the finest we have ever shown.

In addition to the sixty-five SPECIAL BARGAINS IN CLOAKS, this catalogue contains also a complete descriptive price list of our enormous stock of silks, well known to be the largest and finest silk stock in America. This alone makes the book one to be desired by every lady, and worth many times the effort required to secure it. Write a postal for it to-day, mentioning this paper, and get a copy by return mail. Address

CHAS. A. STEVENS & BROS.,
111 State St., Chicago, Ill.

Enameline STOVE POLISH

THE MODERN

Ready for use. Applied with a Cloth. LITTLE Labor, NO Dust, NO Odor. The BEST and MOST ECONOMICAL Stove Polish in the World. Sold everywhere. Sample mailed FREE.

J. L. Prescott & Co., Box B, No. Berwick, Me.

Recommended for Comfort, Support and Fine Form. Combines best features of Corset and Waist. Much worn by women and misses unable to bear a rigorous garment. Snug fitting, beautifully made Warranted. Equal to any $1.25 Waist. White, Drab, Gold, Black. Genuine marked CCC. 7,000 dealers sell it. Sent post paid for Jackson Favorite Waist.

$1. CORONET CORSET CO.
JACKSON, Michigan.

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.

NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

YOUNG LADIES } SHOULD WEAR { GOOD SENSE

CORSET WAISTS. Permit full breathing

MAGIC LANTERNS

And STEREOPTICONS, all prices. Views illustrating every subject for PUBLIC EXHIBITIONS, etc. A profitable business for a man with small capital. Also Lanterns for Home Amusement. 236 page Catalogue free.

McALLISTER, Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y.

Agents Wanted

Save Half On New BICYCLES

A $25 cycle for $12; others as low. Largest & oldest dealers in the U. S. We sell everywhere. Easy payments if desired. Cata. free. ROUSE, HAZARD & CO. 77 G St., PEORIA, ILL.

BEATTY Piano, Organ, $23 up. Want agents. Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beatty, Wash'ton, N.J.

HEADQUARTERS for LOW PRICES

We save all our good cash customers from 25 to 75 per cent. on a large variety of useful articles besides which we manufacture. Send for Circulars and Prices. The following are among the Articles we sell: Bicycles, Watches, Organs, Pianos, Safes, Sewing Machines, Carriages, Wagons, Road Carts, Sleighs, Buggies, Harness, Portable Forges, Anvils, Vises, Feed Mills, Bone Mills, Cider Mills, Etc. CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago.

400 Kinds of SCALES

PRINTING OUTFIT 15c

COMPLETE, 4 alphabets rubber type, type holder, bottle Indelible Ink, Ink Pad and Tweezers. Put up in neat box with directions for use. Satisfaction guaranteed. Worth 50c. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Sets names in 1 minute, prints 500 cards an hour. Sent postpaid 15c; 2 for 25c. Cat. free.

R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y. City.

100 SAMPLES of Artistic WALL PAPERS sent for 8c. New designs, beautiful colorings. A. L. DIAMENT & Co., 1206 Market St., Philada.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT

OR LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash light photographs of real life. 41st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published. Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. We Give Credit. Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for

WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE

a New, Choice, splendidly Illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all,—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.

$2.85 WARRANTED FOR 5 YEARS.

Will keep as good time as a $15 watch. We are the only firm in the United States making this offer. The country has been flooded with cheap imitations of this watch. Now we propose to offer 10,000 of the real article. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address and we will send this watch to your nearest express office for you to look over and if you think it is a big bargain pay the agent $2.85 and express charges and it is yours. We send our guarantee that you can return it any time within one year if in any way unsatisfactory.

FREE. If you send cash, $2.85, with your order we give you a $1.00 Gold plated chain as sample.

Keene's Mammoth Watch Store,
301 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

New Cantatas, Concert Exercises and Anthems.

EMANUEL, a sacred cantata, in the form of oratorio, by W. A. Ogden. The story of Emanuel told in song. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

SANTA CLAUS' DELIGHT, a merry Christmas Cantata for Sunday schools, by Chas. H. Gabriel. Beautiful music, pretty scenes and a jolly entertainment for the children. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

JOY-BELLS, a new Christmas Concert Exercise for Sunday schools, by J. H. Fillmore. Pretty music, recitations, and readings. Price, 5c.; 55c. per dozen, post-paid; $4.00 per 100, not prepaid.

HARK! WHAT CELESTIAL SOUNDS, a chorus anthem for choirs, by J. B. Herbert. An anthem of unusual beauty. Price, 10c.

☞ A full descriptive list of all our Christmas Cantatas, Concert Exercises, and Anthems mailed free.

FILLMORE BROS., 141 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

Habit causes one to continue the use of an article, although inferior, rather than change to a superior which is new. It is a bad habit that causes one to cling to an inferior article when in he can get a better for the same money. We ask all those who desire a pure, healthy, pleasant and highly effervescent table water to try Manitou, and one trial will convince you it is far superior to all others.

Manitou Table Water

Unexcelled for Family, Club and Restaurant use packed in cases of 100 Pints and 48 Pints.
Convenient forms for Dealer and Consumer
Address for literature
Manitou Mineral Water Co., Manitou Springs, Colo.
Sold by all first-class groceries. Also by all druggists.

Spoons and Forks with our
"XII" SECTIONAL PLATING ARE THE MOST ECONOMICAL FOR GENERAL USE

ROGERS BROS "XII"
SPOONS AND FORKS

Are plated THREE TIMES HEAVIER on the three points most exposed to wear.

SOLD BY FIRST-CLASS DEALERS.

If you are not sure where the genuine 1847 Rogers Goods can be obtained, address the MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO., Meriden, Ct.

Illustrations of latest designs and valuable information will be mailed you. (Mention this paper.)

BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS FOR THE HAIR AND SKIN.

An elegant dressing, Prevents baldness, gray hair, and dandruff. Makes the hair grow thick and soft. Cures eruptions and diseases of the skin. Heals cuts, burns, bruises and sprains. All druggists or by mail 50 cts. 44 Stone St. N.Y.

A CENT SENT BENT.

Manufacturer of
"CROWN" PIANOS AND ORGANS.

WELL SPENT, is a cent sent to Bent, (your address, on postal) if you wish a Piano or Organ. I want verses about the "Crown" goods, and give Pianos, Organs, etc., for the best ones. Ask and learn how it's done. Catalogue free. GEO. P. BENT, (Clerk No. 52), Chicago, Ill. (Estab. 1870).

'ACTINA' THE GREAT EYE RESTORER. THE BLIND SEE. THE DEAF HEAR. CURES CATARRH. Asthma, Bronchitis, Head & Throat Troubles.
NEW YORK & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N,
Room 5 & 5 1-2 Lakeside Bldg., S. W. cor. Adams & Clark Sts., Chicago. Prof. J. H. GILBERT, Mgr.

ROASTER & BAKER
HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES. Agents Wanted. Catalogue free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.
CATARRH
Sold by Druggists or sent by mail, 50c. E. T. Hazeltine, Warren, Pa.

Publisher's Dep't.

OUR DAY,

A Record and Review of Current Reform.

JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.

Price: Single numbers, - - $ .25
Yearly subscription, - - 2.50

Published by
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ALL QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

A Reference Library Within the Easy Reach of Everybody.

Every one who reads, every one who mingles in society, is constantly meeting with allusions to subjects on which he needs and desires further information. In conversation, in trade, in professional life, on the farm, in the family, questions are constantly arising which no man, whether well read or not, can always satisfactorily answer. If the facilities for reference are at hand they are consulted, and not only is curiosity gratified, but his stock of knowledge is increased, and perhaps information is gained and ideas suggested that will directly contribute to the success of the party concerned. And how are these facilities for reference to be had? How are the millions to procure this library? How are they to obtain the means of informing themselves on every point in which they may be interested; of satisfying themselves with respect to persons and places, on questions of art and science, religion and politics, literature and philosophy, agriculture, commerce and manufacture? How can the working man hope to bring within his reach the whole circle of sciences and other points of human knowledge that has developed up to the present day?

We answer these questions by offering our readers an opportunity to obtain the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica at the unheard of rate of only 10 cents a day.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

NOW READY!

Two New Books for the Holidays.

1. A WOMAN'S EVANGEL. By Eva Kinney Griffith.

A picture of temperance work along the lines so familiar to all W. C. T. U. women. Written by one who has lived the experience she describes, through active participation in local and state work, and who wields a facile pen. The story will interest all readers—its Gospel temperance meetings, ostracism because of political conscientiousness, downfall due to moderate drinking—all are true to life. Send for it! Price $1.25

2. BRIGHT EYES, OR PLEASURE AND PROFIT FOR SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

A book of pictures, with blank spaces in which the children are to write Scripture verses illustrated by the cuts. Further description given later. Price 50c.

Address all communications to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

STRAWS.

The Woman's Temperance Publishing Association shipped from its stock room during October, 3,167 song books, 3,814 badges, 8,072 Manuals, 9,656 pledges and 104,313 leaflets, besides 324 campaign packages, 30 teachers' packages, and 16 wall pocket packages, each of which contained many leaflets.

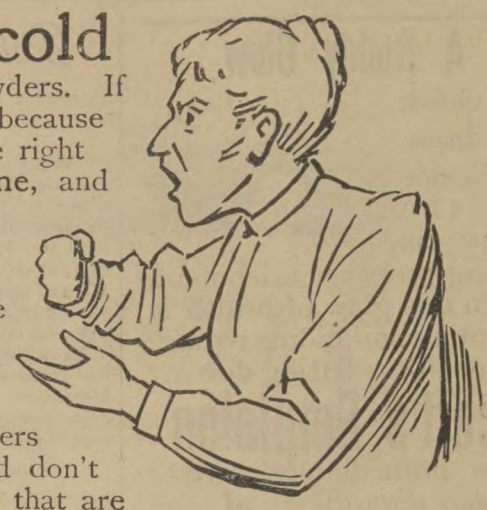
READY!

Four new Peace Leaflets, in the Department Series. They are quotations from the new book, "Ground Arms," the finest presentation of the evils of war yet written in story form. They are numbers 31–34.

There was a very large inquiry for the photographs of Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances E. Willard, at Denver, so we desire to announce that any who failed to secure them there can have them mailed from this office on receipt of price, 25c.

Photographs of all National leaders are kept constantly on hand.

Don't Scold



about washing powders. If you feel like it, it's because you haven't got the right kind. Get Pearline, and see the difference. Pearline has been imitated—but never been equalled. There are all kinds of imitations; powders that save work, but ruin clothes; powders that don't hurt, and don't help you; powders that are cheap to begin with, but dear enough in the end. Try them all for yourself, if you won't take our word for it. But don't get them mixed up in your mind with Pearline.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 319 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

TAKE 21,000 BEAUTIFUL YOUNG GIRLS!

And then consider that of this large number 7,000 will, according to medical statistics, Die of Consumption.

One-third of the human race dies of Consumption; facts, and figures back of facts, show it. Preventive medicine is doing much now. AERATED OXYGEN stands King of preventive agents. It removes impurities, makes bright, rich, health-giving blood, heals ulcerated lungs, strengthens the respiratory system, and makes iron nerves.

Generous breathers of pure air are useful people, because healthy; AERATED OXYGEN inspires voice, and brightens energy. Its record and testimonials justify every claim made. Its history is interesting; its efficacy marvelous. Send for pamphlet.

Treatment sufficient for the Winter, $3. Inhaler, 50c. extra.

For those who are skeptical, we put up a trial size, which we shall be pleased to send for $1. Home Office,

AERATED OXYGEN COMPOUND CO., NASHUA, N. H.
Chicago Office: 3 & 4 Central Music Hall. New York Office: 19 Beekman Street.

DO YOU CROCHET ?

The GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn., will distribute in Premiums $2,000. Gold Coin, for the best specimens of fancy work, to be made only from the Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread. Open to all residents of the U. S.

Send 10c. for Sample Spool Twilled Lace Thread. 500 Yards.

$2000.00 GOLD COIN in Premiums.

Ask your dealer for circulars giving full information. If not to be had of him, write us. DO NOT DELAY. Thoroughly satisfactory proofs of our reliability furnished. GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., GLASGO, CONN.

Illus. Crochet Books, Nos. 1, 2, or 3, 10c. each. 24 Bed Spread & Tidy Patterns, 5 cts. each.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

NO ODOR — COLD BLAST — NO DUST — NO GULLS — CHICAGO

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address

THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

A FILTHY HOME
is rarely found where the Hartman Flexible Wire Mat is to be seen at the outer door. Its cleanliness is an inspiration.
HARTMAN MANUFACTURING CO., Beaver Falls, Pa.
Branches: 102 Chambers St., New York; 508 State St., Chicago, 51 and 53 S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga. Catalogue and testimonials mailed free.
Our Mats have brass tag attached stamped "Hartman."

TOBACCO HABIT

HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.

For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others.
Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.

EASILY CURED

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S
PILE COMPOUND
Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.

CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.

References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M. D., Helena, Mont. Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

FAT PEOPLE

YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of

DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.

Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.

DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold FREE
by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 W ash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

DO YOU WANT TO ADOPT A BABY?

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application; it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original sample as this one. Everyone will exclaim, "Well! that's the sweetest baby I ever saw!" This little black-and-white engraving can give you but a faint idea of the exquisite original, which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

"I'M A DAISY."

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. If you are unacquainted with the Magazine, send 10 cents for a specimen copy.

This Magnetic Belt, for either lady or gent, is the Most Powerful Curative Agent ever made for Lame Back, Weakness of Spine and Kidneys, and pains arising from derangements of the abdominal organs. It is Nature's Substance concentrated, and will give immediate comfort and relief by restoring Natural Action to every organ in the body.

It is NATURE'S BOON to WOMANKIND!

Language but faintly describes the health-giving power of this Natural Support.

The Belt is made of genuine magnets, and the genius of man has not produced its equal since the days of Paracelsus, the world-renowned physician who cured all diseases with magnetism. Every lady, young or old, should wear this vitalizing health-giving Belt and Abdominal Support.

DO YOU WEAR COLD FEET? STOP IT QUICK! You can wear WARM FEET and a cool head. Magnetic substance in flames of force is the substance out of which worlds are made, and the stars held in place. You can wear this substance in your shoes. It will warm your feet, vitalize your blood, and cause a feeling of life and comfort all over your body. MAGNETIC INSOLES will give you a new expression of youth, will prevent colds, La Grippe and Pneumonia. Will it pay you to wear MAGNETS IN YOUR SHOES? Is your health worth one dollar?

COLD FEET MADE WARM.

Nature supplies the remedy; our Foot Warmers do the work by correcting the circulation of the blood.

Do you believe these words? Do you believe yourself? Do you believe that honest goods with honest power, made of honest material containing honest value is good for you? Can you form any reason why you should not protect your body and health by wearing them? Shall we send you a pair for $1 or 3 pairs for $2? Read our new book

"PLAIN ROAD TO HEALTH,"

Free.

CHICAGO MAGNETIC SHIELD CO.,
6 CENTRAL MUSIC HALL
CHICAGO.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " " 3 months	.25
" " " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly.

Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15
Per 100 copies	1.00

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

READ AND REFLECT.

The following is taken from a letter received from Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, of California:

"Don't you admire my stationery? I think all our women ought to patronize our own publishing house, and I have often spoken of it. . . . Everybody has to use stationery, and many would be glad to buy of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association when they do not want literature. If our women all over the United States sent for stationery to headquarters, if only ten cents were made on each order the handsome sum of $25,000 would result. How little any of us realize how the littles count up."

We take pleasure in thus reminding you that we can furnish

Whiting's White Wove, superfine, printed Monogram. In box, 40 sheets note size paper and 40 envelopes to match.

1 box for	$ .50
3 boxes for	1.25
500 Note heads, price	1.75
500 Letter heads, price	2.50
500 Envelopes, price	2.00
1,000 Note heads, price	2.75
1,000 Letter heads, price	4.50
1,000 Envelopes, price	3.35

Or

Whiting's Antique Linen, Laid, Embossed Monogram. In box, 24 sheets Octavo Note, folded; 24 Envelopes to match.

Price, per box	$ .50
5 Boxes for	2.25
10 " "	4.25

When 500 or more of either Note heads, Letter heads, or Envelopes, printed, are ordered, we will print names of the union and principal officers without extra charge. Stationery thus ordered will not be sent boxed, but in one package.

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

MISS WILLARD'S ADDRESS

Will be published in two separate forms. THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL of October 28 contains it in full. It is printed in large, clear type, and almost the entire twenty pages is filled with it. This edition sells for five cents per copy. There are only a few of these left, and those desiring them should order early.

Another edition will appear in a short time—a pamphlet edition, price ten cents. Send in your orders, so that they may be filled as soon as it is ready. Time will be announced later.

Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A FULL REPORT

Of the National Convention recently held in Denver cannot appear in the Convention Number of THE UNION SIGNAL for lack of space. All who desire the complete report should send for a file of THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. We have a limited number, and while they last will send full set on receipt of 25c.

REMEMBER, the first number contains Miss Willard's annual address in full.

Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE!

The price of the Department Leaflets is 15c per 100, and not 50c, as printed on some by mistake. The change will be made in the next edition.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

I regard THE UNION SIGNAL as being the best paper published, in every respect, in this country, and, after reading it, I hand it to some acquaintance, and pass it around.

C. P. H.

GREAT EYE RESTORER. "ACTINA." AND ONLY CATARRH CURE.

The Blind See.
The Deaf Hear.
CURES
Granulated Lids,
Cataracts,
Deafness,
Catarrh,
Asthma,
Hay Fever, etc.

Magneto-Conservative
INSOLES
KEEP THE FEET WARM AND DRY AND PREVENT RHEUMATISM.

Important to the Suffering Invalids of the City of Chicago, as Also Those Who Have Been Defrauded by the Advertising Quacks.

The New York and London Electric Association will keep before the public for an indefinite period the offer of five thousand dollars to any physician, chemist or oculist who will meet, at our expense, Prof. Wilson on any platform and contradict successfully the following statement, viz.: First—That Professor Wilson's patented "Actina" Pocket Battery will cure every form of diseased eye without cutting or dragging, after all the oculists have failed. This includes Cataract, Tumor, Cancer, Granulated Lids, Scrofula of the Eyes, Ptyrigium, Myopia, Amaurosis, Glaucoma, etc. Also Catarrh, Hay Fever, Asthma, La Grippe, Bronchitis, all diseases of the Tonsils and the Throat, and all this without the curse of drugs or the vile butcheries of the oculists.

PROF. WILSON'S MAGNETO-CONSERVATIVE GARMENTS.

Read this Remarkable Offer and Show it to Your Physician:

We will, at our own cost, go into all your hospitals and dress, free of charge, any number of patients suffering from any form of disease, and undertake to cure ninety-five in every hundred after such patients have been given over as absolutely incurable in any of the following forms of disease: Nervous Prostration (male or female), Kidney Disease of all forms, Paralysis, Rheumatism, Gout, Sciatica, Locomotor Ataxia, Consumption, Loss of Memory, Stiff Joints, Giddiness, Varicose Veins and every other form of disease. This is the same offer we made in London, England, in 1879, and in New York City in 1882-3. Why don't the physicians accept? The only reason must be that they would rather see their patients die than cured by anything outside what is termed the profession.

The present practice of medicine is scientific murder; more die by the doctors than the disease; therefore don't listen to your doctors and die, but wear our health-giving Curative Garments—use "ACTINA" and live.

Elevator, or one easy flight of stairs to reach us. Rooms 5 and 5½ Lakeside Building, Adams and Clark streets. (Formerly Masonic Temple.)

A VALUABLE BOOK FREE—(Send 2-cent stamp) on application. Contains treatise on the human system, its diseases and cure, and thousands of references and testimonials. Consultation free.

Private Parlors for Ladies. Office Hours—9 a. m. to 5 p. m. Sundays—1 to 2 p. m.

ALSO FREE TREATMENT DURING OFFICE HOURS.

NEW YORK AND LONDON ELECTRIC ASSOCIATION,
Rooms 5 and 5½ Lakeside Bldg., cor. Adams and Clark-sts., Prof. J. H. GILBERT, Mgr.
Main Office and Factory, 1021 Main-st., Kansas City, Mo.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA.

WOULD YOU LIKE

To attend the World's Fair at our expense, and to read, free of charge, for one year, our paper, the "TOTAL ABSTAINER"? If so, please send your name and address to this office for further particulars.

902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg.,
165-173 Jackson Street,
CHICAGO, ILL.

GEN. W. F. SINGLETON,	President.
REV. A. J. JUTKINS,	Vice-President.
A. BONNELL,	Secretary.
S. M. SINGLETON,	Treasurer.
E. S. ATWOOD,	Medical Director
J. D. KNAPP,	Supt. Agencies.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Every policy holder is positively a total abstainer from alcoholic beverages.
This is the ONLY Company that does not insure the drinker.
And is, therefore, the only Company in which teetotalers should be insured.
Its risks are unquestionably the best.
Its death-rate for 1891 was over 50 per cent below the average mortality of all other companies.
It has the lowest expenses—only $2.20 per $1,000 insurance for 1891.
It has the lowest average premium charge.
No premiums are required in old age.
Policy contract simple, definite, equitable and limited as to cost.
Its life policies have cash and paid-up values after probable life.
It has an adequate reserve fund.
Expenses of management limited to $3.00 per $1,000 insurance per annum.

FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

Number of policy holders,	5,500
Guarantee Fund,	$ 92,000.00
Amount paid to beneficiaries,	210,000.00
Insurance in force,	11,000,000.00

COMPARISON FOR 1891.

All old Line Companies averaged per $1,000 insurance,	Death Claims $14.55	Expenses $15.07
Total Abstinence Life Ass'n averaged per $1,000 insurance,	" 5.65	" 2.20

AGENTS WANTED

Address A. BONNELL, Secretary.

LADY CANVASSERS:

We make just what you can sell rapidly. Four different styles in Health Reform Corset Waists, Misses' and Children's Waists. This is the Reliance, made in Satteen, Jean, Lace and Flannel, button and steel front. Also one of the Finest Dress Form Corsets, together with other specialties. The best canvassing line in the world. Write for terms, catalogue and price-lists. Agents wanted everywhere. Large sales being made. It will pay you to investigate.

RELIANCE CORSET CO. Jackson, Mich

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

DICK'S FOOT WARMER SHOES
Worn everywhere; woven by hand; wool-lined; seamless. Where dealers have none we mail postpaid (any month in year.) Ladies' size, $1.25. Men's, $1.50. WM. H. DICK, Manf'r, Dansville, N. Y.

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.
Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets, Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY
or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.

Convention Notes.

PRESIDENTIAL substitutes represented five states.

THIRTY-SEVEN original Crusaders arose to be counted in Convention.

THERE are twelve W. C. T. unions, four Y's and ten L. T. L's in Denver.

THE new W. C. T. U. Hymnal, arranged by Miss Anna Gordon, was used during the entire Convention session.

MRS. IDA H. REID, of Vermont, and Mrs. Carolina H. Reid, of Utah, are two new state's presidents of the same name.

THE time for the reading of the president's annual address in future meetings was fixed by the Convention at eleven a. m. of the opening session.

Y CONFERENCES were held at eight o'clock a. m. and one o'clock p. m. each day. A special and helpful program was printed, outlining the details of each day. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes was made the general Y secretary.

THE Prohibition nominee for governor of Colorado, Mr. John Hipp, had a prominent place on the platform during Convention sessions, and stated that every man but one in his church, the Broadway Baptist, votes the Prohibition ticket. Surely that church has "washed its hands in innocency"!

THE National evangelists elected are Mrs. S. M. I. Henry, Mrs. Anne Palmer, Mrs. Mary Sparkes Wheeler, Miss Elizabeth Toby, Mrs. M. McGee Snell, Mrs. C. H. Walker, Mrs. R. J. Trego, Mrs. M. J. Weaver, Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm. Miss Elizabeth Greenwood continues as National superintendent of evangelistic department.

ARKANSAS, Georgia, Indiana, New Jersey, Kentucky, Nevada, Tennessee and Texas are the only states that have not secured from their legislatures a law requiring scientific instruction in the public schools concerning the effects of alcohol and narcotics upon the human system, taught in connection with physiology and hygiene.

THE Convention had a subject of important congratulation in the cordiality of the press of Denver. Every paper reported white-ribbon news in a most friendly spirit and had one or two reporters present during all the sessions. The Associated and United press associations with equal good will forwarded the deeds of each day to every great center in America, and to London.

MRS. MARY H. HUNT, on behalf of the educational department, presented two beautiful banners to the states having the largest number of local superintendents of scientific instruction and the greatest gain in discarding old text books teaching the moderate use of alcoholics and narcotics, and substituting those teaching orthodox total abstinence. New York and Missouri received these banners.

The following National organizers were elected: Mrs. Caroline B. Buell, superintendent; Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin, Charleston, S. C.; Mrs. L. H. Washington, Port Jervis, N. Y.; Miss Frances E. Griffin, Montgomery, Ala.; Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, N. Y.; Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese, Seattle, Wash.; Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, San Francisco, Cal.; Miss Ida Clothier, Manitou Springs, Col.; Miss Belle Kearney, Flora, Miss.; Mrs. Delle H. Cox, Newberg, Ore.; Mrs. E. A. Blair, Creighton, Neb.; Mrs. Maud L. Green, Manitou Springs, Col.; Mrs. E. Norinne Law, Le Roy, Mich.; Mrs. Frances E. W. Harper, Philadelphia; Mrs. Henrietta Skelton, California and Mrs. M. L. Wells, Tennessee.

MRS. HELEN M. BARKER, of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Columbian Exposition, sent the following letter to the Convention:

"Committee on assignment of space in the Woman's Building consists of five women, of whom three are white-ribboners. I have assurance that space will be given the W. C. T. U., but amount cannot be given just yet. The commission voted that no saloon or open bar should be allowed on the grounds, but deferred action on allowing light wines and beer in restaurants. It came out in the discussion that concessions had already been granted to restaurants with privileges, and if now refused the management forfeits $600,000. They had a hot discussion."

Sickness Among Children,
Especially infants, is prevalent at all times, but is largely avoided by giving proper nourishment and wholesome food. The most successful and reliable is the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

PRIZE BUBBLING.

Who can blow the largest bubble?

Bubble parties are the latest fad in New York this season. Every person is provided with a long-stemmed clay pipe and prizes are given for the largest bubble that is blown by a lady and gentleman respectively. It is very amusing and the affair is easily arranged at short notice.

Be careful to make the suds of Ivory Soap. This gives a very light, clean lather, free from all impurities, and not at all unpleasant to the taste or smell. Any other soap will be disappointing; Ivory is especially suited to this end as its ingredients are so clean.

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

$25.00+25 per ct.=$31.25.

DECEMBER FIRST

Price Will be Advanced 25 Per Cent.

The first of this month, being the end of our second quarter, we declared and paid our second quarterly dividend of 3 per cent. Our earnings would have justified the payment of 5 per cent, but it was thought best to keep a certain amount as reserve. Our first quarterly dividend was also 3 per cent.

We are pleased to report that our work is in a very prosperous condition, that Branch Institutes continue to be established and influential friends encourage us on every hand.

Near the close of the first quarter our stockholders voted to retire $400,000 of our capital stock. This leaves only $100,000 of active, or dividend sharing stock. Of this only a small amount remains unsold at the present time, and is being rapidly taken. We have now decided, should any of this stock remain unsold by the first of December, to ADVANCE THE PRICE OF SHARES 25 PER CENT, or $31.25 per share in place of $25 per share, the price at which we are now selling.

You can readily understand that the present earnings of our stock fully justify this advance in price. If you desire to subscribe it will be necessary for you to act promptly.

To secure stock, payments may be made as heretofore, viz,: $5 per share at the time of subscribing, and the balance on the same terms monthly thereafter.

All remittances sent to secure shares will be promptly returned should shares be already sold. Addres

NATIONAL BICHLORIDE OF GOLD CO,, 19 to 21 Quincy St. CHICAGO, ILL.

The Flour Saved Pays the Cost.

Keep your flour in the

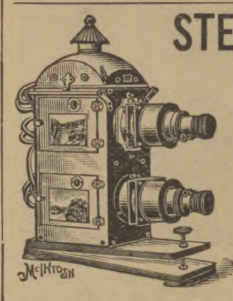
ROYAL FLOUR BIN

Secure from Moisture, Dust Dirt and Vermin.

This Flour Bin is different from all others. It has a sliding door and removable sieve, and is perfectly tight. We refer to all Chicago as to its excellence. Sizes to hold 25, 50, 100 and 200 lbs. always in stock. Sold by dealers everywhere.

Or, on receipt of $2.00 we will send direct from the factory the 50 pound bin here illustrated, made of tin and neatly japanned.

Royal Manufacturing Co.
153-155 S. Jefferson St.
Agents Wanted CHICAGO



STEREOPTICONS

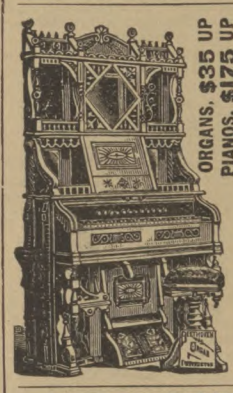
AND

Lantern Slides

FOR THE

"SCHOOL,"
The Sabbath School
THE CHURCH.

Write for Catalogue.
Mention UNION SIGNAL.
McIntosh Battery and Optical Co., Chicago



ORGANS, $35 UP
PIANOS, $175 UP

FREE.

Our large 24-page Catalogue, profusely illustrated, full of information on the proper construction of Pianos and Organs. We ship on test trial, ask no cash in advance, sell on instalments, give greater value for the money than any other manufacturer Send for this book at once to

BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO.,
WASHINGTON, N. J.
P. O. Box 701

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL

in your own home. First class Sewing Machines shipped anywhere to anyone at wholesale prices. All latest improvements. Warranted five years. Complete set of attachments FREE. Send for catalogue. Standard Singer Machines, $9.50 to $15.50
$50 Arlington Sewing Machine for $19.50
$60 Kenwood Sewing Machine for $23.50
CASH BUYERS' UNION, 160 W. Van Buren St. B 26 Chicago.

BAKER'S COCOA.
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

VOSE & SON'S PIANOS
EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order.
American Desk & Seating Co.
270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

LADIES WHO NEED MONEY should take agency for "Dainty Work for Pleasure and Profit"—just out. The best instructor for fancy needle and decorative work. Ladies go wild over it. DANKS & CO., 334 Dearborn St., CHICAGO, ILL.

IMPROVED HALL TYPEWRITER.
The best and most simple machine made. Interchangeable Type into all languages. Durable, easiest running, rapid as any. Endorsed by the Clergy and literary people. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Agents wanted. Address N. Typewriter Co., 611 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

"Busy Bee" Washer.

GUARANTEED to Run Easier and do Better Work than any other in the world. No rubbing necessary. We challenge a trial with any other machine. Warranted for five years and money refunded if not entirely satisfactory. FITS ANY TUB. Saves time, money and clothes. Just the machine for ladies who are not very strong. Thousands of ladies who used to hire their washing done, now save that expense by using the

"BUSY BEE" WASHER.

Save your strength, health, time, clothes and money, by investing only $2 in this machine. Don't keep the Washer unless it suits you. We are Responsible, and mean just what we say. We invite you to investigate thoroughly before risking a cent. We will forfeit $100 to any one who will prove that we ever refused to refund the full amount to a dissatisfied purchaser.

AGENTS WANTED in every county. Exclusive territory. Many of our agents make $100 to $200 a month. Lady Agents are very successful. Farmers and their wives make $200 to $400 during winter. One farmer in Missouri sold 600. Price $5. Sample (full size) to those desiring an agency, only $2. Also celebrated PENN WRINGERS and other useful household articles at lowest wholesale price. We refer to our P. M., Mayor, Agt. Am. Ex. Co., or editor of this paper.

HERE IS A LETTER! (We have hundreds more just as good). COLLICOON, N. Y.—I have received the "Busy Bee" in perfect order, and have given it a perfect trial. Have washed all kinds of clothing, also quilts and carpets, and found it to do the work perfectly; that is, positively as clean as they could be washed by hand. And the work was done in half the time and with less than half the labor. I do not write this to humbug people, but as a fact, having tried the machine with my own hands, following the directions very closely. Please hold the agency of Sullivan county for me. Will send a good order soon. F. R. KAHL.

Write for Catalogue and Terms to Agents

LAKE ERIE MFG. CO., 122 E. 13th Street, ERIE, PA.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME. WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883. AND EVERY LAND

Volume XVIII.—No. 47.] CHICAGO, November 24, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance.

Mrs. Ursula D. Hetrick 1114 Murdock St. 2693

Hennegan

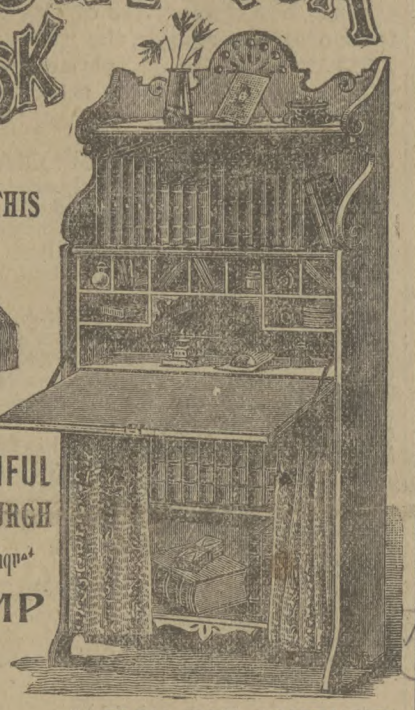
WE GIVE THIS CHAUTAUQUA DESK

You can have this Desk or a beautiful Pittsburg Onyx Banquet Lamp

FREE!

OR THIS

BEAUTIFUL PITTSBURGH Onyx Banquet LAMP FREE.



If you will buy one of our Combination Boxes of "SWEET HOME" Soap and Toilet Articles which we sell on trial.

YOU MUST HAVE SOAP.—It is an absolute necessity—the only question is where you shall buy it; we make it a decided object for you to buy of us—direct from the factory to consumer, and save all middle-men's and dealers' profits.

REMEMBER, "SWEET HOME" Family Soap is an extra fine pure Soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity each cake will do double the work of common cheap soaps.

OUR COMBINATION BOX contains a large supply of the best Soaps and finest Toilet Articles made, and will give satisfaction to the most fastidious person. We have been manufacturing over 17 years, and operate one of the largest equipped plants in this country having a capacity of fifteen million pounds a year.

The "Chautauqua Desk."

is a "thing of beauty" and will be "a joy forever" to all who possess one. It is artistically designed, complete in appointments, a model piece of furniture, and affords what nine out of ten houses lack—a suitable and convenient place for writing letters, studying, drawing, etc., etc., which will be used and appreciated by every member of the family.

It is made of SOLID OAK, varnished and hand-rubbed antique finish, with brass trimmings. It stands five (5) feet high, is two and a half (2½) feet wide and ten and a half (10½) inches deep.

It is a perfect and complete desk, and also has three roomy book shelves, a top shelf for bric-a-brac, seven pigeonholes for papers, compartments for letter paper, ink, etc.

When placed in your home, filled with books which you prize, and ornamented with the gifts of friends, it will become a centre of attraction, and you will be grateful to us for adding a new pleasure to your life.

ORDER TO-DAY

YOU RUN NO RISK!

We do not ask you to remit in advance or take any chances. We merely ask permission to send you a DESK and Combination Box, and if after 30 DAYS TRIAL you are fully convinced that the goods are all we claim, you can then pay the bill—$10. But if you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used and we will take the Box and Desk away at our own expense.

HOW CAN WE DO MORE?

Some people prefer to send cash with order—we do not ask it—but if readers of this paper remit in advance, we will place in the Box, in addition to all the other extras named, a valuable present. Where boxes are paid for in advance, we ship same day order is received. All other orders are filled in their regular turn. Persons remitting in advance can have their money refunded without argument or comment if the BOX, DESK, or LAMP does not prove all they expect. PRICE OF BOX COMPLETE, including the DESK or the LAMP, ONLY $10.00.

We can refer you to thousands of people who have used Sweet Home Soap for many years and still order at regular intervals, also any Bank or Banker in the United States or to either Dun's or Bradstreet's Commercial Agencies.

EACH BOX CONTAINS

ONE HUNDRED CAKES (full size) "SWEET HOME" Family Soap, enough to last an average family one year, $6.00

11 Boxes BORAXINE, a New and Wonderful Discovery! Cannot Possibly Injure the Fabric. Simple—Easy—Efficient. . 1.10

In each package is a coupon for 10c. payable in goods 1.10

One Box (1-4 Doz.) Modjeska Complexion Soap. It removes all roughness, redness, blotches, pimples and imperfections from the face. Especially adapted for the nursery or children's use. 60

One Bottle Modjeska Perfume, A DELICATE, refined, delicious perfume. Most popular and lasting made 30

One Box (1-4 Doz.) Ocean Bath Toilet Soap. A delightful and exhilarating substitute for sea bathing 30

One Box (1-4 Doz.) Creme Oat Meal Toilet Soap 25

One Box (1-4 Doz.) Elite Toilet Soap 30

One English Jar Modjeska Cold Cream. Delightfully Pleasant, Soothing and Healing, Cures Chapped Hands and Lips. . .25

One Bottle Modjeska Tooth-Powder. Preserves the teeth, hardens the gums, sweetens the breath. 25

One Packet Clove Pink Sachet Powder. Refined, Lasting . .25

One Stick Napoleon Shaving Soap 30

Price of Articles if Bought Separately. $11.00

DESK if Bought of Dealer. . . 10.00

All for $10 { You get the Desk gratis. } $21.00

ESTABLISHED 1875. INCORPORATED 1892.

Paid up Cash Capital, $500,000.00.

Over Ten Thousand persons who have used "SWEET HOME" Soap for several years have become Stockholders in our Company.

LARKIN SOAP MFG. CO.,

BUFFALO, N. Y.

Factories: Seneca, Hecock and Carroll Streets.

FOR WOMEN ONLY.

Absolutely Safe, Thoroughly Established

OWNED AND MANAGED BY WOMEN.

IT HAS PAID ANNUAL DIVIDENDS SINCE 1885.

Capital Stock, $125,000.

Members of the W. C. T. U. who desire a safe investment do not need to try new things so long as a little of the capital stock of the remains unsold. We are offering now about $20,000—all that is left. It is ABSOLUTELY NON-ASSESSABLE.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION

PRICE, PER SHARE, $25.00.

For further particulars, address

Mrs. F. H. RASTALL, Mg'r.

WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION,

THE TEMPLE, - CHICAGO, ILL.

A NEW BOOK.

SOMETHING new and very charming is in store for young people, friends of young people, teachers and parents. It is in the shape of a book that all will want to read before coming to Chicago next year, for it tells of that which made possible "America's four-hundredth birthday, that we call the World's Fair."

THIS BEAUTIFUL BOOK IS ENTITLED

Columbus, and What He Found.

PRICE $1.00

It will be ready for the holidays. Look for further description later. All communications should be addressed to

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association,

THE TEMPLE,

CHICAGO.....

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

VOSE & SONS PIANOS ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue.

170 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.,
OR
LYON, POTTER & CO.,
176 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILL.

A NEW Twilled Lace Thread FOR CROCHETING. BEST in the world! Send 10c. for sample spool.

Crocheting Book No. 3 50 Illustrated Patterns. TEN CENTS.

Series of 24 Beautiful Illus. Tidy and Bed Spread Patterns from London and Paris. 5 cents each, or 60 cents a dozen including copy of above Book—No. 3.
GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn.

A MODERN BATH.
The Latest and Best.

Quick Self-Heating, or Toilet Cabinet in place of Heater. No bath-room required. Ornamental, Inexpensive, Complete, Practical. Desirable for either city or town. Send 2ct. stamp for Catal'ge.
THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB Co.
180 S. Canal St. Chicago.

GOING TO BUILD
SEE THESE NEW 1892 DESIGNS IN BOOKS 4 and 5, "HOUSES and COTTAGES."

Size, 5x 10 inches. Contains new designs, new styles. No. 4 has 35 designs, classified from $150 up to $1500, about half under $1000. No. 5. contains 59 designs of dwellings costing over $1 500, many $1800 to $3000. $1 each, or the two $1.50.
D. S. HOPKINS, Architect
72 Ottawa Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D. W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on.
Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

ESTABLISHED 1850.
"Out of each nook by dingle and brook
The Healing blossoms lean and look."

A POT OF PRECIOUS OINTMENT

Dr. O. P. Brown's HERBAL OINTMENT (Great External Remedy) reaches disease through the pores, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25cts. Druggists or by mail. J. Gibson Brown, 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

A COMPLETE LINE OF DRESS REFORM GOODS, including the famous EQUIPOISE and DELSARTE Waists, Jenness-Miller Specialties, &c., &c. Send stamp for free illustrated pamphlet on healthful Dress. Mrs. S. W. PIKE, 75 Madison St., Chicago.

Bickford Family Knitter.
Knits everything required by the household, of any quality, texture and weight desired.
A. M. LAWSON,
783 Broadway, N. Y.
Beware of cheap and worthless knitters.

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

BEATTY Piano, Organ, $23 up. Want agents. Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beatty, Wash'ton, N.J.

Publisher's Notes.

READ AND REFLECT.

The following is taken from a letter received from Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm, of California:

"Don't you admire my stationery? I think all our women ought to patronize our own publishing house, and I have often spoken of it. . . . Everybody has to use stationery, and many would be glad to buy of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association when they do not want literature. If our women all over the United States sent for stationery to Headquarters, if only ten cents were made on each order the handsome sum of $25,000 would result. How little any of us realize how the littles count up."

We take pleasure in thus reminding you that we can furnish

Whiting's White Wove, superfine, printed Monogram. In box, 40 sheets note size paper and 40 envelopes to match.

1 box for	$ .50
3 boxes for	1.25
500 Note heads, price	1.75
500 Letter heads, price	2.50
500 Envelopes, price	2.00
1,000 Note heads, price	2.75
1,000 Letter heads, price	4.50
1,000 Envelopes, price	3.35

Or

Whiting's Antique Linen, Laid, Embossed Monogram. In box, 24 sheets Octavo Note, folded; 24 Envelopes to match.

Price, per box	$ .50
5 Boxes for	2.25
10 " "	4.25

When 500 or more of either Note heads, Letter heads, or Envelopes, printed, are ordered, we will print names of the union and principal officers without extra charge. Stationery thus ordered will not be sent boxed, but in one package.

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

HAVE YOU SENT

For extra copies of the Convention Number to place in the hands of your pastor, your neighbor, your friends? Well! Now for another suggestion. There was a great deal of talk at Denver about some special effort to reach farmers' wives. The long winter evenings in the farm home are the best time to reach them, when by the fireside they have time to read and think. They would prize a copy of the Convention Number very highly. Let every local union select twelve of the most influential women in the farm homes near their organization, and send to us their names and addresses, together with fifty cents, and we will mail to each one of the names given a copy of this 28-page paper. Follow this with personal interviews, and the results will be wonderful. For this purpose we will send this large, fine paper for fifty cents for twelve copies.

And here is a help in securing new subscribers:

We will send THE UNION SIGNAL to any whose names and accompanying $1 may be sent before December 1, including this Convention number and all succeeding numbers until December 30, 1893.

Send orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

MISS WILLARD'S ADDRESS

Will be published in two separate forms. THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL of October 28 contains it in full. It is printed in large, clear type, and almost the entire twenty pages is filled with it. This edition sells for five cents per copy. There are only a few of these left, and those desiring them should order early.

Another edition of the annual address will appear in a short time—a pamphlet edition, price ten cents. Send in your orders, so that they may be filled as soon as it is ready. Time will be announced later.

Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

All who desire the complete report of the Denver Convention should send for a file of THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. We have a limited number, and while they last will send full set on receipt of 25c.

REMEMBER, the first number contains Miss Willard's annual address in full.

Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE SHAWKNIT HALF-HOSE DESERVE THEIR REPUTATION.

THEY ARE THE BEST-FITTING, LONGEST-WEARING, MOST COMFORTABLE.

LOOK For the trade-mark Shawknit TRADE MARK. ON THE TOE.

THEY ARE MADE IN A GREAT VARIETY OF COLOR-EFFECTS IN Cotton, Merino and Wool

SEND For Descriptive Price-List.

SHAW STOCKING CO.,
LOWELL, MASS.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA.

WOULD YOU LIKE

To attend the World's Fair at our expense, and to read, free of charge, for one year, our paper, the "TOTAL ABSTAINER"? If so, please send your name and address to this office for further particulars.

902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg.,
165-173 Jackson Street,
CHICAGO, ILL.

GEN. W. F. SINGLETON, - President.
REV. A. J. JUTKINS, - Vice-President.
A. BONNELL, - - - - Secretary.
S. M. SINGLETON, - - Treasurer.
E. S. ATWOOD, - - - Medical Director
J. D. KNAPP, - - - Supt. Agencies

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Every policy holder is positively a total abstainer from alcoholic beverages.
This is the ONLY Company that does not insure the drinker.
And is, therefore, the only Company in which teetotalers should be insured.
Its risks are unquestionably the best.
Its death-rate for 1891 was over 50 per cent below the average mortality of all other companies.
It has the lowest expenses—only $2.20 per $1,000 insurance for 1891.
It has the lowest average premium charge.
No premiums are required in old age.
Policy contract simple, definite, equitable and limited as to cost.
Its life policies have cash and paid-up values after probable life.
It has an adequate reserve fund.
Expenses of management limited to $3.00 per $1,000 insurance per annum.

FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

Number of policy holders,	5,500
Guarantee Fund,	$ 92,000.00
Amount paid to beneficiaries,	210,000.00
Insurance in force,	11,000,000.00

COMPARISON FOR 1891.

All old Line Companies averaged per $1,000 insurance,	Death Claims $14.55	Expenses $15.07
Total Abstinence Life Ass'n averaged per $1,000 insurance,	" 5.65	" 2.20

AGENTS WANTED

Address A. BONNELL, Secretary.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address
THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

TOBACCO HABIT EASILY CURED

HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.

For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others.
Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE

Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10 cts. to intending agents, F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St. Chicago, Ill.

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S
PILE COMPOUND
Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.
CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.
References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M.D., Helena, Mont.
Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

RUPTURE A Positive Radical cure at Home. (Sealed) Book giving full particulars sent free. Write Dr. W. S. Rice, Box U Smithville, Jeff. Co., N. Y.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods. Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

FAT PEOPLE

YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of

DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.

Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.

DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

FOR GOD AND HOME — WORLDS WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOUNDED 1883 AND EVERY LAND

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, November 24, 1892. Number 47

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The German Reichstag opened Tuesday.

Thanksgiving day is being generally observed all over the country to day.

The village of Red Bud, Ill., was nearly swept away by a cyclone, November 17.

The annual reunion of the Army of the Tennessee closed at St. Louis, November 17.

A bull fight for the gratification of the Queen of Portugal was held at Madrid last Thursday.

The ten day conference of the Catholic archbishops of the United States closed in New York last Friday night.

The annual convention of the Illinois Christian Endeavor Society, numbering 1,500 delegates, met in Decatur this week.

The Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers has given up the battle at Homestead and as a result the great strike is ended, and a loss of $5,000,000 has been sustained by those interested.

An International Monetary Conference, consisting of delegates from all countries, commenced its sessions in Brussels, last Tuesday, the result of which may be a permanent international convention to regulate currency values.

Mr. Henry Faxon, Massachusetts' philanthropist, has added to his already generous gifts to temperance, a recent one in the sum of $1,000 to the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., to be used in the prosecution of the no-license campaign in that state.

The annual report of the Department of Agriculture was submitted to President Harrison, by Secretary Rusk this week. A study is made of foreign markets with a view to still greater increase of agricultural exports which last year made the United States government the creditor of the world to the amount of $200,000,000.

The senatorial committee appointed by Vice-President Morton to investigate the Homestead riots held its initial meeting at the Grand Pacific Hotel last Thursday. The committee, besides making full inquiries into the Homestead situation, will consider plans from both employers and workingmen as to the best methods to be adopted for the settlement of strikes.

THE orders taken for Temple models at the Convention in Denver have been lost. If those who ordered these models will send their names to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, the goods will be promptly forwarded.

A MEETING of the executive committee of the National Council of Women will be held in Chicago, December 14, 15. Many matters of importance relating to the World's Congress of Representative Women, to be held under the auspices of the woman's branch of the World's Congress Auxiliary and the National Council of Women, will be discussed at this meeting.

MISS WEST is constantly speaking to large and enthusiastic audiences in Japan. Sho Nemoto's own quaint English best tells the story: "Miss West is working very hard. The program for her we made was one lecture every day, but after she reached Tokio, many societies and people publicly and personally asked her to speak in meetings, hence she is giving lectures two or three times a day. We do not like to ask her so much every day but cannot help it, as the matters became so. Yesterday afternoon (October 28) Miss West spoke at the University lecture hall, which was full of audience. In the evening she spoke again at Friend's chapel, where we found many who stood out of the door. To day she has three meetings. She will work in Japan till December 29."

THE last work of Miss Willard in New York before sailing for England last week was to write an introduction to John G. Woolley's new book, which is to be a sort of temperance columbiad, embracing among others the following subjects, "Christian Patriotism," "Thy Bottle," "Number One Hard," and "Solid for Prohibition."

A MOST suggestive business card has been sent us reading in part thus:

"SATAN, LIQUOR DEALERS & CO.,

MANUFACTURERS OF

POVERTY, CRIME, DISTRESS AND DAMNATION.

Ruining Souls a Specialty."

On the other side under the heading, "Our Great Success in Business," it enumerates the fearful results of the liquor traffic. No one can deny that the liquor business is and does all that this card claims for it; yet we, a Christian nation, practically give it our indorsement as equally legitimate and honorable with any other trade. In view of this how can we defend our harsh treatment of the "trade" of highway robbery and burglary? We especially ask the candid attention of "all whom it may concern" to the closing sentence upon the card. "We would express our thanks to government officials and voters for the assistance they have rendered us."

MRS. FRANCES J. BARNES sends the following brief account of the sailing of our editors: "In spite of the rain that came pelting down, a tried temperance few gathered at the pier of the White Star Line on Wednesday, the 16th, to 'wave awa' the 'uncrowned queen of American Democracy' and the democratic royal 'Lady' of titled aristocracy, with the faithful secretary of New England ancestry —a precious trio to the hearts of all white-ribboners. Expressions of good-will had been made tangible in baskets of fruit and flowers, bunches of roses and violets, downy pillows and traveling cases, books and sentiments in prose and poetry; but all these were inadequate to portray the affectionate and earnest wishes for a safe voyage and a sure return. The clouds lightened and the rain ceased just as the great ship, rightly named Majestic, glided out into the stream and pointed her prow seaward. The last glimpse of the earnest, smiling faces of the voyagers was lost in a many-headed composite, and in the fluttering of hundreds of handkerchiefs, but the memory remains, the prayers will be continued and hope will cheer our hearts until once more we have the privilege of again bidding them thrice welcome to American shores."

WHEN the saloon-keepers of Detroit, Mich., met in that city to make arrangements for the meeting of the liquor dealers of the state for the formation of a liquor dealers' association, the speeches made give us an excellent opportunity to "learn from our enemy." Said one, "I urge all members of the association to watch the nominees for the state legislature. Information must be secured concerning each. If Republican or Democrat be opposed to us, he must be turned down." Another said: "I am a Democrat, have always been a Democrat, but this year my vote, my work and my money shall go to support the man who favors us, no matter of what political complexion he may be." Still another: "There are now in existence obnoxious laws; they must be repealed. How is that to be done? Mark well whom you send to the legislature. Be watch dogs and see that the next public prosecutor of this county is such a man as meets your requirements." One very amusing feature of some of the speeches was the anxiety with which the speakers urged upon their hearers the necessity of making a good impression upon the people by gentlemanly behavior. One speaker said, "Let them see that there are gentlemen among saloon-keepers." Another warned them not to get drunk until after business hours!

A NUMBER of local option elections have recently been held in Mississippi, all of which have resulted in prohibition for the counties concerned. This success is due to two facts: The last legislature amended the local option law to require the names of a majority of property holders in petition for license instead of twenty-five as formerly, any or all of whom might be women, though a woman's name is illegal on a counter petition against license of a saloon. But the great safeguard of the people is the strict educational qualification for the vote imposed by constitutional enactment which eliminates the venal element at the polls, previously handled by the brewers' money. A number of elections are called early in 1893, which are expected to place at least three fourths of the state under prohibitory law. It is doubtful if there is a county in the state which could carry license under a strict white vote. But Mississippians have tried local option since 1886, and they are ready for prohibition by statute. Their new constitution gives the ballot to property holding women on the question of running fence lines in a county.

THE Rev. Dr. Rainsford who "would not close the saloons and brothels of New York City if he could do so by simply turning over his hand," stirred up great excitement in his congregation when he announced that he had entered the Presidential campaign in behalf of Cleveland. The gentleman is one of the most bitter opponents of the advancement of women. For this we are profoundly thankful though not in the least surprised. We are frequently twitted with the religious and moral views of some of the advocates of women. We acknowledge that there are a number of infidels in our ranks and we also acknowledge that we do not feel particularly ashamed of such a friend as John Stuart Mill. We are also sorry to say that a few have loose views concerning the marriage bond. But we can also say that the vast majority of those who believe in women everywhere are true, pure-hearted Christians, among whom are many of the leading ministers of all the churches. But further, when we remember the acknowledged fact that the liquor dealers are solidly on the side of the opposers of women, we are amazed that our opponents dare open the subject at all. When it comes to the question of the character of those who sympathize with us, we are more than willing to compare notes with our adversaries. We are sure that if they can bear it we can.

THE Woman's Journal publishes two columns and a half of "Eminent Opinions of Woman's Suffrage." These comprise favorable opinions from fifty prominent men and women. Among them are, Abraham Lincoln, Charles Sumner, Wm. H. Seward, Chief Justice Chase, Henry W. Longfellow, John G. Whittier, Wendell Phillips, Florence Nightingale, John Stuart Mill, Huxley, Phillips Brooks, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Ralph Waldo Emerson, John Quincy Adams, Frances E. Willard, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Clara Barton, Joseph Cook, James Freeman Clarke, Millicent Garrett Fawcett, Charles Kingsley, T. W. Higginson, Mrs. Charles, author of "The Schonberg Cotta Family"; Geo. W. Cable, Geo. Wm. Curtis, Bishop Bowman, Henry Ward Beecher, Prof. Borden P. Bowne, Bishop Hurst, Bishop Simpson, Bishop Gilbert Haven, Geo. F. Hoar Lydia Maria Child, Louisa M. Alcott and Wm. Lloyd Garrison. All of these express themselves in the strongest terms in favor of equal suffrage. Besides these, many others not mentioned in the Woman's Journal might be added, as Lady Henry Somerset, Bishop Ninde, President Bashford, of Ohio Wesleyan, etc. On the whole, we do not feel overwhelmed with shame because of the company we keep. We shall hardly leave it for the host of the enemy whose right wing is composed of liquor dealers. Are not some of our ungenerous opponents who have persistently tried to make it appear that the woman's suffrage army is composed solely of "masculine women," spiritualists, infidels and free lovers, about ready to dismantle their battery and carry on the attack along other lines?

DEACON CAMPBELL'S THANKSGIVING DREAM.

BY MATHER DEAN KIMBALL.

Everybody knowed the Deacon, 'nd they knowed him well, because Everybody, more or less, was sorter in the Deacon's claws:
Owed him interest on mortgages, or notes, or maybe rent,
Tho' the Deacon never figured more'n twelve 'n a half per cent.

'Nd tho' he was a deacon, the churchfolks useter say
He wouldn't held the office if he didn't make it pay.
'Nd when they spoke his name, they whispered on the sly
That varse about the Campbell goin' through a needle's eye.

But what the people said about him, the Deacon didn't care—
If they only paid their int'rest 'nd kept their credit square;
For he was honest with 'em all, whether poor or whether proud,
'Nd he never took a penny more than—all the law allowed.

In meetin', on a Sunday, when the sermon was begun,
Deacon always shet his peepers, 'nd slept till it was done.
Guess his conscience didn't trouble him for this besettin' sin
Quite so much as what he'd heerd, if he'd took the sermon in;

For the parson was outspoken, 'nd he useter pray 'nd preach
'Bout the poor 'nd lowly here, in heaven bein' rich,
'Nd he useter say emphatic, which I mean he said it loud,
That the rich could hardly enter to the Kingdomcome of God.

Thanksgiving day, the parson held forth an hour long—
"Love thy neighbor" was his text, 'nd he preached it good 'nd strong:
Said that all the laws of Moses, 'nd all the statute laws
Were jes a part and parcel of this "universal clause."

'Nd the man who disobeyed it (he allowed as his belief)
'Nd didn't love his neighbor, was no better than a thief.
Then he read a lot of charges, with a summons at the top,
Like I've heerd the lawyers readin' over in the justice shop;

Then he shouted: "Are you guilty?" 'nd his eyes went wand'rin' round
Till they lighted on the Deacon—as usual, sleepin' sound.
"Are you guilty?" he repeated, 'nd he raised his voice each time,
"Are you guilty, Deacon Campbell, are you guilty of this crime?"

Skasely had the parson finished, when the Deacon, half awake,
Riz up slowly 'nd ashamed like, 'nd his knees began to quake;
Looked around the congregation, faced the preacher's desk, 'nd then Stammered "Guilty"—plain but faint-like. 'Nd the parson said "Amen!"

Wa'al I never seen such doin's in a meetin'-house afore—
Some was cryin', some a-laughin', but the Deacon had the floor,
'Nd he told the congregation, with consid'able ado
'Bout a dream that he'd been havin' while a-nappin' in his pew:

Said an angel 'peared before him with a paper of some sort
A-summonin' his presence in the highest justice court,
Where the jury was all angels, 'nd each wore a golden crown
(A thing that Deacon Campbell didn't have a mortgage on).

"And my neighbors all was present," said the Deacon with a groan,
"Testifyin' of my dealin's—all the mean things that I done,
'Nd the jedge asked: 'Are you guilty'? callin' me by name it seemed,
'Nd my conscience was awakened, friends 'nd breth'ren, as I dreamed."

Then he paused; 'nd we was wond'rin' what the Deacon would do next,
When he up and makes a statement that examplefied the text:
That the tenants of his houses all should pay a lower rent,
'Nd the int'rest on his mortgages he'd cut to six per cent;
'Nd if any member present didn't have the wherewithal
For a glorious Thanksgivin', he'd arrange it—that was all.
So the people of the village kept Thanksgivin' with a will,
'Nd the Deacon—he was happy, though he had to foot the bill.

Meetin' ain't no place for nappin', but to any so inclined
I'd advise to keep the Deacon's way of doin' it in mind:
Get the text, 'nd shet yer eyes; but keep yer conscience wide awake
So's to hear what observations the preacher has to make.

Chicago, Ill.

SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH.*

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

Chapter XIV.

One week later Dr. Martha sat once more on the flat table in the graveyard under which the old governor's bones were at rest. Not alone this time as, on the whole, she would rather have been, for Johnny's continuous presence, however desirable from the point of affection it might be, was a serious bar to the long meditations in which she delighted. In fact, Johnny and meditation were two absolutely incompatible facts, for conversation was his passion, above all, conversation with Dr. Martha. They disagreed steadily. It was still Johnny's conviction that a man always knew better than any woman possibly could, and a boy being half way toward manhood necessarily knew half better than any woman. But Dr. Martha calmly ignored this theory, and did not hesitate to say with the utmost frankness, "You know girls always know better than boys about think things. Boys are good for rough things, and to help you over hard places, and to lift and all that; but I can lift more than you, Johnny, if I am shorter, and you know I know better than you do what you ought to do, because my father tells me just what is right."

"There!" Johnny had shouted in triumph, "that's just what I said. If your father didn't tell you you wouldn't know, so now! A man has to tell and then the woman goes and does it."

Dr. Martha looked at him reflectively and a smile dawned about her firm, little lips.

"Does she?" she said; "I heard father say the other day, he was pretty certain if he told a woman to do anything, she made up her own mind first whether it was worth while or not, and if she thought it wasn't, that was the end of it. He said it because Aunt Hepsy Dodd poured out the medicine he gave Jason, because she said he would get along well enough without it, and oughtn't to be encouraged sending for the doctor just as if he was folks. She meant he was in the poorhouse, you know, and hadn't any rights any more."

Here the conversation had dropped, for Marston, who delighted in listening to such arguments, had crept up behind, and met Dr. Martha's reproving eyes a little guiltily as she said:

"I don't want to talk when people come up and never tell other people, and just listen as if they were in it."

"I am in it," Marston returned seriously. "Don't you know, little woman, that I have to have a talk with you every day or I am not happy?"

Johnny's face clouded at once. A vague jealousy of Marston had begun to dawn, though he did not know it under that name. But Dr. Martha, his own age very nearly, for he was hardly a year older, seemed to belong to him. He even resented inwardly that she should run faster to meet her father than she did when she saw him coming. He turned it over in his own mind resolving that as soon as he was a few years older, something should be done about it, since in the immediate present he appeared to be rather helpless. But the thought once there had grown, and he was fast becoming ready for war with any one who invaded his own precincts, or laid hands in any way upon his property. That Dr. Martha's refusal to admit these rights complicated matters in no way altered his conviction of their perfect justice, and thus Johnny had many a bad quarter of an hour, as he sat silently glowering at Marston, or Mr. Prescott, and even at moments at Dr. Scarborough himself.

Marston watched him often with amused curiosity. Johnny, very old in some respects was singularly childish in others, and flew into a passion and stamped, less often, it is true, than of old, but sufficiently often to make the doctor shake his head and order him off to bed for a "long, quiet think," a process most repugnant to all Johnny's theories of a good time. The result of these experiences was a shade more self-control on Johnny's part, but no less inward certainty that Dr. Martha belonged to him and must in some manner, as yet unknown, be made to comprehend it. How, was the next question, and here Johnny was at sea and remained so, his bark of doubts and plans, too heavily weighted for any guidance of his own, and struggling in seas of puzzled wrath and discouragement.

To-day the coast was clear. Marston was locked in his room busy on his book. Prescott had gone for a long drive with the doctor, and Miss Prissy was in the parlor in deep converse with the stranger who had lately come to Linborough, and whose modest sign, Doctor ——, was tacked by the door of the old house in which the carpenters were already at work. Johnny had made a tour about it, deciding that it could never be as pleasant as Dr. Scarborough's, though it had the advantage of being farther up the hill and thus with a broader view. He objected too, to the fact that she was a woman, and he and old Potter were in hearty agreement on this point, though he had not yet dared to give Dr. Martha his views in full. But he meant to to-day and he watched the windows of the parlor, through one of which the visitor's head could be plainly seen adorned with a bonnet so becoming that Johnny gazed with approval at the ribbons, even while formulating his most serious objections as to the character and probable qualifications of their wearer.

At last they were in the graveyard; the gates shut tight and no soul likely to disturb them. An orange was in his pocket and for himself he had no objections to eating it there, on the governor's table, which if not intended by its designer for general hospitality, had often served a like turn to those of the congregation, who did not mind slight incongruities of this nature and who, having come from a distance made as much of a picnic as possible of the noonday lunch.

Dr. Martha shook her head as Johnny proffered a section of the orange, and he smiled superior to the weakness he divined, swallowing the last division nearly whole in his haste to define his position.

"Now you see," he began with a final flip of the seeds toward the date on the monument, which he had already succeeded several times in hitting, "now you see just how different you are. I don't mind a bit sitting right on a grave and eating anything and you always make a fuss and won't. If you was sensible like me you'd know it couldn't make any difference. They don't care, I don't suppose, what you do as long as you don't dig 'em up and pitch 'em out somewhere."

"That isn't it at all!" Dr. Martha returned with dignity, "and you ought to know it by this time, Johnny. It's just because they had to be sick and die and say good-bye to everything they were used to, and everybody cried and didn't want them to go away. I mean," Dr. Martha added, with strict regard for truth, "if there was really anybody that cared anything about them. You wouldn't like it if I went and fired orange seeds into your grandfather's date, or sat on his tomb to eat one."

"You couldn't," said Johnny, skillfully evading the main point. "It's too high. I couldn't without a ladder or something."

"Of course," Dr. Martha answered severely, "you don't ever attend to the real inside meaning of anything. I suppose boys don't because it takes them a great while to know anything. At least my father says it does. He says women and women children—that's me, you know—always feel things if they are really women inside, and not queer, messy mixtures, like some folks. Now Aunt Hepsy is just mixy, and so she wouldn't let poor old Jason have the comfort of his mixture that wasn't anything much, but only what father makes to keep some of the patients happy, you know, and thinking they're doing something. But then he says a real man that is worth anything must have lots of woman in him, and a real woman must have some man, and I don't know just how you are going to tell when there's enough of each kind."

"Do you suppose he knows?" Johnny questioned, for a moment staggered. What the doctor said must be true, yet surely some way of escape could be found from his present difficulty. "Anyhow, old Potter says that this woman that is going to have the old Perkins place, you know, will kill more than she cures. He says—"

"Who knows most, my father or old Potter?"

Dr. Martha's voice was quiet, but there was a look in her eye Johnny had seen before, and he hastened to add,

"Why, of course, old Potter only sort of thinks so, but then I think it's a shame she shouldn't stay at home and not come here to take away money from your father, and perhaps do all sorts of things he doesn't want."

"He wants her anyway."

"How do you know?"

"Because he said so. He said he was glad, for a sensible woman always thought of things a man alone never did, and that both ought to work together."

The sound of a light laugh behind them made both turn their heads. The new-comer stood there and she put out her hand, and took that of Dr. Martha as she moved nearer.

"You must forgive me for listening a moment," she said. "The grass is long and you did not hear me coming. I wanted to see you both and ask you to come up the hill, now, if you like. I have a little lame boy there I want you to know. You can help him a great deal,

*Copyrighted.

Johnny. He has suffered so much he has very little courage. You can teach him courage, Johnny."

Wise Dr. ———! Johnny's face flushed with delight. Courage had never been his forte till Dr. Scarborough taught him some of its principles, but he was gaining, and to be chosen as example and sustainer for a weaker brother was elixir of life.

"Of course we will come," he said, and marched proudly before Dr. Martha, who smiled sagely, and was silent while the new friend chatted on till the road was reached and they turned into the path leading up the hill.

Lanesborough, Mass.

(To be continued.)

A DREAM OF THANKSGIVING—JUST A DREAM.

BY REV. H. A. DELANO.

The morning dawned bright and auspiciously. The day was neither sombre nor cold, but seemed like one belonging to October, one that had forgotten itself at the time, and had asked opportunity to reveal its glory and warmth later on.

There was quiet activity everywhere, but an activity that looked toward the most earnest celebration of the glorious, old-time Thanksgiving day.

A friend whom I met early in the market, said, "There are great changes under the new régime. We have found out how to live. We do not hurry as we did; people do not shop all day, and the 'eight hour per day plan' is working admirably for everybody."

A little later in the morning I seemed to be going with a vast throng toward the church. I learned that the service in that particular church was only one of several, however, for the "turn-out" to-day would be too large for any one place of worship.

At the proper time I found myself the fortunate possessor of a chair just inside the door of one of the largest auditories in town. The place was filled—literally every available sitting—with a congregation that seemed stirred yet subdued, expectant yet calm, intense yet worshipful.

It was as when some great event, long whispered and foretold, promised but yet delayed, was, at last, to transpire. There was the sense of long held and suppressed enthusiasm; something mightier in the soul than lips could tell, hearts vibrating with sympathetic thought, and a thousand faces there were the perfect interpreters of a great, transcendent joy. The opening hymn, announced by the pastor was not a surprise, for it appeared to be the very one needed for the hour.

And the beginning? I wonder now that it did not awaken me. A volume of melody and triumphant gladness poured forth in exultant roar and strength, carrying the soul upward and away into realms of conscious liberty and delight.

"Joy to the world, the Lord is come,
Let earth receive her King."

It seemed as if He was present in reality, and that for the first time since the day of promise long ago—"Lo, I am with you alway"—men realized it.

How forever and a day, people postpone this event and refer everything to something they call "the second coming," not realizing the Kingdom of God is always at hand, and that Jesus only asks at any time an open door for His advent feet.

He is always coming, in every great revolution, in every sober event, and will take the kingdom whenever selfish men and worldly, will give it him. Another verse—"He rules the world with truth and grace"; and, as they sung it, harmoniously, enthusiastically, an old veteran seated near me, whose clear eye and keenly chiseled face betokened the reformer, whispered to those around him, "Bless the Lord! looks like that is going to be true. It's the first time, anyway, in the last forty years, when that sentiment hasn't been downright, unmitigated cant in rum-cursed America."

The responsive reading was full of interest and power. Everybody joined in the exercise, and the words rolled in splendid, spontaneous waves of sound, back and forth between leader and people:

"Praise ye the Lord, praise him from the heavens, praise him in the heights.

"Let Israel rejoice in him. Let the saints be joyful in glory. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord. He hath triumphed gloriously. He hath not dealt so with any people."

Then the leader turned to the grand old "Crusade psalm" and read it, while from the congregation three or four hundred white-ribbon women arose and recited with him that battle hymn of the days of old.

When this was done, the leader, in a voice of sweet assurance continued:

"He will comfort all her waste places.

"He will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord.

"Joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody.

"The sun shall be no more thy light by day.

"Neither for brightness shall the moon give her light.

"But the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and thy God thy glory.

"The Lord shall be thy strength and thy consolation.

"The eternal God is thy refuge; and underneath are the everlasting arms.

"He will swallow up death in victory: and the Lord God will wipe off tears from all faces."

The prayer that followed was one of tenderness, pathos, gratitude, too genuine, too eloquent to tell. The voice of the pastor seemed as the heart-cry and sob of a child with the soul weighted beyond its strength, and "with no language but a cry." It was the consciousness of a cup too full to be held in trembling, human hand.

There was weeping, there was joy, there were ejaculated fervent amens, responses of devout thanksgiving, until all the room seemed filled with the odor of a deathless and blessed gratitude.

After other and hearty songs, anthems, choruses the Thanksgiving sermon was given. Thanksgiving sermon it was. There was little talk as to "the national conscience," "the increase of crime," "growing and abounding wickedness in great cities," "strikes," "venal voting" and "political corruption."

The pastor first spoke of one of the most extensive and genuine revivals in the churches known in modern times. It had been one of the tidal movements in modern church history, breaking forth simultaneously, and spreading, without bounds, every whither.

"The cause," he said, "is well known." He believed it due entirely to the changed attitude of the church toward the great moral issues of the day. In the blackest and the bleakest hour of the nation's history, God had given His people the grace to throw off the mighty incubus of the rum power.

The new era of righteousness, ethical living, justice and judgment had come, the church had, at last, taken the side of the poor and oppressed, championed the rights of the masses, and found that, as soon as she cared for the people, the people cared for her.

Then had come the final, desperate, awful battle of constitutional prohibition; weak at first, the effort of a few radicals, but taking an upward march finally, that was joined by thousands.

The dominant political parties fought it with the desperation of death. The liquor power, using first one and then the other of these parties, insured them temporary immunity from the ravages of dissolution.

The movement had been checked, baffled, thwarted many a time, pessimistic horror had seized the minds of good men, the minions of rum seemed omnipotent, and discouragement filled the hearts of the bravest. The saloon, grown arrogant, wolfish, despotic even, still plundered homes, stabbed and shot the leaders of order leagues, stoned and murdered Prohibitionists, gained and held ascendency in all large cities, and kept high carnival of death, poverty and woe.

Finally, the most conservative men saw the impotency of moral suasion, the fearful inadequacy of evangelistic effort to effect or even modify the rapacity and greed of the licensed saloon. They found that they had preserved, fattened, and let go, from year to year, the very tiger they sought to destroy.

The church had changed its appeal. It no longer asked the saloon-keeper to repent, but asked ministers, deacons, laymen to repent and to eliminate the saloon-keeper, to destroy his accursed business, and so change the environment of the "poor drunkard" whose hell had been perpetuated by license votes.

Gradually the fire of indignation kindled, gradually the light of a higher ethical standard dawned upon society. Colleges, seminaries and religious institutions became practical, and a new political economy was taught. There was a new light on land and sea. A reformation dawned, which had its basis in the Sermon on the Mount rather than the doctrinal writings of Paul.

Men realized that they had followed mammon eagerly and long, while professing to be the followers of Him who had not where to lay His head.

They had seen the old parties spread their skirts year after year, and go like whirlwinds of power toward ruin, sucking themselves, individuality, conscience, home, happiness and hope into the old calamity of national, licensed sin. The preacher gave long, but thrilling, intensely interesting history of exasperated womanhood, demanding at last the right, full and complete, of citizenship.

That right was secured in time, and out of a half dozen or more protesting parties of malcontents had come a great national party known as the Home Protection Party. It demanded the abolition of the saloon, the restriction of immigration, an educational test for the voter, and several other important and vital measures.

The moral forces and intelligence of the republic had risen to meet the crisis, and had won the day. The saloon was, after a conflict of twenty years, dating from 1884, an outlaw in every state of the Union.

The government officer no longer hunted the mountain passes to find the smoke of the distillery, and collect its damned offertory of revenue, but to put out its fires. The saloon no longer blocked the highway of progress but was utterly routed. Twelve hundred millions of dollars checked in its flow toward the gulf stream of waste, began to make itself felt in trade, in house and home building, in business everywhere.

Strikes seemed to have had their day. The heart and spirit of the people were changed. Righteousness, contentment and peace reigned in large and tender measure. The revival that had followed, the pastor thought, was God's glorious sign and seal of approval. The revival was spreading and was being felt in lands beyond the sea.

A new industrial order had come. University settlements, college extensions, training schools had made many waste places to blossom into gardens of intelligence, civil and religious brightness. Reason linked with conscience, righteousness with law, patriotism with zeal, would keep this high standard for years to come. The year of jubilee had come.

"Let us pray, again," said the preacher. And while he prayed, I awoke—waking, I wept and trembled. Alas, my country!

Evanston, Ill.

RAILROAD TIES.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

XVII.

Wabasha Accommodation, Milwaukee Railroad, in the Minneapolis station, bound for Rest Island! My old skeptic friend G——, hard-headed, soft hearted, controversial, cultured, my loyal mate of the old days, enters, beams on me, whips out a key, unlocks the seat in front of me and whirls it over with a bang, sits bolt upright, looking into my eyes and says:

"I've wanted to see you ever since I heard of your new gait: you and I agreed precisely once, but I hear you are preaching, and I guess you are doing good. I never doubted your honesty, but I cannot understand you being a parson, and I knew you would tell me the truth if I ever could get a quiet talk with you. A lot of the boys were talking about you the other night at the N— House, and we could raise no theory about you; one said you were going crazy; 'there was no other way,' he said, 'to account for your keeping in the society of women and pious people.' We simply 'gave it up,' for of course none of us could see anything in religion; but not a man doubted that you were changed wonderfully, and you don't look like you did."

I said, "Oh, Bill! you ought to see the inside!" . . .

"Well, well," he said, "I don't want to talk about religion, it makes me tired, for I am not so built as to possibly believe in it and I thought you were not, but I should like to know how you got away from evolution and what you make out of those perennial catch phrases of the Christians—born again—the blood of Jesus cleansing, and all that kind of thing; but even if you could put sense into them it would only deepen the mystery, for your Christians are in such variety, and none of them even pretend to be altogether clean. What can you say about it, anyway?"

He was so sudden—but, as many a time before, I hitched my mind to a car wheel, and this is what I heard in the humming, and in substance told my friend. . . . "I haven't 'gotten away from evolution,' but over another rise, where there's less curve to the sky and the horizon is wider. . . . . .

"God planted a seed in mud and begot a world of vegetable. He dropped a seed into some yearning calyx and begot an animal. He planted again a seed in the womb of some aspiring animal and begot man. He planted a seed in a woman and begot a Son. Isn't that evolution? It is God.

. . . . . .

"And I think it simple enough for even a lily bursting to life in the midst of a world of flat, stagnant water and mud to say to itself, 'I am born from above!' . . . God is ever a planter. His seeds are thoughts in a husk. . . . Soils differ so! In the mud He plants lilies and arrowheads; white beans on the sterile hillside, for they do better there, and cocoanuts by the springs and rivers. Everything to its place, but beans and palms are both royal. . . . . .

"Do you see how the maple seeds with their queer wings fill all the air as they fly? Follow one—it knocks at a clod's door and says, 'If you will hear my voice and open the door I will come in and sup with you and you with me'; and the clod hears and opens one of its doors, and the seed goes in and they sup together and soon the clod melts to the mood of the seed—it feels strange movements, has strange yearnings, experiences strange pains, and then it sees its bosom bursting into a plant that grows, now white, now green, now with leaves and buds and blossoms, and it says, 'I am born again, I am born from above; I feel the heart of a maple tree beating within me.' It does not know whence the wind blew that brought the seed—but it heard the sound and opened the door.

So are they that are born of the Spirit.' The new birth is like that. Do you see the kingdom of heaven?"

. . . . . .

He did not speak and I added, "Some other clod was born again and was a poplar tree, for, as I said, there are many kinds of seeds, but every tree is like its father—one shoots its branches straight up and one grows broad and drooping, but both are true children. Christians are like that.

. . . . . .

"The bursting maple seed is not of the clod, but is in it, it knows it is of the blood of the parent tree. It grows out of the earth, its roots draw up nourishment—it takes in the carbonic acid that it needs, but with it, much of oxygen and other things that are impurities to it and hurtful to it, and it would soon be just a clod again and not even a seed, but that it is full of maple sap that courses up and down its trunk and out to the leaf tips—and in the joy of conscious life and growth it says, 'The sap of the old maple tree cleanses me from hurtful things'.

. . . . . .

"So when a human soul opens to a conception of God as its Father it says, 'Behold, unto me a child is born, unto me a son is given,' and it commences a new life in its offspring, stretching up into regions unknown before, and opening to influences never felt before.

"It says, 'This is God; I am born from above; God has begotten a Son in me! A Son of God! Christ! God manifest in the flesh.' 'It is no more I that live, but Christ liveth in me,' and His blood, like the sap of a tree, or the blood of a man, that gathers up the waste and wear of life and casts it out, is pulsing and throbbing through my veins. I get impurities, I know; I breathe them in; I drink them; they come to me in thoughts. I do not say 'I have no sin;' if I said that 'the truth would not be in me,' but sin has no power over me, for 'the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth me from all sin.'" . . . . .

He said, "Is that all?"

I said, "That is all."

Rest Island.

A NEW HOPE.

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

As we look over the great sisterhood of women, scattered throughout the world engaged in one form or another of work for the temperance cause, we can but note the changes wrought by time and experience in the methods of attack upon this monstrous evil of our day.

Within our own recollection lies that period of the temperance movement when its most effective weapon was the appeal to the moral sentiment and sympathies of the people. The full array of possible influences was brought to bear upon the conscience of the community in order to arouse the good to an effort to induce the bad to withhold the temptation from the worse. The character of appeal, whether from the lecture platform or through the press, that would stir the heart of the better classes and induce them to labor with the dealer in death, and induce him, in turn, to refuse to the drunkard his glass, and induce the drunkard in turn to haste away from his cups, because of the love of mother and wife and home, seemed to be the only appeal that could be made. The man who, like John B. Gough, did it well, was looked upon as the bulwark against the tide of destruction, rather than as the maker of sentiment. But it did not take long to learn that to attempt to put a barricade of words, or even of prayers, between this constantly increasing tide of drink and misery and humanity, was as ineffective as to attempt with a feather duster to sweep back the waves of the sea.

To follow this movement on through its various phases of effort as they have taken shape through the decades, would take more space than is at our command. We all know what has been done in the way of study of effects and subsequent study of causes. We have followed the efforts of leading minds to discriminate between the moral and the hygienic aspects of this evil, and to discover how much of the sin is disease and how much of the disease is sin. We have ridden on the wave of slow coming conviction that legislative action must follow awakened moral sentiment, and that the land that could not be saved by love must be saved by law. We have been swept along on the current of educational enthusiasm, with magnificent results that will tell, we trust, upon the coming generations. We have grappled with the multitudinous problems of prevention, and every one of these phases has been deepening the impression that it was almost impossible for us to expect a cure. For the children of the future we have hope. For the men of the present we have not found, with all our schemes, social, economic, medicinal or legal, a sure way of escape. We pray for the drunkard, we work for the drunkard, but, so far we do not save the drunkard; and it is a question in the minds of many strong philanthropists as to whether the present generation of drunkards are not to go on reaping the fruit of their own errors and weakness, and filling another line of drunkards' graves. A larger number of earnest workers than we like to believe are saying practically there is no hope for those who are already bound and chained by the habit of drink, and are pointing all their effort in the direction of prevention and salvation for the generations to come.

If, upon this state of things there should break a new light, and a new hope should spring up in the minds of disheartened workers as to the possibility of permanent cure of the present victims of the liquor and opium habits, we are very sure that the women of the world would feel as if they had seen at last the dawn of the morning. The very eagerness with which all past plans and systems of cure have been seized upon by the women of the land, who have begged, coaxed and driven their loved ones into retreats, willing to make any sacrifice, to endure any hardship, even in many instances to mortgage their own future that the beloved husband, brother or son might be cured; I say this very eagerness is a revelation of how women's hearts rally to any such hope. And though many of them have met with dire disappointment we think we shall find their hearts still ready to welcome a new hope in this direction. Such a hope many of us believe is on its way. We welcome it all the more gladly that it arrives in the hand of a woman.

Dr. S. S. Nivison, M. D., comes before the world with a claim to have discovered and demonstrated a system of treatment by which the confirmed drunkard of to-day may be freed from his bondage and go back to himself, to his family and to the world. Dr. Nivison is no youthful dreamer loitering along the waysides of work, but a medical practitioner of the best early training and of many years practice of medicine. She is well known as a life-long student of problems of social reform, and has spent a life-time in the struggle to secure better physical, mental and moral conditions for the children of men. She is an advanced thinker along all the lines of woman's best development, much of her thinking having been done at a period when men and women did not rally to aid the best schemes, as they are rallying in this our more glorious day. Out of her large practical experience as a physician as well as out of her great heart as a woman, she has evolved a plan for the creation of an institution where she shall personally supervise the working out of her own theories and the practice of her system upon the victims of the liquor and the opium habit.

Those who know her best and have seen the actual results of her efforts upon sufferers of this class will have no hesitation in believing that she has it in her power to effect a permanent cure. With her great gift for the world, she comes before its womanhood, asking that, for the sake of the sons, and brothers and husbands, over whom so many of them have mourned, it shall rally to enable her to produce the best results from the discoveries she has made. That these discoveries are based upon purely scientific principles, that they are in accord with the advanced medical science of the day, that they have already been carefully wrought out in practice and demonstrated over and over again, until there are abundant vouchers of her ability to cure, and that there is, in her thought and plan, a great and burning desire that humanity should have the help of that for which she has wrought and toiled until years and weariness are creeping upon her, are points already well understood. It was believed that Dr. Nivison would have an opportunity to lay before the members of the W. C. T. U. at their great annual Convention in Denver, a full outline of her plans. But in the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL we plead for it the earnest consideration, the thorough investigation, and if found practicable, the hearty coöperation that the white-ribbon women of the world have heretofore shown to anything that can be proven to be a mighty helper in its mighty work.

New York City.

SIGNIFICANCE OF LABOR TROUBLES.

Address at Denver by Mrs. S. E. V. Emery.

Abraham Lincoln, in his first message to Congress gave utterance to these memorable words: "There is an effort being made to place capital on an equal footing with if not above labor in the structure of government. Labor is superior to capital, and deserves much the higher consideration." . . . . "Let them beware of surrendering a political power, which they already possess, and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the doors of advancement against such as they, and to fix new burdens and disabilities upon them until all liberty shall be lost. In my present position," he continues, "I should scarcely be justified were I to omit raising a warning voice against the approach of returning despotism. Monarchy itself is sometimes hinted at as a possible refuge from the power of the people."

A few years later James A. Garfield made this memorable prediction, "I am persuaded that the next great question confronting the American people will be that of corporations and their relation to the national life. The fear is now entertained by many of our best men that in the creation of these vast corporations a spirit has been evoked which will defy control, and wield a power greater than that of government itself."

My friends, in view of present conditions I ask if these prophecies are not being fulfilled. The history of our country for the past six months is full of thrilling interest and startling significance, not only to the American citizen, but to the entire civilized world. Within that time five great states in this union have called out military force to quell disturbances between corporate wealth and the producers of that wealth. Strange, startling and un-American as it may seem, these men in some instances have not been called out to enforce law, but to assist corporate wealth in the violation of law. As an illustration we find upon the statute books of New York a ten-hour law, which applies to switchmen on railroads, as well as to other classes of labor. Ever since the enactment of that law it has been shamefully disregarded by the railroads, and employés have been compelled to work not only fifteen, twenty and twenty-four hours, but sometimes thirty-six hours, without sleep or rest. Not only is this a violation of law, and an injustice to the employés, but it is dangerous to the traveling public, for it is a well known fact that a large percentage of the railroad accidents in this country occur on account of overworked employés, who through sheer exhaustion often fall asleep and neglect to do the duties assigned them. In July last the switchmen of Buffalo struck, not for higher wages, but demanding that the law be enforced. What did New York do? Did she attempt to enforce that law? No, she immediately called out troops, not to sustain the law, but to sustain corporate wealth in its violation and defiance of law.

At many manufacturing towns we find troops established for the purpose of protecting the Chinese and other foreign laborers, who are employed by these corporations at about one half the wages necessary to sustain the American laborer in common respectability, thus degrading American labor to a level with the pauper labor of Europe, and at the same time taxing it to support troops which will protect these foreigners while they are employed by these corporations, the foreigners despoiling the birthright of American freemen.

Now, I am aware that to the average American there is nothing more unwelcome than an intimation that our liberty can be wrested from us. We have so long been accustomed to boast of the superiority of our national advantages and institutions, our freedom and right of suffrage, that to cast a reflection upon them is to invite derision and probably be awarded the title of a crank. A celebrated writer has said that political optimism is one of the boasts of the American people. He says there is a popular feeling that God takes care of children, fools and the United States, that we are inclined to believe that the Almighty stands pledged to our prosperity, and so it is the people have reposed in confidence, forgetting that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty.

History teaches us that liberty is never so endangered as when the people sink into a condition of apathy, and fortify themselves in the assurance of national prosperity. Such has been the experience of other nations, and will we profit by their example, or will we, too, close our eyes to the light of experience, our ears to the voice of reason and rush on madly, blindly, to national ruin and death?

It is needless to ignore the fact that we are rapidly drifting toward the whirlpool of national destruction. It is true that a few men who have succeeded in accumulating vast wealth out of the wrecked fortunes of their fellowmen cry Prosperity! prosperity! But is it prosperity when the few grow rich and the many grow poor? Is it prosperity that builds palatial mansions while the homes of thousands have fallen to creditors and are being sold under the hammer with their inmates turned destitute to the world? Is it prosperity that fills storehouses and granaries while men and children freeze and starve? Is it prosperity that builds magnificent churches, with the saloon and brothel festering underneath their very shadow? With Carlyle, I would ask, "Prosperity in what? Progress, whither?"

More than two thousand years ago Aristotle said, "Democracies have always an irresistible tendency to plutocracies; that with the accumulation of large fortunes, grew the spirit for the distinction of titled honors."

Now, is it not a fact that the accumulation of large fortunes in this country has begotten aristocratic customs and the aping of foreign nobility, so that it has become disgusting in the view of the American people? What results can we expect from such conditions? Are we ready for an aristocracy in this country? Wealth and power say "yes," but the great common people say "no." And thus we find ourselves on the verge of a conflict between the people on the one hand and wealth and power on the other. To-day, this government of the people, for the people and by the people, is on trial for its life. Fifty years ago Thomas Carlyle wrote, "The republic west of us will have its trial period, its darkest of all hours. It is traveling the high road to that trial day."

To day this prophecy is being fulfilled, and these great struggles between labor and corporate wealth are but the rumbles of the volcano which may at any moment burst forth upon this people with all the fury of the French Revolution.

To the earnest student of history the question arises: "Why is it that nations rise, flourish for a brief period and then pass away?" But no sooner do we commence the study of economic questions than we discover the great truth that nations die because of their unjust laws; laws which oppress and degrade the masses. God is not mocked and He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb, will see that the weak and small are not uncared for.

In searching for the causes of national decay we are led to the conclusion that in the moulding of governments some vital principle has been omitted, some life sustaining force which should cement the interests of the government and bind them indissolubly to the great mass of the people. The record of every dead nation assures us that the elements of strength and durability have never yet been incorporated in human laws. What, then, is this vital principle, this God power, that is wanting in human governments?

Gentlemen, we believe it to be the mother quality of the soul. We bow in reverence to the strength and nobility of manhood, at the same time we recognize that you are not reckoning the value of the necessity of the tenderness and compassion of the mother heart. It was this in the Christ-nature that brought Him so close to God, it is this that strengthens, beautifies and perpetuates the divine law, and it is this that must be incorporated in human laws if we would make them fixed and abiding.

GRACE HORSLEY DARLING.

Her Year of Jubilee.

BY FLORENCE BALGARNIE.

American women are justly proud of their heroine, Ida Lewis, a maiden ranking second to none in the category of valiant doers of valiant deeds.

We in the old country have also not forgotten the fair fame of Grace Horsley Darling, and little children clustering round their mother's knee still love to hear the story of the brave girl afloat in the open boat, who rescued the perishing crew of the S. S. Forfarshire.

THE CASTLE OF THE CREWS.

It so happens that fifty years ago the 25th of this October Grace Horsley Darling died, and we in England are therefore adding to remembrance by recounting afresh the facts which made her famous and in reviewing the intermediate years, years fraught with so much in the perfecting of womanhood.

Fifty years ago women were still in the shell, gradually they became hatched and fledged, and now their wings are growing so strong that the girl of to-day may well challenge comparison, if not with the strongest in body, most certainly with the strongest in mind and most fearless in spirit. There are in England and America to-day thousands of girls skilled in all athleticism of mind and body, girls who can row a boat or swim against the stream with the same ease that they can solve an equation or translate a passage in Homer. From girls with finely poised heads and well balanced brain, with muscular arms and sturdy legs, we expect, and have the right to expect, more than from those of two or three generations ago, who were taught by the fashionable poet of the day that it was "a shame to see a woman eat."

We must then judge of Grace Darling and her deed, not by the standards of the year 1892, but by those of 1842, and viewed in this light she is, indeed, a girl of whom any nation may be proud, and should all the women of the world ever in time to come develop the strength, courage and spirit of Amazons, Grace Darling, together with Ida Lewis, will stand out preëminent among them all, for theirs was not a strength of the flesh, but a power of the spirit, truly "made perfect in weakness."

Four years ago this autumn I made a jubilee pilgrimage to the scene of Grace's exploits and heard from the lips of her niece, Mrs. Dixon, many interesting details, as well as saw many valuable relics from the light-house tower. Then it was that I visited the old church-yard where Grace lies buried, and lingering round her tomb read the inscription:

GRACE HORSLEY DARLING,
Born 20th November, 1815.
S. S. Forfarshire—wrecked 7th September, 1838.
Died 25th October, 1842.
Aged 26 years.

Those brief words sum up the whole drama of her young life, and the cold gray stone of her canopied tomb further illustrates its climax. The recumbent figure, lying in solemn state upon a high pedestal, represents her as a slender maiden, with a sweet, serious face and long, flowing hair, intermingling with the seaweed twined round her pillow. Her right arm encircles an oar and her hands are clasped over her heart as if in prayer. It is a singularly beautiful and yet simple tomb.

Bamborough, the village where Grace Darling was born, and where she also died, is on the bleak Northumberland coast, perhaps the most perilous portion of our whole seaboard. An ancient Norman castle, the home of the Crews, stands on the top of a high ridge of rocks, and most massive in its proportions, it acts as a bulwark between the village and the pitiless blast which comes sweeping in from the ocean.

On calling at the house where Grace died, I received a cordial welcome from Mrs. Dixon, and was not only shown the dresses, shawls, watches, lockets, teapot and other souvenirs of the heroine, but was enriched by the gift of her portrait and a lock of her soft goldeny brown hair, which I treasure amongst my most sacred possessions.

But we must not linger in Bamborough, for it was far out at sea, from the lonely Longstone rocks that Grace started on her errand of mercy. By singular good fortune I found myself lodged within the walls of the old castle, and at my bedroom window, perched sheer above some hundred feet of precipitous rocks, I sat far into the night gazing out upon the black waters, watching the intermittent flash of the revolving light of the Longstone, which stands just as it did fifty years ago, a beacon warning sailors to keep well out to sea.

Had it not been for the shelter afforded by the Harbor Rock the devoted pair could not have succeeded in reaching the wreck. There was a whole mile to row on the lee side of the rocks; outside this shelter their little cockle-shell could not have weathered the storm for an instant—at the start, it is true, their passage was exposed, but fortunately between the Longstone and the Bluecaps Island Grace and her father went before the gale and on the return trip they were aided by some of the rescued sailors.

Eight men and one woman were found and saved; two of the sailors who formed the first boat-load recovered sufficiently to return and assist those whom it was impossible to find room for on the first trip. When some hours later the boatmen in their larger craft arrived from the mainland, they found three lifeless bodies—a mother and two little babes, and reverently lifting them from their damp bed of tangled sea weed, they bore them to the Longstone. The fury of the storm may be gauged by the concluding lines of Mr. Darling's quaint "log" furnished to the light-house authorities at the Trinity House, London: "The boatmen came to the Longstone with great difficulty and had to lodge in the barracks two days and nights, with scant provisions, no beds, nor clothes to change them with."

GRACE DARLING.

The news of Grace Darling's brave deed soon spread like wild-fire. The Royal Humane Society, the Royal National Institution for the Preservation of Life from Shipwreck, the Edinburgh and Leith Humane Society, the Glasgow Humane Society and many other bodies held special meetings and conveyed resolutions and medals to both father and daughter. On the latter the highest and most exceptional distinction of all was bestowed, the gold medallion of the Royal Humane Society.

It happened to be the year of Queen Victoria's coronation and the young sovereign, as a special mark of her favor, desired the Lords' Commissioners of the treasury to send a check for £250. Dukes and duchesses, poets and artists, enthusiasts of every degree, laid their homage at Grace's feet, and the numerous visitors to the lonely light-house threatened for a time to completely overwhelm the modest little family. Like all celebrities Grace had to bear the penalty of fame, and at length, having sat to no less than seven portrait painters within twelve days, Mr. Darling, with his homely north country bluntness, wrote to the newspaper, stating:

In this place portrait painting is attended with a great deal of inconvenience: it would require me to have nothing else to do; therefore hopes the public will be satisfied, as they can have correct likenesses from any of the above artists. Your most humble servant,

WILLIAM DARLING.

"I have had three letters to day making application for sittings."

Poor Grace had to make a very determined stand against requests for locks of hair, or she would soon have been completely shorn. She never, however, refused her autograph, but to one friend she wrote:

"According to your request you will receive a few signatures, but you must not promise them to too many, for 'I am both deed sweer and unco ill o.' Perhaps you would scarcely believe it; I have signed about 110 cards for Mr. Smeddle alone, and I don't know how many to others."

Valuable gifts and large sums of money were constantly showered upon her, and her fortune, fame, beauty and goodness combined to attract so many suitors for her hand that the Duke of Northumberland was compelled to come forward, and constituting himself her guardian, henceforth kept the outside world at bay, and with the duchess watched over Grace during the remaining years of her short life.

Here is a characteristic letter dated from the Longstone Lighthouse, on January 25, 1839, in reply to some foolish admirer who had inquired if she did not experience pleasure in riding out in a rough sea:

DEAR MADAM:—You requested me to let you know whether I felt pleasure to be out in a rough sea, which I can assure you, there is none, I think, to any person in their sober senses. I have seven apartments in the house to keep in a state fit to be inspected every day by gentlemen, so that my hands are kept very busy, that I never think the time long, but often too short. I have often had occasion to be in the boat with my father, for want of better help, but never at the saving of any lives before, and I pray God may never be again."

But the span of Grace's life was now nearly run, and so weak did she become that she was removed to the mainland; after a short stay in Alnwich to be under the personal care of the Duke of Northumberland's physician, she retired to the home of her sister, Thomasine, in Bamborough, to die. The damp of autumn was now setting in, and as the leaves began to redden, Grace's face grew each day more pale, save as the hectic flush appeared on her transparent cheeks when the dry cough racked her wasted body. As October neared its close, and the mornings were growing frosty, she passed away. "She went like snow," said her sister, "she melted away into the springtide of the Beyond," where she has "Joined the choir invisible of the immortal dead,

Who live in lives made better by their presence."

The Farne Islands (especially Lindisfarne with its stately abbey) are sacred to Cuthbert, the most woman-hating saint disgracing the calendar. In Denham Cathedral dedicated to his memory, up to Reformation times no woman might approach his shrine, and he ended his days upon a lonely rock in the Inner Farne Islands the better to escape their presence. But Nemesis has tracked this miserable being, and in the very church dedicated to his blessed (?) memory and upon his own island, a monumental slab has been placed in honor of one of the sex so much dreaded by mediæval saints as the source of all that is evil. That woman is Grace Horsley Darling and it is a man who sings her praise; the Laureate of the day, Wordsworth, penned her epitaph thus:

GRACE DARLING'S TOMB.

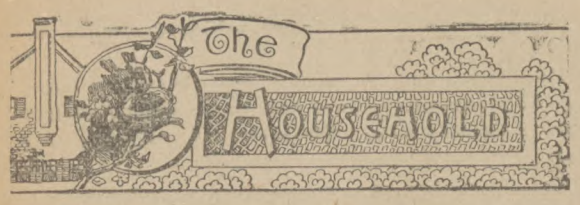
"Pious and pure, modest, and yet so brave;
Though young so wise, though meek so resolute.

. . . . .

"Oh, that waves and winds could speak
Of things which their united power called forth
From the pure depths of her humanity!
A maiden gentle, yet at duty's call
Firm and unflinching as the light house reared
On the island-rock, her lonely dwelling place."

London, England.



THANKSGIVING.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

To morrow you say is Thanksgiving; ah, if love could only speak,
It would not be one day of the year, but every day in the week;
Never the feet of Aurora would tread her path, rose strewn,
Never the sun would climb so high in the great blue vault at noon,
Or over us in the shadow, the wing of the great night lower,
Or the moonlight kindle to diamonds, the dew that kisses the flower—
In the night or in the morning, in the tempest or the calm,
Our lives and souls would be attuned to a grand Thanksgiving psalm.

It would always be Thanksgiving when the song birds northward wing,
When the life that throbs in the winter's soul bursts into the buds of spring,
When the trees are white with blossoms of the summer's deeper green,
And her perfect bloom and fragrance on every hand are seen,
When the wains toil home in the autumn, with ripened fruit and grain,
And leaves come drifting along our way, in gold and crimson rain—
In spring or summer or autumn, in the winters cold and chill,
If love were only within our hearts, it would be Thanksgiving still.

If love could only have her way, what praises and song and cheer
Would echo Thanksgiving choruses every day in the year;
'Twould add to the bounteous blessings that ever around us fall,
And then with its quick divining, would see and catch them all;
It would lessen sorrow and trouble, and bitterness and pain
Would be arched with hope when shadows come, as rainbows arch the rain—
And the earth would be glad and joyous, with love in our lives alway,
And every evening would fold its wings o'er a new Thanksgiving day.

Pittsburg, Kan.

DAVID DOUGLAS AND HIS WIFE.*

BY MRS. O. W. SCOTT.

Chapter XII.

Mr. Douglas returned home on Tuesday after the appointments and disappointments had been read. Half-packed boxes and empty boxes with wide-open mouths stood in the basement, the kitchen, the back piazza and even in the hall upon the now carpetless floor. Worst of all, Ted, who had trotted up and down stairs "helping mamma," while the damp, cold wind blew through the house, was sick in bed. It was not a particularly cheering outlook.

"Well, Mary!" said he after he had set down grip sack and umbrella and kissed his wife.

"Isn't it strange?" she replied.

And then the children came to greet him.

"What kind of place is Eliot's Mills, papa? It doesn't sound very nice. Will there be good schools, do you think?" asked Marion.

"And, papa, will Archie have to leave college? If he does I'll bet he'll never be a minister," said Hugh; and the children, eager for information, failed to notice how worn and weary their father looked. But his wife saw it.

"Papa must rest now awhile, and Ted has the promise of seeing him 'right away,' so you get tea, Marion, and ask the rest of your questions then," said she.

Ted, still pale and weak, drew his father's head down, hugging him fervently as he whispered: "I was a brave boy to take my medicine so I could be ready to move."

Then Dorothy climbed on his knee as he sat beside the bed.

"And has Dot been good too? What makes my little girl so sober?" he asked.

"I've done something," said she with a deep sigh, and then glancing shyly at her mother who evidently understood the case, she continued: "I've licked Willie Pettigrew!"

"Why, Dorothy! what do you mean?" he asked with a smile.

"I did, 'cause he kept saying bad things to me. He said we'd got to move because you're a Prohibitioner; and Ted was sick, so I had to make him take it back. I had to!" and Dorothy, with a quick glance upward to see how her father bore the news, nestled still closer to him.

His voice had a curious quaver in it as he smoothed her hair and said, "Do you think it is nice for little girls to do such things?"

Dorothy sat up very straight. "Why, papa, I did it just as easy. I'm stronger than Ted is. Pooh! I could do it again if I had to."

"She'll make a funny lady, won't she, papa?" and Ted chuckled softly.

"God made me, Ted," said Dorothy sternly. "He made my hands strong, didn't he, papa?" and she laid her soft, pink palms over his fingers.

"Yes, and by and by you will learn what He wants you to do with them, I hope. But you must not touch Willie again. Will you remember?"

"Yes, sir, but I made him cry good," said the young avenger, as she slid to the floor, flashing back a look of triumph and smiling until all her dimples showed. Then Ted laughed, and his father laughed, which was a very good and agreeable medicine for both of them.

After making the little folks happy with a supply of new advertising cards, and some wonderful paper dolls which Hugh was called to explain to them, the minister and his wife went to the study. Very forlorn it looked just now, with its empty book-cases and paper-strewn floor. And nothing but an arm-chair can look more lonely than does a book-case when every familiar volume has taken its departure. Old friends, every one of them, with a personality stamped upon the back, you feel like begging their pardon when you pack them away in boxes and fasten them in!

But Mr. Douglas was in no mood to notice his surroundings. He sank into his old "sleepy-hollow" chair and drew his wife's rocker to its side. "Come, True heart," said he, "we may as well face the situation, I suppose. I had a dreadful time of despondency after I found where we were to be sent. Oh, Mary, this being put down without so much as saying, 'by your leave, sir,' is what hurts a man."

"I thought it all over after your telegram came last night," she responded. "I was very tired and anxious, for Ted had a high fever until midnight, and the rain beat against the windows, and it almost seemed as if God had forgotten us. I cried and prayed until I was nearly sick. But Ted began to sleep more quietly, and his skin grew moist, so there was something to be thankful for. Then I took up the life of Wendell Phillips, which I began the night before, and that was just the tonic I needed. I wish all the faint-hearts would read it. But I reached the point where he was nominated for Governor of Massachusetts on the Labor and Prohibition tickets, and in his letters of acceptance I found something that I jotted down for you. Here it is: 'No social question ever gets fearlessly treated here till we make politics turn on it. The real American college is the ballot box. On questions like these, a political party is the surest and readiest, if not the only, way to stir discussion and secure improvement.' And again, 'But the only bulwark against the dangers of intemperance is prohibition. More than thirty years of experience have convinced me, and as wide an experience has taught you that this can only be secured by means of a distinct political organization.' There, don't you see? It helped me to feel that after doing all he had for our country, Wendell Phillips saw that two of the greatest questions left to settle were labor and temperance, and that they must be decided by the ballot."

"That's very good. It was about 1870 that he was nominated, wasn't it? Eighteen years ago! How slow we have been to see what was clear to him. But when I was feeling almost desperate, I consulted a book, too—an old book that politicians have nearly forgotten. It was a Bible that laid on the dressing-table in my room, and as it fell open I read those wonderful words in the fourth chapter of second Corinthians, and I said to myself: 'Always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake;' and here I am almost in despair because I'm cut down on salary and cast out for doing what I believe is right."

"David, that reminds me of one thing that troubled me last night. It was partly through my influence that you left the old party and got into all this trouble. Now tell me truly—do you ever wish you hadn't?"

"Why, Mary," and he drew her face toward him. "Not for a moment. I couldn't fit into the old place, you see. If a block of marble is taken out of a quarry and chiseled ever so little it is spoiled for the old spot. Oh, no! I can't go back and I won't compromise. There is one minister at least who has gone to his church understanding that silence on this subject is his only security. Imagine me in his shoes!"

"Oh, David, you're not that kind of a man!" and, looking into Mrs. David's face just then, one would suppose that her husband was the one "man" whom the old philosopher's lantern had been trying to illuminate all these years.

"I pitied the poor fellow," continued Mr. Douglas, musingly, "for I imagine he won't enjoy living with his conscience the next few months. But this case was offset by young Haskell, who might have come here if he had simply kept still about his politics. As it was, he went back to Stony Brook. Stony Brook for him with his growing family, and Chesport for Dr. Jarvis, who has only himself and wife. Knowing what I do of the man, though, I think the church here is going to have part of its punishment in this life. Brother Pettigrew looked fairly sick yesterday after the Doctor had proposed and been accepted."

"Did he do that?" asked Mrs. Douglas.

"That was the report. I don't know."

"But why doesn't the bishop see to these things, and straighten them out."

The minister smiled as he replied: "How can he when he knows nothing about half the churches and men? I thought of going to him with my own case, but what was the use? If it were intimated in the cabinet that I was a 'dangerous fellow' and a leader of sedition, he would have a prejudice to start with.

"And then—I knew that our presiding bishop had no sympathy with a Prohibitionist. If I had ventured to hint at unjust treatment because of political prejudices very likely he would have said: 'Oh, that's all bosh!' You may shake your head, my dear, but bishops are only men, and some of them are away behind the standard they have raised for the church. If they could but have a realizing sense of their influence over the compromising hosts who say by their ballots that the liquor traffic can be legalized without sin, it seems to me they would be more consistent.

"Oh, for leaders, both north and south, to rally our church for prohibition and make its banners 'terrible' to the enemy!"

"Amen!" said Mary Douglas, "but I half wish you had seen him after all," she added after a pause. "I admire our bishop so much I don't like to think he could be unjust."

"He would not be —intentionally—but that doesn't help me any. I am not fit to talk about that side of the question to-night, though—it stirs me all up," and the tired, troubled look returned to his face.

"Don't then! Marion has called us to tea, and I suppose the children think we are almost selfish to stay away from them so long," said his wife.

They had hardly risen from the table when the door-bell began to ring, and for two hours their friends were coming and going. It was no "farewell reception" with the magnates of the church to preside, make speeches and formulate resolutions which could be reported; but perhaps there was no less meaning in the many quiet expressions of regret. One year gives a man only a slight hold upon any people; but for the sake of the principle which had been attacked Mr. Douglas found he had won the esteem of men and women outside as well as within his own church. Members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union were there—women who had read and studied the questions of the day until they were away in advance of their associates who cared for none of these things. Some seemed half frightened to find themselves among "radicals," but knowledge is a propelling force, and moves one forward irresistibly and almost insensibly. The only real safety for a non-combatant in these days is a fire-proof garment of dense ignorance.

A reporter would have been puzzled to tell what the object of this unique gathering was. Those who had come to sympathize with the "persecuted" pastor found themselves gathering fresh courage and inspiration from his hopeful outlook. Others who had dropped in to see "how he bore it" concluded that he must have had some stroke of good fortune which his appointment did not indicate; while a few who considered tears a necessary accompaniment of leave-taking, were quite discomfited to see that "Brother Douglas and his wife" were still able to smile. Brave hearts! they had good words for all, and imparted not a little of "the faith which overcometh" before the evening was over. Perhaps the minister would have said that the interest of the occasion centralized when, with a brief and somewhat stilted speech, a young man presented him a fountain pen, in the name of a "few fellows who had been helped" by what he had said and done. And a reformer who can help "the fellows" may well be congratulated.

Mr. Matthews, who had always credited himself with a share in his pastor's political regeneration, tarried for a last word. "I can't be reconciled," said he. "H'all this is wrong, and I 'ave no peace in my soul since the wicked triumph."

"That never will do," replied Mr. Douglas, cheerfully. "You need all your strength and courage to carry on the work."

"But I can't 'elp dwelling on David's psalms, when 'e complained to the Lord; 'e was a good man, was David, and was most bitterly wronged, and so 'as another David been. When I find a prayer for the destruction of 'is henemies, I think of you, pastor, and says the words very strong and 'earty," and the old Englishman shook his head mournfully.

*Copyrighted.

"But a greater than David said, 'Love your enemies.'"

"I know those blessed words, pastor," interrupted Mr. Matthews, "but just now I'm in the Psalms—somewhere in the fifties."

Mr. Douglas told his wife and they laughed—with a deeper feeling than mirth—to think of the dear old man "living in the fifties" for their sake.

"But you were not there this evening, nor in Lamentations," said Mrs. Douglas, "you were so cheerful that I felt quite light-hearted. Possibly you have some good news you haven't shared with me."

"Nothing, nothing!" her husband declared, "except Eliot's Mills and the debts we shall incur there. But I will tell you how it was. Some of our friends acted as if they had come to my funeral. They actually whispered their sympathy. That just aroused me. Shall we cry when we believe we are following our Master? Are we going to whine when we ought to have the courage of our convictions? No, sir! Why, Mary, the enemy must see a signal of victory in our faces."

"Now you look like the young soldier who came back to Gilead so many years ago. I wish Archie could see you just this minute," said Mrs. Douglas proudly.

A look of pain instantly shadowed his exultant expression. "Poor Archie!" he sighed; "what shall I do to keep that boy in college? You oughtn't to have reminded me of him to-night."

But "poor Archie" was a son to be proud of. The next day came a letter full of boyish sympathy and manly unselfishness. "If you cannot let me stay here, I will go to work," he wrote, "but anyway I am glad you did what you felt was right."

If I say that David Douglas actually cried over that letter, will you be surprised?

Two mornings later, Ted, wrapped in a heavy shawl, was taken to the station in a hack with his mother and Dorothy, whose woe-begone little face showed that she was not to be easily transplanted. Mr. Douglas and the two older children walked to save expense. As they reached the last crossing, Mr. Sloan's carriage came swiftly down the street. The mud flew from wheels and hoofs upon the three pedestrians, and they caught a glimpse of the owner's face as he whirled past.

"He needn't throw mud at us the last thing," exclaimed Hugh indignantly.

"Never mind!" said his father with a smile, "it will brush off when it gets dry."

But he was not thinking simply of that characteristic, if unpremeditated greeting. The sharp contrast between himself and the millionaire struck him at that moment as though he had been an outside observer. There, in his elegant carriage, rode the agent, in Satan's hands, of untold evil! Here walked the minister whom he had deposed!

Then came another startling thought. This rich man had worked through an agency—"a church not militant but recreant," through the one bond now existing between Christians and the rum traffic, the vital bond of political affiliation and sympathy, a gilded channel through which "the hand of iron" had grasped and held the church of the living God!

And now these friends of ours pass out of sight. Their haps and mishaps might not interest us if the war were over. But it has only begun. Each year sees the lines more sharply drawn, and still good people strangely wait, and question and linger. God also waits, but not forever.

Norwich, Conn.

(Concluded.)

WORDS TO THE WISE.

AUNT PHOSIE'S OPPORTUNITY.

"Since you are willing to keep your sitting," said Aunt Phosie to the little company of women, "I want to call your attention to some other matters you say you skip over in the papers, because being politics they are of no interest to women. Of course you see, for it is plain enough to be seen that I am not a learned person. My school privileges were precious few, but some things can be comprehended by plain, simple common sense, and what we call politics is neither Greek nor witchcraft nor a great dreadful bugaboo to be afraid of. Walk right up to it and you will see that politics consists chiefly in making laws and in choosing men to make them.

"Now if women were wholly left out of the matter why then it would be no concern of theirs. But they are left out only at the beginning part, the making. They have to obey the laws when made and to be punished if they break one, and their taxes have to go toward the expenses of law making, and they have to train up their boys, and very often to feed and clothe them and do for them generally while they are getting old enough to make laws for their mothers.

"We have seen that the trusts and combines can raise prices to suit themselves, and high prices affect wives as well as husbands, and a great many women do not even have husbands to pay bills for them. Now if law-making can hinder combines, women are interested in that law-making, call it politics or call it paradise. Don't be scared by a name, neither by bad-sounding words, corruption, vileness. It will not make you vile to inquire as to the men picked out to manage your children's schools, neither will it corrupt you to express your opinion of them by dropping a slip of paper in a box. Why should doing this make you afraid or ashamed merely because it is called voting? The reason of the great ado about it is because it is contrary to the present customs. If a Turkish woman were to walk out of her apartments and drop a letter into the postoffice box, there would be a great ado about that.

"Now, as to taking interest in choosing school committees, that is your bounden duty. You have no right to hold aloof from what so concerns your children's welfare. Let me tell you a story. It is a sort of allegory. Once there were several families living near each other several miles from town, and they desired a school for their children, and set a day for arranging as to teachers and studies and some kind of a school building. When the day came all the fathers, and the uncles, and the grandfathers, and all the hired men, and a few Italian laborers, and two or three peddlers and other old bachelor business men living with some of the families, met together.

"The women took no interest in what was going on. They kept out of the room. But at last one of them said to some of the other ones: 'I really feel as if we ought to interest ourselves in what is being talked about in there, and ought to express our opinions about the persons who may be spoken of as managers of the school.' 'Oh, no, no, no,' cried the others. That would be dreadful. Let them manage the business.' 'But why?' 'Because they are men, and what's more, they will forbid you from having any say about it.' 'By what right do they forbid me?' 'By the right of being men!' 'But we ought to go in by the right of being mothers! By the right of being women, and the wrong of staying out.' Ladies," continued Aunt Phosie, "I want you to see that this much-in-earnest woman spoke truly.

"Now I will tell you another little story. Once there was an aged woman who was left alone in her old age, poor and alone; every child gone from earth. In the next room to her lived a young woman, an invalid, sick, and without a soul to call upon for care or money. Up stairs in the same building was another friendless woman, not very badly insane, but so in a degree. These women were taken away and left in different places—poorhouse, hospital, asylum. People visiting these places have told right out in plain print of the sufferings found there—suffering from over-crowding, from poor food, from cold, from lack of attention, and in some cases, from ill-treatment. They are managed by men, and these men are appointed by men chosen in ways that are called politics; but because of the name must we turn from them? skip over them in the newspapers? No. Every woman ought to take interest in what is being done with women too badly off to look out for themselves, and in my opinion they should take part in managing all places where women are obliged to stay. They ought to do this by the right of being women and the wrong of showing indifference."

"Well," said Mrs. Tibbits, "I will go home and think about it. There's reason in what you say."

"Wait just five minutes," said Aunt Phosie, "I've a word or two more to add and may never have so good a chance. Then I shall want you all to go home and think about it, as Mrs. Tibbits says, and if you can think of any one single reason why any one law that is made does not in some way affect the interests of all women, come and tell me what it is. But you will have to watch the law-making pretty close," she added, laughing, "and so will find yourselves right in the midst of politics."

Belmont, Mass.

"A THANKSGIVING CHUNK."

BY CHARLES N. SINNETT.

A few years ago I went with a friend to an island on the New England coast. A heavy storm came on in the night and we were obliged to spend Thanksgiving Day in that rugged place.

The day was one of those when a great magnet seems drawing everything landward. The wind shrieked from the east, the waves leaped on the shore, and scudding clouds and gusts of rain drove westward over every island and headland. Even the old fisherman in whose cottage we had found refuge seemed to be affected by the spirit of the day. We had asked him about the wrecks which he had seen on that wild shore and of the long voyages which he had made. But after a few answers, which only excited our curiosity the more, his mind turned to what was happening on the land.

"They're having a great stir up to the city," he began each time, "and it's all about the liquor. The Prohibition fellows are mad. To my mind there isn't half the trouble comes from drinking that folks claim there is."

"But you must have seen much harm caused by it at sea," I suggested.

"Yes, I did see something of that sort when we were going up the Pacific coast in '53. We had quite a meeting on board. But still I think the folks up in town are making too big a fuss."

My friend was about to make some inquiries of the old fisherman, but before he could do so he got up from the lounge where he had been sitting as a sharp blast of wind rattled the windows. He looked away towards the city, though he could not see a mile through the rain and mist. And then a sudden look of anxiety swept over his face.

"That vessel must be in trouble," he said.

We looked at a schooner which was coming straight for the harbor.

"She must have had a rough night," I said, "her sails are all reefed."

"Yes, and there's a flag flying in her rigging. She wants a pilot; no, it's worse than that; her flag's Union down; somebody's dead aboard."

And away to the door the old man hurried with his spy glass.

"Sure enough," he said, "she must have been on a rock. Perhaps two or three of the crew have been lost; I must go right off to her."

"But there are two dories putting off from the point," my friend suggested. "They will carry help enough for the schooner."

"But I can't sit here when folks are in trouble," declared the old man. "You're not rigged for such a storm. You stay right here, and I'll row off to the vessel. I'll be back as soon as I can."

As he hurried out we saw that there was only one man on the schooner's deck. It must, indeed, have been a sad accident which had occurred. We felt still more certain of this when the fisherman came back with drooping head.

"Only the cook left on her," he said as he came panting into the kitchen.

"What, are all the rest gone?" we asked.

"Well, there was only the captain and cook started out on her," he answered. "Pretty light-handed, with the clouds looking as they did yesterday afternoon. But when they were reefing the mainsail last night the craft gave a lurch, and the captain went overboard.

"Pretty hard for his wife and children. She was Mary Brewster. I used to go to school with her when I was a boy. She had such pretty red cheeks then. But this will take the color all out of them and make her look ten years older.

"And the captain expected to make this a paying trip, too, settling up what he owed on his house down East and making things as comfortable as a man could."

"It will be a day they will long remember," I said.

"Yes, in more ways than one," spoke the old man as he slowly rubbed his hands together.

"This is Thanksgiving. He'd have been home with Mary and the children if he hadn't put out so light-handed. The vessel run away out of her course to get in here.

"And, I may as well own it, since the cook was so excited that he let the truth all out; the captain had been drinking or he wouldn't have sailed that way, nor got overboard. The cook tried to reason with him. But he wouldn't hear to a word. He'd got most of his money smuggling liquor along the shore."

"His wife will be sad, indeed," said my friend, "and we shall be glad to send her a little money. We shall pray for her, too."

"I know it, I know it," answered the man quickly, as he turned toward us his face, down which the great tears were rolling. "Any little thing will do poor Mary's heart good.

"And I guess you've been praying for me, too. I knew you were temperance men by the cut of your jibs. But I was bound I wouldn't let you know it. I wanted to tease you by telling what I thought of the temperance work up in the town. 'Twas a mean thing to do and to say, though I've never touched liquor, except for medicine, that it didn't do no harm. I've had lessons enough to the contrary. The Lord has always been showing them to me. But this Thanksgiving chunk of proof—the captain getting lost that way—and poor Mary having such a blow, and the children crying around her—why, sirs, it's more than I can stand. I'm temperance out and out from this time on. Oh, I don't believe the temperance folks in town have made half stir enough, with drink doing such mean, wicked things as this!"

His face showed the determination with which he has ever since worked for every good and righteous cause.

Andover, Mass.

GLORY MCWHORTER said, "There's such lots of good times, and I ain't never in 'em." The paraphrase of this expression that white-ribboners have learned is this, "To think that there are such lots of good times present and to come, and I am one who helps to make 'em."—F. E. W.

The Union Signal AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPEARNCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, MARY ALLEN WEST } Editors-in-Chief.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, Contributing Editor.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, Managing Editor.
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, Office Editor.

Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Continue in prayer and watch in the same with thanksgiving. —Col. 4: 2.

"IN EVERYTHING GIVE THANKS."

The circling year has brought us again to the close of the harvest—to the end of summer and of the autumnal fruit-gathering. The season calls for thanksgiving to the Giver of all good for the blessings, national and individual, with which He has crowned the year. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord for His goodness and forget not all His benefits. "Praise is comely and praise is pleasant."

Besides the causes for thanksgiving which are usual in this heaven favored land, plentiful harvests and peace with foreign nations, we have this year two special reasons for gratitude. Even those who are most disappointed by the result, ought to be grateful that the election was conducted without serious disturbance in any quarter. The other special cause for national thanksgiving to God, referred to by the President in his proclamation, is that "He has stayed the pestilence at our doors." Thank God that the quarantine against the cholera was effectual, and that we have been providentially taught how to prevent the incoming of that dreaded scourge in future years.

But thanksgiving for national blessings depends upon the spirit of gratitude in individual hearts. Those who lack this spirit or imagine that personally they have nothing to be thankful for, do not take much interest in the national festival; and so, as a rule, our Thanksgiving day congregations are made up of those who cherish a thankful spirit under all circumstances, and believe that God is "Good, when He gives—supremely good,

Nor less when He denies;
E'en crosses from His sovereign hand
Are blessings in disguise."

The command: "In everything give thanks," implies that to devout souls occasions for thanksgiving are never wanting; that in the hardest lot they can find some consolations and compensations, spiritual or other, for which to be grateful. To the majority the year has been one of health and prosperity; but there are others whose hearts are sore from recent bereavements, or who are discouraged by reason of sickness or reverses in business, or by their protracted and hopeless struggle against poverty. Yet, even they have something—more perhaps than they have ever thought of—to be thankful for. Most of them have the necessaries of life, food, raiment, homes, friends. One of the compensations of Providence to those who have known want, and have had a severe struggle to secure the means of subsistence, is that they derive greater satisfaction from what they have. Their experience of deprivation causes them to appreciate the blessing of having their real wants supplied.

If, then, we have the common blessings of life, let us be thankful for them, for their own sake, and because they are evidence that God has not forgotten or forsaken us. "Cast all your care upon Him, for He careth for you." He takes thought for us continually for our good, and keeps us whether we wake or sleep. We have come safely through another year. Granted that it may have been a year of hardship and adversity to some; it may for that very reason have been more full of spiritual helps and deliverances.

Except the Lord had been on our side we had utterly perished. He has preserved and cared for us. He has given us songs in the night, streams in the desert, beauty for ashes. It is a mercy to be thankful for that, though smitten by His rod, we can yet trust Him, knowing that all things—losses, pains, afflictions, bereavements—work together for good to them that love God. And so, in everything and for everything that is sanctified to our good in bringing us nearer to God and teaching us that supreme and sweetest lesson of His grace—perfect acquiescence in His will as always best for us—we should give thanks.

Thanks, and what besides? "What shall we render unto the Lord for all his benefits?" How shall we express our gratitude to Him? Certainly not merely by pouring words of praise into His ear.

"He praiseth best who loveth best
All things both great and small,
For the dear God who loveth us
Hath made and loveth all."

He hath said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." The praise most acceptable to Him is the incense of good works, sharing our spiritual as well as our temporal blessings with those who are destitute; making lives that are bare and stripped of all delight, a little brighter by our sympathy. This is the best Thanksgiving, that our ears be open to every cry of human want, and that according to our ability we strive to relieve that want.

THE NEWEST JAPAN.

Eight hundred miles travel north from Tokio, by alternating railway and steamer, brings one to Sapporo, capital of the island of Hakkoido. Twenty five years ago this great island was in possession of the Ainos (aborigines of Japan) except a few fishing stations along the coast. About that time the Ainos were conquered and driven into the interior. Soon after Sapporo was founded and made the seat of government. The desire for western civilization was then at full tide and Count Kuroda, now in the imperial cabinet, was foremost in leading the nation in this direction. He had persuaded the government to send a number of Japanese students to America to be educated as leaders of their people in western civilization.

They returned, but to his disappointment the men had learned much bad along with the good and so were unfitted to fill the positions for which he designed them. Straightway he concluded that a wilderness was a safer place to educate young men than a foreign city, and decided to establish a government agricultural college at Sapporo, where at that time bears were so plenty that a magnificent specimen now adorning the college museum was killed within seven miles of the college campus. He commissioned Count Mori, then Japanese minister at Washington, to select the best man in America to start the work in Hakkoido. President Clark, of Amherst Agricultural College, was selected and his own college gave him leave of absence for one year to fulfill this mission. Taught by sad experience Count Kuroda had learned the necessity of moral teaching, and among the stipulated duties of President Clark was the teaching of morality.

Meanwhile temporary buildings were erected and students were to be provided by sending to Sapporo a picked class of young men from the government school of Tokio. Another young man, Mr. J. K. Ito, also from the Tokio schools, prompted by a boy's love of adventure, had preceded them, and during the few months before their coming had an experience which has seemingly changed the whole history of this island.

By some means there had come into his hands an English Bible. His knowledge of the language was very slight, but he was stumblingly trying to spell it out, when help came to him from an unexpected quarter. In the girls' school, established by government, was a young lady teacher, Miss Dennis, an earnest Christian. She became interested in young Ito and invited him to join a Bible class held at her house every Sunday. He did so, and found help in learning the language, but no spiritual light came to him till after she had gone away. But he promised her to continue reading the Bible, and did so. The Holy Spirit seemed to take charge of him thus left to himself and lead him into the truth. His Bible became a new book, full of light as he says; in this light he saw his Saviour, accepted Him, and longed to be baptized as He commanded, but there was nobody to baptize him, no minister, no Christian in all Sapporo. Soon after a minister passed through the town, whom young Ito besought to baptize him. Having examined him and become convinced of his fitness, the minister was ready to administer the rite, but where to do it was the problem. There was no church, and all refused to allow it to be done in their homes lest it should anger their gods. "Baptize me in the street," begged young Ito, but when an attempt to do so was made, a mob collected and prevented the ceremony. That very day President Clark arrived in Sapporo, and "My troubles were over," says Mr. Ito. Mr. Clark, not being a minister, could not baptize him, but he could give him just the help he needed, so that when a few months later a minister visited the college and baptized Mr. Ito, he was prepared to take the solemn vows more understandingly.

The class had now come up from Tokio, and Mr. Ito joined it. It numbered fourteen; how much the others had known of Christianity, we cannot say, but soon the leaven of President Clark's earnest Christianity and Ito's intense love for his new-found Saviour made itself felt throughout the institution. As a member of the class told us the story in his broken English, it seemed like living apostolic days over again.

A few months after the opening of the school a minister of the English church visited the place, and Mr. Ito was baptized. He was ever earnest in season and out of season, telling his class-mates of Jesus; the Bible lessons continued, the leaven worked so thoroughly that before the expiration of Mr. Clark's eight months' stay those fourteen boys bound themselves together by a compact called "Covenant of the Believers in Jesus," a remarkable document. From that covenant grew the Independent Church of Sapporo, which to-day is the strongest power for good on that great island. It had its tribulations, so peculiar as to be actually laughable, now they are safely over. As one by one those boys accepted the Saviour, their desire for baptism was as strong as Mr. Ito's had been, and whenever a minister came, they were baptized. They knew nothing of sect or creeds outside of what they learned in the Bible, and they thought it made no difference who performed the sacred rite, if only he were properly commissioned to do so. So it came about that eight of them were baptized by a Methodist minister and six by an Episcopalian. Now occurred the very reductio ad absurdum of sectarianism. The ministers came back and actually separated those fourteen boys into two churches, and by some sort of legerdemain, had two houses of worship erected, ordering the six to attend the one, and the eight the other. "But we had always been together and we always meant to stay together. We had our own meetings, prayer and Bible meetings, and sometimes they were very long, for we all wanted to pray—we did not know how to have meetings separately," they said.

The boys bore it for awhile, thinking it must be some part of Christianity which they could not understand, but soon their common sense and Christian brotherliness got the better of their reverence, and they sent word to their would be pastors, "We do not know anything about your different churches; we do know Christ, and are one in Him; we will not be divided any more." This brought down an ecclesiastical avalanche upon their devoted heads. The pastors came over, first one then the other, and talked learnedly about the "historic church," and "wide-awake church," but nothing moved our doughty knights. "We are one in Christ, we will not be divided; we will have our own church, founded on the Bible," and they did.

This was about Christmas time, and the New Year came on Sunday. "We had a blessed meeting," said they, "and were very happy in the Lord. But the next day came a demand from the Methodist society that if we were not a Methodist church we must pay back the $700 advanced for the building. This made us very sad, for we were only college boys and had no money. But that very night came a letter from President Clark, in America containing one hundred dollars to help us with our church."

Exchange was high, the hundred dollar draft brought one hundred and eighty yen, which they sent at once as the first installment of their payment to the Methodist. Thus encouraged they set manfully at work to pay the balance, and by the time their four years college course was ended, had wiped out the entire debt, and thus became owners of the little church.

They were freed from the Episcopal yoke in a much easier way—for them. The clergyman who baptized the six was recalled to England, tried and convicted on charge of heresy and word sent to Sapporo that the names of all those whom he had baptized were stricken off the roll of the church. The little building remained the property of the Episcopalians, who have a church organization there now.

We have carefully traced the history of these fourteen men and find only one who failed to keep to his first love. Two are dead, the rest are filling important positions in the Empire and are everywhere powers for good.

After graduation they were somewhat scattered, but those remaining in Sapporo, together with members of the lower classes converted through their influence, have kept the fire burning brightly upon the altar of that church. They have always sustained their Sabbath services, including Sabbath school and their weekly prayer meetings, conducting the services themselves, except when they were able to secure the aid of some ordained minister to baptize the converts and administer the sacrament.

Besides the home church they sustained services in various parts of the town, five such out-stations being regularly maintained for several years. Among these young men Mr. Oshima and Mr. Ito developed especial preaching gifts, and after long deliberation and prayer it was decided that Mr. Oshima should be more thoroughly prepared for the ministry. He was ordained at Tokio by a united council of Congregational and Presbyterian ministers, and became the regular pastor of the Sapporo Independent church of Jesus, the only one it has ever had.

All prisoners in Japan whose sentences are twelve years or over are sent to the Hakkoido, there being on this island four prisons containing six thousand such prison ers. By the way the whole prison system of Japan seems much more enlightened and Christian than ours in America, in that it is reformatory as well as penal. Several prison officials attended the meetings conducted by the Independent church at Sapporo and were deeply impressed with the truth of the gospel, some of them being undoubt edly converted. This was in the very beginning of the prison system here and these men had much influence in framing its policy. As soon as the prisons were opened gospel services were held there by those sent out by the Sapporo church, and so excellent was the influence exerted that the wardens requested the imperial government to allow them to appoint a teacher of morality in each prison. The request was granted, and to-day in each of those prisons there is by Imperial appointment a most devoted Christian evangelist, preaching Christ as the only Saviour from sin and the gospel as the only basis of morality. Three of these evangelists are from the Doshisha and one from the Presbyterian school. The success of their work among their incarcerated countrymen is wonderful; hardened criminals yielding to Christ and living such changed lives that the most prejudiced are forced to acknowledge that they are transformed by a greater than earthly power.

The history of the Hakkoido Temperance Society has much in common with the history of the Sapporo church, and is as manifestly the work of God. It was told of his own accord, by Mr. Iwai, the real starter of the work. He had been a drinker of sake, and when he was converted and united with the Sapporo church, which itself has always been a temperance organization, he continued drinking secretly although ostensibly giving it up. The effect on his spiritual life can easily be imagined; he had no joy in his Lord, and the drink habit grew upon him till he felt it was becoming his master. He struggled against it, yet was continually conquered by it, till he was in despair. Just now there came to the church as its evangelist, Mr. Takenouchi, a graduate of the Doshisha, who had heard Mrs. Leavitt lecture in Kobi, and had brought with him the printed report of her lectures there. To him Mr. Iwai opened his heart, telling of his vain struggles with the drink habit. Mr. Takenouchi responded that he had just heard an American lady tell of a society in America which he thought would help him to conquer the drink, and gave him the lecture to read. Hope came to him as he read of the pledge taken, trusting God for strength to keep it, and on his knees he promised the Lord never to touch sake again. Divine strength to keep the pledge was given, and to this day it has never been broken.

At once his heart went out for others in such bonds as he had been. He consulted with several members of the church about forming a temperance society. All said, "If Mr. Ito will take hold of it, it will be a success." When appealed to, Mr. Ito entered into the work with all his heart, as his manner is. Whatever he does he does "heartily as unto the Lord;" seeing him in his church and Sunday-school you would be sure that his only work was that of an evangelist; should you hear him speak on temperance, you would think that the spirit of John B. Gough inspired him; should you be so happy as to have him interpret for you, you would be sure his life had been devoted to the work of a professional interpreter; while through everything he does shines out the ruling motive of his life-service to the dear Jesus, in whose name he was baptized through such difficulties ten years before. His official position also fitted him to be a leader in this work. He is Imperial Commissioner of Fisheries, the most important office on the island, as the fisheries are the principal industry. He is just as enthusiastic in his business as in his philanthropies, never neglecting the one for the other. He has spent a year in America, visiting all our fishing stations on the Atlantic and the Pacific coast, and is infusing American life and American methods into the fisheries of the Hakkoido.

Through house to house work, principally by Mr. Iwai and Mr. Takenouchi, sixty persons were persuaded to form the temperance society. Mr. Ito was elected president and Mr. Iwai, vice-president, which offices they still hold. This was in November, 1887. From this small beginning as a Sapporo organization, it has extended its work over most of the island till now it includes fourteen branches, with a total membership of 1,500. This rapid growth of branches is largely due to the fact that Mr. Ito's official work takes him to all parts of the Hakkoido's extended sea coast, a circuit of one thousand five hundred miles, and wherever he goes he works for temperance.

Feeling the need of reaching all classes with temperance teaching, this society welcomes to membership Christian, Buddhist, Shintoist alike, though the predominating influence always has been Christian. Experience has demonstrated the wisdom of this course—at least in this instance—for many have been led to Christianity through this association, as they have learned the necessity of help outside of and beyond that of man to keep their pledge. It might not be a safe plan with leaders not so thoroughly imbued with the spirit of Christ as are those of Sapporo.

The stuff they are made of is shown by the fact that with great resolution the society dismissed at one time about five hundred members who had broken their pledge. In the enthusiasm of rapid increase laxity had crept in, but from the time of this heroic action, the regulations have been strictly carried out, and to day the actual membership is as large as before the pruning, while its moral strength is much greater.

Next to its home work and work in the prisons, work among the Ainos holds the warmest place in the heart of the Sapporo Temperance Society. Mr. and Mrs. Batchelor, missionaries of the Church of England, devote their whole time to work among these aborigines; the temperance society joins in their support for the sake of having them work for temperance among these people who need it so much. Mr. Ito is intensely interested in this people, whom, he says, Japan has wronged and oppressed, and is striving hard to undo the wrong by giving to them the gospel, and by securing laws by the Imperial government forbidding the sale of liquor to Ainos.

HOW IT IS TAKEN.

Doubtless much must be forgiven Republican editors just at this time when their party has been so emphatically repudiated by the American people. But even when we bear this in mind, we cannot excuse the Republican press for an editorial entitled "Stealthy and Malicious Prohibitionist Campaign," which is so venomous, so flagrantly mendacious, that it suggests an inquiry whether any one knows of an institution for the treatment of such cases. It may be only a hysterical attack, but we fear it is chronic and more serious.

An analysis of this article discloses at least seven impudent falsehoods pertaining to matters of fact, and several slanderous imputations besides:

1. "They have held no public meetings." It is notorious that the Prohibitionists have held meetings, probably three to one of either of the old parties, indeed many lecturers have been steadily in the field for years, speaking constantly.

2. "They have not endeavored to make converts in the open manner customary to respectable parties." Public meetings, newspapers, leaflets, debates, discussions, all open and above board, have been employed for months and indeed for years. We have told the truth to all who were willing to listen in all the ways common to intelligent citizens.

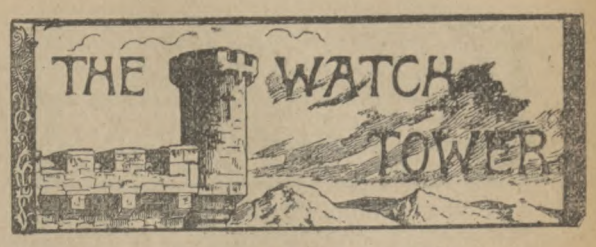
3. "Their campaign has been carried on through the privacy of the postoffice." The Prohibition party has set an example of publicity not only to existing parties, but has outdone any party ever organized in this country in the open and public manner of its work. The headquarters of the party have been open in New York City for years, and the efforts to enlighten the blind and arouse the indifferent have been unremitting. This party alone publishes the names of those who contribute to its funds, and accounts for every dollar contributed.

4. "This is the Prohibition campaign in a nutshell—secret slander." This statement refers to a leaflet issued by the party press stating some abundantly proved facts concerning Mr. Harrison's example. It was not secret, for it was scattered everywhere; it was not slanderous, but abundantly proved. It was entirely germane to the issue.

5. "The party has had nothing to say about the tariff." So far from this being true, the ablest discussion of the tariff, the currency and other issues have been in the Prohibition papers. Every effort has been made to secure joint discussions with very little success. We recall one successful effort in Wisconsin where Ex-Governor St. John and his friends met representatives of the other parties and discussed the issues before the people. Prohibition speakers all over the land have had out a standing offer to meet the advocates of other parties before the people.

6. "Their eyes are fixed on their single purpose—the breaking up of the Republican party." This assertion has been made a great many times and has this small modicum of truth in it, viz., in so far as the Republican is a license party, it is the support and buttress of the liquor traffic, and deserves only destruction. All the same the Democratic party deserves the same fate.

7. "These are the aims of the 'drys,' and in seeking to realize them they have forgotten decency and honesty, and have become simply an organization of calumny and backbiting. Nothing like them was ever known before in American politics." The "aims" referred to are the possession of offices. The reader is asked to believe that a body of men with no honest principle have set out to secure office by organizing a party upon an odious issue, and part company with all "decency and honesty" in their methods of accomplishing their purpose. We are familiar with men who seek office, but such a method of seeking is surely unique. Truly, "nothing like them was ever known in American politics." The only approach in American politics was the Abolition party, but the Prohibitionists far outstrip the Abolitionists in the steadiness of their methods, in the frank exposure of financial resources, in their perseverance in maintaining a party and refusing all trades and fusions. For dignity of bearing, for steady and serene perseverance in open and manly work, "nothing like it has been known in American politics." We are puzzled. If it is true that the Prohibitionists make no show in this campaign, what has so deeply moved this writer?



God's way may not be your way, dear,
But He knows best;
Hold fast His hand, nor ever fear,
Though all life's paths grow dark and drear;
The end is rest.

The world may all your plans defeat,
Yet God knows best;
Life's bitterest draughts can He make sweet,
From sad despair bring joy complete,
And make you blest.

***

The Protestant Episcopal diocese of Western Michigan in its convention last summer at Niles abolished the constitutional sex qualifications for wardens and vestrymen. The ayes and nays were called, and every delegate, lay and clerical, voted aye.

***

He is a good man who gathers up the broken remnants of his fellow-men who have fallen over a precipice, but he is a man both good and wise who climbs to its edge and places there a strong wall which shall prevent any more of his fellow-men from tumbling over. This figure illustrates the difference between the ancient and the modern temperance movement.

***

A little girl has her first doll, her eldest, her most dilapidated, perhaps made out of rags and loved because her mother put it together. Then she has the doll she made for herself and fashioned with her own assiduous fingers and loved and cherished best of all. Then she has given her a new-fangled, ingenious, remarkable doll, with a spring inside, which, if you push between the shoulders, a voice proceeds to make itself attended to, and this doll after a little is cast aside because the spring is broken. Then she has a beautiful new doll from Paris, with great big eyes that open and shut, joints as limber as any live creatures, beautiful gowns and everything to match, and this bright image she takes to her arms, but finds them large enough still to hold on to the one her mother gave her and the one she made herself. Herein is set forth the true history of dolls as to its essence, no matter how varie gated the non-essential details may be.

***

There are some deeds taken note of only by Him who marks the sparrow as it falls and traces the courses of the stars, done by the stealthy right hand that lets not the left hand read its doings, that transcend those heroic actions which win the praise and plaudits of multitudes. The principal in this particular bit of life-acting was a girl, shabbily dressed, hurrying home after her hard day's work. She looked tired and self-absorbed. A blind man was sitting by the wayside, silently offering his wares to the heedless crowds. She passed him as did the rest. When half a block beyond where he sat she fumbled in her pocket, turned and walked back. Looking down into his face she waited a moment, but the blind eyes gave no sign. "Are you blind?" "Yes, ma'am." "Well, take this for the dear Lord's sake." It was a silver dollar. Then she retraced her steps, thinking no one had seen. It was a cheerless night, but the very air seemed balmier for a little. Ah, the blessedness, for her, of the Master's "Inasmuch!"

***

This year has been signally marked by the large number of beloved white-ribbon mothers who have "crossed the bar." Near the close of the year, November 6, in a quiet western village, Lakenan, Mo., there passed from great life to greater one who has always loved our cause and worn our modest emblem—Mrs. Phileta Pierson Phillips, mother of the ever-lamented Rose Phillips, so long corresponding secretary of Missouri, and of Dr. Bessie V. Cushman, whose frequent writings have truly enriched the columns of The Union Signal. Mrs. Phillips was born in North Killingworth, Conn., September 10, 1810. So well poised were her eighty-two years that her garment was not worn out nor frayed at the edge anywhere. She had simply outgrown it. Calmness and trust marked her departure as it had her life long tenure, and the route to glory lay by the sunlit peak of life rather than by the valley of the shadow of death. There was no appearance of weakness or sinking; it was just a going out into a larger sphere. She had been a living, growing, fruit-bearing "member of the church" for seventy years, as well as an early W. C. T. U. Crusader and a member of the first union organized in Missouri. Such mothers are a priceless legacy.

On Duty.

RHODE ISLAND.

THE YEARLY RECKONING.

"Count the mercies! count the mercies!
Number all the gifts of love;
Keep a faithful daily record
Of the mercies from above."

Once more our state workers have met to plan for the coming days. Westerly was the entertaining union, and her generous hospitality helped toward making the convention one of the most profitable ever held.

Immediately preceding the three days' sessions a school of methods was held under the auspices of the department of scientific temperance instruction. The topic, "Why should the enforcement of our temperance education law now be the leading line of a temperance work, and what steps must be taken to secure such enforcement?" was led by our National superintendent, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt. Mrs. A. W. Chase, state superintendent, made a plea for its enforcement, and it was voted that measures should be taken by those present to make the law effective in schools under their jurisdiction. Among the speakers were Mr. Stockwell, commissioner of schools in Rhode Island, and Prof. W. R. Whittle. In the evening Mrs. Mary H. Hunt delivered the address. Many W. C. T. U. delegates were present, while teachers, trustees and school committees were there from all over Washington county.

Then came the carefully prepared program of the convention, which was carried out almost to the letter. Cordial words of welcome, as cordially responded to, were followed by the roll-call, and it was found that the number of delegates and visitors present was larger than ever before.

As our corresponding secretary read the reports so faithfully gathered from all the unions they showed progress along many lines, and a brief extract from her summary will give a clear idea of the present status of our work:

"This year has been an eventful one in our history on many accounts. The indifference of the public to our work and the discouragements among the workers has been rarely, if ever, equaled. The rum traffic has triumphed, and in spite of our efforts, vaunts itself more boldly than ever. But all this has not had the effect to weaken our faith nor to shake our confidence in an ultimate victory. We never had so many unions holding outdoor meetings, and at these the masses have heard the gospel preached. We rejoice that so many meetings have been held for the children, and feel that this is one of our best lines of work. Public meetings have been held in many places with good success. We rejoice especially in the earnest practical teaching that Mrs. E. A. Gleason gave in three different visits to the state. The meetings addressed by our state president were full of interest, and the kind words spoken of her services would fill a book.

"County conventions have been held in four counties this year. The effect of these has been blessed in increasing the interest among the public, giving new inspiration to the workers, increasing the membership, and giving a clearer knowledge of the work.

"The passage of the anti-tobacco law has added new interest to the law in regard to scientific temperance instruction, and we hope will be helpful in securing better temperance instruction in the schools." A little idea of the personal work of Miss Nichols may be gathered from the fact that during the year she has given one hundred addresses and written over two thousand letters and postals, and this tells nothing of the helpful words and suggestions that she constantly lets fall.

In our president's annual message, looking forward to the time when our country shall be free from the drink curse, she drew a picture of peace and plenty which should encourage every worker, and in view of this ultimate triumph of right, she urged the duty of the present hour.

The superintendents presented the work of their departments briefly, but forcefully. A practical talk on physical culture by Mrs. Dr. Matthews, was received with so much favor that the convention voted to have it printed in full. I will just give a thought each from two of our speakers:

The question is not so much what will the nation or church do, but what will you and I do.—Mrs. J. K. Barney.

This should be the prayer of every soul: "Let me help my brothers and my sisters, I ask no more than that."—Mrs. M. A. Livermore.

The reëlection of state officers was practically unanimous. Some of the vice presidents and superintendents were obliged to resign because of ill health, so it became necessary to fill the vacancies. Strong resolutions were passed on many of the leading issues.

Many of the unions deserve special notice. Westerly is the banner union along many lines. It sustains regular weekly meetings and special meetings on Sunday, has a Y. union, an L. T. L., a Girls' Club, and last, but not least, has the means of inaugurating a People's Mission. The union engaged Colonel Hadley, of the St. Bartholomew mission, New York, to come for a few days, and his work was so blessed that funds have been raised, a hall rented, and Brother Harry Keddle, once a prize-fighter, but now an earnest, Christian worker, has come to reside among them and work for the many who never go inside a church.

Miss Thurston writes from Newport: "The power of the Holy Spirit has wonderfully and blessedly rested upon the Y. W. C. T. U. of Newport, and upon their work in a two weeks' series of gospel services at their mission, the Beacon, Long Wharf, Mrs. H. D. Walker, of Providence, as evangelist. Mrs. Walker was engaged to speak at the fifth annual meeting, and to remain a week for gospel services at the Beacon, which were so well attended, and resulted in the salvation of so many souls that they were continued two weeks instead of one. Many attended who never go to church. Among them were a number of soldiers from Fort Adams, some of whom were converted during the meetings. So great was the interest among them that permission was obtained to hold a service at the fort."

A grand prohibition rally was held at Providence, addressed by Gov. J. P. St. John. "Music Hall was thronged with what looked like the cream of the great city," and a hearty enthusiasm prevailed.

The remaining debt on the Outlook was canceled at convention, and so "our paper" starts out on the new year with brighter prospects than ever before, and an able management that makes it a power for good in our work. If all our workers realized the importance of sustaining and circulating our temperance publications as they should, it would give an impulse to the work that could not be estimated.

A lesson comes to us from the Richmond and Hopkinton union proving again that no work done for the Master is ever wrought in vain. A year ago the union numbered twenty members and was so feeble that its continuance seemed almost hopeless. An earnest member started out on Crusade day, and visited one after another, trying her very best to get at least one new member, but without success, and she returned discouraged. Not long after this sister was called home. Within a week of her death, ten new members were received. Now the union numbers sixty, and took home from the convention the prize banner, given to the union gaining the largest per cent of membership. So she being dead, yet speaketh in the work that has been wrought.

Many others in our ranks during the year that is past have heard the call to come up higher. We shall miss their earnest words and deeds, but we know that "although God buries his workman, His work will still go on."

MIRIAM EARLE,
State Reporter, Valley Falls.

CALIFORNIA.

ONE MORE YEAR'S WORK FOR JESUS.

San Jose gave a delightful welcome to the W. C. T. U. convention, through Mrs. L. E. Bailey, of our own sisterhood; Rev. H. Melville Tewney, for the clergy; Mayor Shilling, for the city; Mrs. Henry French, for the temperance people; Miss Cornelia Walker, for the Normal school, and Superintendent F. P. Russell in behalf of the Board of Education. Mrs. S. C. Sanford ably responded.

The reports of officers showed a goodly increase in membership and a vast deal of temperance work accomplished. Mrs. Emily Hoppin reported over $4,000 used in state work and the moneys reported by county presidents for local work probably will amount to ten times that sum. Major E. T. Scott, the talented lecturer, made a speech, proving that our government should be more anxious to protect the boys than iron and wool. Miss M. E. Winslow, first editor of Our Union, now THE UNION SIGNAL, and the one who suggested the white ribbon as the badge of the National W. C. T. U., was greeted warmly.

Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens, National organizer, being detained by serious illness, her report of foreign work was given by Mrs. M. G. C. Edholm. Thousands of pages of literature have been distributed, and always in her speeches the claims of the foreigners have been insisted upon, especially the plan of having Demorest medal contests among their children. Mrs. Henrietta Skelton has made a specialty of German work with good results. Miss Winnie Morris showed the young woman's work as prosperous, though having many obstacles to surmount. Mrs. S. J. Churchill gave her plans for having the W. C. T. U. represented at the Columbian Exposition, and Californians will not be behind in temperance trophies.

Mrs. Dr. Mallory in "Campaign Notes," while she had to record defeat of the prohibition amendment in Placer county, yet demonstrated the great good accomplished by the agitation.

One of the best features of the convention was the president's address, by Mrs. B. Sturtevant-Peet. Every phase of W. C. T. U. work was ably discussed, especially dwelling on woman suffrage by which prohibition will be attained and enforced. Mrs. Peet paid a glowing tribute of praise to Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt. With tender words Mrs. Skelton presented our president with a beautiful basket of flowers from her comrades.

Mrs. Annie K. Bidwell was received with cheers, and read a most able paper, "Woman's Sphere, What is it?" She showed that God has honored women as prophets and preachers and in many stations. Mrs. Jennie Phelps Purvis, for the convention, presented Mrs. Bidwell with a bouquet of white roses. Inscribed upon a card were the words, "To the 'First Lady of the Land'—if women could vote—from the W. C. T. U. wing of the Prohibition army." Mrs. L. E. Bailey rendered most beautifully "The lips that touch liquor shall never touch mine."

Every eye was riveted in closest attention on Mrs. E. T. Scott, one of the best lecturers in the field. Her address, "The Hour and Our Opportunities," was full of splendid points, showing how the W. C. T. U. has gone to all classes through their forty departments. Our government is too busy attending to other matters to deliver our children from the saloon. Mrs. D. S. Dickson presented Mrs. Scott with a beautiful bouquet of yellow and white roses from the suffragists of the convention.

Mrs. Ada Van Pelt announced the winners of the McDonald prizes of $200 for signatures to the million voters' pledge. The election of officers was a reëlection. Mrs. Sturtevant-Peet, president; Mrs. H. E. Brown, recording secretary; Mrs. D. J. Spencer, corresponding secretary; treasurer, Mrs. Emily Hoppin; auditor, Mrs. L. M. Carver. All were presented to the convention and made bright speeches. Mrs. S. J. Churchill was made first vice-president, and Mrs. S. C. Sanford, second vice-president. Mrs. S. C. Borland gave a good paper on duties of superintendents. Mrs. Rose French, on relation to work, and Mrs. D. J. Spencer, on requisite characteristics.

Mrs. Grier, from Kansas, told how well the women enforced prohibition there because they could vote. Mrs. Carver led a tender memorial service to those who have fallen asleep the past year. A most tender resolution of sympathy was sent to Miss Willard on the loss of her mother.

Rev. Isaac Crook, president of the University of the Pacific, made a fine speech and said, "We are fighting at our university, not only wine, but tobacco." The convention accepted an invitation to visit this university which takes the Bible as one of its principal text-books. Mrs. Leavitt and Mrs. Bidwell pleaded with the youth there to avoid liquor and tobacco.

Professor Crawhurst, the veteran Prohibitionist, brought greetings to the convention.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt made the principal address of the convention on the "Ravages of Drink in all Nations." She eloquently showed that the United States is the most moral and religious nation in the world. She pleaded with all to vote and work for General Bidwell and the Prohibition party.

Mrs. Ada Van Pelt was spokesman of the party which visited the state normal school. Miss Ollie Brown made a good plea for a university for her race in Mississippi. The superintendent of Indian work has aided Indian schools and took a case of violation of law in selling liquor to Indians to the United States court, and the decision was affirmed that liquor must not be sold these wards of the government. The Pacific Ensign was reported to be in good condition. The expense for the year has been about $4,000. Several shares of stock were subscribed for.

Miss S. M. Severance presented a witty paper, "Adam and Eve" proving Eve's right to equality, and in her many appeals for suffrage made all feel its great importance. One of the finest papers of the entire convention was that on "Cause and Effect" by Dr. Carrie F. Young, who as a physician showed the effects of alcohol, opium and tobacco. She is one of the veterans of the temperance army and her lectures for many years in reform are bringing good results. Mrs. Ruth Armstrong, National superintendent of heredity, showed by the "logic of facts" how children are cursed from infancy by liquor and tobacco used by their parents.

Y evening was a grand success and Miss Winnie Morris, superintendent of young woman's work, may well be proud of these lovely young "Christian Endeavorers" she is leading in the temperance warfare.

Mrs. Henrietta Skelton and Mrs. Emma Pow Smith, state organizers, have done an immense amount of work and several new counties have been added to the W. C. T. U. roll.

Thanks were tendered Mr. Crittenton for his gift of $5,000 to Miss Willard for establishing Florence Crittenton Missions under W. C. T. U. auspices, and to Mrs. S. T. Gage for two hundred copies of her book on "Reducing Accumulations of Fat," to be sold for the benefit of social purity department. The resolutions were strong and covered the usual lines. And with songs of praise to the All-Father for His blessing on the white ribbon hosts, the thirteenth annual convention adjourned to meet at Stockton, 1893.

MRS. M. G. C. EDHOLM,
State Reporter, Oakland.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

IN STATE CONVENTION.

The fourth annual session of the South Dakota W. C. T. U. opened most auspiciously, in the Baptist church, Brookings, September 9. Over one hundred delegates wearing the white ribbon were the guests of the hospitable citizens of Brookings. The church was beautifully decorated with potted plants and cut flowers, and with the banners of the local unions and the state L. T. L. Conspicuous among these hung the banner presented to the state two years ago by the retiring president, Mrs. Barker, to be given each year to the district making the greatest increase in membership. It was borne away this year by the third district, the city of Huron having a union of eighty-one members.

Friday evening Mrs. Eva Wright welcomed the convention in the name of the Brookings union; Rev. Mr. Brasted gave a most cordial welcome on behalf of the churches, and President McLouth in the name of the college, extended to the convention a most cordial invitation to hold a session in the college chapel. Mrs. Thompson, of Yankton, in her response said they were glad to meet in a city whose mayor had courage to stand in an audience and welcome the W. C. T. U.

The first business session was held Saturday morning. The roll-call showed that all the state officers and four district presidents were in attendance. The corresponding secretary's report showed a membership of 1,282 and the treasurer's report more than $1,000 raised during the year. Five new Y. W. C. T. U.'s have been organized in the state during the year. Yankton furnished the union which has contributed the greatest number of pages of literature. The state evangelist recommended that the day before the meeting of the legislature be observed as a day of general prayer. This was adopted by the convention. The matter of the W. C. T. U. headquarters at Madison received due attention and a plan for a public building was adopted.

A telegram from Mrs. Barker conveyed the message found in Thess. 2: 16, 17. It was an occasion of rejoicing when Mrs. Rounds, Illinois' president, was introduced, bringing greetings from 16,000 white ribboners. Her inspiring address in the opera house Monday evening, on "Temperance and Prohibition," as well as her pulpit talk on Sunday morning was listened to with earnestness.

The president's address and Mrs. Myers' review of the work in the Dakotas will be published entire in the state minutes. Resubmission received its share of attention, and it was decided to urge the presence of Mrs. Cranmer and Mrs. Adams, superintendent of legislation, at the state capitol during the coming winter. This is emphatically the question of the hour in South Dakota. Much prayer is needed for our legislators that they may be uncorrupted.

Thirty four carriages conveyed the convention to the college Monday afternoon. Delightful weather, such as only South Dakota can furnish and excellent music and good chaperonage made the occasion a very enjoyable one.

All the officers were reëlected, The treasurer's report proved conclusively that, though South Dakota has been tried "so as by fire," the W. C. T. U. is not dead but a vital organization. The growing interest in the cause of temperance is one of the most manifest and auspicious signs of the times.

ADA A. ESTABROOKE,
State Reporter, Pierre.

NEW YORK.

THE STATE GATHERING.

Our annual meeting is now a thing of the past. The meeting was held at Newburgh, in the Academy of Music, and we were the guests of the Newburgh Y's, who most royally entertained us and provided for all our wants. Of course the "mothers" throughout the county aided very materially, but the burden rested on the "girls," who claimed, however, that it was no burden, for Miss Annie Thompson, the Y president, said in her welcoming words, "Do you think you are any trouble to us? Well, you are not." Seeing so many mothers in the audience she said she was going to talk to them just as a girl might talk to her mother, and tell them how it was that they came to be invited to Newburgh, and then to welcome them now that they were there. So she went on and told, very simply and naturally, just how it all came about, how great the Newburgh girls' misgivings were at first, and yet confident they were that with God's help it would be all right. They had actually been preparing for the convention all summer. They had been getting cans of corn and cans of tomatoes, knowing, of course, that the visiting people would want something to eat. When they wanted milk they went to Mr. J—— and told him. He simply asked how much they wanted, and they told him one hundred and fifty quarts, and he gave it to them. Then they met a man on the street and told him they wanted some meats, and he gave them all they wanted. It was all just as easy as that, so the visitors must not think they were any trouble, "for you are not the least trouble." The convention laughed heartily over this, and enjoyed the speech of welcome very much.

This was one of the largest as well as one of the best conventions ever held, 440 delegates being present beside many visitors. The platform was beautifully decorated with banners and palms and potted plants, and the building, though a large one, would scarcely accommodate the large number of outsiders who seemed anxious to hear all about the methods and work of the W. C. T. U.

The reports of superintendents were listened to with pleasure, and the general feeling prevailed that each woman had given much time, strength and labor during the year to bring her special line of work to as near perfection as possible. Nearly every department superintendent was present.

The annual address of the president was, as it ever has been, one of the best things on the program. It was a grand summing up of the year's work; a psalm of thanksgiving for the victories achieved, and full of hope and inspiration for the future. At the close of the address, a rising vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Burt, and handkerchiefs floated from every part of the house.

The report of the corresponding secretary came next. Fifty-nine counties are now thoroughly organized for work; there is only one county in the state that is not organized, and that because so sparsely settled and in a mountainous district is hardly it accessible for our work.

Never has our state done better work than during the year just closed. Our membership is 22,000, a gain of more than 1,000 over last year; 787 local unions reported, and are all in a healthy condition. The legislative work done in the early part of the year was something too great to be reported, and as I have already mentioned it in a former letter, I will not try to tell of it at this time.

Schools of methods are springing up all through the state, and are doing much toward aiding our women in the carrying forward of all lines of work, and indeed, every branch of work seems to have received fresh impetus in the months passed

Many visitors of note were introduced and spoke words of encouragement and cheer, among them Mrs. Themida M. Vernois, of Holland. She is superintendent of the home for fallen women, and will remain in this country until the latter part of October. She wore a blue ribbon, which, Mrs. Vernois says, is the badge of a society that in Holland is endeavoring to do what the W. C. T. U. is doing in America.

Rev. E. A. Tuck was introduced as the pastor of the only prohibition church in the world. We were told later on, however, that there is another prohibition church here in our state. Mr. Tuck received an ovation, which must have been very gratifying. He made a very favorable impression on the delegates by his little speech, and called forth repeated applause. He stated among other things, that no man was allowed membership in his church unless he voted the Prohibition ticket, and some of us are such "cranks" that we believe this rule ought to apply to all Christian churches.

Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, of Melrose, Mass., was with us the first evening, and Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, of Michigan, the third evening. The mere announcement of their names was enough to fill the building to overflowing, and they both fully sustained the reputation which has been theirs for years. The second evening was devoted to the Y's and in charge of Mrs. Jump, our superintendent of Y work. Many of the young ladies made short addresses on the different phases of work done by the Y's, and Mrs. Burt, our state president, also addressed the young ladies. A chorus of fifty voices added to the charm of this evening. Mrs. Graham, the state corresponding secretary, sang two solos—one being especially for the young ladies, entitled, "Don't marry a man if he drinks." The Silver Lake Quartette delighted the audience with several selections, sung as they alone can sing, and Rev. C. H. Mead delivered a brief address, its only fault being its brevity. The audience demanded more—both of speech and song, but the hour being late, Mr. Mead could not be persuaded to continue.

Collections were taken at the evening meetings which proved that Newburgh had not exhausted all her resources in the entertainment of so many guests.

The convention throughout was one of the best and most harmonious ever held in our state, and it was with a general feeling of regret that we approached the closing hours. The election of officers resulted in the reëlection of the old officers as follows: President, Mrs. Mary T. Burt, of New York City; first vice president, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, A. M., of West New Brighton: corresponding secretary, Mrs. Frances W. Graham, of Lockport; recording secretary, Mrs. G. M. Gardenier, of Oswego; treasurer, Mrs. Ellen L. Tenney, of Albany.

The people of Newburgh received the hearty thanks of all for the very delightful manner in which we had been entertained. The press also was highly praised for the fine reports of our meetings. It was the unanimous verdict that no state convention had ever been so fully and accurately reported as this one, and we all thoroughly appreciated this fact.

CONVENTION NOTES.

An all-day executive session was held the day following the adjournment of the convention proper, at which time superintendents were appointed and plans of work discussed and approved.

On young ladies' evening seats were reserved for all the members of the Endeavor societies, Epworth League, Good Templars, and all young people's societies generally who had been invited to attend.

Mrs. Mary J. Weaver, state superintendent of evangelistic work, conducted a prayer service each morning at eight o'clock, and all who attended received an uplift and an inspiration for future service.

By vote of the convention, Mrs. Burt was delegated to meet Miss Willard upon her arrival in New York City, and present to her a letter of sympathy from the New York W. C. T. U. in the loss of her mother.

Several invitations were received for the next convention. One was from Ithaca, for Tompkins county, which had only been organized one month. This would have been accepted but for the pitiful plea which Syracuse sent in. Eighteen years ago our first state meeting was held in Syracuse and a Syracuse delegate remarked that it was a very ungrateful child that would not visit its home once in eighteen years. That seemed to carry the convention by storm, Syracuse getting the vote almost unanimously.

Miss Julia Colman presided over the literature tables in the hall, and judging from the crowd which was always there she must have received patronage enough to delight her heart. Miss Colman is one of the most earnest workers in our state.

FRANCES W. GRAHAM,
State Reporter, Lockport.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

BEAUTIFUL DAYS.

Of all the beautiful days that characterize our New England autumn those during our state convention were the finest, and the company that gathered in the Baptist church at Laconia were earnest, intelligent and zealous.

The convention lasted through October 11, 12, 13. The church was grandly decorated with national flags, autumn flowers and leaves, banners from the various unions, and appropriate mottoes well displayed. No state meeting is considered quite complete without Miss Willard's face. A life size portrait stood upon an easel. About the entire audience room was festooned the chain of red, white and blue cards of the pledge against the use of alcoholic liquors, tobacco and profanity, signed by four thousand of the youths and children of New Hampshire, between five and six hundred of them being from Manchester.

At two o'clock, October 11, the convention was called to order by Miss C. R. Wendall, state corresponding secretary, who fills the place made vacant by the removal of Mrs. Knox to Wahpeton, N. Dak. Mrs. Knox had been president of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U. for eleven successive years. Devotional exercises were led by Mrs. Richardson, of Amherst. Roll-call, etc., were followed by words of welcome from Mrs. Mary J. Hoyt, of Laconia, and were responded to by Miss Wendall.

A report of the superintendent on Sabbath observance was followed by a spirited discussion which resulted in the convention passing a vote not to buy or read the Sunday newspapers. Reports both written and verbal came from the superintendents of peace and arbitration; work among railroad men with additional work among railroad men from Nashua, Manchester, Woodsville and Littleton; work among the soldiers and sailors, and suppression of impure literature, which was followed by an animated discussion. The report on state and county fairs was very encouraging. At the state grange fair at Tilton this fall, the W. C. T. U. did a great work at their tent. Rev. T. J. Moses gave very efficient aid. Much temperance reading was scattered among the assemblages. The money received from the restaurant netted $128.17 which will clear Merrimac county of its pledged amount for the grounds just purchased around the Mercy Home. The superintendent on hygiene then gave her report and after the committee on counties and finance were chosen, the session adjourned.

After the opening of the evening session by prayer and singing, the annual address by Mrs. Knox was read by Miss C. R. Wendall, and there were many tearful eyes in the audience as they missed the peaceful, motherly face and the clear, sweet voice.

Then came the report from the corresponding secretary, giving a brief review of the work done in our state since the organization of the W. C. T. U. in 1874. Its present membership is 2,600. It has one hundred and one unions, thirty departments of work, besides the L. T. L., whose membership is 1,556, and whose childish feet keep pace to Miss Willard's temperance songs.

A sketch of the Mercy Home at Manchester by Mrs. J. K. Hatch, an address on finance by Mrs. Chase, of Manchester, followed by song and benediction, closed the evening meeting.

Wednesday morning found a large attendance and all ready for the good things to come; after the usual opening exercises the treasurer, Miss A. E. McIntire, read the report which showed an increase in the amount received, also the greater part of the $3,500 pledged for the recently purchased land around the Mercy Home.

Then followed the reports from superintendents: First, evangelistic work, to do which successfully three things were needed, personal piety, gospel meetings, and gospel methods in reaching out for others. A concise report and earnest appeal was made by the recording secretary. Miss C. E. Rowell, the editor of the Granite State Outlook, urged the necessity of the state sustaining the official organ of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U.

Mrs. C. W. Pratt, of Concord, reported the work done on legislation; press work by Mrs. F. H. Bailey, and scientific temperance instruction in our schools by Miss C. R. Wendall; heredity by Mrs. J. H. Pickering.

As a fraternal delegate from the New Hampshire State Temperance Union, ex Governor Goodell addressed the meeting in his customary courageous strain. He has a high appreciation of the worth of the W. C. T. U., and is conscious of the duties and responsibilities of the hour. In the afternoon the devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. Geo. Bowers, of Nashua, subject, "Christian Love."

Hon. H. W. Blair in his address to the convention gave words of cheer and encouragement, urging us to press on and in God's good time he felt sure we should be rewarded by living in a land of temperance, purity and peace. Mrs. Knox, the far away president, sent a letter which was read by Miss Rowell. It was full of loving greetings. It was voted to send a telegram to her, also to purchase a W. C. T. U. birthday book for her in which the white ribbon women of the convention should record their names.

The superintendent of higher education reported a marked interest by our seminaries, academies and colleges in regard to total abstinence and purity of our children, their pupils. Then we came to a work that has proved very beneficial and brought pleasure, and we hope profit to the men in the lumber camps of New Hampshire. Mrs. W. A. Loyne with her philanthropic husband has journeyed into the camps some ten or twelve miles from any settlement and distributed reading to over six thousand persons. Religious services have been held, the books, papers and magazines have been contributed by very many unions in the state and it is hoped that before the winter sets in the friends to these workmen will send to Mrs. Loyne, Whitefield, N. H., a liberal supply of reading and let us not forget to put in such things as will brighten their rough homes and remind them of bright and pleasant scenes in the past.

Miss Lucia Kimball gave a brief address on Sunday-school work. Miss Ella Pearsons, our state superintendent on juvenile work, spoke very earnestly of its importance. From Miss Rowell's report as one of the trustees of the Mercy Home, it was seen that full collections had been received and it was in a prospering condition. Mrs. Brewster told the convention of the woman's work and its increase in the past decade. After very interesting exercises of song, praise and prayer, the evening service was continued by an address from Miss Lucia Kimball, her subject being, "Our Temperance Thermopylæ," after which Rev. Mr. Easton spoke in regard to the home—its privileges, its duties and its blessings.

Every one evinced pleased surprise at the interest reported by Mrs. Austin in the Demorest medal contests; the young people are taking hold of the work in real earnest. After the opening of the convention October 13, reports were heard from superintendents of Sunday school work, narcotics, alcoholics in medicine and white cross and white shield. Miss McIntire was chosen fraternal delegate to the New Hampshire board of woman's foreign missions. Then followed the election of officers as follows: Miss C. R. Wendall, Dover, president; Miss C. E. Rowell, Franklin, corresponding secretary; Mrs. C. M. Abbott, Rochester, recording secretary; Miss A. E. McIntire, Exeter, treasurer. The officers were presented to the convention and Miss Wendall offered prayer.

The result of the thankoffering service was $32.35.

The committee on resolutions then presented a long and well arranged list.

Thursday evening was one long to be remembered for its grand gold medal contest, at which Bertha Stevens, of Franklin, won the medal. This closed the convention.

It was voted to print two thousand of the annual reports of the New Hampshire W. C. T. U., and delegates were chosen from the different counties to the National Convention at Denver.

MRS. F. H. BAILEY,
State Reporter, Hopkinton.

CONNECTICUT.

ANNUAL STATE CONVENTION.

Three days of perfect weather, cordial greetings from the city and harmony among the delegates conspired to make the gathering in Norwich, October 11–13, one of the most delightful ever known. When Mrs. Forbes, state president, commenced the first service, which was a devotional one, nearly all the delegates were in their places The church was tastefully decorated with potted plants palms and vines. A large streamer bearing the National motto, the county, the L. T. L., and the state banners the large shield that has graced every convention for some years, and the silk flag that represented our union at the Paris Exposition, were all part of the decorations.

The convention was called to order and the roll called to which officers and superintendents responded by appropriate texts and sentiments. Mrs. Anna Herr, president of the Norwich union, gave a hearty welcome to the visitors, and was followed by Rev. Dr. Pratt, pastor of the church, who added one for the churches. Miss Gertrude Norton, of the Litchfield W. C. T. U., responded with witty and appropriate remarks in the name of the company who had come from all parts of the state. Miss Mary Rogers sang a solo entitled the "Golden Threshold." Presidents of the counties reported, showing good work done and attempted. Upon the whole the outlook seemed encouraging.

A large number of children were ushered in in the afternoon, and Mrs. Fitz Gerald presided over the very interesting meeting that followed. The children sang "America" heartily and sweetly, and repeated in concert the Lord's Prayer. A chalk talk, which interested them very much, was given by Mrs. Merrill, of Boston. Mrs. Forbes and Mrs. Fitz Gerald gave short talks, and the meeting closed with the singing of the hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldier," and as the children passed out each one was given a pretty text card.

In the evening the Young Woman's union, of Norwich tendered the guests a reception in the parlors of the Second Congregational church, which was largely attended The parlors had been tastefully decorated with daint tables, easy chairs and handsome lamps; upon the table were attractive covers, pictures of temperance worker and bric-a brac, giving to the room quite a home-like air Lemonade was the palatable beverage served.

Miss Mary Huntington, president of the Y, welcomed the audience in some well chosen words and introduced Mrs. Forbes who made a brief address in response to the welcome. Mrs. M. E. Jensen sang very finely two solos. The occasion was very pleasant and was one of the most attractive features of the whole session.

The next morning the exercises were opened by a devotional service conducted by Mrs. R. N. Stanley, of Highland Park, after which followed reports from superintendents of departments. The address of the morning was given by Mr. Geo. W. Swan, city missionary, subject, "Temperance Diplomacy." He described the methods used in Norwich for the promotion of temperance work, which is helped by the W. C. T. U., the city and town officials, and the judge of the city court, whose door is never closed to the city missionary when reformatory recommendations are deemed necessary. Mr. Swan's record in 1891 showed that he turned from the tills of the saloons of this town, $16,000 for the good of families of drinking men to grocers, dry-goods dealers and provision dealers. About thirty five men who were reformed and converted have found a home in some church and are now living consistent, Christian lives.

Mrs. Babcock, president of the Rhode Island state union, was introduced, also presidents of local unions. Delegates to the National Convention were elected and the noon-tide hour was observed, Mrs. Babcock leading in prayer. The Rev. Herr pronounced the benediction and the company was invited to a collation, which, like all the repasts served to the delegates was bountiful and delicious.

The afternoon session opened with a memorial service for the deceased members of the year, conducted by Mrs. Forbes, who spoke very tenderly of those who had left the ranks; she mentioned first, the aged mothers of our National secretary, state secretary and state treasurer.

"But where crystal streams through endless years,
Flow our golden sands,
And where the old grow young again,
We'll clasp our mother's hands."

This service was followed by an exquisite solo, "The Home of the Soul," by Mrs. Alice J. Harris, of Boston. Not a breath was heard while she sang, and as the last note died away no applause could have been so eloquent as the appreciative hush that lay on the audience.

Reports of committees followed, also the president's annual address, which was a comprehensive review of the whole field, combining a sincere and scholarly commendation with a just criticism.

Mrs. Harris sang again beautifully. Miss Jane Sharpe read a paper entitled, "A Wheel within a Wheel," and the session closed with a question box conducted by Mrs. Fitz Gerald.

The evening service was excellent and consisted of a short, devotional exercise conducted by resident clergymen, a selection by a local quartette, an address by Mrs. Mary Livermore, and two solos by Mrs. Harris. Mayor Harwood gave a cordial welcome to the convention which was one of the most polished speeches of the sessions.

Thursday morning, the last day, opened with a short service of devotion conducted by Mrs. Bolles, of Hartford. Department reports followed and election of officers. The entire corps of officers was reëlected. The afternoon was full of bright and good things as was also the evening. Mrs. Barney, of Rhode Island, gave an address both afternoon and evening.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The collations were furnished by the churches of the city.

A resolution of respect was read in memory of Mrs. Stone, of Milford.

Rev. James H. James, of the Connecticut temperance union, was present and made a short address.

Mrs. Fitz Gerald has organized new unions at Stonington, Stirling, Hill and Ekonk, and L. T. L's at Pawcatuck and Mystic.

Telegrams from the New Jersey convention and from Mrs. Johnson, of Michigan, a former Connecticut worker, were received.

Some dainty little booklets were presented the ladies by Miss Linda L. Kimball, of Ellington, called "The Woman's Star." On the corner was a picture of the church in which the convention was held, and its covers contained many interesting items concerning the city of Norwich.

M. Belle Smith,
State Reporter, Rockfall.

MONTANA.

CONVENTION NOTES.

The ninth annual convention of the Montana W. C. T. U. was held at Bozeman, October 4 to 6. The weather was such as Montana alone can boast of, and Bozeman, "the beautiful," surpassed all expectations in her loveliness, her resources and her hospitality.

The Presbyterian church was tastefully decorated with flowers, banners and pictures. The first meeting was that of the executive committee, 10 to 10:30 a. m., after which the convention was opened by a consecration service, led by Mrs. Hefferlin, Livingston. After roll call of general officers, superintendents, etc., and the seating of W. C. T. U. delegates, an amendment to the constitution admitting L. T. L's and Bands of Hope was voted on and carried, and their delegates seated. There were thirty one delegates in all. The corresponding secretary's report came next, showing that there are eighteen active unions having four hundred and ninety-nine members, eighty-three honorary members, seven L. T. L's, having an average membership of fifty, and one Band of Hope, having thirty-eight members. The money raised by local unions by dues and donations alone was $1,128.56; the amount paid state union in dues and donations, about $300. Much literature was circulated, and special attention was given to jail and prison work. There is good temperance instruction throughout the public schools and the churches generally use unfermented wine. The treasurer's report followed, showing a better condition of the treasury than ever before, there being a balance of about one hundred and fifty dollars. After the appointment of committees, the first session closed with noon-tide prayer; many of us took dinner at the Bozeman W. C. T. U. coffee house, which is doing a good business and is certainly worthy of patronage. A free reading room is in connection.

The afternoon session began with devotional exercises; the reports of superintendents followed. Near the close of the session several of the good brethren of the town were presented, and each made some kindly remarks.

The evening meeting was full of good things, consisting of music, Scripture reading and prayer, greetings from Mayor Ramsey, in behalf of the city; from Rev. Bennett, in behalf of the ministers; from Rev. George King, in behalf of the press; from Mrs. W. W. Wylie, in behalf of the W. C. T. U. These were followed by impromptu responses from the visitors. The president's address was then given, and no one could doubt, after hearing her, that the last state convention made a wise choice in electing her president. The music, under the management of Mrs. J. M. Waters, was well rendered; especially sweet was the solo by Mrs. General Wilson. The woman's quartette was heartily applauded. A collection and the temperance doxology completed the program for that evening.

Wednesday and Thursday the reports of superintendents were continued and were interspersed by telegrams received from and sent to state conventions then in session. Several excellent papers were read and Mrs. W. W. Wylie gave a glowing account of the great convention at Boston as seen by a Western woman.

Wednesday evening, through the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Story, who opened their spacious home for the occasion, a reception was given to the convention by the Bozeman W. C. T. U.

The election of officers Thursday forenoon resulted in the unanimous choice of Mrs. Cummins as president; the other officers elected were Mrs. C. O. Price, Helena, recording secretary; Mrs. Maggie E. Templeton, Helena, corresponding secretary; Mrs. H. E. Harmon, treasurer. The convention voted unanimously to send our president to the National Convention at Denver. Mrs. Belle Barnes, Great Falls, was elected delegate at large. In the afternoon a motion was carried to have a memorial tablet in the Temple in honor of the president; later, at Mrs. Cummins' earnest request, the motion was reconsidered, and the unions pledged the $100 for state work.

At 4 o'clock the Board of Trade sent carriages to take all for a drive; at Cemetery Hill we alighted, taking a survey of the beautiful valley below, reminding us of the verdant valleys of our earlier years. Several impromptu speeches were made and responded to ere we resumed our drive toward town. The closing session of the convention was held Thursday evening. Excellent papers were read by Mrs. Charles Rich, Bozeman, on jail work; and by Mrs. Belle Barnes, Great Falls, on the press. Dr. J. M. Waters, Prohibition candidate for governor, was called for and responded by a few well-chosen and encouraging remarks. The committees on resolutions and courtesies reported; among the resolutions was this one: "We affirm our allegiance to the Prohibition party." The convention closed with singing, "God be with you till we meet again."

Maggie E. Templeton, Helena.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

Mrs. Mary W. Valentine, president Nantucket, Mass., W. C. T. U., is superintendent of the Temple fund for that union.

Mrs. Frances W. Graham, of Lockport, N. Y., state corresponding secretary, has been in West Virginia since September, helping in the prohibition campaign.

North Dakota, which was organized only three years ago with nineteen unions, now has the same representation at National Convention as the old state of South Dakota.

October 29 another staunch white-ribboner went from earth to heaven, Miss Julia Virginia Gray, well known as a faithful worker of Victoria, Gloucester county, N. J. "Her own works praise her."

Pennsylvania W. C. T. U. county literature superintendents are requested to send their names and postoffice address (naming county) immediately to Mrs. A. P. Hamilton, Second St., Sharon, Pa.

All contributions to the World's W. C. T. U. should be sent direct to Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, 26 Chomedy St., Montreal, Canada (treasurer W. W. C. T. U.), and not to Miss Willard or Miss Briggs.

Expressions of loving appreciation were the resolutions in memoriam passed by the Edinburgh, Shenandoah county, Va., W. C. T. U., at the death of their co-worker, Mrs. Maggie Hopewell, which occurred October 20.

The Camp Creek Y. W. C. T. U., of White Heath, Ill., has issued a cordial invitation to its regular Friday evening meetings in form of a neatly printed folder, setting forth the object of the organization. This is a plan which all our W. C. T. U. and Y unions should adopt.

The beloved president of the Troy Center, Pa., W. C. T. U., Mrs. Emma Prather, passed out of sight, October 22. She is characterized as "a Mary sitting at the feet of Jesus, a Martha in her own home and a Dorcas to the outside world." Her memory is fondly cherished by those who knew her.

A matron is wanted for the Wisconsin W. C. T. U. Home for Women at Eau Claire, Wis. The board of managers desire a woman who has had some experience in this line of work and who is a W. C. T. U. woman. All applications should be addressed to Dr. Annette J. Shaw, Eau Claire, Wisconsin.

The public reading room of the Y of Archdale, N. C., which has been unavoidably closed for the past three months, was opened again November 18th. They send an earnest request for books, periodicals or papers, for use in the room. Address, secretary Y. W. C. T. U., Archdale, Randolph Co., N. C.

Mrs. M. E. Bell, of Vermont, is giving her whole strength to the establishment of a rescue home in her state. Three sites have been already offered for the home, and a financial nucleus formed. Mrs. Bell is now petitioning the legislature for an appropriation, and will, without doubt, secure it.

An isolated farmer's wife writes, "A good thing for us to do is to join the nearest union, even if we never attend a single session. Still it gives us interest in the work. I have belonged to one union thirteen miles away for four years, although I have never attended a meeting."

The "Experience" seed sown at Evanston, Ill., has borne rich fruit in Massachusetts as is shown by the interesting report of a reception and tea participated in by representatives from Allston, Somerville, North and East Cambridge. We read that at Lynn, also, the same pleasant fruitage was gathered.

A Columbian temperance meeting held in the Mormon theater, Salt Lake City, under the auspices of the Catholic Total Abstinence Society, was a splendid success. Mrs. Mary Bynon Reese represented by invitation the National W. C. T. U.; Mr. Clark Anderson, the Mormon work, and the officers of the society, the Catholics. The singing was unusually fine.

The Englewood W. C. T. U. has engaged Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, National superintendent of parliamentary usage, for a parliamentary drill, to be given at the First M. E. church, corner Sixty-fourth street and Stewart avenue, November 25, 26 and 28. Tickets for the full course can be obtained by addressing the president of the Englewood union, Mrs. M. J. Chamberlain, 6014 Wentworth avenue, Englewood.

There are now three live unions on the Indian River, Florida. A new one just organized at Melbourne is named the Mother Stewart W. C. T. U., of which Mrs. Annie Gibbs is president, and Mrs. Emma C. Stout, secretary. There are fourteen members. The Midget, edited by little Ethel Stout, at Melbourne, Fla., only ten cents a year, seems to flourish in the land of flowers. State juvenile workers will do well to avail themselves of the offer of ten or more copies to one address for eight months at five cents per copy.

The Marquette county convention was held at Ishpeming, Mich., October 7 8, with thirty-six delegates in attendance, representing seven unions. The convention was pleasant and enthusiastic and the reports very encouraging, two new unions having been organized since the last convention. The following officers were elected: Mrs. Kate Northmore, Republic, president; Mrs. Venan, Republic, treasurer, and Miss Edith Babcock, Ishpeming, secretary. This is the second annual convention and the county is now thoroughly organized.

An unusually interesting meeting was held in the little Puritan village of Vermontville, Eaton county, Michigan, November 4. The W. C. T. U. is very active, taking special interest in franchise. Miss A. J. Carpenter, of Dimondale, a new lecturer in this field, was secured as speaker, and her address was characterized as full of thought and a masterly one. The local W. C. T. U. afterwards tendered a reception to the pastors and the public school teachers at which Miss Carpenter was the guest of honor, and Mrs. Parmenter gave a brief talk on scientific temperance instruction. The occasion was one long to be remembered.

Pemberton, N. J., W. C. T. U. held a social at the residence of their president, Mrs. W. H. Heisler, for the purpose of opening mite boxes, which had been distributed a year ago for the collection of funds for the Temple. One hundred and twenty nine dollars was the result of their year's effort, and much pleasure was evinced by all, culminating in the singing of the doxology. A short interval of pleasant intercourse, refreshments by their most hospitable host and hostess, and the members wended their way home with a new inspiration to be more active than ever to advance the cause of lifting up humanity. May many more unions do likewise!

A Dansville, N. Y., correspondent tells of one instance in which the distribution of literature worked wonderful results as follows: "I have been interested in the articles in late numbers of your paper, regarding help for farmers' wives, and have been wondering how we could get lists of names to whom to send not only The Union Signal, but other good papers and magazines which accumulate in so many homes, and would be so helpful to those who are hungry for this sort of help. A lady from our town removed to a mining district in one of our Southern states; she carried Union Signals with her and distributed them. An awakening on the subject of temperance was the result, and a temperance society was formed composed of both men and women. She sent for more literature; three or four good packages were sent her, the result of which has been three separate organizations have been started and many have signed the pledge, and some marked instances of reform are reported. As it seemed to be desirable to include men as well as women in this work, it is called simply a Christian Temperance Union, and they have not sought to belong to our woman's organization. How can we estimate where this little stream of influence shall end!"

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

The Marked Success

of Scott's Emulsion in consumption, scrofula and other forms of hereditary disease is due to its powerful food properties.

Scott's Emulsion

rapidly creates healthy flesh—proper weight. Hereditary taints develop only when the system becomes weakened.

Nothing in the world of medicine has been so successful in diseases that are most menacing to life. Physicians everywhere prescribe it.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

Mme. M. YALE'S

LA FRECKLA
ELECTRIFIES THE WORLD.

BEAUTY IN A BATH.

La Freckla, the Great Mineral Water discovered by Mme. M. Yale, that Celebrated Woman Chemist. It is the only known natural water that has the power of Purifying the Skin and making a Complexion Beautiful.

LA FRECKLA

was named La Freckla because it is a sure cure for Freckles—all one has to do is to bathe the face in it a few times, when the Complexion becomes radiantly beautiful and Every Freckle disappears as if by magic. It removes any spot or stain from the Skin in the same way, only it seems to favor Freckled Faces.

Mme. Yale's own complexion is the most perfect ever seen. Her lovely neck and arms are so perfect one has to look closely to make sure they are not marble, and her face is as fair as the lily and as pink as the rose.

LA FRECKLA

will make any woman who uses it as fair as she. Price $1.00. For sale by all Druggists, or shipped by Mme. Yale. Address all letters to

MME. M. YALE,
COMPLEXION SPECIALIST,
37 W. 14th St., New York.
146 State St., Chicago, Ill. Mme. M. Yale Co.
Send 6 cents postage for Beauty Book just out.

FREE! A NEW MUSIC BOX & CLOCK COMBINED, PERFECT TIMEKEEPER, 8 DAYS.

To advertise and introduce them quick the inventor will furnish any reliable person (either sex), in every county or town, one of these charming and attractive instruments to show, if applied for at once. Address Inventor, 26 West 31st street, New York City and get one with full particulars, testimonials, etc.

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

MAGIC LANTERNS

And STEREOPTICONS, all prices. Views illustrating every subject for PUBLIC EXHIBITIONS, etc. ☞ A profitable business for a man with small capital. Also Lanterns for Home Amusement. 256 page Catalogue free. McALLISTER, Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y.

ARE YOU MARRIED? If so, present your husband and son a copy of Rev. Geo. F. Hall's great work on "PERSONAL PURITY," the latest and best book for men only. Prof. David Swing says: "It is written with so much good taste and with such logical force that it ought to be accepted as a valuable book for the age." The Christian Oracle pronounces it "healthy and elevating." 317 pages. $1, postpaid. No discount. Address COLUMBIAN BOOK CO., CHICAGO.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

WALL PAPER. Good Paper, 3c. Gold Paper, 5c. Large package of beautiful samples and guide, "How to Paper," sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO, ILL.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " " 3 months	.25
" " " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15
Per 100 copies	1.00

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

TO THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF AUNT JANE'S COZY CORNER.

You are interested in THE UNION SIGNAL and enjoy your own page with its stories, poetry, letters and puzzles.

SOME OTHER BOY OR GIRL

would enjoy it, too. Do you not want to help to put our paper into other homes? This could be your temperance work when you could do no other, perhaps.

To every boy or girl who will secure three subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL at $1 each, we will send a nice Christmas present. It will be the choice of one of two games, viz.:

1. The World's Fair Game.
2. The game of the Book of Books.

Now you see how much good you can do by a little effort. Not only can you earn a nice game for yourself, or to give as a Christmas gift. but you can also furnish good reading to your little friends by telling their parents how much you enjoy Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner, and getting them to take the paper. Let us hear from you.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A GOOD RESOLUTION.

One of the best resolutions made at Denver, No. 15, we subjoin:

15. That THE UNION SIGNAL is necessary to the intelligent prosecution of our work, and that every member of the W. C. T. U. should read its columns, that a better equipment for more satisfactory work may be secured, and that we make an effort to secure an increased circulation outside our ranks because of its value as an educator.

Let every one of our members who was not there fall into line and resolve to do likewise. We give as the watchword of the organization for the year 1892–3 the cry: Every subscriber will secure one other subscriber.

NOW READY!

Two New Books for the Holidays.

1. A WOMAN'S EVANGEL. By Eva Kinney Griffith.

A picture of temperance work along the lines so familiar to all W. C. T. U. women. Written by one who has lived the experience she describes, through active participation in local and state work, and who wields a facile pen. The story will interest all readers—its Gospel temperance meetings, ostracism because of political conscientiousness, downfall due to moderate drinking—all are true to life. Send for it! Price $1.25.

2. BRIGHT EYES, OR PLEASURE AND PROFIT FOR SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

A book of pictures with blank spaces in which children are to write Scripture verses illustrated by the cuts, after finding them.

Blessed shall be thy basket and thy store.

Deut. 28: 5.

(Basket.)

DEUTERONOMY.

This is the way to use the book. It answers the Sunday-afternoon question, "What shall I do, mamma?" Somewhere in the book of Deuteronomy is a verse containing the word "basket," and illustrated by this picture, Johnny and Mary will look it up together, and, when found, write it in the blank space beside the picture. Mamma will ask them, too, to repeat the verse at the twilight hour, and two things will be gained. Price 50c.

Address all communications to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE.
Chicago, Ill.

1893 HOLIDAY GIFTS THAT LAST ALL THE YEAR 1893

Harper's Magazine, Weekly, Bazar, and Young People

Harper's Magazine

Engagements have been made with the most distinguished writers, and several special enterprises of somewhat extraordinary magnitude are under way that presage a most entertaining series of numbers for 1893. The illustrations will continue to be as perfect as the best talent and processes can make them.

Per year, postage free, $4.00

They will be better than ever this year

Harper's Weekly

This journal keeps abreast of the history of each week, singling out for emphasis the events and personages of importance. Its illustrations are numerous and by the best artists. Its department of fiction is replete with the most entertaining short stories by the best writers.

Per year, postage free, $4.00

Greatest American

Harper's Bazar

Each issue is the record of the week in woman's world. It contains the latest in fashions and in Paris designs; the best in bright stories and high-class humor; the most thoughtful and practical essays; the best artistic attractions, and an indispensable pattern-sheet supplement.

Per year, postage free, $4.00

No home of culture should be without them

Harper's Young People

Look out this year for "Raftmates," by KIRK MUNROE, and other serial and short stories. The special articles will be interesting and valuable. Numerous illustrations, poems, anecdotes, articles on pastimes, and every other subject of interest to young people, make up a delightful programme for the year.

Per year, postage free, $2.00

The Best Literature and the Best Art Periodicals

Upon receipt of TEN CENTS the publishers will mail you a sample set of above.

Subscribe Now
Harper & Brothers, Publishers
Franklin Square, New York, N. Y.

Newsdealers, Booksellers, and Postmasters receive subscriptions.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT

OR LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 41st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published. Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. ☞ We Give Credit, Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for

WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE

a New, Choice, splendidly Illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all,—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest, Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.

WE WANT 2 AGENTS! ONE PRESBYTERIAN BAPTIST

IN EVERY COMMUNITY.
A RARE OPPORTUNITY. GOOD PAY.
Address, for full particulars,
J. A. HILL & CO.,
44 E. 14th St., New York.

NEW MAGIC LANTERN

STEREOPTICONS AND LANTERN SLIDES

For Amateurs, Public Lectures, and the Home Circle. PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENTS ARE PROFITABLE. J. B. COLT & CO., manfrs., 16 Beekman St., New York; 189 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. Mention this paper.

TOKOLOGY A COMPLETE LADIES' GUIDE In Health and Disease, By ALICE B. STOCKHAM, M. D., OVER 25 YEARS PRACTICE.

Mrs. L. N. A. writes: "If I knew I was to be the mother of innumerable children it would have no terrors for me, so great is my confidence in the science of TOKOLOGY." Prepaid, $2.75. Sample pages free. Best terms to agents.

ALICE B. STOCKHAM & CO., 277 Madison-st. Chicago

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering, from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren st., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

THIS MACHINE FREE to examine in any home. Sent anywhere without one cent in advance. Warranted the best sewing machine ever made. Our terms, conditions and everything far more liberal than any other house ever offered. For full particulars, etc, cut this advt. out and send to us to-day. Alvah Mfg. Co., Dpt. C76 Chicago, Ill.

RHEUMATISM ECZEMA If you suffer it's your own fault. Address Dr. W. H. ROSS, Grand Rapids, Mich.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

MAGIC HEATER—Ingersoll Heat Battery Metal Table. Elegant Mammoth Lamp. Heat Light, Comfort, Convenience and Economy. All for $10. Send for facts. INGERSOLL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Lansing, Mich.

BICYCLES ON EASY PAYMENTS No extra charge. All makes new or 2d hd. Lowest price guaranteed. Largest stock & oldest dealers in U. S. Cata. free. Agts. wanted. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77 G St., Peoria, Ill

CUT IN TWO Prices of Sewing Machines. Safes, Scales, Blacksmith's Tools, Road Carts, Buggies, Harness and 1000 other things. List Free. CHICAGO SCALE CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

REDUCED RATES.

THE PENNSYLVANIA LINES have in effect a first class rate of Six Dollars and second-class rate of Three Dollars Fifty Cents to Louisville, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Dayton, Richmond, Hamilton and New Albany. For full information call at City Ticket Office, 248 Clark Street, or Union Passenger Station, Canal and Adams streets, or address the undersigned.

J. H. LUCE,
Ass't Gen'l Passenger Agent.

Do You Read Wisely and Well

This is an age of careless, desultory reading, and of much weak, worthless literature. The Chautauqua Reading Circle has helped more than two hundred thousand people to read good books systematically. Are you dissatisfied with your mental habits, and do you desire to follow a definite plan of reading? Join the Chautauqua Circle, be more interesting to yourself and to your friends; as Dr. Hale puts it, "be familiar with the language of the times." Send for detailed information to THE CHAUTAUQUA OFFICE, Drawer 194. Buffalo. N. Y.

THANKSGIVING TIME OR "CUSSIN' TIME."

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

"Are there any beginnings at our house?"

Into the general dinginess of sky and wall and pavement in Dun street, blossomed something white.

It was a lowery November afternoon, just the time of afternoon when everything is at its dingiest. A dingy little bunch on the curbstone was looking in a blank way at its dingy toes. It had been looking just that way for a long time. Its face was dingy in streaks, its hands were darkly dingy, and its clothes were the dingiest of all.

It had heard and seen and felt so much that it had cried out and tired out, and was empty and numb.

The something white that had blossomed into Dun street was moving toward this bunch on the curbstone. Suddenly the sweetest sound the bunch had ever heard broke the heavy silence—a child's rippling laughter.

The bunch looked up with a startled face at the sweet sound; he looked up Dun street, and there he saw a little lad all in white, striding along in a soldierly fashion.

Little Dingy saw the white swan's-down on the Blossom's white coat, though he did not know it was swan's-down, and he saw yellow curls bobbing between the white coat and a white cap; he saw a white face all alight with dimples and smiles, and very wide open blue eyes.

At first sight Dingy had a mind to resent Blossom's importance, but it was so sweet and white and merry he only tucked his head down where it was before and became a brown bunch again.

Blossom, nothing daunted by this cold reception, though curiously surprised, walked quite up to the bunch.

"Do you like to sit there? Ain't you afraid of getting —" he was going to say, "dirt on you rclothes," but paused, a little embarrassed by the sudden realization of the boy's grimy condition.

If the white face had not been so very sweet and the childish voice so silvery, Dingy would have been enraged with this little questioner. As it was he only eyed Blossom with sullen eyes, not moving from his crouching position but looking up sidewise.

"Say, little boy, can't you talk? Are you a foreign boy?"

Still a blank and sullen gaze was the only answer.

"Oh! you're deaf and dumb; po-or little boy."

"You lie! I ain't."

Blossom jumped back a step at this unexpected explosion, but came forward the next instant crying gleefully,

"Oh, you can talk; do talk to me some more. What's your name? mine's Oscar."

"Mine's Dan."

"Dan; that's a nice name; Dan was a very smart man, you know." Blossom was looking with an investigating air into the streaked face. "Say, ain't you a pretty big boy to cry?"

"When folks cries they cries, I reckon, whatever their size."

"I guess that's the way of it, Dan; but you surely mustn't cry to-day, for it's 'most Thanksgiving."

"We don't have no Thanksgiving time to our house; it's only cussin' time."

"My-y! what's that?"

Dan looked up; he had a faint consciousness that it was not fitting to tell this little white boy about "cussin' time."

"Have yer got a parp?"

"A—what?"

"A parp; a father."

"Oh, yes, indeed I have."

"Does he ever cuss?"

"I don't 'zackly know. Is it dis'greeable?"

"Don't know nothin' 'bout that; but my parp cusses all the time an' Thanksgivin' time he cusses worser."

"Dear me! cussin's pretty bad, I guess. And don't you have plum-pudding for dinner, and turkey?"

"No; nor nothin' else."

"And don't you have a big fire in the fire-place and lots of company and sing songs and roast chestnuts?"

"N-o-r! we don't have no fire at all cussin'-time, an' mi—, not much any time," said Dan.

"Dan, what makes your 'parp' like that?"

"Rum."

"What's 'rum'?"

It was Dan's turn to be surprised. "Didn't never hear tell o' that?"

"Never."

"Well, it's somethin' to drink, and there's somethin' in it that makes you keep wantin' more an' more an' more. An' you keep buyin' it until your money's all gone, an' then you sell your cloze an' your mother's cloze an' your boy's cloze; then you sell the furniture. An' then you don't have no money to buy anything to eat."

"Why-y e-e! it must be nicer than chocolate. I have chocolate Sunday mornings."

"It ain't nice at all. It makes you ugly an' you want to hit folks an' you don't care how much you hurt 'em, an' you like to hit your mother an' your little boy, most."

Blossom gasped in horror, his blue eyes dilating.

"Then you get wild an' don't know what you do, an' you may do any bad thing; you don't know what. An' then you're sick and all burnin' up, an' you have awful feelin's an' you see awful things."

"Dan," said little Blossom in an awestruck voice, "did God born your father cussin'?"

"No, sir e-e! my parp used to be just like your parp; an' we had Thanksgivin's. I remember it."

"Like my father?"

"Yes, an' we had a pretty house, an' things to eat, an' good clozes, an' everything." Dan's head sank still lower.

"How did he come to be a cussin' man?" asked Blossom.

"He begun."

"How?"

"Being treated, an' havin' company dinner, an' treatin', an' takin' it for his health, marm says. What does your parp drink?"

"Coffee and tonic."

"Tonic?"

"Yes, it ain't good for little boys like me, but it's good for fathers. It smells good."

Dan looked at Blossom, and Blossom looked so white and sweet, that Dan dropped his head again and did not say anything.

"I guess I'll go home, I don't feel very well," said Oscar, in a trembling voice. "I'm very sorry, you know," he added. "I'm glad my father ain't a cussin' man, and I'm going to ask God to make your father good again."

"You'd better ask him not to let your father ever be a cussin' man like mine, while you're about it," said Dan.

The blue eyes flew open again, and the little white figure straightened. "My father couldn't be a cussin' man."

"Oh, yes, he could; any man could." Dan almost wished

"WHAT'S YOUR NAME? MINE'S OSCAR.

he had not said those words when he saw the terror that leaped into the white face.

"Are you certain, sure?"

"Sure! Any man that begins can't tell where he'll leave off. He thinks he can, but he can't."

"I think my mother'll miss me if I don't get home pretty quick," said Blossom. "Nobody knows I'm out, you see. I thought I'd take an airing. Is it very far, do you think?"

Blossom opened a little silver case and with his trembling hand took out a card and read an address. "That's where I live."

"Oh, that ain't far. Come along, I'll show you."

There was a commotion at 52 A—— Ave.; dinner was waiting and Master Blossom was missing.

In the height of the confusion, a little white figure, stained with the grime of Dun street, rushed in. It was Blossom.

"My father! I want my father!" and unheeding everybody and everything, he never paused until he had rushed into his father's arms.

"Oh! my dearest, bestest, goodest father! there ain't any beginnings in this house, are there?"

The poor child was trembling and sobbing, and looked so white and terror stricken, his parents thought he had had a great fright. They soothed him and comforted him, and when he was quieted enough to talk, he told them with wide, solemn eyes, and in awed tones, what Dan had told to him.

"Oh! my dearest, bestest, goodest father, tell me certain sure, there ain't no beginnings in this house?"

Blossom's father rested a hand on his yellow curls, and spoke as solemnly as Blossom himself:

"My son, there never shall be any beginnings in this house," and placing Blossom in his mother's arms, he went into the dining room and removed the bottle of "tonic" from the table. When he returned the child was drawing long, quivering sighs of relief.

"Poor Dan!" said Blossom, wistfully looking at his father.

"We will see what we can do to help him," was the answer to this look, and the child was comforted.

The something white that blossomed into Dun street that dingy November day kept on blossoming ever after, and Dun street grew cleaner and brighter for it, and many "beginnings" were never begun on account of it, and many a "cussin' time" was turned to thanksgiving time because of it.

Abington, Mass.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Thanksgiving time has come! I hope you are all enjoying the good times that the day should bring to every one, and that you have helped some other body to have a good time, too. If you have, then you know what a genuine "Thanksgiving" is, and if you have not, will you not try to plan to make somebody happy at the Christmas time which follows so soon? The Cozy Corner circle would like to hear of such plans and pass them on to others.

Since we last met I have been "over the hills and far away" to the great annual Convention of the mothers, aunties and grown-up sisters of our big temperance family in Denver. You've heard about it, have you not? The fathers, uncles and brothers looked on and helped. The children were there, too, and marched into beautiful Trinity church on Saturday afternoon, singing temperance marching songs and waving their banners. Mrs. Rice, of Boston, and Miss Anna Gordon, of Evanston, who are the generals of the Loyal Temperance Legion, were both there. You will read in The Advance Guard and The Young Crusader about many of the interesting things that happened. At Denver we were "one mile above the level of the sea" (what does that mean?) and I wished that everybody could live in just such clear, pure air and could have heard the helpful words that were spoken there.

You will remember the verse about the New Testament books sent us by a good friend and my promise to publish the names of the first twelve who sent word that they had committed it to memory. Here is the roll of honor, but the list has been increased to fifteen, because the last three were not received earlier on account of distance. I think all learned the verse as soon as the paper was received. The following is the order in which the names reached the Cozy Corner:

Ethelwynn Riley, Detroit, Mich.
Laura Weller, Geneva, N. Y.
Stella B. Kuhl, Northeast, Pa.
Roy E. Fuller, Williams, Iowa.
Georgie Backus, Waterport, N. Y.
Robert G. Bellah, Philadelphia, Pa.
Frances Mowry, Somerville, Mass.
Harvey R. Hanson, Cambridgeport, Mass.
Margie A. Davis, Faulkton, So. Dak.
L. Ada Davis, Faulkton, So. Dak.
Emma Mann Fisher, Gridley, Cal.
Nellie Griswold, Ventura, Cal.
Ray A. Squier, Pomona, Fla.
J. Olive Orr, Ni Wot, Cal.
Edith Lambert, Yaquina City, Ore.

Now if these boys and girls will look on page 13, Publisher's Column, they will read something of special interest to them and to the other boys and girls, too.

Yours for a temperance Thanksgiving,

Aunt Jane

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

122.

OUR THANKSGIVING DINNER.

The table was set with crystal clear,
Silver and china did appear;
And the great feast we had this year
Long will remain to memory dear.

We gathered round, a merry group,
And the first thing they served was ———;
Of this we made such rapid work, a
Waiter soon brought in the ———.
A sizzling golden brown it was
And with it lots of ——— ———.
(While you're doing this all guessing
Don't forget the oyster ————!)
Each wanted a drumstick! In Place of this we took some ———.
Another dish to write in ballad,
We're sure none ever saw such ——!
One hungry urchin cried out, "Gosh,"
At sight of the celery and —— .
It was no use to try to save a Bit. We had delicious ———,
Oyster plant, potatoes sweet,
Croquettes and catsup, pickled ———.
And when the main repast was by
They gave us all our choice of ——.
Then came dessert, which "a figure cuts,"
With its candy, oranges and ———
We didn't mean to eat like pigs
So finished up with grapes and ——.

When these you've guessed in order place
And in them each a letter trace.
'Twill point you if you do not stray
To our glorious ———— day!

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

JAPAN'S WELCOME.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—The welcome Japan has extended to me is simply overwhelming; nothing sustains me through it but the consciousness that there is nothing personal to me in it; that it is extended to the World's W. C. T. U. through me.

It now seems providential that all correspondence concerning my coming had been with Japanese, and all arrangements for my work were made by them, for thus they have taken me right into their hearts, and I have been able to reach them in a way few foreigners have done. Mr. Sho Nemoto, of Tokio, so well known to readers of THE UNION SIGNAL, has been foremost in this work, while his co-workers have been Mrs. Tajima, president of Japan W. C. T. U., and the temperance societies all throughout the Empire. Such attention to all details of arrangements I never knew.

Japanese gentlemen have taken the lead in this work, partly because they speak English more generally than do the ladies, and partly because the temperance societies throughout Japan consist of men and women, the former largely predominating. Some of them remind me of the W. C. T. U. Sailor Jack organized in an African port, consisting of seven men. But these societies are most loyal to the W. C. T. U., looking to it as their mother, since the inspiration which led to their organization came largely from Mrs. Leavitt and Miss Ackerman. And these men are most anxious to bring their women forward into more active work, which is a most hopeful feature.

The cordial sympathy between these Japanese and the missionaries of the various woman's boards, the respect for and confidence in these noble women, shown by the Japanese gentlemen, is beautiful, and these women are worthy of it all. I dare not commence in this letter devoted to other themes, to speak my feelings concerning them, lest admiration run away with me, and I fill the space telling of the good they are accomplishing. The regeneration of Japan seems to me to rest largely in the hands of these missionaries and of the native Christians.

My arrival at Yokohama was chronicled in the last letter closed too soon to record the formal reception. This took the form of a Japanese banquet; it was in a tea-house, upstairs, the whole room opening at the back over a garden. Alighting from our jinrikshas at the outer door, we took off our shoes, ascended stairs so polished I feared even in stocking feet to slip down, and were shown into a room with beautiful, fine matting on the floor. Its entire furniture consisted of cushions ranged round the room, on which all the guests but myself sat on their heels. For me was brought a Japanese chess-board, much like a stool, on which I sat. The day was fearfully warm, and that clean, cool room, with no steam nor scent of the coming banquet, contrasted pleasantly with the close, stuffy rooms in which such gatherings are usually held at home.

All the food was brought in individual dishes on lacquer trays by two pretty waiter girls, who knelt before us, bowing down to the ground and placing the trays on the floor at our feet. Before partaking of it Mr. Nemoto asked the blessing in Japanese and another gentleman made a little welcoming speech. At every banquet I have attended, even when at hotels, in American fashion, with waiters chattering around, the blessing has been asked. There were six or eight courses of Japanese food, which I ate with chopsticks.

The banquet was at five p. m.; at half past seven we went to the Union church for speeches. Outside were Japanese lanterns, with the flags of Japan and America; within, "Welcome" gleamed in evergreen letters from the wall and growing plants adorned the pulpit. The church was filled with Japanese, over half of whom were women, and a Japanese young lady, daughter of the president, played the organ. The services commenced as our churches do at home, all rising and singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," in Japanese, of course, followed by prayer. Prof. Ito, editor of the Temperance Magazine, welcomed me in English. Mr. Nemoto introduced me at length in Japanese, and then I spoke through an interpreter. I dreaded this ordeal very much, and wished the first trial might be on a less pretentious occasion. But the task proved much easier than I anticipated, probably because, as I was afterward told, I had the best interpreter in the Empire. Everywhere I have excellent interpreters; they are my amazement and almost my envy.

From the moment I reached the harbor, at least as soon as the gentlemen came aboard to meet me, "Sapporo" had been sounded in my ears. "You must go to Sapporo." In my utter ignorance, and fearlessness growing out of ignorance, within an hour after landing, I had rashly promised the gentlemen to start the next day all by myself. But when the missionary ladies heard it, they vetoed the plan, saying they should never forgive themselves and were sure my American friends would never forgive them, if they allowed me, not knowing a word of Japanese, to start off alone on a thousand six hundred mile trip, with many changes in mode of travel, often through regions where English is not spoken at all. I cannot be thankful enough to them for this decision, nor to Mrs. Van Patten, of the Methodist Mission training school, who five days later started with me and accompanied me to Hakadate. From there I had no trouble going only eighteen hours alone on a steamer with an English-speaking captain to Otaru, where Mr. Ito and Mr. Tsuda met me and accompanied me to Sapporo.

The four days in Yokohama were devoted to visiting and speaking from Yaggy's Chart, in the fine mission schools for girls on the Bluff. Even the program for this was arranged by the gentlemen, two of whom, Mr. Hayaska, president of the Yokohama Temperance Society, and Professor Ito accompanying me to each. Both these gentlemen teach in the mission schools. President Hayaska is an artist, and I spent a very pleasant hour in his home, looking at his paintings. He speaks very little English, but his daughter interpreted for us. His paintings would do credit to any studio. Here I saw a magnificent suit of armor cap-a-pie. I supposed it might be one he had to paint from, as we sometimes see in home studios, and so remarked to him. He modestly replied, "I used to wear it." On describing it to one well versed in things Japanese, I was informed that it showed Mr. Hayaska to have been a Samurai of the highest rank, two sworded, next to the Damjos. We find these Samurai all over the kingdom; we doubt if ever the world witnessed anything to parallel their quietly laying down their power, their heritage, above all their pride, and going to work to earn a living for themselves and families.

The night before we started for Sapporo I went by myself to Tokio, an hour's ride, to attend a reception. I rebelled against it, but the powers that be insisted, and they had been too kind to refuse. They said the reception could not be postponed till my return, because some members were going away; besides it was only fitting the capital should give me a good send-off, on starting out for work in the provinces.

It was a rainy, dreary afternoon; verging upon night as the train drew into the Tokio depot, and I was vaguely wondering what would become of me if the friends had thought I would not come in the rain and so failed to meet me, when lo! I saw the gleam of a silken banner inscribed, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up." Around it were grouped a band of children, and back of them, headed by Mr. Sho Nemoto, three hundred men and women, all wearing the white ribbon, bowing and smiling their welcome.

We gathered for a few moments' greeting in the waiting room, curious officials and passengers peering in at doors and windows, then off in jinrikshas to a hotel, a mile away, where a fine American dinner was served to fifty guests. On the center of the table was a bouquet in Japanese fashion and on either side, in pots, the curious dwarf trees for which this country is famous, the maple, signifying welcome, and the pine, "May you live long and prosper."

The gentlemen insisted that the main after-dinner speech of welcome should be made by Mrs. Tajima, president of Japan W. C. T. U. She did admirably. Another address of welcome was made by a city councillor, an officer in the society. I responded as well as I could, and Mr. Nemoto presented me with a badge of their society, as Yokohama had done before. At eight o'clock we left the banquet hall to return to Yokohama.

The next noon, Tuesday, Mrs. Van Patten and I started for Sapporo, where I arrived safely Friday afternoon, Mr. Ito, Mr. Tsuda and a large delegation having met me at Otaru and accompanied me by rail to Sapporo. The welcome here made me wish it were Mrs. Leavitt instead of myself who was receiving it; the "members," several hundred strong, were at the depot; after many bows and smiles and waving of handkerchiefs I was escorted to a real carriage, the first I had entered in Japan, and started for the home of Miss Smith, a lovely woman, embodying in her lone self the Presbyterian Mission.

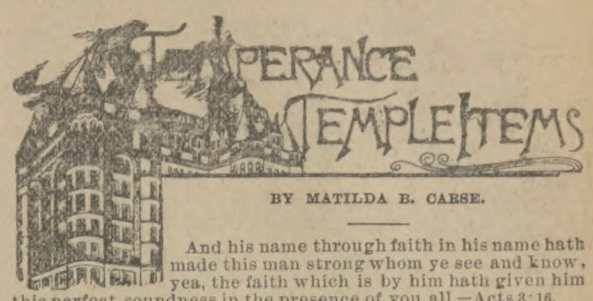
We had gone but a square when Mr. Ito stopped the carriage and we alighted to see some fire-works, he said, though it was one o'clock on a sunshiny afternoon. Bang! and something soared high in the air, then slowly unfolded showing a scroll bearing a pictured world encircled by the white ribbon, and beneath it the world's motto. Another bang and the unfolding scroll showed my name in great letters, with a Japanese word of welcome; a third showed the intertwined flags of Japan and America, with the legend in Japanese, "May God make temperance to prevail."

At five o'clock came a banquet in American fashion, in a hotel built for the emperor's occupancy during his one visit to the Hokkaido. As we entered, a brass band played "Hail, Columbia," and discoursed American music at intervals during the evening. The band master is a member of the temperance society, and the band owes its existence largely to the desire to have music for their entertainments.

MARY ALLEN WEST.

Hakadate, Japan.

(To be continued.)



BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And his name through faith in his name hath made this man strong whom ye see and know, yea, the faith which is by him hath given him this perfect soundness in the presence of you all.—Acts 3:16.

The following letter has come, with an inclosure of $20. It was written by Mrs. Nebrikka Feldman Bruun; she is superintendent of the Hope mission, 166 N. Halsted street, Chicago. A Norwegian by birth and education, she is a fine writer and has published many books in her own language. She is a devoted Christian temperance woman, and is doing a noble work in Chicago among the Scandinavians, by whom she is greatly beloved. She has been an invalid for the past year, but is now recovering. She writes: "I was down town to day, the first time since my illness. My first and only visit was to the Temple. It is grand in all its dimensions and my heart swelled with exultation at the thought that the mighty structure was woman's work and is woman's property. . . . As I walked through the corridors thinking of the many prayers that had ascended for it, and of a prayer answering God, I felt to exclaim in the Master's own words, 'O woman, great is thy faith!' I said I enjoyed the thought that it is woman's property, and if it is not so yet, every W. C. T. U. woman ought to make it her business that it shall be before long. Our Scandinavian W. C. T. U. has pledged $100 to the Temple and we are happy to be able to send you $20 as a first payment. Why should not the descendants of the haughty Norman have their union on record on a marble tablet in Willard Hall, and why should not all the unions in the W. C. T. U. ranks have their also? Nothing but lack of interest can hinder us.

"'In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb driven cattle,
Be a hero in the strife.'"

***

We get weary dinging the misstatements and untruths that are constantly being set afloat in regard to the Temple. Satan must see that the great edifice is to become a mighty arsenal from which to supply God's children with the needed implements to destroy his (Satan's) kingdom in the earth, or he would not instigate such a fight against it. We are asked, and the request is made that we answer through THE UNION SIGNAL, if it is true that Marshall Field owns most of the stock in the Temple? and if he has not made his money in the brewery business? Marshall Field now holds $100,000 of stock in the Temple, and if our temperance friends who desire a safe and good paying investment will purchase speedily the balance of our Temple Trust Bonds, we, the trustees of the Temple, will be able to pay for the remainder of Mr. Field's stock at once. We now hold for the National W. C. T. U. about $250,000 of the stock, hence we are the largest stockholders. Mr. Field is the next largest holder of stock.

It seems incredible that a man with the world wide fame of Mr. Marshall Field, who is considered the prince of dry goods merchants, should be charged with being a brewer. Mr. Field started in the dry goods business in Chicago some thirty years ago; he has kept strictly to his legitimate business—with the exception of investing the millions he has honestly made in real estate and stocks—but he does not own one dollar in a brewery; so much is he opposed to anything of the kind that he leases no property without putting in a prohibitory clause against liquor. He is a man of the strictest honesty and integrity, and in Chicago, at least, his word is considered as good as most men's bond.

***

Mrs. Olivia A. Baldwin, Bilaspur, India, sends a beautiful solid silver tea set, consisting of teapot, sugar bowl and creamer, to be sold for the benefit of the Temple; it has already been purchased for $125, and will be paid for in a few weeks. Mrs. Baldwin writes: "The proceeds are to be used for placing my mother's name, Mrs. E. S. Baldwin, Austin, Texas, on a tablet in Willard Hall. This is a gift to her from her five daughters and two sons. My mother has been a temperance worker since she was twelve years of age." Mrs. E. S. Baldwin, the noble mother of this family, was present as a delegate at the Denver Convention.

***

The following unions have sent the sums noted below toward the Madam Willard window: Marengo, Ill., Santa Ana, Cal., Fall River, Mass., St. Cloud, Minn., each $1. The Lady Henry Somerset union, St. Paul, Minn., sends $2. Mrs. Isabella Webb Parks, South Atlanta, Ga., sends $2; Mrs. M. E. Wyatt, Monmouth Hot Springs, National Park, Wyoming, Mrs. C. F. Lewin, Plainfield, N. H., Mrs. L. A. Burlingame, Delavan, Ill, each send $1. The following unions have sent $2 each, to be equally divided between the Madam Willard window and the Whittier clock: Plattsburgh, N. Y., Jamaica Plain, Mass., Milton, Oregon, Dorchester, Mass. The following individuals have sent the amounts noted for the Whittier clock: Esther C. Pierce, Pleasantville, N. Y., Miss Ellen G. Clement, St. Johnsbury, Vt., each $2; Julia Parks, Atlanta, Ga., Mrs. S. F. Armstrong, Oleander, Cal., each $1, and $5 comes for the clock from Amesbury, Mass., W. C. T. U.

***

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite box, descriptive card and bulletin; remember, all who fill a mite box ($3.65) before next April will receive a photographic group consisting of Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple. All drafts should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh. All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

"Cloud-Brewed Nectar"

some one poetically called the famous

Manitou Mineral Spring WATER, because it came rom the mountains in Colorado, which continually kiss the clouds of heaven.

The Indians for centuries have called it
"The Water of the Gods."

Effervescent,
Sparkling,
Delightful,
Pungent.

An Elegant Table Water

Unexcelled for Family, Club and Restaurant use. Packed in cases of 100 Pints and 48 Pints.
Convenient forms for dealer and consumer.

Address for literature
MANITOU MINERAL WATER CO.,
Manitou Springs, Colo.

Sold by all first-class groceries. Also by all druggists.

BARBER'S LATEST AND GREATEST

PRODUCTIONS IN RESIDENCE * ARCHITECTURE, are found in our New Book, The "Cottage Souvenir," Revised (1892) Edition Superbly Illustrated. This book is 8¾x11 in.; 180 pages, and contains over 200 designs and plans of Artistic Dwellings costing from $500 to $15,000 with reliable estimates of cost.
Hints to Home Builders and other information contained in this work makes House building truly easy and relieves one of many knotty problems. Price $2.00 post paid. Beautiful Prospectus and Sample Pages Free.
GEO. F. BARBER & CO., Architects,
KNOXVILLE, TENN.

WOMAN'S CANNING & PRESERVING CO.

MAKERS OF CHOICE PUDDINGS, LUNCH TONGUES, FRUIT PRESERVES AND GENERAL CANNED GOODS.

All put up by competent women. Neatness and care exercised, insuring a perfect product.
Our business is "woman's work for women;" we supply table necessities and luxuries ready for use.
Secure our price list (sent free to any address) before making purchases. It is a revelation.
Our stockholders are requested to insist upon having our goods. By so doing they will further their own financial interests, by increasing the demand for our products, and at the same time secure the best in the market.

Woman's Canning and Preserving Co.,
19 Michigan Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

CARDS FOR 1893. 50 SAMPLE STYLES AND LIST OF 300 PREMIUM ARTICLES FREE. HAVERFIELD PUB. CO, CADIZ, OHIO.

Publisher's Dep't.

OUR DAY,

A Record and Review of Current Reform.

JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.

Price: Single numbers, - - $ .25
Yearly subscription, - - 2.50

Published by
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ALL QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

A Reference Library Within the Easy Reach of Everybody.

Every one who reads, every one who mingles in society, is constantly meeting with allusions to subjects on which he needs and desires further information. In conversation, in trade, in professional life, on the farm, in the family, questions are constantly arising which no man, whether well read or not, can always satisfactorily answer. If the facilities for reference are at hand they are consulted, and not only is curiosity gratified, but his stock of knowledge is increased, and perhaps information is gained and ideas suggested that will directly contribute to the success of the party concerned. And how are these facilities for reference to be had? How are the millions to procure this library? How are they to obtain the means of informing themselves on every point in which they may be interested; of satisfying themselves with respect to persons and places, on questions of art and science, religion and politics, literature and philosophy, agriculture, commerce and manufacture? How can the working man hope to bring within his reach the whole circle of sciences and other points of human knowledge that has developed up to the present day?

We answer these questions by offering our readers an opportunity to obtain the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica at the unheard of rate of only 10 cents a day.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE FIRST EDITION

Of the "White Ribbon Hymnal" is all gone. Fifteen hundred copies were ordered, and the first were ready to ship to Denver in time for the National Convention, which opened on October 28. Within twenty days of that time the supply was exhausted, and we find ourselves compelled to hold orders until our busy presses can print another edition. Orders received prior to that time will be promptly filled as soon as the new edition is ready. At Miss Gordon's request, two or three additions will be made, necessitating some slight re-arrangement, and an alphabetical index will be added.

As before stated, in addition to everybody's favorite hymn, and a number of new and beautiful songs, it contains responsive Bible readings for use in local and public W. C. T. U. meetings, both for opening and closing services, and a list of Scripture selections for temperance meetings, chosen by our leading speakers. It should be owned by every member of the W. C. T. U. and their friends. Price 35c.; per dozen, $3.50.

Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE.

New subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL whose names are sent prior to December 1, 1892, will receive the paper from and including November 17 issue to the close of 1893. When names are received during the month of December, the paper will be sent from the date of receipt until the close of 1893. Price of UNION SIGNAL, $1 per annum. Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

There was a very large inquiry for the photographs of Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Frances E. Willard, at Denver, so we desire to announce that any who failed to secure them there can have them mailed from this office on receipt of price, 25c.

Photographs of all National leaders are kept constantly on hand.

Spring time is Daisy time,
Nice things come together;
Summer time is Rose time,
Fair and golden weather;
Autumn time is frost time,
Forest trees a-flaming;
Winter time is bleak time,
Ice and snow a-reigning.

Would you have it always be,
Rose and Daisy time?
Always in your dear home nest
Have the bright sunshine?
Buy the Powder named below
And find without a doubt,
Daisy time and Rose time
Within if not without.

For all seasons Gold Dust Washing Powder.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,
CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE.

Silver Ware OF THE HIGHEST GRADE.

as this in itself guarantees THE QUALITY.
BE SURE THE PREFIX •1847
IS STAMPED ON EVERY ARTICLE.
THESE GOODS HAVE STOOD THE TEST FOR NEARLY • HALF A CENTURY •
SOLD BY FIRST CLASS DEALERS
IF YOU ARE NOT SURE WHERE THE GENUINE
1847 ROGERS GOODS
CAN BE OBTAINED ADDRESS
THE MERIDEN BRITANNIA Co MERIDEN CONN.
ILLUSTRATIONS OF LATEST DESIGNS AND VALUABLE INFORMATION WILL BE MAILED YOU (MENTION THIS PAPER)

GALVANIZED GEARED AERMOTOR
Re-designed and much improved, furnishes power to PUMP, GRIND, CUT FEED, and SAW WOOD.

Price Cut to $75
For 12-ft. Steel Geared Aermotor.

Does the work of 4 horses at half the cost of one, and is always harnessed and never gets tired. With our Steel Stub Tower it is easy to put on barn. Send for elaborate designs for putting power in barn.
AERMOTOR CO. 12th & Rockwell Sts., Chicago, & 29 Beale St., San Francisco.

Do you want to buy a
PIANO OR ORGAN?
If so you will save money by addressing
BEETHOVEN CO., P. O. Box 701 WASHINGTON, Warren Co., New Jersey. Information FREE.

AGENTS Coin Money selling Beveridge's Automatic Cooker. Every woman buys. Best and cheapest cooker sold. Big Profits to good workers, male or female. Sample's weight 12 oz. Adv'g matter furnished
For circulars address W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md

LADIES WHO NEED MONEY should take agency for "Dainty Work for Pleasure and Profit"—just out. The best instructor for fancy needle and decorative work. Ladies go wild over it.
DANKS & CO., 334 Dearborn St., CHICAGO, ILL.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION. 25 CTS.

DON'T CHEW TOBACCO.

Beeman's Pepsin Gum
Helps to overcome the Habit.
CAUTION—See that the name Beeman is on each wrapper.
Each tablet contains one grain pure pepsin, sufficient to digest 1,000 grains of food. If it cannot be obtained from dealers, send five cents in stamps for sample package to
BEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 64 Lake St., Cleveland, O.
ORIGINATORS OF PEPSIN CHEWING GUM.

DEAFNESS CURED
BY ELECTRICITY.
Send 10 cents for our 100 page "Electro-Medical Theory and Practice."
B. B. BLISS, Iowa Falls, Iowa.

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS
CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.
Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.
N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,
163-165 DEARBORN ST. • CHICAGO, ILL.
New York. Boston.

Pinless Clothes Line
WANTED—Salesmen to whom we will give EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY to sell our celebrated PINLESS CLOTHES LINE, the only line ever invented that holds clothes WITHOUT PINS—a wonderful success; or our famous FOUNTAIN INK ERASER which will erase ink instantly, and has NO EQUAL. The success of our salesmen shows the great demand for these articles, many making $20 to $50 per day. On receipt of 50c. will mail sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with price-lists and terms. PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 184 Hermon Street, Worcester, Mass.
Fountain Ink Eraser

'ACTINA' THE GREAT EYE RESTORER. THE BLIND SEE, THE DEAF HEAR. CURES CATARRH, Asthma, Bronchitis, Head & Throat Troubles.
NEW YORK & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N,
Room 5 & 5 1-2 Lakeside Bldg., S. W. cor. Adams & Clark Sts., Chicago. Prof. J. H. GILBERT, Mgr.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

FREE NOT A CENT

Until after full examination. The grandest offer ever made. The finest watch ever advertised by any firm in the world. Solid gold stiffened cases, made by a new process, guaranteed for 20 years or money refunded. Goods cannot be had elsewhere. Beware of imitations. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address and this watch will be sent to your nearest express packaged in an elegant plush case. You examine it at the express office and if satisfactory the agent will sell it to you for $13.85, with the understanding that if you can buy the same grade of watch elsewhere for less than $40 your money will be refunded.
FREE. If you will forward cash, $13.85, direct to us with your order, we will send you free a warranted 10 year gold chain. As to our reliability, ask any wholesale jeweller or bank in Boston. Address at once. This offer will not be made again. Both ladies' and gents' sizes.
KEENE'S MAMMOTH WATCH HOUSE,
1301 Washington St., Dept. Boston, Mass.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL.

COMPILED BY

ANNA A. GORDON

OLD—NEW—TESTED—FRESH

OLD because it contains the favorites of White Ribboners everywhere, the songs which have become their watchwords.

NEW because rich treasures of word and song have been prepared for its pages.

TESTED because its hymns have borne the wear and tear of use.

FRESH because it rings clear and sweet for the home, the nation, and the truth of God.

It is divided into the following sections:

Devotional Meetings	Mass Meetings
Evangelistic Services	Prohibition Rallies
Gospel Temperance Meetings	Special Days
Memorial Services	Closing Hymns

Responsive Scripture Readings

PRICE, $ .35.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association,

The Temple, Chicago.

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS

With Its Stirring Music is just THE THING for Your Public Meetings. It will help Immensely.

YOUNG PEOPLE LIKE IT.
The CHILDREN ENJOY it.
Old Folks are Interested.

PRICE 35c. PER COPY.
Send for Sample Copy to

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association
THE TEMPLE
CHICAGO.

We have left from National Convention a number of badges, on white satin ribbon, sent from London, England, by Miss Helen L. Hood, to sell for the benefit of the British branch of the World's W. C. T. U. They have on them a picture of Lady Henry Somerset and the name of the organization. Will be valued as having come from England, and be useful as bookmarks. Only a limited number are left. Price 10c. each. Send for them to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Dr. R. Schiffman, of St. Paul, Minn., will send a sample of his Asthma Cure free.

FREE TICKET TO CALIFORNIA.

For conditions and full information about California, address, A. Phillips & Co., Excursion Agents, 104 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

THAT CHAUTAUQUA IDEA.

Not long since while traveling we heard some gentlemen conversing about Chautauqua. One said it was a beautiful place by the sea. Another, that it was where such luscious grapes were grown. Another said it was not a place, that the true Chautauqua was not a place but a grand idea.

Each one tried hard to convince the other that his way of thinking was right and the other all wrong. Now it seems to us that none of them were right. We think we can find many to bear us out in our view of the matter. Our idea of a very beautiful Chautauqua, in fact many of them, can be found on our first page.

The Larkin Soap Manufacturing Co. make an offer of the Chautauqua desk, a Chautauqua piano lamp, or a Pittsburg Onyx Banquet Lamp which will make the word memorable in many households for years to come.

They have been before the people for a long time and although they seem to offer an immense bargain, they fully carry out all they promise.

THE NEW SIGN BOARD FOR THE ROAD TO SUCCESS.

A SCENE ON LIFE'S TURNPIKE.

HUMAN existence is, after all, very like a tortuous country road, with slopes to climb and valleys to leisurely travel, with here green fields of plenty to enjoy and there marsh lands of temptation and danger to avoid, and with cross-roads and "four-corners" every now and then to confuse and possibly to mislead the traveller.

"What studies will I take?" asks the school child.

"What trade or profession will I follow?" says the youth.

"How can I best win success?" says the man.

These are the cross-roads that we all encounter, and these are the places where most of us go astray.

Blessed is the man who chooses the proper path at these various junctions. "Luck" may have been his guide, and his less fortunate neighbors are prone to say so, but investigation and experience teach that the only reliable helps at these difficult points are—knowledge and work

Knowledge is a burden to no one. Like the air you breathe, your knowledge proves its existence, not by apparent weight or color, but by its effect. How often have you found the information you acquired by casual observation or study to be of great specific advantage in a crisis whose possibility you had not dreamed of when you acquired that knowledge.

Then if knowledge is to be your guide in the pathway of life, is it not worth your while to secure the greatest, the best sort of knowledge extant, when that source is placed within your reach?

In the

REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA

the child will find matter to interest his little mind and give him food for thought along the line of his natural bent; the youth will find life stories and professional and mechanical information to enable him wisely to choose his life work, and the adult will have his mind broadened, his intellect quickened and his information extended to such a degree by it that he will be enabled to take advantage of opportunities that he otherwise would not see. Thus is it a guide board for all. The Revised Encyclopedia Britannica is the concentrated. Now that it can be had by a saving of but ten cents a day, for only 90 days, there is no home too poor to be without it.

WISDOM OF THE WORLD

ON RECEIPT OF ONE DOLLAR

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND TO THE UNION SIGNAL.

PUBLISHERS UNION SIGNAL:

Please deliver to me the entire set of 20 volumes of Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, as above described, together with your Dime Savings Bank, for which I enclose One Dollar, and further agree to remit 10 cents a day (remitting the same monthly) until the remaining $9.00 is fully paid.

Name .....

Postoffice .....

County .....

State .....

We will forward to you, charges prepaid, the entire set of 20 volumes, the remaining $9.00 to be paid at the rate of 10 cents a day (to be remitted monthly). A beautiful dime savings bank will be sent with the books, in which the dime may be deposited each day. This edition is printed from new, large type on a fine quality of paper, and is strongly bound in heavy manilla paper covers, which, with proper care, will last a lifetime. Bear in mind that the entire 20 volumes are delivered to your address, with all charges paid to any part of the United States, Mexico and Canada.

This is a special offer to the subscribers of THE UNION SIGNAL, and will remain open for a limited time only.

Signal Notes.

EIGHT times as much money is spent on tobacco by Americans as for the support of their churches.

A MIDDLE-AGED English woman was recently convicted of drunkenness for the one hundred and fifth time.

Two hundred and eighty-four patents by Illinois women will be on exhibition, in reduced size, at the Columbian Fair.

HAMBURG is said to have the worst water and the best beer of any city. Observe the result when cholera comes and draw the moral.

DR. NORMAN KERR asserts that he has much more success in treating delirium tremens since he abandoned the prescribing of narcotics.

A PARLIAMENTARY return places the sum spent for strong drink in English and Welsh work-houses at over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

A PROVISION of the International Union of carriage and wagon makers is summary dismissal from the union for any member who becomes intoxicated.

A PRIZE definition for money: "An article which may be used as a universal passport to everywhere except heaven, and as a universal provider of everything except happiness."

PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S advice to his children: "Don't drink; don't smoke; don't use bad language; don't gamble; don't lie; don't cheat. Love your fellow man; love truth; love virtue; and be happy."

AN idea of the immense size of the Horticultural Hall in Chicago may be gained from the statement that it can contain the horticultural halls of the Centennial, New Orleans and Paris expositions.

THE famous Norwegian arctic explorer, Dr. Nausen, will be supplied with provisions for six years in his projected Polar excursion. He will take no alcohol except in the medicine chest or to be used as fuel.

A SMALL boy hear[illegible] his parents talking about a neigh[illegible] had beaten his wife while drunk. [illegible] his mother why whisky was called liquor. She replied that she did not know. He said, "I do. It is because men drink it and then go home and lick their wives, so it is called 'lick her.'"

DR. B. W. RICHARDSON humorously warns any young medical man seeking a livelihood in a certain place where every man, woman and child was a total abstainer. "Even if he be a good surgeon to boot," says the doctor, "he will also fail, for these wretched teetotalers not only shirk accidents, but when wounded, heal so fast there is neither pleasure nor profit after the first skillful dressing."

A RECENT number of The Christian Union contains a most interesting letter from the Pundita Ramabai, written to a friend which gives very clearly her religious belief; she says, "If I remember well, I was converted in 1884, when I was baptized in England. . . . I do not pretend to having obtained full knowledge of God's love and His plan of salvation of mankind. I only hope and pray that all that is necessary may be shown me. I suppose that you and many of my friends know that I accepted Christ as my Saviour and believed in Him and His teachings; that being the only condition of becoming a Christian I believe and still believe that I am a Christian though I do not belong to any sect."

THE home for industry and refuge for discharged convicts in New York is illustrating practical Christianity. The gospel meetings held three evenings in the week not only reach such discharged convicts as are in the home, but also numbers of people in the neighborhood. The singing is quite a part of the service and the men give simple, earnest testimonies. The house is bright, airy and comfortable, and contains reading rooms and a broom factory. A small weekly salary is paid to each. To give a few statistics the superintendent says that within eleven years, 2,990 men have been received as inmates; of these, 1,309 have obtained honest employment while in the home. The need of such a home for men against whom friends and relatives have usually shut their doors has long been felt. One man who had been received in the house said, "Oh, if I had only known of such a place twenty years ago!"

Good Cooking

Is one of the chief blessings of every home. To always insure good custards, puddings, sauces, etc., use Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk. Directions on the label. Sold by your grocer and druggist.

Every reader of Ivory Soap advertisements has said: "I'll try it some day." But it is so easy to forget. Why not do it now? Telephone your grocer before you put this paper down. Let him send half a dozen cakes. Bathroom, 3 Bedrooms, Pantry, Kitchen —one cake of Ivory in each. That will give it a good, all-round trial. In one week you will be an Ivory Soap enthusiast.

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

BIG DOLLARS! GREAT HAPPINESS!

Great Happiness does not always come along with the "Dollars," but "Dollars" may be invested so as to do great good, bringing happiness to others, and thus double happiness to the investor. But suppose you can invest the dollars, do the good and get back many dollars more than you invest, to do good with in other directions:—That's a Rare Chance. We offer you just such a chance, but you will have to be prompt, or the chance will elude you. This all concerns the stock of the National Bichloride of Gold Co.

FACTS 1st. We have been organized little more than seven months.

Two Dividends of 3 per cent each have been paid in that time—a reserve nearly sufficient to pay a similar dividend still remained to the credit of Profit and Loss account at the time the second dividend was paid. This last fact named would certainly and alone justify the expectation of the payment of quarterly dividend No. 3 on the 1st day of January next.

2d. But a few hundred shares remain unsold, and subscriptions are coming in every day.

3d. After the close of this month (November) if any shares remain unsold, their price will be advanced 25 per cent. It will then take $31.25 to buy a share, while it now takes but $25, the par value. A word to the wise would be SECURE SHARES NOW IN ORDER TO SAVE THAT ADVANCE.

4th. In addition to the fact of large dividends already paid by this Company, the indorsement which the Company gets from many of our best citizens of all professions is a further guarantee to the value and security of our shares, and should have its weight in deciding the question of WHERE TO INVEST.

5th. Payments may be made as follows, viz.: $5 on each share at the time of subscribing and the same amount monthly on each share thereafter until paid for in full.

6th. Remittances received after shares are all sold will be promptly returned. If your finances are not in condition to remit at once you may send any amount to secure as many shares as you wish reserved.

Address

NATIONAL BICHLORIDE OF GOLD CO., 19 to 21 Quincy St., CHICAGO, ILL.

Per G. D. VAN VLIET, Asst. Sec'y.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

New Cantatas, Concert Exercises and Anthems.

EMANUEL, a sacred cantata, in the form of oratorio, by W. A. Ogden. The story of Emanuel told in song. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

SANTA CLAUS' DELIGHT, a merry Christmas Cantata for Sunday schools, by Chas. H. Gabriel. Beautiful music, pretty scenes and a jolly entertainment for the children. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

JOY-BELLS, a new Christmas Concert Exercise for Sunday schools, by J. H. Fillmore. Pretty music, recitations, and readings. Price, 5c.; 55c. per dozen, post-paid; $4.00 per 100, not prepaid.

HARK! WHAT CELESTIAL SOUNDS, a chorus anthem for choirs, by J. B. Herbert. An anthem of unusual beauty. Price, 10c.

☞ A full descriptive list of all our Christmas Cantatas, Concert Exercises, and Anthems mailed free.

FILLMORE BROS., 141 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

A CENT SENT BENT.

Manufacturer of

"CROWN"

PIANOS AND ORGANS.

WELL SPENT, is a cent sent to Bent, (your address, on postal) if you wish a Piano or Organ I want verses about the "Crown" goods, and give Pianos, Organs, etc., for the best ones. Ask and learn how it's done. Catalogue free. GEO. P. BENT, (Clerk No. 52), Chicago, Ill. (Estab. 1870).

HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES. Agents Wanted. Catalogue free. Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago.

AGENT made $71 in four days, selling my Electric Corsets, Belts, Brushes, Rings. 100 per ct profit Cash Prizes. Samples free. DR. BRIDGMAN, B'way, N. Y.

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis

STUDY LAW AT HOME.

TAKE A COURSE IN THE SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW. (Incorporated.)

Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to

J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH.

525 WHITNEY BLOCK.

IMPROVED HALL TYPEWRITER.

The best and most simple machine made. Interchangeable Type into all languages. Durable, easiest running, rapid as any. Endorsed by the Clergy and literary people. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Agents wanted. Address N. Typewriter Co., 611 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.

OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEPT 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.

Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets' Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY

or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.

THE BABY will be given a beautiful birthday card if the mother will send baby's name and age to Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. This is done to advertise LACTATED FOOD. The food that SAVES BABIES' LIVES.

THE DULUTH AND SUPERIOR SPECIAL.

In full keeping with its well-known progressive policy the North Western Line (Chicago & North-Western Railway), has recently inaugurated through train service between Chicago and the Lake Superior region. This new train is known as the "Duluth and Superior Special," and it leaves Chicago daily at 5:50 p. m., arriving at Superior at 8:20 a. m. and Duluth at 8:52 a. m. the next day, making the journey in the remarkably quick time of fifteen hours. The train is made up of baggage cars, standard day coaches and palace buffet sleeping cars of the most modern and approved design, and all classes of passengers are carried through without change of cars. Supper is served in dining car after departure from Chicago, and breakfast is served from a well stocked buffet before arrival at Duluth. To insure yourself a quick and comfortable journey be sure to ask for tickets via the North-Western Line. Any ticket agent can furnish full information regarding this railway, or it will be promptly furnished upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago.

NATIONAL SUFFRAGE CONVENTION.

For the Woman's National Suffrage Convention at Washington, beginning Jan. 15th, the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. will sell tickets at the rate of a fare and a third for the round trip on the certificate plan. Delegates and others attending the convention should not forget to accept from ticket agent from whom they purchase their tickets a certificate certifying the route traveled and the amount paid; nor should they forget to have this certificate properly indorsed at Washington, so that the B. & O. ticket agents in that city will be in position to accept it, and sell the holder a return ticket at one-third the usual fare. As all Baltimore and Ohio trains between the East and West pass through Washington, the B. & O. ("The Picturesque Route") should be the most convenient to those attending the convention. Those traveling via the B. & O. will see the most picturesque scenery in America while crossing the Alleghany Mountains, and will learn more of the nation's history in traversing the Potomac Valley, which was the pathway of civilization to the West, and which later was the theater of the bloody struggle between the North and the South.

For detailed information as to rates, time of train, and Pullman sleeping car accommodations, apply to L. S. Allen, the Rookery, Chicago, Ill.; C. P. Craig, 415 Broadway, N. Y.; A. J. Simmons, 211 Washington St., Boston, Mass.; James Potter, 833 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., or to Chas. O. Scull, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore Md.

PERFECTION IN TRAVELING.

At 6:00 p. m. daily one of the handsomest trains in the United States and known as the North-Western Limited leaves the passenger station of the North-Western Line in Chicago on its journey to St. Paul and Minneapolis, the twin cities of the Northwest. Vestibuled throughout, and equipped with buffet, library cars, private compartment sleeping cars, drawing-room sleepers and superb dining cars, it furnishes its occupants with every comfort and convenience which could be desired by the most fastidious.

While in its entirety it undoubtedly takes rank with the finest trains in the world, there are two features of its equipment which deserve especial mention, for they are new departures in the western railway world:

The buffet and library car is furnished in the most luxurious manner with comfortable arm chairs, writing desks, book cases and a well-stocked buffet, from which light refreshments are served. The private compartment sleeping car is designed especially for the accommodation of family parties and ladies traveling without escort. It is composed of ten separate compartments, each complete in itself, and containing washstand, hot and cold running water and all necessary toilet arrangements.

Aside from these two features, it is in keeping with the rest of the service to say that the supper served in the dining car after the train leaves Chicago is a meal calculated to please the epicure.

In a word, if you desire to travel in the most comfortable manner and make the trip to St. Paul, Minneapolis, or any point in the Northwest, in the quickest time, be sure that your ticket reads via the North-Western Line. Maps, time tables and full information can be obtained upon application to any ticket agent or by addressing W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & North-Western R'y, Chicago.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, December 1, 1892. Number 48

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Miss Ella Knowles has been elected attorney-general of Montana.

Indiana Christian Endeavorers were in annual convention the past week.

A notable meteoric shower was witnessed at San Francisco last Thursday night.

The debate on the new army bill of Germany opened in the Reichstag Wednesday.

Clouds prevented the expected observations of the great comet which was to pass very near the earth last Sunday night.

Mr. Gladstone and other English notables dined with Queen Victoria last Saturday, and discussed the subject of the poet laureateship.

The New York Sun reports that despite the restrictions imposed by existing laws nearly one thousand steerage passengers from Europe landed at Ellis Island within a week.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg, Friday, announces that the Czar has appointed the Czarevitch to be president of the Russian state council, under whose presidency the persecution of the Jews and Catholics may probably be remitted.

The annual report of the United States treasurer just submitted shows a good cash balance of nearly eight hundred millions of dollars, a reduction of interest-bearing loans, and a large increase of the total amount of money in circulation.

Cardinal Lavigerie, known for his energetic opposition to the African slave trade, and as the founder of the "Armed Brothers of the Sahara," whose object was the suppression of slavery, died at Algiers, November 26, aged sixty seven years.

A proposed gigantic beer combination is announced in the newspapers of this week by which the Rothschilds of England, with a capital stock of $40,000,000 and bonds to the amount of $200,000,000, would practically control the beer market of the world.

At the International Silver Conference in Brussels, Friday, Senator Allison presented the demands of the United States in a resolution regarding the maintenance of a fixed relative value between gold and silver as a circulating medium, their unrestricted coinage, the ratio of coinage between the two metals, and a uniform charge, if any, to the public for minting coins.

Opposers of Sunday closing of the Columbian Exposition have presented a plan to hold divine services at Jackson Park every Sunday. President Higginbotham also issued a letter the past week, urging the present Congress and every Congressman elect to repeal the action of August 5, which made the gift of two and a half million dollars dependent on the closing of the gates.

THE W. C. T. U. gathering for 1893 at Lake Bluff, Ill., has been made a National meeting for next year only, being under the direction of the National union. This action was taken because of the convenience of location to the World's Fair city, a distance of only thirty miles.

BECAUSE of incomparable injustice on the part of the associated press, it is impossible, even at this late date, to secure accurate returns of the Prohibition vote. The returns from one state alone will demonstrate this. The official vote for General Bidwell, in Illinois, was reported through the associate press as only 4,500, whereas it is 26,000. Through state returns, it seems entirely safe to place the Prohibition vote at its original estimate, 350,000, as against 250,000 in 1888, and 150,000 in 1884. The states making the greatest Prohibition increase are New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and New Jersey.

THE usual press of National Convention news has prevented the mention of many interesting state convention items, among them being the resignation of Mrs. Esther T. Housh, so long president of Vermont W. C. T. U. Her departure is a great loss to her devoted comrades of that state, but was necessitated by a need of rest, which we trust will be found in her new home in Boston, where as honorary president of her old state union, she will be in ready call for counsel.

THE California W. C. T. U. annual convention recently held in San Jose took strong grounds on the tobacco question. Referring to the fact that one of its many departments of work was on narcotics, the committee on resolutions offered the following: "Resolved, that no speaker or worker be employed who uses tobacco in any form." It received unanimous indorsement amid immense applause. By this consistent action users of the weed stand no chance with white-ribboners in California.

MISS LUCY ANTHONY has been made secretary of the woman's lecture bureau and it is fully expected that under her management it will become as great a success as are the other enter prises of the National W. C. T. U. The address of Miss Anthony is Somerton, Philadelphia, Pa. She is associated with Mrs. Rachel Foster Avery, the accomplished secretary of the Woman's National Council, and will endeavor to secure on her list the leading suffrage speakers, as well as those in other forms of philanthropy, men as well as women. She is the niece of Susan B. Anthony and shares that distinguished lady's clear-cut business abilities and faithfulness to trusts reposed in her.

THE following good words of one of our own valued allies, published in a leading English paper, will be eagerly read: "Mr. John G. Woolley, of Minneapolis, who is now in England, is a barrister, possessing the distinctive gifts of oratory that always secure in England the genuine popularity which a talented speaker justly merits. Crowds were turned away from the doors during the meetings Mr. Woolley recently held in South Wales, and Mr. Woolley's reputation as a speaker has been fully assured. At one of his meetings over one hundred women stood up in response to his appeal as a testimony of their willingness to help on the white-ribbon movement in this country."

To properly emphasize the importance of next year's temperance conventions we here repeat in more detail the substance of previous statements. After a conference, presided over by Archbishop Ireland, and attended by Judge C. C. Bonney, Captain Rumsey, I. Hayman, Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard, Mrs. Carse and Mrs. Barker, it was decided, on behalf of all the great temperance societies (all of them being represented), that June 8 and 9 should be set apart for the World's W. C. T. U. To this point we shall hereafter work, Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, secretary of that society, preparing the program, assisted by Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset and the other general officers, by the local committee (of which Mrs. Carse is now chairman and Mrs. Barker, secretary) and Mesdames Rounds, Lathrap, Hoffman and Burt, appointed by the National Convention. It is purposed to have this convention "made up of every creature's best," and with such an array of names on the committee of arrangements we may regard success as already organized and sure. The Women's International Congress (May 15–22) will represent our "chief speakers," and the regular annual meeting of the National W. C. T. U. will be held October 16–21, in connection with the Columbian Exposition. The Agricultural Congress will be at the same time, and our speakers will address some of its most important meetings. In return, we expect leaders of that great congress to speak before our convention, that the two movements may more nearly approach each other in principle and plan.

THE faculty of the Chicago University has, through President Harper, publicly advised the students not to establish secret societies. Fraternities are not prohibited but if any are established, they must be subject to regulations laid down by the faculty, which also reserves the right to suppress a chapter at any time.

THE Tennessee conference of the Methodist Episcopal church south, on the last day of its recent session at Nashville, adopted the strongest possible temperance resolutions. One of the introductory sentences to the resolutions reads, "We do not undervalue the gospel of the Son of God, nor moral suasion in any form; but in our opinion moral suasion alone can never free us from an evil created at the ballot-box; and perpetuated by the same instrumentality." The resolutions are very comprehensive, denouncing the renting of property for the purposes of the liquor business, or in any other way, directly or indirectly, assisting the traffic; calling for legislative enactments which provide for scientific temperance instruction in the schools; recommending unfermented wine for sacramental purposes, etc. One resolution indorses the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The Tennessee conference has five hundred and twenty-eight ministers and sixty-one thousand lay membe[illegible]

DURING the Columbian Exposition [illegible]ly noontide meetings in the interest of equal suffrage and the advancement of the cause of woman will be held in an auditorium in the Exposition grounds. These meetings which are, of course, to be free are to be under the management of the Columbian Exposition committee. In carrying on such an extensive work the committee cannot undertake to pay speakers either for expenses or fee, so that it must appeal for help to all speakers upon subjects connected with the "woman question" in the most comprehensive meaning of that phrase. If each reader will kindly make it a point to send at once to Rachel Foster Avery, Somerton, Philadelphia, the names and addresses of all speakers of her acquaintance who have expressed an intention to visit the fair, together with the dates and length of time which they will be there, it will greatly help the committee to arrange its program, and the former will be doubly valuable if received promptly.

AN Eastern paper in claiming that one of the recent political candidates imbibed more alcoholic drink than he "could comfortably carry" when in New York, assumed the miserable position that "a man's personal conduct is none of the public's business." We regard this utterance as just as bad, and no worse, than that other more explosive and unquotable utterance of the departed William Vanderbilt concerning the public. It is a little late in the day for any intelligent editor to say that a man's personal record is not the business of the public. The joke would be a huge one were it not so ghastly. The American editor has compassed sea and land, night and day, paradise and purgatory to present to the public the private record of every man and woman in whom said public take an interest. The interview is a Yankee invention, and one of our best or worst according to the manner in which it is used. We know what our public men and women are as to their morality, their business integrity, their truthfulness and propriety in general. If what we know has not all filtered into the papers it is still well understood and will get there in the course of time. The respected editor of the eastern paper is hereby humbly informed, that, whether the personal habits of any public character are the business of the public or not, said public will make those habits its business, and in the long run the man or woman will go up or down according to what those habits are. The women of this country will see to it that this test is applied in proportion as they have power to do so, and, while their individual power may not be great, their aggregated ability to carry out this program will, ere long, be undoubted.

FAME NOWADAYS.

BY TARPLEY STARR.

Just fasten your name to the tail of a kite,
In big, brazen letters, and tackle it tight,
With a crowd to hurrah, and wind setting right.

['Tisn't Ben Franklin's you may rest assured!
The kite scientific to pierce through the cloud
And bring back to mortals the spark it's secured.]

Just newspaper kite—and now let it fly
A readable height for the cyclopean eye;
All crowds have the one, and it can't look too high!

There let it wriggle and gyrate and flout,
And twist it, and turn itself inside out—
The wind puff its puffs, and crowd shout its shout.

There like a rope-dancer 'twill swing at its ease,
And cut with the wind any caper you please,
Every man a reporter each caper to seize.

So A says to B, "Oh, behold! Just behold!"
And B says to C, "What a tail't can unfold!"
And all men of letters say, "Half was not told!"

So crowd after crowd will bandy the name,
From tongue unto tongue 'twill leap like a flame,
'Till all the world knows it—and isn't that fame?

Berryville, Va.

SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH.*

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

CHAPTER XV.

Marston, shut in his room for most of the day, had emerged from it at twilight and made his way toward the hemlocks for a breath of refreshment before supper. He had half hoped to find Dr. Martha there, and smiled at his own disappointment as no trace of the little figure was seen on the way or under the wide-spreading branches, in which she, no less than he, delighted. He sat down for a moment and leaned his hot forehead against the trunk of the largest, a friendly and companionable covert, refuge and help. Again he smiled as he found himself repeating each word aloud and criticising the mixture of metaphor in his own mind.

"Why not, after all?" he said, after a moment, in which certain old words seemed to rise before him. "A man shall be a covert from the tempest and a hiding place from the wind; as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.' That is friendly, God knows. It is the Doctor himself, bless him! I wonder if he knows the etymology of his name? Queer old Saxon, and descriptive like all their names; Scaur, or any of half a dozen ways of spelling it, but all the same meaning—a rock, and Borough, the home of the rock. He is steadfast and solid enough to set up half a dozen townships. But if it is true of a man, if he can be what he is for all of us, the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, it is truer of a woman. Hers is a tenderer shadow. It lingers longer. Little Dr. Martha, child as you are, there is not one of us that does not linger joyfully in your shade, and dread any passage out to noonday. My God! shall I ever dare face the open road again!"

Marston's eyes were closed. To the passer-by he would have seemed to be sleeping peacefully, curtained and shielded by the spicy greenery above and about him. But the restless thought went on in words that long ago he had repeated with vague doubt which might be truth, the doubt of his own soul or the faith of him who in them appealed for faith.

"I believe in you, my soul—the other I am must not abase itself to you; and you must not be abased to the other.

"For soul helps sense no less than sense helps soul," he went on, after a moment, in which hot tears, brushed angrily away, had rushed to his eyes. "I am a failure. Life has beaten me. I dare not face it again."

What words were those that rose as if spoken in his ear? Words from the strong soul now passed on, who all his life feared neither man, nor life, nor death, but with quiet eyes watched such happenings as were the portion of each, content with a hard fate, and to the end silent as to his own portion of allotted pain. Strong words, and Marston's head lifted as they spoke themselves.

"With music strong I come—with my cornets and my drums,
I play not marches for accepted victors only—I play
Great marches for conquered and slain persons.

"Have you heard that it was good to gain the day?
I also say it is good to fall; battles are lost in the same Spirit in which they are won.

"I beat and pound for the dead;
I blow through my embouchures my loudest and gayest for them.

"Vivas to those who have failed!
And to those whose war vessels sank in the sea!
And to those themselves who sank in the sea!"

Marston's eyes were bright. His lips still moved, and now he took from his pocket a little note book, and from its leaves a letter, worn with much handling and breaking away in the folds.

"She would not grudge it that I kept this one," he muttered, turning the closely written pages, till he came to one on which verses were plain.

"Not very much as poetry, perhaps," he said, "but she had had the same thought long before I showed her Whitman and Story; neither of them any bigger souled than the little woman who threw me off because I could not keep a promise. She would have made me strong enough to do it, and yet would she, or could she? The strength must be from within. So far it has always failed me when I needed it most, yet here is another word for even the failure—her own," and he read:

"Too long the song has only been
For those who conquered in the fight;
For those, who battling for the right,
Saw Victory and her banner's sheen.

"Who sings the song of those who failed?
Who chants the battle fought and lost?
The struggling souls who paid the cost
For other souls, then, silent, sailed

"To that far shore, where, lost in shade,
No eye may see what glory waits,
Or know, when passed within its gates,
What honors to the weak are paid.

"Men say, 'They failed. Their lives lacked grasp;
They knew not how to snatch success,
Their way was barred; they could not guess
What waited bolder eye and clasp.

"God knows. The strife to them was long,
They bore a burden none might see,
Death's touch alone could make them free
And give the keynote to their song,

"Unsung through every voiceless year,
The silence piercing soul and brain,
Till waking, cured of life's long pain,
God hears it rising full and clear.

"Oh, unknown heroes, sad of heart,
Whose weary days seem only loss,
The crescent shines above the cross,
Who knows what victory is your part?"

"She had lived it, brave, true soul," he thought after a moment in which he kissed the words passionately, pressing them to his eyes and lips, and then restoring them to their hiding place. "Would she have more mercy on me now, I wonder, and where has she wandered? It was her last year at Philadelphia. She had to pass her examination, and read her thesis, with all that horrible burden of loss weighing her down. I know how she would do it, the plucky darling, with head up, and no man, no, nor woman either, the wiser for any word of hers. But oh, my Althea, if you could come back again, I would promise and I would—"

He stopped short, and rose to his feet. There was a sound in the thicket just beyond the hemlocks, but it ceased as he sprang up.

"A stray cow," he said, after a moment in which a sudden hush of expectation was upon him, and sat down again, but the spell was broken, and after a pause he rose restlessly, and made his way toward the open road, repeating half aloud as was his custom, the words truer to the form of poetry than those he had first recalled, but no whit nobler in spirit:

"I sing the hymn of the conquered, who fell in the battle of life—
The hymn of the wounded, the beaten, who died overwhelmed in the strife;
Not the jubilant song of the victors, for whom the resounding acclaim
Of nations was lifted in chorus, whose brows wore the chaplet of fame—
But the hymn of the low and the humble, the weary, the broken in heart,
Who strove and who failed, acting bravely a silent and desperate part;
Whose youth bore no flower on its branches, whose hopes burned in ashes away,
From whose hand slipped the prize they had grasped at—who stood at the dying of day
With the work of their life around them, unpitied, unheeded, alone,
With death swooping down o'er their failure, and all but their faith overthrown.

"While the voice of the world shouts its chorus, its pæan for those who have won—
While the trumpet is sounding triumphant, and high to the breeze and the sun
Gay banners are waving, hands clapping, and hurrying feet
Thronging after the laurel crowned victors—I, I stand on the field of defeat
In the shadow, 'mongst those who are fallen and wounded and dying—and there
Chant a requiem low, place my hand on their pain-knotted brows, breathe a prayer,
Hold the hand that is helpless, and whisper, 'They only the victory win,
Who have fought the good fight and have vanquished the demon that tempts us within;
Who have held to their faith unseduced by the prize that the world holds on high;
Who have dared for a high cause to suffer, resist, fight—if need be to die.'

"Speak, History, who are life's victors? Unroll thy long annals and say—
Are they those whom the world called the victors who won the success of a day?
The martyrs or Nero? The Spartans who fell at Thermopylæ's tryst,
Or the Persians and Xerxes? His judges, or Socrates? Pilate or Christ?"

As he walked there seemed in them the beat of a great march; the march of the ages, up and on through all doubt and uncertainty and even visible failure, till the feet crossed the river and found firmer ground on a shore where the judgment of man gives place to that of the Father, waiting for His own. A strange and unusual mood was upon him. He was no longer alone, but one with this mighty host, his feet bleeding from the cruel way, his heart heavy within him, yet a new lightness rising and filling his soul. Whatever might be its meaning, for the moment it meant deliverance, and he stretched his arms as if something dear and sweet were near.

"Oh, I have suffered," he said low. "I have suffered. Is it all my fault? Was I not born to an inheritance such as few men know? My God, if there is surely a God, give me release from pain. Let me know peace and come to my own at last."

Dr. Martha had come silently, running as the twilight deepened, and now she sprang into the open arms, since why were they open if not for her? Marston folded her close. Surely this little child was promise of more good to come, and he bowed his head as she pressed her soft lips to his, and then took his hand, half walking, half running at his side.

"Such a beautiful time," she said, "the new doctor, you know, and three little boys and girls, lame and everything, and she is going to make them well. It is like the 'beautiful Gate' you know, that you read about the other day; 'lame from our birth,' and all the rest, and there they are, and she can cure them if they mind her, and the boy promised me he would. Johnny is there now, telling him all about the things he had to do, and Dr. Althea says—"

"Who?" said Marston in a voice so strange that Dr. Martha paused in a fright and looked into his face.

"Dr. Althea Manning. Didn't you know she was in the old Perkins place? The very place where Daniel and Dorcas let their bones get like peppermint stick, father said, because they liked to live on pie. She knows better; I mean the new doctor—Dr. Althea, that is what she said I should call her. Shall I take you to see her?"

"Not to-night, little one," said Marston, and now as they had reached the house, he kissed her again tenderly and solemnly, and going to his room entered there and shut the door.

Lanesborough, Mass.

(To be continued.)

*Copyrighted.

TOBACCO AND THE CHRISTIAN.

BY IRA GALE TOMPKINS.

The Michigan Christian Advocate, of June 11, has a short and suggestive article by E. E. Wood, "May Christians Sell Tobacco?" from which a paragraph is here quoted:

We say much about the liquor traffic, and the awful results of the saloon, both to the individual and the nation, and this is all right. But let us also remember its twin evil, tobacco. It is estimated that the tobacco bill is $600,000,000 for the United States in one year. Of course, not all who use it are Christians, but many profess to be. Since it is a sin to put the bottle to a neighbor's lips, is it not also wrong to sell that which ruins the temple of the Holy Ghost?

It is hardly possible to overestimate the demoralizing effects that, directly and indirectly, follow the traffic in these "twin evils," alcohol and tobacco.

Twin evils are they indeed, and doubly cursed; well deserving the language of Shakespeare: "They have broken open the Lord's anointed temple and have stolen from thence the life of the building." They not only steal from the blood and brains of their victims, but rob their pockets as well.

The government recognizes these twin evils, in making their poor, deluded victims pay ten times the value of their indulgences in money alone; and thus, in a measure, it reimburses itself for legalizing a traffic that either directly or indirectly helps to make paupers and felons.

No article of commerce, if we except spirits, pays a duty so enormous as tobacco. From it is derived the principal part of the revenue of every country, England especially receiving a duty that seems stupendous. For what her people pay us $2,000,000 they pay their own government for the privilege of using $20,000,000.

The amount of tobacco manufactured and sold in Chicago alone is enough to astound one not already familiar with the facts connected with the vast extent of this traffic. The revenue returns of the Chicago district for 1891 represent 1,333 manufactories of cigars and cigarettes which returned duty on 170,106,800 cigars, and 3,146,050 cigarettes; 130 tobacco factories returned duty on 2,448,920 pounds smoking tobacco, 1,156,004 pounds fine cut tobacco, 190,189 pounds snuff, making an aggregate of 7,798,012 pounds of manufactured tobacco, paying to the revenue of the United States the large sum of $977,542.98.

But this amount, great as it is, is but a fraction of the vast tobacco traffic of Chicago; as it is estimated on the best authority of one of the largest representative tobacco houses here, that fully seven-eighths of the tobacco sold in the city is manufactured in other places in the United States.

No plug tobacco is made in Chicago, and a responsible dealer well acquainted with the facts asserted that fully 14,000,000 pounds were sold here annually.

Estimating the outside manufactories to be only four-fifths of the whole trade in tobacco, the aggregate sale of all kinds of the "filthy weed" would be equal to 40,000,000 pounds; enough if all consumed within the city to give to every man, woman and child an average of forty pounds each.

As near as can be ascertained there are in Chicago 20,000 places where cigars, cigarettes and tobacco are retailed; and it is said by those best qualified to judge that from 800,000 to 1,000,000 cigars and cigarettes are consumed in the city daily.

Taking into account the 1,463 manufactories, the largest of which employs 500 people—including all ages and both sexes—and the 20,000 places where tobacco is sold, it is reasonable to assume that 100,000 people, or say fully one-tenth of the whole population of Chicago, derive their income and support wholly or in part from tobacco.

Are not these very significant facts? and to the political economist and the moral philosopher do they not offer a wide field for speculation, as well as for conscientious and zealous action?

Happily the rising generation is being educated in our public schools to a knowledge of the pernicious effects of those common evils, alcohol, opium and tobacco. But we who tread the present stage of action have much to contend with—not only in the evils themselves, but in the almost omnipotent and demoralizing power of the ill-gotten wealth that backs them up.

If of these three evils we were to choose the least, our selection would probably fall upon tobacco, which although bad enough, does not directly put an enemy in the mouth to steal away the brains at once. It does not directly transform a mild and gentle man into an incarnate fiend. It does not filch from him his good name—deprive him of his manhood and self respect and roll him in the gutter. It does not rob his wife and children entirely of their patrimony and support and make their protector and defender a pariah and a leper in society whose approach is to be dreaded more than the pestilence that walketh at noon-day. It is not the author and instigator of nearly all the crimes in the calendar of human depravity for six thousand years—which if they could be collected would make a pyramid of human wickedness that would

"O'ertop old Pelion,
Or the skyish head of blue Olympus."

To these negative virtues, if they may be termed such, tobacco may be said to lay some claim.

A writer in one of the quarterlies in summing up the effects of tobacco upon the moral and intellectual character of nations, says:

It is said to make the Frenchman more gay, and the Spaniard more grave. It has confirmed the German in his speculative philosophies, and has made fatalism the firm belief of the Moslem. The Turks, who, before the discovery of tobacco were the terror of Christendom, have since sunk into the "sick man" of the nations. The Hollanders, whose ancestors swept the seas with the broom of their commerce, now contentedly smoke their pipes and live upon the remembrance of their former greatness. Its effects upon the American nation may be seen in the increased activity of the mental powers at the expense of the physical frame. The mind becomes more brilliant but less deep; our activity greater, but our endurance less.

In the words of the "myriad-minded" all these evils

"The world well knows, but none know well
To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell."

But upon both the men and the women of the present generation a great moral responsibility devolves. When our brothers' and sisters' welfare and well doing become as dear to us as is our own, and the greatest good to each shall be the common good of all, then shall we realize something of the prophecy of the poet:

"When the common sense of most shall hold a fretful realm in awe,
And the kindly earth shall slumber, lapt in universal law."

Chicago, Ill.

IN MEMORIAM OF ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON.

BY HENRY HAY CAMERON.

[The following contribution has been sent by a distinguished artist, cousin of Lady Henry Somerset, whose mother was an intimate friend of Lord Tennyson. She was a woman of rare genius and poetic talent and the very first artistic photographer of her time. Her son, who has inherited her gifts, is well known as being one of the finest photographers in England. He has also sent the latest portrait that was produced of the Laureate, who sat to him a little while before his last illness, and which has not before been given to the public, but was granted as a special favor to THE UNION SIGNAL.—EDS.]

On October 6, soon after noon, were laid the earthly remains of Alfred, Lord Tennyson, to rest in Westminster Abbey by the side of Robert Browning, close to Chaucer and Dryden. The fine statue of Shakespeare, which stands hard by, seemed to be watching with sad eyes the last honors paid to England's latest poet—to him, who loved the works of the Bard of Avon so well that they had become a part of himself, and according to whose wish this dear volume was by loving hands placed in his coffin.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON.

Nature had never fashioned a more noble casket for a great soul than when she moulded the form of Alfred Tennyson.

"A combination, and a form, indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal
To give the world assurance of a man."

Of commanding stature, with broad shoulders, his was the grandest presence imaginable; his head was as a dome of a mighty cathedral, his voice of deeper tone and fuller music than that of its great organ.

Never shall I forget the effect of his reading of his weird poem "Rizpah"—it was my good fortune to travel down to Aldworth with Madame Modjeska, and after dinner the poet took us to his study and read it to us. Modjeska was completely overcome and threw herself at the poet's feet, seizing his hand, kissed it again and again. His reading was a melodious chant. His sweet, full voice echoed round the corners of the room and its exquisite tenderness will echo in my heart forever.

When I was five years old, the friendship that existed between my father and mother and Tennyson caused them to forsake London and settle down at the gates of Farringford in the Isle of Wight. This is not the moment for anecdote or trivial story.

"Be wise; not easily forgiven
Are those who, setting wide the doors that bar
The secret bridal chambers of the heart,
Let in the day."

I cannot help however recording one poetic saying.

When my father returned from a visit to Ceylon, having grown a snow-white beard during his absence, he was met by his friend with the poetic greeting,

"Why, Cameron! you have dipped your chin in moonlight since I saw you last!"

My beloved mother and the poet were very dear friends and recently I have been reading a precious packet of letters, letters of a poet every one of them, for one tells of the joy in the poet's household at the birth of their eldest son, now some forty years ago. Another speaks of the birth of the second boy and of the half puzzlement and half adoration with which the little Hallam gazed upon his baby brother Lionel.

The dearest friend I ever had was Lionel Tennyson; we spent our holidays as boys in close companionship; we each had a passion for terriers, for our guns and for rabbit shooting, and from morning till night we were in the fields together and in later life this boyish friendship was strengthened and confirmed until that unhappy morning when I parted from him at Victoria station when he started on a "holiday trip" to India whence he was never to return.

My mother's photographs, and indeed some of my own too, of Tennyson are well known. Mr. F. D. Maurice wrote: "Had we such pictures of Shakespeare and Milton we should know more of their own selves. We should have better commentaries on 'Hamlet' and 'Comus' than any one now possesses, even as you have secured to us a better commentary on 'Maud' and on 'In Memoriam' than all our critics have given us or will give us."

In the last days, as the mighty soul of the great poet was pluming its wings to fly beyond the skies, he called to his dear son—whose never failing care has been so true and constant, the beauty of whose pious devotion makes the heart sing with delight: "Hallam, bring me my Shakespeare; that's right; place it here, near me, so, now I can keep my hand on it; don't take it away." Let us close the curtain on this exquisite picture and say, "Farewell, dear poet! a grateful world blesses you and thanks you. and parts with you with a grief 'too full for sound and foam.'"

THE WORLD ABROAD, OR TEMPERANCE NOTES FROM FOREIGN LANDS.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

Author of "Physical Education," "The Bible of Nature," "International Health Studies," etc.

A SAD DISCOVERY.

Prof. H. D. Werner, who has been exploring the wilderness near the Mexican health resort of Medellin, reports the discovery of a district where a sort of strong brandy can be made from palm-juice at ten cents a gallon. If the rumor should be confirmed, the concourse of health seekers from Texas alone will soon reduce the natives of that district to standing-room.

THEORY AND EXPERIENCE.

The natives of the Island of Crete used to include temperance laws among the grievances endured at the hands of the Turkish government, and maintained that restrictions on the sale of liquor ought to be abolished altogether, as hurtful impediments to industrial enterprise. During a partially successful rebellion the experiment was tried in several communities, and their own leaders now confess that without legislative limits to the progress of intemperance the promotion of industry is as impossible as the enforcement of law and order. They recommend restrictions on the local sale of wine and brandy, but encourage the export trade, being willing to let their foreign fellow-Christians poison themselves at their own risk—on the same principle that quite a number of California wine growers are disinclined to countenance intemperance among their own employés.

LUCID INTERVALS.

The weak-minded heir to the crown of Bavaria now and then deludes his physicians with symptoms of recovery, and during an interval of that sort was permitted to attend a fête champêtre at Bamberg, where he smashed sixty-five bottles of high-grade champagne. He was at once sent back to his sanitarium, though the incident seems to confirm the impression that the mind of the ill-fated prince enjoys occasional gleams of reason.

CLIMATE AND VENDETTAS.

A Kentucky patriot excuses the family feuds of the "Dark and Bloody Ground" on the plea that guerilla warfare seems to be a natural effect of highland climates. He quotes the vendettas of the Corsican mountaineers and the brigandage of the Apennines, but seems to forget that in vast areas of the Swedish and Austrian highlands deeds of violence are almost unknown, and that the inhabitants of the Silesian hill country are about the most peaceful and law-abiding bipeds of our latter day world. It seems, indeed, highly probable that the low price of whisky in the Kentucky "wild cat districts" stimulates the combativeness of the natives quite as much as the height of their mountains.

HUMAN BEER BARRELS.

In a garden restaurant, known as the Kaffee-mühle, near Cassel, Germany, a student died from the effects of a drinking match after swallowing twenty-eight schooners of lager beer. The effect might seem less amazing than the cause, but a correspondent of the Chicago Mail claims to have visited all the principal breweries of the Garden City, in order to ascertain the drinking capacity of a lager expert, and assures his readers that fifty and sixty glasses a day "will hurt nothing but the feelings of a Prohibitionist." The liberality of the brewers, he tells us, permits their employés to drink all they want, free of cost, during working hours, and merely as a matter of curiosity requires the brewery butler to keep tally of the amount swallowed. In that way it was ascertained that individuals of our species manage to drink eighty to one hundred glasses a day. "Man wants but little here below, nor wants that little long," and it is not probable that champions of that sort live long enough to be a serious tax upon the "liberality" of their employers.

A BELATED CONVERT.

Ernest Renan, during the last three years of his life, was a martyr to gout and rheumatism, and was warned by his family doctor that he would aggravate his condition by persisting in his whim of abstinence from strong, black coffee, in which beverage he had formerly indulged rather to excess. "Let us be frank, Doctor," said the dying dissenter. "My great trouble is that I did not extend that retrenchment to wine long ago."

TEMPERANCE TOWNS.

The Hungarian Prince Estcohazy, possessor of vast real estate, considers slilovity (a sort of plum brandy) the chief obstacle to the progress of his countrymen. Under the impulse of that conviction he has repeatedly discussed the project of founding settlements upon a basis of total abstinence from at least the more ruinous stimulants, but concluded that, with "brandy-tippling communities all around, the experiment would necessarily be a failure." Is it possible that our East European contemporaries have never heard of Harriman and Colorado Springs?

A FAMINE FACTORY.

Maj. F. H. Law, an attaché of the British embassy at St. Petersburg, states as the result of personal investigation that the famine of the eastern and northern provinces is apt to become a chronic evil. The agricultural communities of the Empire are managed on a plan which compels the cultivators of the soil to give up their farms every third year, and as a consequence the productive capacity of the soil is being rapidly exhausted. Forest destruction, too, has resulted in a deterioration of the climate, and the Major might add that the Russian peasants are not only permitted, but deliberately encouraged, to spend their scant savings in the government vodka taverns.

CENTENARIANS.

Only sixty years ago an eminent French physician recorded his doubt in the actual existence of centenarians, and asserted that not a single case of that sort had been established by satisfactory proof. International statistics have since completely removed that doubt. The Austrian Empire, in 1890, could boast a preëminence of longevity by proving the possession of not less than thirty five centenarians. North America (Canada and the United States) can almost match that record, and there is no doubt that the average of longevity has considerably increased since the revival of temperance among the North Caucasian nations. Statistics were unknown in the middle ages, but the premature death of countless princes, prelates and scholars during the zenith period of the drink-vice is a suggestive circumstance, and the Venetian nobleman, Cornaro (author of a once famous work on diet-reform) incidentally mentions that a dozen of his own relatives had by persistent intemperance and gluttony shortened their lives to an average of forty-five years.

A SAFER WAY.

In British India, where venomous snakes abound in every thicket, hartshorn and the local application of nitric acid have proved far more effective remedies than the Texas plan of filling the patient with brandy. One explanation of the apparent effectiveness of the latter expedient is the circumstance that a large percentage of snake bitten persons are not poisoned at all, the virus having been absorbed by their clothing. In such cases a serpent bite may fail to produce even a swelling, and the prostration of the whisky-dosed patient is due to the effects of the alleged remedy.

BLESSINGS IN DISGUISE.

The Pasteur remedy for the increase of the insects that ravage the vineyards of southern Europe has proved a mere palliative. The plague reappears after a temporary suppression, and in the vineyard districts of Cadiz, Spain, and Pau, southern France, many land owners have adopted a radical change of program and planted the ground with carol beans and young olive trees.

A CRUCIAL TEST.

A Chippewa Indian, employed on a Canadian lake steamer, increases his emoluments by swallowing pounded glass, tobacco, coal-oil, and similar delicacies in the presence of the passengers at twenty-five cents a gulp. The ship carpenters offered him a lump of putty, containing white lead, but he swallowed it without flinching, and with such evident impunity that his messmates have come to consider him poison-proof. The proof of that inference cannot, however, be considered conclusive, till the experimenters have tried a dose of Chicago whisky.

Cincinnati, O.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

JAPAN'S WELCOME.

Ito is as common a name in Japan as Smith is in America and implies no more relationship in those bearing it. Count Ito whose niece has gone to America for training in our Temperance Hospital, is primé minister of the empire; Professor Ito, of Yokohama, was one of my faithful helpers in the work there, and Commissioner Ito, of Sapporo, is leader of the temperance work, each representing a different family.

Mr. Tsuda, of Tokio, is another leader in temperance work who has a remarkable history. He is fifty-six years old, so has lived through the wonderful changes which transformed old into new Japan. After Commodore Perry's visit, he learned to read English under appalling difficulties, which it is hard even to imagine nowadays. He was a member of the commission sent by Japan to America in 1864, also of the Vienna commission. He has received many honors from his government, but the distinction which he prizes most is that of being the first Methodist baptized in Tokio, I believe in Japan. He is now editor of the leading agricultural paper in Japan, and manages to do a deal of temperance and gospel work besides. His little daughter was the youngest of the girls chosen by the Imperial government to send to America to be educated, being only seven years old when she went. She remained eleven years and graduated at Bryn Mawr, then came home for a visit and afterward returned to America for a three years' post graduate course. She is now teacher in the Empress' school for girls at Tokio.

Among the earliest English books he read was one of Dr. Richardson's, which convinced him that drinking sake was wrong, and he gave it up, except taking a "little cup" on ceremonious occasions. Soon he came to give this up, and turn his glass upside down at state dinners. When Mrs. Leavitt came, he said, "I thought, here is this lady come from far away America to tell the Japanese the evils of drinking sake. I know how bad a thing it is, and am ashamed I have not told my people myself." At once he started out on a lecturing tour lasting forty days, in which he spoke fifty-eight times and started many societies. He is going to take me to some of these places on this trip. He is now editor of the leading agricultural paper in Japan, with a large business on his hands, but manages to do a great deal of gospel and temperance work besides. On my expressing the wish to have copies of the World's Petition in Japanese, he at once had it translated and several thousand copies printed, which we are now circulating.

Mr. Tsuda was in Sapporo attending the Agricultural fair, awaited my coming twenty days, and is now returning with me. He is an enthusiastic anti-tobacco worker, and is making a collection of pipes given him by those who have stopped smoking; out of them he is going to have a bell cast to be sent to the W. C. T. U. exhibit in the Columbian Exposition; Japanese pipes are made of metal—bowl and stem—mostly bronze, many brass, some silver, a few gold. He thinks it will take two thousand to make a bell of one hundred pounds, and is confident of securing that number.

He is instant in season and out of season, never losing an opportunity to speak a word for Christ or for temperance. Soon after we came aboard the steamer, I noticed him distributing leaflets to passengers and crew, and found them to be Japanese Scripture union leaflets, published by the Bible reading union, which numbers ten thousand members, all reading the same passages of Scripture each day. From three to five thousand of these leaflets are issued each month, this one being especially designed for sailors. Dr. Whitney, government translator, is at the head of this work which is sowing Japan with Bible truth.

In Sapporo I addressed a large mass-meeting in Military Hall, held two women's meetings, spoke to the children of the united Sunday-schools, and in the afternoon on the work of the World's W. C. T. U., that being the Sabbath following Mrs. Leavitt's birthday, held a workers' meeting—a real school of methods, visited the girls' schools, mission and government, and had very pleasant interviews with the Governor and the Commissioner of Education for the Hakkaido, who took me through the government schools. Of course I talked scientific temperance instruction to him; he seemed much interested and responded heartily to what I said in favor of it. I told him I intended to urge the temperance societies everywhere to work for the securing of such a law for Japan. He assured me that I might tell the people that he would give his aid and influence in favor of the measure.

Sapporo is an educational centre and its inhabitants are a reading people. This makes the literature department an important feature of their work. One great thing Mr. Ito desires is good temperance literature translated into Japanese; a gentleman has just translated Prof. Bunge's "Alcohol," and other translations will be made as fast as possible. The Hakkaido society sustains a temperance journal. Mr. Ito edits a fishery journal into which he injects temperance wherever possible, as Mr. Tsuda does into his agricultural paper. During the past year the society has published 20,000 copies of temperance leaflets, cards, etc.

My one regret in leaving Sapporo is that I had not time to see anything of the work among the Ainos, in which, as I have elsewhere told you, the Sapporo temperance society is greatly interested, nor to visit the prisons, about thirty miles from the city. Mr. Tomioka, evangelist there, came in the day of my arrival, urging me to do so. I wished very much to go, and we all tried to arrange it so I could, but it seemed impossible without sacrificing work which was more important. Mr. Tomioka came in again to our workers' meeting, and was an eager questioner. He has had a letter from Mrs. Barney and wished to know all about how we conduct prison work in America.

One thing showing the estimation in which he and his work is held by the warden is the fact that a little room has been set apart to his use for private conversation on spiritual themes with the prisoners; there he can take them, one by one, and no one, not even the warden, dares intrude upon them.

A gentleman who visited one of these prisons told me that after the men had come in from a hard day's work, had had their bath and supper, he looked into the different rooms, each of which holds twenty men, and saw often the whole twenty studying their Bibles, sometimes with the prison officers helping them. One case was related to me of a hardened criminal, so bad and dangerous that he was kept in solitary confinement. But the gospel reached even him and melted his heart. Men doubted his sincerity, thinking he was only shamming to gain favor with the warden. He bore their scoffs meekly, and kept on studying his Bible. He begged writing materials, and in a very cramped position, with insufficient light, he wrote out the first ten chapters of Matthew. This copy, circulated chapter by chapter among the prisoners who, knowing the difficulties under which it was produced, were touched by it, as they might not have been by any printed copy, was the means of many conversions.

Since leaving Sapporo I hear a rumor that this good work in one of the prisons is endangered by the appointment of a rabid Buddhist as superintendent, and that he has already removed the evangelist; it will be remembered that these were appointed by government as "teachers of morality," and it is not at all surprising that priests of the ancient faith should rebel against the followers of Jesus taking this work out of their hands. Pray earnestly that our Father will shield and continue in this blessed work His own servants.

Returning to the seaport Otaru, I addressed an audience—largely composed of fishermen and sailors—which packed the theatre. I was warned that there would probably be disturbance, but there was none, the audience being quiet and respectful to the close, when many gathered round me for a nearer view of the chart from which I had spoken. I think much of their good behavior was due to the fact that they recognized me as Mr. Ito's friend whom he had met on my landing, though he could not be with me that day. All the fishermen nearly worship him and his influence over them for good is unbounded.

I am writing in the quiet harbor of the home of the M. E. Woman's Board Mission at Hakaidate, where its teachers, Miss Dickerson, Miss Hampton and Miss Kimball have received me as a sister. Eight meetings are planned for me here, to the 1st, with the W. C. T. U. of which Mr. Tsuda's sister is president.

The two great problems which thus far have confronted me, and which need for their solution the united wisdom and prayers of the world's great sisterhood are, What can we do for temperance in the open ports? and How can we bring the women now in these mixed societies into closer fellowship with the W. C. T. U.? I should despair of solving this last problem were it not that the leading men in those societies are quite as anxious for this consummation as I am. I have thought out a plan which after consulting with Mrs. Tajama I will lay before the World's officers.

The other is much the more difficult problem and I trust that our wise hearted women will study it carefully and prayerfully and devise some practical measures for at least lessening the evils inflicted on these open ports by representatives of Christian lands.

LATER.—As no American mail goes till next week, I held this letter to complete account of work in the Hokkaido. Here in Hakaidate, it differs greatly from the work in Sapporo, both because it is an open port, swarming with fishermen and sailors, and because my audiences are largely non Christian. Saturday night I spoke in the theatre, packed with thirteen hundred people, a rude, boisterous crowd before the lecture commenced, but respectful and attentive during the services. On going to the theatre we passed through a yoshiwara—street lined with houses of prostitution, the saddest sight I ever saw. In a front room of each, behind lattice work through which they can be distinctly seen, sit a dozen girls, painted, powdered and decked in bright attire; while men and boys peer at them through the bars and make their choice. Some sat with downcast eyes and sorrowful faces, others had the brazen look of their sisters in other lands. The yoshiwara is a peculiar Japanese institution usually outside of town; that for Tokio is a city by itself, surrounded by a moat, and within dwell twenty thousand poor, degraded women. Hakaidate has one on the outskirts of the city, but the one we saw is right in the heart of the town, not far from the wharf, placed there for the special accommodation of sailors. "How long, O Lord, how long" shall these things be?

Sunday morning Mr. Tsuda spoke in the Methodist church, in the afternoon I had a children's meeting and a gospel temperance meeting in the evening. A very encouraging thing is the fact that at this meeting the church was packed, vestibule and all, out to the street, very largely with men who had never attended a Christian service before. Many stood through the entire evening, quiet and attentive; we cannot foretell results, but know they are safe in His hands whose was the seed and who gave the strength to sow it.

Monday afternoon I had an informal meeting with such of the government school-teachers as cared to meet me. Of the sixty employed in the schools, only four, so far as I can ascertain, are Christian, yet many others have come under and been benefited by Christian influence. The Normal school here used to employ six Christian teachers —natives—they were all discharged several years ago, but their influence is still felt through the teachers they trained. An application has just been received by the Methodist Episcopal mission school for one of their pupils to become a teacher in the government school, for which we are glad. In the evening we had a workers' meeting in the Presbyterian church, and this closed my work in the Hokkaido, as at eleven o'clock that night, October 3, I took the steamer for Aomori, on the main island.

MARY ALLEN WEST.

En route in Japan.

GOOD NEWS FROM AUSTRALIA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—After a very few days of rest, too few to recover from the fatigue of the months of heavy work, I went on to Adelaide to meet Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell, in order to plan for work in the colonies. One day and evening were thus spent and we separated, each to go about her Father's business.

Leaving them for distant parts where our work is wholly unknown, and where I had not an assured welcome, my heart almost failed me, but familiar faces on my way to the steamer joined me and went aboard with me. The day was clear and the water calm. Every one said, "We shall have a grand passage," but I had not the captain's guarantee for this. The steamer was very large, with few passengers, so I had a beautiful roomy cabin, and even this rough voyage had its advantages for I could say when I reached port that I was "rested."

We arrived at Albany, West Australia, some hours late because of a storm; the steamer anchored "outside" and steam launches came alongside to take passengers and baggage ashore. A committee had been appointed to meet and welcome me to the Colony. I was taken at once to a very beautiful home where I remained for the week. The bay is almost landlocked not unlike our own "Golden Gate"; the restless waves break upon the beach in a mist of foamy spray. The hills are outlined by the clear, blue sky and the city has the advantage of a lovely situation.

This colony is one of the convict settlements, and at every turn you see traces of those days. Some of the public buildings (without either form or plan) were built by convicts, and from a general survey of the town you feel it to be a very ancient place. The Colony is new and only of late have they had independent government, which is equal to a state being admitted into the Union.

The town hall was secured for the better part of the week, the mission opened by a service in the Wesleyan church, where the pastor invited me to preach. The house was packed, for a woman in the pulpit had never been known before in this colony. The mission grew in interest all through the week, and on the last night was still crowded. A prayer-meeting followed each address, and in the after-meetings some decided for Christ and many signed the pledge. One night two men, somewhat under the influence of liquor, came up to sign; (one was the town bellman and the other was the grave-digger—both hard cases). Each insisted on the other witnessing his signature. The Good Templars are very strong here and took charge of the men. At the afternoon meetings a fine union of sixty members was formed, and our banner was unfurled and flung to the breeze for the first time in this distant part of the land; some very influential ladies joined, and good will surely be done.

Before leaving the city the governor-resident (the leading position in the Colony) gave me a reception at the Residency; he invited the city officials and leading people to meet me, and as the week closed we all "thanked God and took courage," feeling more than ever that He is back of our work.

The manager of the Southern railway sent me a pass over their line, and the commissioner of the government lines sent me a free pass over all the railroads in the Colony, so I am sure they must feel that my message is a very important one. My heart has been greatly cheered by the result of this first mission, and my faith to claim the promise, "He shall send his angels before you," is strengthened.

This colony is the last one opened to real settlement, and in each place I have had to attend to the smallest detail of the mission, have had to study the whole country and arrange as best I could, and I am surprised on reaching here that I am able to carry out a program, which has cost me a year's writing over the colony to perfect. Distances are enormous, and trains only run in the day, so we can go but a thirteen hours' journey at a time. The end of such a day brought me to Beverley—but such a journey over a vast uncultivated plain like the Great Desert of America! As I started (the only solitary passenger on the train) a fierce wind was blowing, and before long a miserable cold rain set in; it was mid winter, but no means of heating the carriage, so I sat and shivered for thirteen hours. In a distance of two hundred and forty miles only one village is passed, and here we stopped to get dinner; this was served in the bar, on a tablecloth so dirty I wondered how many generations had feasted on it before my day; half cooked, tough mutton, potatoes as hard baked as clay, tea strong enough to upset one's digestion for a month, made up the bill of fare, costing seventy-five cents, and I started on "thankful to be going"; half-past eight brought me to my destination, a small place of but a few hundred souls.

Canon Groser had arranged for the mission here, and gave me a very warm welcome, conducting me to the rectory; he is a pastor of the Church of England, a very high churchman and very much in earnest for the temperance work. It was more than this that seemed to form a special bond of sympathy between us—he was "a real live American" from the state of New York. Of course we had many mutual friends, had read the same books, seen the authors of many of them, and we lived three days among the celebrities of "our day and time"; beside this he had been several years in the Sandwich Islands and knew our workers there. These were truly red-letter days for me. We started a union, held three night meetings and two in afternoons, and passed on to the next place, which was York.

Here we had enthusiastic meetings, a strong union was formed and the next appointment brought me to Northam where there is a very strong temperance sentiment and an active Good Templars Lodge, the Grand Chief Templar being a most influential person, a man of great wealth, mayor of the city and member of Parliament. The Lodge prepared the way, gave me free use of their hall also, and all the advertising. We held seven meetings, all taking the form of evangelistic services. The meetings on Sunday were marked with special power and the interest continued throughout. A very large number signed the pledge. The men were initiated into the Lodge and the women were formed into a union. The women took up their work at once and followed special lines among young men. The Lodge presented me with a gold Maltese cross, most beautifully engraved as a souvenir of my visit.

This city is the stronghold of our cause in the Colony. Some time ago a suburban town was laid out and in each deed was a clause stating that the land should never pass into the hands of any save total abstainers. This was intended largely for the working classes and the sale was arranged so that the buyer need only pay twenty-five cents a week; many boys and working girls invested. They have now grown to manhood and womanhood, many having married and settled on this land; the result is in this place the working classes are well-to do and a more prosperous community could not be found. The country about here is full of interest; from this point the camel caravans travel to the mines, three hundred miles away, and I have seldom seen a more interesting sight than these long lines of burdened beasts starting on a journey.

A drive of twenty miles, behind a fine team and through a beautiful country, brought me to the nearest town. I could not have visited the Colony at a better time to have seen it to advantage; the climate is delightful, wild flowers of every hue and shade cover the plains, hills and even the mountain sides. The variety seems almost endless, and human hand could never have strewn them in such perfect harmony as has the hand of Nature. This special locality is noted for its fine oranges and grapes, the latter had been gathered but the trees were laden with the golden fruit; the owner of one of the groves kindly sent me a large box to sample, and I found them to be as fine as any I have ever tasted.

The rest of this journey shall be told later, and the best is yet to come.

JESSIE A. ACKERMAN.

En route in Australia.

THE UNITED KINGDOM ALLIANCE.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—In Manchester, October 25 and 26, the United Kingdom Alliance held its anniversary session which was a remarkable meeting in many ways. The Alliance is one of the oldest and most powerful, as well as aggressive, of English temperance societies. It has for its president Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and counts among its vice-presidents Lady Henry Somerset, Countess of Carlisle, Canon Wilberforce, Dr. Benjamin Ward Richardson, with other distinguished advocates of the cause. Mr. James Whyte, secretary of the Alliance, presented a most masterly and comprehensive report, which showed what the Alliance had been able to do during the twelve months past. Seventy-five thousand dollars had passed through the treasurer's hands during the year. Agents are everywhere at work in the cities and villages in its interests, and hundreds of temperance meetings are arranged for by the society in all parts of Great Britain. Sir Wilfrid, in his opening speech as president, struck the keynote of the meeting by saying:

"We never were license reformers—when we begin to talk about licensing and the best system, we are a regular rope of sand. For years and years we have been building up public opinion, which we will launch out in the shape of some legislation that will carry out the objects we have in view. We are an anti licensing association, and we should stick to no-license, stick to prohibition, and go on in this way until the end comes. I challenge the whole world to find a place where prohibition has been effectively, truly and honestly carried out, where it has not been a great and glorious success. We have stuck together well through the long night of darkness, difficulty and danger and now the day is dawning, the storm is abating, land is in sight, and if we stick together as we have done, I believe in my conscience that it will not be long before we shall bring the good ship laden with the nation's hopes and followed by the nation's prayers, safe into her appointed haven."

This speech was received with tremendous applause. Sir Wilfrid is a very popular man and pleasing speaker. Mr. Caine, M. P., our honored friend, Mr. Raper, known to so many Americans for his staunch advocacy of the cause, Dr. Lees, and other familiar names, were speakers at the meeting.

Among the many features noticed in Mr. Whyte's report was Lady Henry Somerset's manifesto of June 18 and 19, which helped so greatly in the arousement of the conscience of the voter in regard to his duty at the ballot box, and which led to the election of many Parliamentary candidates who are pledged to vote to give to the people the direct local veto. Lady Henry Somerset was down on the program as the main speaker at the two evening meetings, and her absence in America was a source of regret, as many had anticipated for a long time the privilege of hearing this most eloquent orator, and as one I could not help but feel, that what was America's gain at the Denver Convention was England's loss at the Alliance meeting. A loving cable message was sent her from the conference, which was proposed from the chair by Sir Wilfrid, and passed unanimously; indeed, whenever Lady Henry's name was mentioned it received the warmest applause.

An immense audience packed Free Trade Hall on the evening of Tuesday, which was presided over by Mr. Burt, M. P., who has recently been appointed secretary of the Board of Trade. Mr. Burt represents the labor men of England, himself having come from the ranks of the working men. Sir Wilfrid, Mr. Burt, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes and others were among the speakers.

The second evening was the meeting of the Woman's Alliance; Mesdames Caine, Shaen, Misses Docwra, Balgarnie and myself were the speakers. A cablegram was also sent from the meeting to Lady Henry.

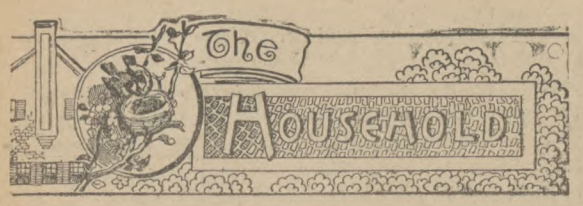
Time forbids my telling all the splendid work which the Alliance is doing, but I want to note one, that of the Alliance Press Agency, in charge of Mr. Henry Osborn, who is one of THE UNION SIGNAL correspondents. Mr. Osborn has charge of all the work connected with the press department. Over nine thousand communications have been sent out, so that on an average one hundred and twenty papers weekly have been supplied with bright, fresh, readable temperance news. Mr. Osborn is a born journalist and is a felt power in the work. Mr. Whyte, the able secretary of the Alliance, is a most indefatigable worker and a model secretary, for his earnestness and devotion to the cause leads him to hesitate at no difficulties. Both he and Mr. Osborn are loyal supporters of the W. C. T. U. and are always helping our work here.

We are waiting with impatience the home-coming of Lady Henry—only those of us who are here know what her going to America this last time meant to the work—I have over five hundred calls for her, which number can not be filled, so am planning for conferences and demonstrations in the larger centers like Manchester, Leeds, Liverpool, Nottingham, in which we hope Miss Willard may be well enough to take part.

Mr. Woolley is winning golden opinions and his services are in great demand. I have sent to THE UNION SIGNAL specimens of our World's literature which we have recently printed: Lady Henry, Miss Willard, Mrs. Josephine Butler, the Duchess of Bedford, Canon Wilberforce and others are some of our writers. We have already printed over six hundred thousand pages of literature since we opened our headquarters last July. We hope for great harvests from our seed sowing.

HELEN L. HOOD.

47 Victoria St., Westminster, London.



THE CRY OF THE WEAK.

BY E. N. TAYLOR.

Cry aloud to the Lord in your sorrow,
Pale mothers, with eyes wet with tears,
Who watch and who pray that the morrow
May bring you relief from your fears.
Too faint is the sound of your crying,
The strong and the powerful and wise,
In the market-place, selling and buying,
Are deaf to your cries.

Oh, youth, going forth in thy beauty,
With a brow that thy mother hath kissed,
They will lure thee from honor and duty,
By temptations thou canst not resist.
Cry aloud to the Lord e'er thou perish—
Thy brothers no helpers shall be—
Their gold and their silver they cherish,
But care not for thee.

Ah, me! Little children untended
Cold, hungry, and weak and in pain,
From sorrow and sin undefended,
Your sighs and your tears are in vain.
For those who might help you are lying
In the chains of a terrible spell;
Too faint is your sobbing and sighing,
Your sorrows to tell.

Cry aloud to the Lord, oh, forsaken,
Weak woman, the sinning and lost
Whose cries are too weak to awaken
The watchers, who sleep at their post.
The strong ones who should have protected,
Have turned to their work or their wine.
Forgotten, despised and rejected
Are sorrows like thine.

The man in his strength shall be shaken,
The woman shall fade in her youth,
The young in their weakness be taken,
And robbed of their virtue and truth.
And still shall the wicked be laying
The mesh of their terrible snare,
Protected and pardoned by paying
The nation a share.

Oh, Saviour! the pure and the holy,
Who died for us all on the tree,
In the churches Thy people bend lowly,
And join in their worship of Thee.
Oh, bid them to rise up, united
Go forth, and together to stand
Till they conquer the curse which has blighted
The joy of our land.

MRS. FERDINAND'S DISCOVERY.

BY MABEL GIFFORD.

Every one agreed that she was "a nice little woman, but—," and unless you were inquisitive enough to ask, 'But what?" you would be left to finish the sentence yourself. Her name was Mrs. Ferdinand Sayward: not on any account Mrs. Susanna Sayward. There was always a plentiful sprinkling of "Ferdinands" in her conversation. She was a wholesome woman to look at, with her round, fresh face, and her plump, trim figure. Her gowns were always smooth and her ribbons fresh. Added to all this, her bright manner and ready smile made her look almost as youthful as her daughter Kate. It was almost impossible to believe that she took care of a house and a family of seven, and did the sewing and found time for fancy work, and the church sewing circle and numberless calls. Her executive power was something wonderful.

Mrs. Austin Studley had recently moved into Mrs. Ferdinand's neighborhood, Church street. The neighbors stood in considerable awe of her; she was tall and handsome, and a trifle haughty, they thought, and no such furniture was ever carried into Church street as they saw unloaded at number 20.

They were sure the new neighbor would be too fine for Church street, and to be on the safe side they determined not to call upon her; there would be no chance then for her to "snub" them.

Meanwhile Mrs. Austin Studley was quietly taking an inventory of the neighborhood. "I am quite captivated with Mrs. Ferdinand Sayward, she is such an honest, bright, modest little woman. I am impatient to know her," she remarked to her husband.

The second Sunday after the new neighbor moved in she made her appearance in the church at the head of Church street. She was pleased with the building itself; it had somehow missed the barrenness of design and the crudeness of coloring that commonly characterizes country places of worship; she was pleased with the minister who conducted the services with a simple reverence that seemed to come from his heart.

Feeling quite touched by his earnest words and moved to an unwonted tenderness toward her kind, she passed into the vestibule at the close of the service and lingered there to exchange a few words with the others. She had several acquaintances there from another part of the town. She intended to express a little of her feeling, to say how beautiful and helpful the service had been to her, but the first words she heard were:

"Oh, how do you do? I wanted to ask you what you would contribute for the next tea-meeting. If you can do it as well, do send bread, nearly every one contributes cake."

On the other side she heard a younger person say:

"Didn't you have a gay time at Cora's surprise party last week?" and then followed considerable girlish giggling and whispering.

Mrs. Austin Studley received a slight shock; she began to feel out of place, but revived somewhat when her eyes fell upon her bright faced neighbor.

"Do introduce me to that little woman in brown, with the red cheeks," she said to a friend who advanced; "isn't she a very nice woman?"

"Yes, she is a nice little woman, but—"

Mrs. Studley looked questioningly at the speaker, but her face was perfectly non-committal. The little woman in brown chatted in a most vivacious manner to one and another until she was within Mrs. Austin Studley's hearing. She stretched a cordial hand to greet a friend near by, and this is what the new neighbor heard her say:

"Do tell me, Mrs. Holmes, if you had good success with that recipe for sponge cake that I sent you?"

Then followed a somewhat lengthy diagnosis and fresh instructions.

Mrs. Austin Studley experienced a sudden revulsion of feeling and was moving away when her friend presented "Mrs. Ferdinand Sayward, one of your neighbors."

The new neighbor was civil, the old resident was cordial and showed a perfectly ingenuous countenance.

"Do you like your new home? It is the finest location in Appleton. You must be lonesome settling down here among strangers. I suspect you are so perfected in the art of cooking that you never fail with a recipe. I have just been telling my friend, Mrs. Holmes, how necessary it is to be exact in measuring. Now yesterday I told Ferdinand I knew Mrs. Holmes would not make that cake stiff enough or else she would make it too stiff."

"I do not think I shall care for Mrs. Ferdinand Sayward's acquaintance," remarked the new neighbor to her husband on Sunday evening, "she's a nice little woman, but—"

"Ferdinand," said the little bright-eyed woman that same evening, "I want you to send for 'The Autocrat at the Breakfast-table.' Mrs. Studley recommended it and I shall be delighted to have it. It is more trouble to think up appetizing breakfast dishes than any others."

No doubt Mrs. Ferdinand was greatly puzzled over the contents of her new recipe book. It is a question whether she fathomed what Mrs. Studley meant in recommending it, but she did have an uncomfortable feeling that that lady meant something.

Mrs. Ferdinand's most intimate friend, Mrs. Otis Keene, affected a great love for music, and hearing the new neighbor speak of the fine concerts given every week in the city, and noting the high sounding names, she determined to go to one.

Mrs. Ferdinand cared as little for music as Mrs. Keene did for household affairs, but went to the city with her friend "just to be company."

They had plenty of time to discuss the bonnets before the concert began; after that they were quiet for a short time, then Mrs. Ferdinand nudged her companion:

"Don't let me forget to stop at Betsey's on the way home to leave that box of gelatine."

The spell was broken, and an animated conversation followed. People looking about for the disturbers soon settled upon numbers "40" and "41," and many were the smothered exclamations and impatient frowns aimed at the two unconscious heads. All the while Mrs. Keene was going into raptures over the music.

"I prefer cerealine for Indian puddings. Isn't that grand? Did you ever hear anything like it? My stove is a good baker. Isn't it heavenly?"

Suddenly there was a pause in the music, and a clear soprano voice was heard in the audience:

"I fry mine in lard."

The frowns in the vicinity of numbers 40 and 41 turned to smiles, and 40 and 41 turned very red in the face.

"Susanna Sayward!" cried 41, when the music crashed in again. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself. I am mortified to death."

"Susanna" rose cheerfully to the occasion. "Look just as if it were some one else," she said, "no one will know."

"It's awful!" groaned 41, "I never was so mortified in my life."

"Well, don't make such a fuss; how did I know the music was going to stop? I didn't know I was talking so loud either."

"If anything will cure that woman, to day's experience will," said Mrs. Austin Studley to her husband. She was in that audience, and in the vicinity of numbers 40 and 41. Of this fact the two women remained in blissful ignorance, and also of the little anecdote that went the rounds of the daily papers all over the country, and they did not understand the queer look that came into Mrs. Austin Studley's face when the music-lover went into raptures over the Symphony concert.

It is doubtful if the new neighbor would have given "the bright little woman with the red cheeks" any further consideration had it not been for an incident that occurred some weeks later.

Mrs. Studley had a beautiful chrysanthemum bed, and little Jimmie Clark came to the door to beg some of them.

"I wants 'em for a woman what's been good to Peter," he said, rubbing his eyes briskly.

"Who is it, Jim?"

"It's Mrs. Sayward, what lives up yonder. She sits by him nights an' reads an' sings an' says prayers, when the pain is bad an' he can't sleep."

There was a commotion in Church street; an invitation to a "neighborhood social," at Mrs. Austin Studley's, had been left at every number.

"I wish I had called; how mean I feel," said one and another; but they all went.

Mrs. Ferdinand Sayward was there discoursing as usual on cakes and crullers, soaps and baking powders, and moth exterminators, and was as happily unconscious as ever that she was making herself a bore to every one. She was never bored; all that was necessary to secure her a delightful time was a chance to talk to some one.

During the evening Mrs. Austin Studley's mother, a handsome old lady whom none of the neighbors had seen before, called Mrs. Ferdinand into a chamber that had not been opened to the guests when they were shown over the house.

There was a packing-box on the floor and the old lady raised the cover. "For Jimmie and Peter and the mother," she said. "I knew you would be interested."

One article had been left out and the old lady went in search of it.

While she was gone Mrs. Ferdinand heard voices in an adjoining room.

"Yes, she's a nice little woman, but—"

"But what?"

"She talks about nothing but her housework and her family. Outside of that she hasn't an idea in her head She never reads anything, and she never listens to any one else. She is bright and intelligent and, I am sure, might become a very agreeable woman."

"Well, it may be true, as you say, that she is stupid company, but she is a model housekeeper, and a good mother. and an expert at fancy work, and one of the best-hearted women I know."

"I thought I never should find it," said Mrs. Studley's mother, coming in a little out of breath, and the voices in the adjoining room ceased abruptly.

"I wonder if they meant me," mused Mrs. Ferdinand. Her eyes were very watchful the remainder of the evening, and she was sure she noticed some things.

The next day Mrs. Austin Studley was surprised by receiving a call from her bright little neighbor.

"I heard what you and some one else said about me last night," she began in her direct, honest way. "I don't care much about reading, but I don't want to be a bore in society or in my own home either. I know nothing about books and I have come to ask you to advise me."

The dear little woman had been secretly grieving over "Ferdinand" and "the boys," because they were so given to spending their evenings away from home. Now she thought she had a bit of illumination as to the cause. She was a faithful woman and loved her family devotedly; she did not shrink from the disagreeable task of informing herself, she was only anxious to make a success of it and was greatly surprised to find it interesting; and her family were greatly surprised when she commenced to make remarks and ask questions. There began to be very cozy evenings at home and very lively conversations and Mrs. Ferdinand became not only a model housekeeper, but a model companion. The neighbors began to speak of her as "a most agreeable little woman," "such good company," etc., and when they discovered the changed conduct of the "men folks" at Mrs. Ferdinand's, they ventured to ask for her secret, and some of them determined to go and do likewise.

"There's a good deal of mission work to do right in one's own family," said Mrs. Ferdinand, "and for one's own self."

Abington, Mass.

PHILOSOPHY OF FURNITURE.

BY R. W. MARRIAGE.

Anybody with money in hand can select and purchase furniture, and any hands can place said furniture around the four walls of a parlor, boudoir or bedroom, but there is furniture and furniture, furnishing and furnishing, and therein lies the philosophy we write of; not that inanimate wood has this of itself, but the maker of each piece of furniture, be it of simple pine or walnut, the old time mahogany, or the much-prized oaken furniture of to-day, has wrought into it, with each planing and chiseling, each twist and curve, the mind of the master who controls its shapeliness; as his eye is artistic and delights itself in the beautiful, so he wills the block of raw material shall acquire a like symmetry and chasteness.

Yet, granted all this prepared in order for the purchaser, the householder is not by this insured a tastefully furnished home. A taste to fashion is one thing and a taste to select and arrange another. The buyer should consider not alone the quality and style of the furniture, but the needs and capabilities of the spaces which said furniture is to fill.

Furnishing the home is essentially woman's work. Her eye should note adaptation of pieces and kinds of furniture to the requirements of the home comfort, and with this knowledge she can go into the store to select according to her own mentally framed requisition of style and usefulness, and of course according to her means—for there must be truth as well as beauty in her home.

A cottage home looks ridiculous with large, heavy, upholstered furniture, while a mansion would seem bare with only cane and wicker furniture; therefore, the home-mother must consort the fitness of things with the best outlay of her means. Elegance can be secured with limited outlay, and much money can be spent without judgment, and the very opposite of elegance may fill the house to repletion.

Choose the carpet of unostentatious pattern and colors, so as not to detract from the harmony of the whole. Do not group light and dark woods around the same wall, whereas a light chair in the foreground will look well with darker background surroundings.

The best way to insure both taste and elegance is to arrange for the solid comfort of every day life. Witness the coziness of the daily used room, with its books and feminine handicraft against the cold formality of the extra parlors, wherein visitors are so often ushered for so-called fashionable calls; whereas the neighborly visit in the family room is easy, pleasant and valuable and a thing that has also heart in it.

Let a woman express herself in her household arrangements and you can judge her mental caliber; it is these things that make of four walls the difference between a home and a place to stay in.

If the one-purse theory is not lived out in the family every woman does make her home a mirror of herself; in the heart of every home keeping and home-loving woman is the yearning to make the home an expression of her own judgment and inward grace, and a deprivation of this power is a violence to a woman's nature next to the denial of motherhood. It is a wise household that begins its existence with the recognition of this inborn tendency of the mother-soul—always and everywhere a creator.

An eye to the effect of color and position can give to common things such a general air of loveliness that, entering the room we exclaim, "How very pleasant!" when a closer analysis finds it is not in the money quality, but in something that money cannot purchase.

Ideas and power are gifts, but it is woman's privilege to study to excel in this art of home attraction. And it reaches far beyond a fanciful indulgence when we see this same display of taste admired by the mankind of the home knowing by all the little influences of artistic use that home is made a dearer place, and that its power outweighs that of hurtful attractions elsewhere. Solomon wrote of woman as the homemaker and provider, but were he to edit another book of Proverbs to-day he would, according to all Scripture teaching, come down into the furnishing details as her equally important province. A table can never be other than a table, or a chair than a chair, and yet as we select from the many, and arrange and use, the one does seem to be more "a thing of beauty" than another.

Does not the kingdom of home demand all the philosophy of taste and art to be brought into it, so that the veriest prose of life may become as much as possible a poem of gladness to counteract the friction and coarseness of sin, making it indeed a type of the Eternal Home for God's redeemed family in the great beyond?

Iowa Falls, Ia.

ONE path out of restlessness is by the road of doing great things, which always leads through the valley of humility as it goes, with the Kingdom of Heaven at its end.—Anna C. Brackett.

NAMES IN THE NEWSPAPERS.

BY FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Annual Address, Denver, Col.

Few forms of hypocrisy are more common than these words upon the lips of women: "I would on no account have my name in the newspapers," and a recent deliverance from a Presidential candidate to the effect that his brilliant and accomplished wife was "too sacred" by reason of her relationship to him and to their little one to have her name bruited about before the public, has set me thinking on this subject.

What is publicity but the knowing by many of that which otherwise but few would know? If the great bulk of society consisted of enemies who wished to hide from one another what they did, then all would surely wish never to be named in newspapers, but if we are approaching something like friendliness, then a newspaper is simply an open letter passing from hand to hand and telling what has happened. If a woman has accomplished some thing helpful to humanity it is just as desirable to have it known as if a man had accomplished the same, indeed, it is perhaps even more so in these transition days, because this knowledge will encourage other women to set their hands, perchance now idle, to some noble and beneficent employment. I have noticed that news concerning women at the court or in the aristocratic circles of Great Britain is just as much sought, and as thoroughly given as the news concerning men of the same circle, and in my own land where self constituted coteries label themselves society, I find that descriptions of what is worn, what is eaten, and what is danced, form the staple of reading in numberless society journals, and the dessert course in the heaviest metropolitan newspapers.

When people say that they would on no account see their names in the newspapers they certainly seem out of line with the race to which they belong, which is above all things a gossiping, gabbling race, and has been ever since the days of the Athenians, and doubtless from the dawn of history previous to that time, most of all desirous to see and to hear some new thing.

A nameless antediluvian has lately reënunciated the old saw that "the best women are those of whom the public hears the least." This was probably written by some soured celibate of the masculine persuasion, but it is absolutely in diametric opposition to the truth. In proportion to its degree of enlightenment the public "hears a great deal" about women who are as good as any living and whom everybody believes to be as good. I like the sturdy fashion in which one of our American journalists has recently stood up in his place and spoken out against the sentimental foolishness that condemns women whose names are in the newspapers. The only question is when your name is there, is it there for a good purpose, is it linked to a holy cause, does it arouse the nobler thoughts and emotions of those who see it? This is the touchstone, and separates mere notoriety from honest and well-earned fame.

Now for what our journalistic brother says:

Can anybody call the roll of great poets and not name Mrs. Browning, of great novelists, and omit George Eliot (Marian Evans), Charlotte Bronte and Harriet Beecher Stowe; of distinguished artists, and fail to mention Rosa Bonheur and Harriet Hosmer? Are not these all women of whom the public hears a great deal, and knows most in proportion as it is enlightened? Does anybody presume to say that they are not or were not in their day among the "best women"?

The notion that it is somewhat discreditable for a woman to be talked about has no other basis of truth than such a notion would have in the case of a man. All depends on the kind of talk and the kind of talkers. The woman whose name is on everybody's tongue may be one whose womanliness has gained her a place in everybody's heart. To deny to women the right to achieve and enjoy an honorable fame is senseless. It is to rob them of one of the greatest incentives to and rewards for noble endeavor.

The disposition to do this is a relic of barbarism or semi-barbarism; of the time when women who wrote books did not dare to let their real authorship be known, of the time or clime when or where it was deemed a shame to a woman to be seen on the streets without a hood over her face, but no shame to her husband at home to beat her for not cooking his dinner to suit him.

I AM in favor of an arrest of immigration. We must have time, and space, and opportunity to set our house in order. One of the self-acknowledged and reproachful facts of the present situation is that we are giving the ballot to the lowest denizens of the lowest wards of the lowest cities in the Union and withholding it from the noblest, most virtuous and moral class in America—namely, our wives, sisters and mothers. Let us cease enfranchising ignorance. It may seem revolutionary, but it must be done if sobriety and intelligence are to govern.—Rev. H. A. Delano.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

O ye of little faith, why reason ye among yourselves, because ye have brought no bread? Do ye not yet understand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thousand, and how many baskets ye took up, neither seven loaves of the four thousand, and how many baskets ye took up?—Matt. 16:8, 9, 10.

The National W. C. T. U. Convention at Denver, Col., gave forth no uncertain sound in regard to the Temple, as the following resolution shows—passed unanimously after a very thorough discussion of the subject in executive session:

WHEREAS, The financial standing of the Temple has never before been so secure, and the outlook so hopeful as now, and the report given and accepted here shows that by united effort we can, within one year, hold a controlling amount of Temple stock, therefore, resolved,

1. That we will not cast doubt upon this enterprise, that we will not create distrust, that if any cannot help they shall at least allow those who will do so peace of mind in the doing of it.

2. That it is the sense of this Convention that for the sake of the W. C. T. U., and the great work to which it is pledged, and for the sake of the cause of women's advancement in the world, there is but one just and reasonable course to pursue; that we stand with solid front and united effort until we reach the successful and permanent completion of this great enterprise.

***

Providence, R. I., W. C. T. U. is to have its name on the Rhode Island state tablet through the efforts of one determined, self-sacrificing woman, Mrs. A. J. Winship; she has picked up a few dollars wherever she could find them for the object so near her heart; her faith and enthusiasm in the great enterprise never wavered and the last payment of $20 has just been received. Would that we might have a Mrs. Winship in every union.

Santa Barbara, Cal., W. C. T. U. has just sent in the last payment on a $100 pledge. The Orono, Me., W. C. T. U. has just sent $30 which completes the last payment on a $100 pledge. Mrs. Graham sends thirteen dollars and twenty-five cents as a second payment on a $100 pledge from the W. C. T. U. of Newark, O. Mrs. Mary James, Natchez, Miss., has the honor of raising a complete Baby Band for which she has sent $10.

***

Mrs. O. N. Garlick, Tacoma, Wash., sends a last installment of $50 for a tablet in honor of her beloved mother, Mrs. Charlotte Nelson. Thirty-five dollars and forty cents have been received from the state W. C. T. U. of Nebraska; this completes the payment on the Jennie Holmes tablet. The Greensboro W. C. T. U. remits $16.50 for the Mrs. Woody tablet, and $24.25 comes from Nebraska union for the Mrs. Hitchcock tablet; also $62.43 for the state tablet of Colorado. Lincoln, Va., W. C. T. U. sends $6.55 for the Virginia state tablet; $2 comes from the Y's of Middletown, N. J., for the Mrs. Frances Barnes tablet, $1 from the Hopkinton, Iowa, W. C. T. U. for the Mrs. Dunham tablet; $10 from Mrs. M. A. Monroe, Chicago, for the Florence Kollock tablet, and $5 from Ruth Hawk, Delaware, Ohio, for the Mrs. Trego tablet, being one tenth receipts on the White-Ribboner she publishes. Mrs. S. E. Franklin, Bedford, Ind., sends $2 for the Jane Weeden tablet.

***

Mrs. Ida M. Vickory, Randleman, N. C., writes as follows—(we read between the lines the love and self-sacrifice which is embodied in her gift): "Enclosed find a ten-dollar gold piece, a keepsake from my mother who went to heaven twenty years ago. Now I am going to make it still more sacred by sending it to you for the memorial window for 'Yolande' in memory of our little Yolande about six months old, who left us three months ago. We cherish the thought that the keepsake will help the living and at the same time perpetuate the memory of our loved ones." George Lewis, Morrisonville, Ill., sends $10 in memory of his wife who entered upon her heavenly heritage last April. Mr. Lewis says: "May God bless you in your noble work, and may the Temple ever stand as a memorial to His name and a blessing to humanity." Mrs. H. Chase Brown, Olympia, Wash., has sent $15 toward a tablet for her father, Crowell H. Sylvester, who was born at Marshfield, Mass., in 1786. He was one of the earliest temperance reformers, and suffered everything but death for his principles. Mrs. I. M. Clark, Syracuse, N. Y., sends $5 in memory of her husband, who was a staunch temperance man. He fought for his country and is buried in a soldier's grave. Mrs. Kate A. Folsom sends $1, made sacred because it belonged to her beloved son, Ernest A. Folsom, who passed away at the age of eighteen years. He was a loyal temperance boy and held the office of Chief Templar when he died. Mrs. E. M. Ater, Clarksburg, O., sends $1 in memory of her father, J. S. F. Meacham, and $1 in memory of her mother, Caroline Langdon Meacham—both earnest temperance workers.

***

The following letter is much prized, coming as it does from a leading white-ribboner of Canada, Mrs. A. J. McFarland, St. John, N. B. She was fraternal delegate from Canada to the National Convention at Denver. Mrs. McFarland writes: "We in Canada have been watching in sympathy with you the building of the grand Temple with all that it means to women in all lands. My husband, three daughters and a good old lady friend and myself, have purchased $8,000 of the Temple trust bonds."

***

Those who have money to invest and desire to show practical sympathy for the W. C. T. U. in helping to pay for the Temple as our Canadian friends have done, should at once write our financial agent, Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 La Salle St., Chicago, and secure some of the bonds: no safer or better investment is on the market to-day. There is no speculation about it; it is as secure as any earthly project can be.

The Union Signal AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, MARY ALLEN WEST, } Editors-in-Chief.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, Contributing Editor.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, Managing Editor.
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, Office Editor.
Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH. Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

W. C. T. U. COUSE OF STUDY—DECEMBER READINGS.

Bible.—"Our Successes and Failures." Esther Pugh.
Responsive.—"Looking Backward." A Review of the Year.
Topical.—State Minutes. Reports of National Superintendents. Convention UNION SIGNAL.

Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? —Jer. 23: 23.

SOME LESSONS OF THE COLUMBIAN CELEBRATION.

Two points of the late Columbian celebration are worthy of note. One is the universal scorn visited upon Americus Vespucius whenever the name of this continent comes under consideration, and the other is the reluctance with which mankind give up their ideal of Columbus as a gallant knight, gentle, unselfish, full of romantic fervor, and fired with a lofty and noble purpose, to replace him with the character in which he stands revealed by the electric light of this nineteenth century, that of a grasping, selfish mercenary, an adulterer, and a cruel tyrant. These facts enforce some very important lessons. No better illustration can be found than the first fact affords of the truth that it is better even from the standpoint of a purely selfish, personal ambition, to deserve a thing than to get it; nay, more, that it is better not to get a thing at all than to get it unworthily.

It is popularly believed that Vespucius dishonestly attached his name to the continent which should have borne the name of Columbus. If this be true, he sought immortal fame, but won immortal infamy. But if, as is claimed by some, the investigations of Alexander von Humboldt have demonstrated that Vespucius himself was not responsible for the naming of this continent, it still remains true that unmerited honor has, in the lapse of time, become transformed into merited dishonor.

In the second fact we see an exemplification of the truth that, judged even by the world's standards, character alone constitutes true greatness. The value which mankind as a whole really attach to nobility of character is shown by their instinctive effort to make moral heroes of those who have claims upon the gratitude and admiration of their fellows. The world, this great selfish world, acknowledges itself bitterly disappointed because the hero of the discovery of America proves to be in moral character a man unworthy of respect. It still praises the intellectual greatness of the man, still admires his tenacity of purpose, his indomitable will, but it recognizes that with his moral rectitude perishes his truest glory. We seek to apologize for Columbus by saying that he was a product of the fifteenth century, and it is not fair to judge him by nineteenth century standards. But in the depths of our hearts this does not satisfy us. In spite of all that non Christian scientists may say, we know in our own consciousness and from the history of our race that man is not the helpless creature of environment. In the midst of idolaters, Abraham was the "friend of God." Moses rose above the allurements of one of the greatest civilizations that ever existed, and deliberately chose "the reproach of Christ" rather than the "treasures of Egypt." In the past and in the present, those whom we most highly honor stand out preëminently, because they are not the mere "product of their times," but prove the divine in human nature by towering in moral grandeur far above their times. As the world turns regretfully from another shattered idol, he who runs may read the lessons: That in the long future, high position, intellectual endowments and great achievements will bring to their owner lasting glory only if associated with noble character; that the attainment of lofty aims must be upreared on a foundation rock of personal purity and a life free from taint; that inspiration by the breath of God and a Christlikeness acquired through self-sacrifice for others' good will alone win enduring fame in the hearts of men.

THAT "OUNCE OF PREVENTION."

We would all be glad to escape from pain and sickness. Old age with its decrepitude, and death with its mystery, we would gladly postpone, and we believe there is in the minds of most young people a natural shrinking from the grosser evils; but when we are young and strong, life presses upon us with its various attractions and demands, and we fill the days with pleasure and work, regardless of the future and heedless of the divine admonition, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." If we have sown the way with a reckless expenditure of vital force, even though we meant no wrong, by and by strength will be gone, the form will be bent and misshapen, death will come and stare us in the face, and we shall struggle in vain to repair the waste and restore the energy. Those who make post mortem examinations tell us that when disease has invaded an organ, and the tissue is destroyed it can never be replaced. The utmost that medical science can do is to arrest the destructive process and save what remains.

If we have sown the way with evil thoughts and base desires, we will find by and by that evil ceases to look repulsive; "we first endure, then pity, then embrace." The downward course once entered upon soon possesses an almost irresistible attraction, a horrible fascination which nothing but the grace of God can break.

Life is governed by law and the highest life results from the completest harmony with the law of life; the same is also true of character. Life and character are only strong and beautiful when there is a symmetrical development of the physical, mental and moral nature. No one of these alone is sufficient, and when any one of them overbalances the others disaster is likely to result. Physical force without mental or moral power soon decays. Man, by his three-fold nature, must either rise above the level of the brute or sink below it. Mental development without a proper physical foundation soon topples over into the grave. The moral nature unduly developed without physical and mental ballast results in superstition or fanaticism.

If we would escape sickness we must cultivate health. If we would escape ignorance we must seek knowledge. If we would escape sin we must cultivate righteousness. In every case we must overcome evil with good. It will not do to wait till the evil has obtained a firm foothold. The cure of pain and sickness may preserve a useful life, but it can never be all that it might have been if the pain and disease had not interrupted or hindered its usefulness. The popular inebriate cures can only arrest the destructive process going on in the drunkard's system and give him a chance to redeem the days that are left, it never can restore those worse than wasted years. Even the overtaking grace of God that can rescue the sinner as a brand plucked from the burning cannot bring back the unsullied innocence of the soul that has not gone into sin. If we are gaining wisdom with the ages it ought to be in the direction of preventing ills rather than of curing them. And yet the land is full of hospitals for sick bodies and sick souls and we point to them with pride as an evidence of our growing charity, when really they only show how we who are strong have neglected those that are weak, and while we have managed in one way or another to keep out of these hospitals ourselves, we have been very careless about our neighbors. If our present methods are so inefficient in producing vigor of body, mind and soul, it is high time we were seeking better methods, always bearing in mind that they must be applied early, the earlier the better. THE UNION SIGNAL is laboring for this higher standard of home-life and entering its solemn protest against the drunken, sensual revelry of so called high toned society. By all means save the sick, the drunkard and the sinner, but it is a higher, holier mission to save them from sickness, ignorance and sin.

A REMARKABLE JOURNEY.

The journey around the world in the interest of Christian Endeavor, undertaken by Rev. Francis E. Clark, D. D., the founder of the movement, has so far progressed that its success is assured. Probably no man has ever made the tour of the world under such remarkable auspices. Probably no man's journeyings about the globe have been followed by so many prayers and with such eager attention.

This is not merely because of the delightful personality of the man and the love borne him by the million and a half Endeavorers, though that accounts for part of it. It is not merely the fact that the journey is unique, though the novelty accounts for part of it. The interest in the journey is chiefly because it stands for the enlargement of Christian Endeavor.

Now the enlargement of Christian Endeavor does not mean that an already cumbrous organization is simply growing bigger, because the Christian Endeavor movement has no organization worthy of the name. Dr. Clark, in all his journey, will organize no new society. That is far from the purpose of his journey, and he is glad that he never has organized societies of Christian Endeavor save in the two churches of which he has been pastor. The pastors alone should organize their young people into local societies.

Of course, societies will spring up in Dr. Clark's footsteps. That always happens. But it is because the pastors themselves are led to want them, and to form them. Everywhere in Australia Dr. Clark, by invitation of the ministers themselves, has addressed crowded meetings of pastors of all denominations, explaining the workings of Christian Endeavor societies, and their value. Mrs. Clark has also addressed, with a similar purpose, meetings of ministers' wives. But the new societies formed, though registered in Boston, will have nothing further to do with the central society. They will send delegates to our conventions, but they will have great conventions of their own.

No; the enlargement of Christian Endeavor is not the spread of a system, but of a movement. It means the uprising of the young for Christ and the church in other lands, as they are blithely rising in this country. It means that the church everywhere is learning, half shame facedly, the power of youthful zeal, and putting it to healthy work. It means that the young everywhere are learning the joy of a springtide consecration, and have ceased to wait for the turning of the year before beginning their service. From Dr. Clark's progress comes back an ever swelling tide of glad assurance that the youth of the world are with the youth of the United States in their fresh ardor for the Master.

This journey gives also a proof as conclusive as ever can be desired that the fundamental Christian Endeavor principles of work, the definite pledge, the system of work in committees, the monthly consecration meeting and the interdenominational fellowship, are universally adaptable. They flourish at the antipodes as well as here. They stand translation into foreign tongues and adoption into all forms of evangelical organizations. They prove fitted to High Church Episcopalians as well as to Wesleyans. They are elemental principles, grounded on universal needs. They are as fundamental as the Sunday school. About them cluster Protean customs, committees of widely varying name and function, church control and ecclesiastical oversight as diverse in kind and degree as the diverse ideas of the churches, yet these central principles remain the same everywhere, and make Christian Endeavor in Australia one with Christian Endeavor in America.

The world's store of Christian goodfellowship will be largely increased by this journey. Everywhere Christian Endeavor, while leaving standing the denominational wire fences, has removed the barbs, has joined hand to hand across the barriers. Christians of diverse opinions in Australia are swiftly coming to see their oneness of faith with each other, and with the evangelical Christians of the world. And the interdenominational fellowship so beautifully growing in this land can only be spurred to richer fruitfulness by the knowledge that God is thus moving on hearts across the seas.

In one great aspect of it, this is a missionary journey. Dr. Clark bears letters to the mission stations of all evangelical boards. He will study the foreign mission field especially with this thought in mind, "How can the claims of missions be more effectively presented to Christian youth? What can they be led to do for the extension of the Kingdom?" Already this journey is rousing the Christian Endeavorers of the United States to such missionary enthusiasm that this will be a distinctively missionary year in Christian Endeavor circles. Many hundreds of societies are holding regular missionary meetings to follow Dr. Clark in his journey. Thus the missions of Micronesia have been studied, and Japan and China are now under review. The missionary boards of the various denominations will reap goodly harvests from this increased interest.

Dr. Clark's journey is not a holiday excursion. The one month spent in Australia was enlivened by seventy meetings, at all of which Dr. Clark was expected to speak, and, in most cases, more than once. It will be a year of very hard work. But, in view of what has here been urged, who will say that it will not pay? As a result of it, God grant that along with the beautiful white ribbon, the band of Christian Endeavor may encircle the globe.

A WORD FROM CANADA.

Mrs. Edith Archibald, one of our ablest Canadian correspondents, writes as follows: "It is so good to think that there is no longer any invidious distinction between Christian work and temperance work, but that we know it is all Christ's work, this bringing in of the Kingdom, whether our efforts be in the prayer meeting or in the legislative hall. What a mistake it is ever to suppose that Christ's disciples should not 'meddle with politics.' I think we have done Him untold wrong by saying as so many have said: 'Lord, I will serve Thee in the home, in Thy church and in the Sunday-school, but it is not fitting to name Thy name in the management of public affairs.' Is there any door at which the Light of the World has stood and knocked so long in vain as at the door of government in every country? And yet it is declared in the Word that 'The government shall be upon His shoulders.' Men seem nationally to have disfranchised Christ just as they have disfranchised women, and now I believe that He is calling upon us women to declare Him before men, and is sending us out before His face, two by two as in ancient days He sent His disciples 'into all places whither He Himself should come.'

"We also learn through our Canadian advices that the Royal Commission to inquire into the liquor traffic is a complete and utter farce. Somebody has called it with no little wit, 'The society for prevention of cruelty to the liquor traffic,' and the best result of its goings about is that the temperance people are indignant beyond anything ever before witnessed. They have combined in a National Prohibition Council for the formation everywhere throughout the Dominion of Canada of a network of Prohibition clubs; these clubs are to be irrespective of party or denomination or sex, and they will work very well, no doubt, until the next general election, after which white-ribboners, many of them, predict that these councils will be reorganized as Prohibition Party Clubs. One of our correspondents who has carefully followed the evidence given before this Royal Commission finds two facts standing out with amazing clearness, namely:—that with but two or three exceptions on the part of medical men, and none at all on the part of the clergy of the Anglican church, both classes are distinctly opposed to prohibition, while employers of labor of every kind, whether themselves total abstainers or not, were unanimously in favor of prohibition—always, of course, excepting brewers, distillers and those who sell their products. But the clergy of all other denominations except the Episcopal were united in demanding prohibition law, and most judges and lawyers were favorable to it; mayors of towns and aldermen were apt to be doubtful, unless in very strong temperance localities. It is, however, a sad fact that nearly two thirds of the written testimony in answer to questions sent out to legal and medical men and theologians will be against prohibition. To-day the medical profession is perhaps the greatest hindrance to prohibition in Canada. It is fortunate that the Anglican church is the smallest and by no means the most influential, so that its influence is vastly more than counter balanced by that of all the other denominations. Very few Catholics have been on the stand at all, but these few, with small exception, were decidedly in favor of temperance. As things are to-day, a plebiscite would carry prohibition in the maritime provinces by two-thirds vote, in the upper provinces by a majority."

The Deaconess at Work is the happy name of a new paper published in Washington, which aims to be a general and national sheet. It is intended to give the most complete digest of all forms of the work, evangelistic and philanthropic, in all lands as well as our own. We are devotedly in favor of the deaconess movement. We see in it an outlet for no end of womanly power of devotion and utterance. We rejoice to find deaconesses' homes multiplying in every quarter of the nation, and we fully expect that before ten years are past there will be as many Christian women, if not more, explicitly embarked in Christian work under the guidance of the various denominations, as there are men. If the world needs mothering, the church needs it none the less. We want to urge young women of brains, heart and conscience to take up the more special lines of Christian, philanthropic and reform work if they would serve the world at their very best, meanwhile becoming financially independent themselves.

THE General only has the plan and knows where each regiment and division will best fall in; they do not know and are glad to do as he may indicate. None of us could tell just when it would be best for the organized efforts of women to take on a variety of new forms, but the time came in due season. We have the King's Daughters, the Women's Federation of Clubs, Daughters of the Revolution, and constantly new outgrowths of the one spirit—woman coming to herself, and coming to her kingdom. The woman suffragists are the old guard that has never surrendered; they form the solid infantry, and we ought all gladly to waive them to their place of honor at the front. The white-ribboners are the "cavalry, following fast and following faster," ever to the picket line of progress. The later comers and the great foreign missionary societies are the batteries planted round about on hills of best advantage; and the splendid "home guards" are the commissary department from which all these moving armies are supplied. One is as much needed as the other. Each should think and speak about the other in terms of utmost kindness and good will. All should coöperate, and are doing so, whether they know it or not, for the day of universal brotherhood and peace.

THE Chicago Tribune gives statistics which, if correct, show that the consumption of wine and malt liquors in this country has increased since 1875, and says: "There is cold comfort in these figures for the Prohibitionist, for they indicate such a large number of consumers that prohibition is impossible." And again: "It is evident these figures settle but one point, and that is that the possibilities for prohibition are progressing backward." The figures upon which this conclusion is based may or may not be correct, but one thing is certain, the prohibition host is not to be discouraged by figures. Had the number of consumers been small, and the consumption of liquor decreasing, neither the W. C. T. U. nor the Prohibition party would ever have been organized. It is not because of the weakness of the liquor traffic, but rather because of its terrible blighting power that we make war upon it. There is no possible objection to our opponents using statistics to prove to their own satisfaction that evil is omnipotent. With or without statistics, we know that there is "No wrong

However great, however strong
But waiteth God's avenging hour."

We assure "our friends, the enemy," that however rapidly prohibition may be "progressing backward," we shall never lay down our arms until it is secured. After the battle of Buena Vista, in which the Mexicans were disastrously defeated, General Santa Ana complained that he had "whipped that yankee General three times that day, but he was such a fool he never knew it." The Prohibition host is just such another "fool" as General Taylor; it will never know it is whipped until its enemy is utterly routed.

PLEDGE.—"I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquor, including Wine and Cider, and to employ all proper means to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

QUESTION.—If a vice-president of the W. C. T. U. should attend a county convention and the president was not at that meeting, should she perform the duties of a delegate in that convention by virtue of her office?

ANSWER.—It all depends upon the county constitution. If the constitution provides that the president of a local union shall be a delegate and says the vice-president shall be her alternate then the vice-president would be a delegate ex-officio, but otherwise, not unless she was so elected by her local union. CAROLINE B. BUELL.

Q.—Is "it goes without saying" good English or slang?

A.—There are many phrases in current use in our language bearing, it is true, the somewhat plebeian stamp of a free coinage, yet which are so "pat" and all-expressing that our American versatility admits them on the same standing as the more classic words and phrases which have behind them an unquestioned lineage of root and derivation. "It goes without saying" cannot be classed with slang; it is simply a happy grouping of words that are capable of more telling use than the merely conventional phrase. May such expressions not be classed with America's far famed, but indispensable "patents"?

Q.—Please give, through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL, helpful hints with regard to arranging matter for a scrap-book that would be used by any white ribboner who may have collected miscellaneous matter of this kind, giving heads under which it might be arranged, etc.

A.—To make a large scrap book and have it satisfactory when completed, it is necessary that it be arranged systematically.

First, divide the scrap-book into several different sections or use different books. Take one section, or book, for biographical scraps, another for political, another for miscellaneous, etc.

Next, secure as many large, strong envelopes as you have sections, or books, and write upon each the name of one of the sections. Then, as the clippings are cut from papers or magazines they should be neatly trimmed and should have the name of the paper from which they are cut and the date, plainly written at the head.

After this is done, if you have not time at that minute to paste the clippings in the book, they should be neatly folded with the headlines outside, and placed in the proper envelope. In placing in the book, it is best to put the clippings under each head in chronological order.

There is no work under the sun to which the old adage, "A stitch in time saves nine," applies better than in this work; for if the clippings are thrown together in a heap, and the trimming and sorting left for a more convenient season, this work, which is a source of great pleasure if undertaken systematically, becomes almost, if not quite, drudgery.

In the colleges of Edinburgh, Glasgow and Aberdeen ninety-two per cent of the students are total abstainers.

***

The general conference of Friends held at Indianapolis, the middle of October, recommended to the local societies a pastoral system which should include provision for the support of the pastor.

***

To live for one's principles at all costs is a dangerous speculation; and the failure of an ideal, no matter how humane and noble, is harder for the world to forgive and forget than bank robbery and the grand swindle of corrupt politicians.—L. M. Alcott.

***

The gifted young son of one of our leaders is writing a book. Looking over the manuscript his mother noticed here and there the words "leave for mother to fill in." Full of significance is a phrase like that. How good and helpful it would be if more boys would write on the blank pages of their character, "Leave for mother to fill in!"

***

Athens, Ga., has a novel ladies' club. It is known as the Ladies Garden Club and has been in existence a little more than a year. Since its organization, the ladies of Athens have become enthusiastic and expert gardeners. It is said that the results of this enterprise in fine fruits, vegetables and flowers are simply marvelous and are exceedingly beneficial to every one but the market man.

***

The general conference of the Methodist Protestant church in May last admitted women as delegates. The eighth National Congregational council recently closed in Minneapolis admitted as a delegate a woman who is pastor of a church in Michigan. Our Methodist Episcopal brethren have lost the opportunity to be first in this great and just movement, but we have faith to believe that they will not be last.

***

It comes to us from inside sources that a young lady who is a white ribboner and whose mother has long been connected with our work, became one of Queen Victoria's maids of honor. Being a total abstainer, the young woman was often the subject of annoyance on the part of thoughtless courtiers, especially when the Queen's health was going round and she declined to put the wine glass to her lips. On one occasion this raillery was so strong that the young lady burst into tears, whereupon the Queen lifted her hand with emphasis and said, "Let there be no more of this, and let no wine be offered to Miss —— while she is at the palace."

***

Among many other amusing Colorado stories, we gleaned the following: A young man from the east who was hunting among the foot-hills stopped at a wayside restaurant and called for "quail on toast," whereupon the rough looking proprietor pulled out a revolver, pointed it at his customer, and said with vigor, "You'll eat hash." Needless to say, the bill of fare of the young city parasite was not insisted on but he "fell to" over what was set before him and asked no further questions for conscience's sake. A moral might be drawn from this to the effect that when the simple hearted temperance reformer calls for legislation up to the grade of his conscience, saying in effect to the politician that he would like "quail on toast," the answer he is apt to get is "You'll eat hash."

***

Through a truly unpardonable inadvertence, the passing away of one of our most honored brothers in law, Gordon H. Read, of Bloomington, Ill., has not been mentioned in this column. This occurred September 10, just as the autumn leaves began to turn a golden brown, symbolizing his beautiful life of rich fruitage. Mr. Read was the husband of one of Illinois' most beloved white-ribboners, for years state superintendent of press work, as well as the head and heart of the many active interests of her own local union. In her widowhood, Mrs. Read rejoices in the memory of a comrade so good and true that, although a pronounced Prohibitionist, even the "old party" papers had naught but the highest tribute to pay him. Sterling integity, contagious candor and indefatigable industry marked his business career, which covered twenty five years in Bloomington, alone. No better evidence could be adduced to prove his honest dealings and faithful friendship than that of the long service rendered by his employés, one of whom has been in his employ twenty-four years, another twenty-two years and others from five to fifteen years each. Such employers would soon settle the great "unrest" of which capitalist and laborer alike complain. ON DUTY.

MARYLAND.

"ANOTHER YEAR OF PATIENT TOIL!"

The eighteenth annual meeting of the state union was held in Elkton, Cecil county, in October, as usual. The day meetings were held in the Presbyterian church, the evening meetings in Odd Fellows Hall. This convention, like each of its predecessors in turn, has been pronounced "the best yet." Certainly none here ever equaled it in the apparent familiarity of the members and delegates generally, one hundred and thirty-nine in number, with the methods of work adopted by the organization. Eighteen of the twenty four counties of the state were represented. The hospitality of the townspeople was remarkable, even in this hospitable state, delightful homes being opened not only to one and two guests, but in some instances to four, and in one instance, at least, to six. Luncheon and supper, excellent and bounteous, were served each day to all in attendance, the contribution mainly, it was understood, of ladies of the county. The convention was welcomed by the mayor of Elkton, Geo. A. Blake, Esq., by L. Marshall Haines, of the Cecil county bar, Henry R. Torbert, for the press, Rev. I. L. Wood, of the M. E. church, and by Miss McCoy for Mrs. Blake, the mayor's wife, president of the local union, county secretary, and one of the wise and indefatigable ones, whose efforts made the convention such a success.

These addresses were most earnest and admirable, mainly because the county had enjoyed for ten years the benefits of a prohibitory law, which did prohibit, but which was repealed two years ago, bringing in again the licensed reign of curses, greater than ever, apparently, by contrast. The question of license will be submitted once more to the voters of Cecil, in 1894, and many good men, irrespective of party, are bravely battling for its overthrow. The assembling of the convention here was, therefore, of unusual moment, and a spirit of intense earnestness pervaded the gathering, while the weight of responsibility seemed greater, if possible, than ever. "Speak to the women of our town and county," said the mayor, "and through them to the men, and tell that a terror more dreadful than the cholera walks by day and night through our streets. Hold up to daylight and public execration a license law so infamous in its details that in two years it has planted in this town as many saloons in number as all our churches. O women of Maryland! speak to the women of Cecil county, and tell them to lead us on to a better day."

Another powerful factor in the convention was the presence of Mrs. Snell, of Mississippi, for two days. Never was the great cause for which the women are organized portrayed more graphically, forcibly and clearly than by Mrs. Snell.

Mrs. Boole, of New York, was the speaker on the last evening and showed logically and plainly the fallacy of tariff legislation, the insignificance of the points of difference between the two dominant parties, and that the great, living question of the day is that of the licensed liquor traffic. The report of the corresponding secretary noted a paying membership of 3,157, an increase of 261 over that of the previous year, and an honorary membership of 887, the organization of twenty-one local unions, and of Garrett as a county union, the holding of 1,153 prayer and business meetings, of 280 public meetings and seven medal contests.

The speakers and workers of national repute in the state during the year were Mrs. Barney, of Rhode Island; Miss Greenwood, of New York; Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, Mrs. L. A. Washington, Mrs. Helen G. Rice, Miss Lydia J. Newcomb, Mrs. Lily Devereaux Blake, of Sorosis; Mrs. Eugenia F. St. John, Mrs. Snell, of Mississippi; Mrs. Boole, of New York, and Miss Katherine Pearson Woods, the socialistic novelist and writer, who gave an address at an afternoon tea, given to young ladies at the residence of Mrs. Baldwin. An address by Lady Henry Somerset at Baltimore, was among the red letter occasions of the year, and a Bible reading by Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith at the Memorial building, Baltimore, the day following Lady Henry's address was also noted.

The fact of the series of Bible readings in Baltimore by Miss Greenwood, having been given in influential churches of the Presbyterian and Protestant Episcopal denominations was specially commented upon by the secretary, and members urged to secure churches of different denominations when possible and for the interests of the work. The citing of eminent precedents had proved to be, in these instances, the most efficacious of arguments.

The treasurer reported $3,888 received during the year. The state organizer, Mrs. Mary Haslup, reported sixteen counties visited, 119 meetings held by her, and fifteen unions organized. The valuable work accomplished by Mrs. Haslup has demonstrated the wisdom of the state in securing her services.

The reports of superintendents were of the usual interesting character. That on the Memorial Building gave cause for deep gratitude in the statement that of the $30,000 required for the payment of that building, with the improvements, but a few hundred are still to be raised. Work here goes on apace, and was reported in detail by the various superintendents. The noon day prayer-meetings were held day after day, whatever the attendance; the free kindergarten held its sessions from the first of October until the last of June; the Sunday-school under its most efficient superintendent also held regular sessions during the year; the Boys' League met every week; the mothers' meeting, with its heart to heart work, every Friday afternoon during the session; while night meetings for men were also powers for good. A workers' conference led by our beloved Mrs. Barney, a New Year's reception, a Y conference, which terminated in an "afternoon tea," state executive meetings, meetings of some of the city unions, and Bible readings of Mrs. Snell were also noted among the profitable and interesting occasions here. The routine work of the efficient and faithful office secretary, Miss F. A. Cathcart, who combines with her duties here those of state treasurer, would have required a volume to report.

The report on police station work was of a particularly interesting and inspiring character, being a record mainly of the work of securing from the state legislature, matrons for day and night service at the seven police stations of Baltimore. One matron for the whole city, and this one obtained through the efforts of the W. C. T. U., a number of years ago, was all that the city could boast of at the beginning of the year.

The president's address was replete with wise suggestions and built on a deep spiritual foundation. Maryland has been blessed of God in her presidents, the three who have held this office being women of strong spiritual character.

The memorial services were touching and impressive, Mrs. J. F. Dix presiding. A paper by Mrs. E. B. Murdoch, on Mrs. Mary E. Crook, first president of the union, who died during the year, was read by Miss Cathcart. Mrs. Snell spoke of the noble mother of our National president, and Mrs. Dix made appropriate remarks.

The balloting for officers resulted in the reëlection of all the old officers. Mrs. Baldwin, president; Mrs. Lake and Miss Small, corresponding and recording secretaries, and Miss Cathcart, treasurer; Mrs. Haslup was reëlected state organizer. A pleasing feature of the convention was the presence of a number of members of the Delaware W. C. T. U., that state having deferred its annual meeting one week later than first proposed, for this purpose. Among them were Miss Hilles, president; Mrs. Smithers, vice-president; Mrs. Matlack, superintendent of evangelistic work; Mrs. Ada C. Jevell and Mrs. Jennie Price.

A pleasant and unusual occurrence was the presentation of a letter of thanks, from the union acting as host, to the convention for having assembled there.

The Cecil Whig, in commenting editorially on the convention said: "In the literary merit of the papers read, in the culture and refinement of the women participating as delegates or visitors, in the eloquence and pathos of their addresses, in the tone that marked and the character that pervaded this convention, let the opponents of woman's participation in public meetings learn the lesson that the observation of a lifetime taught that good and true man, John Greenleaf Whittier, who, but a short time before his death said: 'The women who were prominent as speakers in my sect, were no less prominent as admirable wives and mothers.'"

M. A. L.

OREGON.

AUTUMN HARVEST.

Our state president spent a busy summer. In Lane county she visited the unions of Cottage Grove, organizing one at Springfield and giving public addresses in the evening. She then crossed our mountains with Mrs. S. P. Mead, state evangelist, to conduct a school of methods in Union county. Here a county organization was effected. She went south, strengthening the unions at Oakland and Central Point and planting a fresh one at Eagle Point. Then in Columbia county, where it has been unbroken ground, a full house was addressed at Vernonia and forty-two signatures to the pledge taken. Here a W. C. T. U. was organized, with twenty-four members and Mrs. N. S. Keasey for president.

Portland had rejoiced in an inspiring visit from Miss Mary Allen West on her way to Japan. Her mothers' meeting, which she described as the outcome of the old "maternal association" at Braintree, Mass., sixty years ago, was uplifting and helpful to all the mothers present. The Oregon Chautauqua Assembly was well timed for benefiting by Miss West's presence; her school of methods was a useful stimulus to the W. C. T. U. women present.

Thanks to the public spirited gift of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Kinney the Chautauqua meets at Gearhart Park, Astoria, at the mouth of the Columbia, where the early navigators may be said to have discovered Oregon; where the first fort was built and called after Jacob Astor. The most prophetic soul could scarcely have foreseen what this hundred years have brought forth—the quiet shores untrod by any human foot save the occasional Indian, dotted now with peaceful homes and productive farms—the lonely land with towns and cities springing up throughout its length and breadth; commerce being brought where "rolls the Oregon" from every land.

At the Assembly, Mrs. Kinney (Narcissa White of other days) made a most striking address on "Rome, as I saw it." On the first day evangelistic work was the topic; on the second, juvenile work; through the week, in the public school, and on the Sabbath by the well-known Sunday-school methods. The Y, that magic letter of the alphabet, was also dwelt on.

Mrs. Ada W. Unruh tells us she has just returned from a trip in Clackamas and Marion counties, rejoicing and thanking God for three more L. T. L's with energetic leaders. Woodburn has an exceptionally good superintendent in Mrs. Morcome. Woodburn is a "rara avis" for it has no saloons, because of the temperance people, backed by two lawyers with temperance backbones. These people work at keeping the sentiment well simmering in their midst, by having monthly union temperance services and when necessary, a strong united fight to keep the enemy at bay.

Sherwood, in the same neighborhood, is a great contrast. Mrs. Unruh writes: "There had been threats that a lecturer would be treated to a hemp party, and when the whole saloon element came marching in, our white-ribboners there—dear hearts—began to tremble. But notwithstanding the fact that I gave them some pretty hard doses, they didn't make any trouble."

Mrs. Spangler, president of Washington county, came back from the state convention energized for aggressive work at home. She began by a three days' gospel temperance meeting at Hillsboro, the church bell ringing at 5 a. m. for prayer and devotion. This quiet, early hour brought down its blessing, lingering throughout the day. Mrs. Helen B. Harford, of Newberry, filled the Sunday pulpits with such success that persons were heard to remark: "I will never say anything against woman's preaching again."

Dayton held a series of meetings each Sabbath afternoon in the city park. Sisters Edwards, Cox, Unruh and Harford in turn addressed these meetings.

Tillamook county has but one town of any size. A series of meetings every afternoon and evening for one week resulted in a strong organization and with an L. T. L. in Tillamook. This far-away spot on the Pacific coast, we trust, will have the attention of workers. Isolated as it is, it reaches a class of people among the mountains that will be reached in no other way.

At Ranier, in Columbia county, is a new organization, with Mrs. Perry, president, and Miss Mary E. Harmer, corresponding secretary. Thanks to the education for prohibition in Kansas this union has strong help in the Harmers.

The forces in Marion county are strengthened by a brand new union at Butteville, and a new energy by the revival of unions, that for two years have not spoken, in Silverton, Stayton, Marion and Jefferson. Large audiences greeted Mrs. Harford at Salem, with a demand for her return in the near future.

Benton county has also had her services and members were added, at the places visited—Monroe, Waldport, Newport and Toledo. The people evinced their interest in the work, not only by an attendance at the meetings, but by opening their pocket-books and contributing liberally for the county work.

A basket meeting in district number eight, Yamhill county, was largely attended, at which Mrs. Harford delivered two lectures. The people came for ten miles, and the lunch at the noon hour was highly enjoyed. Several subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL were taken, which we have no doubt will bring lasting good to our cause.

McMinnville held a series of meetings at the Opera House; Mesdames Cox, Edwards and Unruh were the leading spirits. Mrs. Cox gave an able address at the Saturday night street meeting, the singers of the place furnishing the music.

Newberg has not been asleep even though "everybody" went to the coast for an outing. The regular meetings have been kept up all summer, and all the way from fifteen to forty have been in attendance. They have had several lectures, a medal contest in which Helen B. Chamberlin carried away the honors and the medal.

The regular monthly mothers' meetings under the efficient superintendent, Lucy Haworth, has been a source of much power. No meeting passes that some mother who has not before been set to thinking finds in this meeting "the arrest of thought." The hottest day of the season sixteen attended, four of whom listened for the first time to the discussion of the "Duty of Parents in the Home."

Mrs. Additon, who has carried on her state work very effectively from a distance, has once more taken up her abode in Portland. Her old friends gave her a warm welcome by a surprise party in her home.

The state W. C. T. U. has been lately invigorated by fresh young blood which is a great benefit to their ranks. Miss Rose M. Trumbull, of La Grande, secretary of the Y's, has been doing some circulating in the counties adjacent to Portland in the hope of vivifying the nearly spent Y's.

Miss Stella Ames, state superintendent for the new department of physical culture, has been already making herself felt and heard. From McMinnville, where she had given several days' work, Miss Ames came to Corvallis. Being an essentially hard place for a good hearing, unusual methods were tried to make her visit successful. An evening "at home" introduced her to our best people, and her second evening was spent at a reception of the State Agricultural College, where she spoke in a pleasant way to about two hundred and fifty students. She devoted the days to class lessons in physical culture.

Besides the part that we hope the Oregon L. T. L. children will take in the children's exhibit at the World's Fair, the department of scientific temperance instruction will also be represented there by Mr. M. L. Pratt, one of the public school teachers of Portland. He is hard at work preparing an apparatus and publishing a book which will illustrate scientific teaching in temperance at the Columbian Exposition.

L. A. NASH,
State Reporter, Corvallis.

NEW JERSEY.

CONVENTION ECHOES.

The nineteenth annual gathering of the New Jersey W. C. T. U. convened in Roseville M. E. church, Newark, October 11 to 14. The decorations were beautiful and appropriate. The silent presence of our "ascended leader" in a life-size crayon, suspended over the pulpit, seemed a benediction of peacefulness.

The first evening was given to the Y's, who reported 745 members and 186 honoraries.

Wednesday morning the business session opened with Mrs. Emma Bourne in the chair. The usual committees were appointed, and routine work was speedily dispatched. The address of the president was short, but full of practical thoughts. The corresponding secretary read her report, which gave the number of W. C. T. Unions as 164; members, 5,522; honoraries, 756; money raised for various lines of our work by the local unions, $47,000. The treasurer reported $3,874.84 received during the year. Telegrams were sent and received from Delaware, Maryland and Tennessee state conventions then in session.

The pastor of the church, Dr. Meeker, gave most cordial greetings, as well as many other notable ministers, who attended the sessions faithfully and cheered us by their coöperation. The last half hour of the morning sessions was devoted to Bible reading and prayer; the spiritual atmosphere from these services permeated all who came in touch with them. Amanda Smith, the colored evangelist, dropped in for a few moments one morning, and business was suspended while she sang, "The Lord, He is able to deliver thee!"

Twenty different departments of work reported activity and faithfulness. The discussions which followed were interesting and helpful. I wish we could refer to all, but space forbids, however I must touch one or two. In the prison report, the statement made by the keeper at our state prison was alarming. He said, "The larger part of emigration is from the lower strata, and crime on the increase faster than the population; if the same ratio is kept up, the condition of the next century will be appalling!" This was emphasized in the report of the foreign work.

Aggressive work was urged, or ere we are aware the principles for which our forefathers fought will be nullified, and we be unchristianized.

Persistency was the watchword of the parlor meeting report. Sunday schools—the securing of children's names upon the autograph pledge cards for the Columbian Exposition, also the need of making temperance Sunday interesting and instructive.

The tobacco and narcotic report brought to light the fact that five times as much money is spent for tobacco as for preaching the gospel. The vile pictures used by these venders of the weed came in for a share of attention, also the apathy of the churches to the insidiousness of this corrupter of morals.

A resolution of love and tenderness was ordered sent our National President, also a telegram of sympathy to the President of the United States, and a prompt reply was received from his private secretary, E. J. Halford. Two hundred and sixty-four delegates were reported by the credential committee, and by their ballots elected Mrs. Emma Bourne, president; Mrs. J. T. Ellis, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Isabella Demarest, recording secretary; Mrs. E. A. Mickle, treasurer for the ensuing year.

During the interim of the sessions, on Thursday, a large delegation went out to Rosedale Cemetery where the earthly remains of our past leader are laid, and with tear ful eyes affectionately strewed flowers on the new made grave, and re-consecrated themselves to the work so near her heart. The opening session of the afternoon was a continuation of the memorial service for this dear one, and our press superintendent, Mrs. M. H. Crane, also the seventy-four others, who since our last meeting have laid down their work and taken up their crown.

The tedium of business was often relieved by touching songs by Mrs. Gwynden, Miss Mary Ellis, and others. The "Temple" report was satisfactory, showing $1,037.41 had been raised during the year, and up to date our state had contributed $3,180.07. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt spoke on Wednesday evening, on the scientific instruction of temperance in our public schools, to the edification of all who were present, and a resolution was adopted that if the complexion of the incoming legislature would warrant it, Mrs. Hunt be called into the state, and effort made to put the law on our statute books, which for eight years we have been refused.

The county presidents were only allowed two minutes each to speak, yet managed to say considerable; some spoke of successes, others of failures, but all showed a determination never to cease effort until the traffic is outlawed. Dr. J. H. Knowles, secretary of the Sabbath Union, spoke of the effort which is being made to have the next Congress rescind the action of the last, closing the Columbian Fair on Sunday, and a resolution was adopted ratifying the Congressional act.

Thursday evening Dr. Anna Shaw captured the large audience which had assembled to hear her on the "Fate of the Republics," so that the most conservative were forced to admit "that she was not in the least offensive, although she handled her subject in a masterly way." Resolutions on our usual lines of work were adopted. The daily press of Newark gave us most satisfactory reports, and much space, for which the convention returned hearty thanks.

At the noontide hour of prayer Friday, Mrs. Amer led; the song, "God be with you till we meet again," was sung, after which the president, Mrs. Emma Bourne, announced the convention adjourned.

While our hearts are gladdened by the advance made in our educational work by our constituency, joy is turned to sadness by the success of the infamous county excise commission, in planting saloons to deal out death, where for years the people have ruled them out at the ballot box. Among the latest is Pemberton, Burlington county, where for seventeen years no saloon has been allowed, but now Gambrinus reigns. Notwithstanding the Monmouth County Law League presented over five hundred complaints to the grand jury, and the chief justice charged, "if they found the law had been violated, even if they thought it a bad one, they must indict." They failed to find. Away with such decisions! How long shall evil prevail against the right?

The Presbyterian synod, at its recent session in Belvidere, passed strong resolutions on these race track evils in the state, the county excise law, the "disorderly house act," and also urged all within its bounds to labor by voice and vote for the complete destruction of the liquor traffic. They also urged the sessions of the churches to use the unfermented juice of grape at the Lord's Supper.

N. L. CAMINADE,
State Reporter, Trenton.

IDAHO.

THE SIXTH YEARLY GATHERING.

The sixth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Idaho was held at Idaho Falls, October 21 to 24, inclusive. The Baptist church where the convention was held was profusely decorated with bunting and national flags, interspersed with W. C. T. U. and L. T. L. banners and mottoes, "Our Nation's boys must be saved" being one that attracted universal attention. The convention was formally opened at 7:30 p. m., by Mrs. S. H. Black, president, and the following program rendered:

Address of welcome, on behalf of the W. C. T. U., by Mrs. J. Ed. Smith, of Idaho Falls.

Response by Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox, of Newberg, Ore.

Welcome, on behalf of the citizens, by Jos. A. Clark, Prohibition nominee for governor.

Response by Mrs. N. J. Stevenson, of Boise.

Annual address by the president.

Recitation by Mrs. Cox.

The temperance doxology and benediction.

Saturday found the delegates busy and interested in the usual routine of convention work. During the afternoon two papers of special interest were given by Mrs. R. Mitchell, state organizer, one on franchise and the other on legislative work. The evening opened with devotional exercises, led by Mrs. Holbrook. A paper, written by Mrs. Givens, subject, "Destructive Criticism," was read by Mrs. Knapp, of Blackfoot. Then the large audience listened with deep interest to an address by Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox, National organizer, subject, "The Drink Traffic."

Sabbath morning at ten o'clock, a memorial service conducted by Mrs. R. Mitchell, was held in remembrance of the life and work of Mrs. Louise Walker, the president of the district of northern Idaho. At eleven a. m. temperance sermons were preached by the pastors of the Presbyterian and Baptist churches. Sabbath afternoon was devoted to the children's service, led by our efficient and thoroughly devoted worker, Mrs. R. Mitchell, who is not only state organizer, but superintendent of children's work as well. Both the literary exercises and the prompt responses of the children showed their careful training and no one was surprised when, at the presentation of the beautiful banner offered by Mrs. R. Mitchell to the L. T. L. making the greatest progress since January, it was awarded to Idaho Falls Legion. Mrs. L. P. Johnson donated a state banner to be held in trust each year by the L. T. L. gaining the largest per cent of membership. Mrs. Cox then gave a little talk on the "Dangers that be set our children."

Sabbath evening after devotional exercises, Mrs. Delle C. H. Cox delivered an able and pointed address on the subject, "The liquor traffic and what shall we do with it?" Her arguments were strong and convincing, especially with those who claim to be Christians, but have hitherto voted the same ballot as the saloon keeper.

Monday was a busy day filled up with the electing of officers, the hearing of reports and the appointing of superintendents. Most of the old officers were reëlected. Mrs. S. H. Black, president; Mrs. S. E. Holbrook, vice-president; Mrs. Mary E. McGee, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Eva C. Barton, recording secretary; Mrs. S. E. Crow, treasurer; Mrs. R. Mitchell, state organizer. A strong and pointed set of resolutions, showing the advanced line of thought taken by our women, was adopted. Monday evening an able paper, written by Mrs. Talbot, of Pocatello, was read by Mrs. Hall, of Star. After this an interesting and profitable mothers' meeting, conducted by Mrs. N. J. Stevenson, was held, and convention adjourned.

Many features contributed to make this convention one of the pleasantest and most profitable ever held in Idaho, some of which were the presence of Mrs. Cox, our National organizer, the promptness and efficiency of our local reporter, Mrs. Emma Senter, and last but not least, the royal manner in which the citizens of Idaho Falls welcomed our convention. Idaho this year sends a full delegation to the National Convention.

CONVENTION REPORTER.

NEW YORK STATE NEWS.

Cortland county met in convention with Virgil union, every union in the county represented. Gratifying reports were given by superintendents, as well as from local unions. The afternoon of the first day was devoted to the president's address, a program by the L. T. L., and a question-box which was in charge of Mrs. Anna E. Rice, of Batavia. Mrs. Rice also addressed the audience in the evening, her subject being, "We Reap as We Sow." Much to the regret of all in the county, the president, Miss Sara Collins declined a reëlection. She has served so faithfully for several years that it was hard to give her up, but the loyal women have rallied around the new president, Mrs. J. W. Keese, and will give her the same support which has been given Miss Collins in days gone by. Excellent papers were read, resolutions passed, and the general feeling, at the close of the meeting, was one of satisfaction.

The eighth annual meeting of Saratoga county was held at Schuylerville, and was presided over by the county president, Mrs. Andress, and from the beginning to the close was a most delightful gathering. A pleasant feature was the presentation of a beautiful banner to the convention, by Mrs. B. H. Travers, of Saratoga Springs. All of the old officers were unanimously reëlected. Good work has been done during the year, which was well reported. About seventy dollars was raised toward a hundred dollar share in the Temple at Chicago. In the evening Miss Eugenia Gibson, from the Home and training school for Christian workers, gave a most earnest address on "Great Convictions."

The report of Silver Lake Assembly union, although a little late will be appreciated by THE UNION SIGNAL readers. They will hold an annual school of methods at Silver Lake, Mrs. L. P. Davies, president. She opened the first meeting with an address, full of thanksgiving for the past and hope for the future. They met for the first time in new, beautiful and commodious headquarters, which cost about one thousand dollars. Several of our state superintendents were present as well as many county workers, all doing their part towards the success of the meetings, by papers and discussion of same. The following request was read and accepted and will be laid before the officers of the Assembly, to the effect that several days during the coming year be devoted to temperance on the Assembly program, one evening of which shall be given to L. T. L. work, the union to be responsible for the exercises of that evening; also that W. C. T. U. day be made an excursion day the same as others. Dr. Anna Shaw was present and addressed the ladies on "Marriage" and on W. C. T. U. day, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap, of Michigan, delivered one of her grand and impressive lectures. Rev. C. H. Mead, of the Silver Lake quartette, presented the financial question and asked for a contribution. One hundred and fifty dollars were soon raised, after which Mrs. Lathrap, in well chosen words, dedicated the new building to the service of God and the work of the W. C. T. U. of Silver Lake Assembly. The president and treasurer of the union were each presented with a souvenir spoon.

The seventh annual meeting of Erie county was held at Alden, with a large delegation present. Twenty departments reported and a grand review of the L. T. L's of Erie division brought a long line of girls and boys with banners and mottoes, and also long lines of red, white and blue pledge cards strung ready to send to the World's Fair at Chicago. Among the fraternal delegates present were Mrs. Pinkham, a Crusader from Wisconsin, and Miss Manning, president of Wyoming county.

Miss Lillian M. Phelps, of St. Catherines, Ont., held the close attention of a large audience in the evening, who were delighted with her bright and charming way of presenting her subject. The same evening the local unions of the county presented Mrs. Hawthorne and her husband with five handsome pieces of furniture. Mrs. Hawthorne has been county president for a number of years but feeling she could not again serve in that capacity, Mrs. A. A. Shaw, of Eden, was elected president. Miss Yurann, the faithful corresponding secretary, was again elected, although feeling hardly able to do the work. Miss Yurann met with a serious accident some months ago when returning from a county convention, and has been a cripple ever since. She was obliged to go by carriage to this meeting, but during all these months she has faithfully performed every known duty.

Orleans county convention met at Waterport, and after welcomes and response, the routine work was taken up and carried forward most successfully by the county president, Mrs. Ruggles. The children's hour was delightful, and an eloquent speech from Rev. Mr. Smallwood, of Virginia, received earnest attention as he appealed to the W. C. T. U. to turn their attention to their colored sisters in the South, who for so many years were held in bondage. Mrs. Boole, our state vice-president, delivered the evening address, and held the large audience present in perfect accord with her, while she delivered telling blows at the liquor traffic. Miss Cheney, of Jamestown, gave a morning talk on political equality. Arrangements were made for work at county fair and reports of officers were given. Excellent music enlivened the exercises of the convention, and taken altogether the good effects of this convention will be far reaching.

Ulster county met at Wallkill and reports a fine convention. The Y's took an active part in the meeting giving the response to the welcome, and also conducting the evening service. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes gave the address in the evening and during the day was very helpful, giving a short talk on the juvenile work in New York City and also conducting a conference with the young ladies, and a Bible reading on the "Daughters of the Bible." The entire convention was thoroughly enjoyed by all present and the reports showed grand work done during the year.

Herkimer county is not behind in good work and reports a splendid meeting held at Salisbury. The officers made reports which were encouraging, the treasurer's report showing a balance on the right side. Mrs. Mary J. Weaver, of Batavia, was present and addressed a large and attentive audience in the evening. Mrs. D. T. Lamb presented an elegant banner, the gift of Miss Rowena Thompson, of Salisbury, to the county union, which was accepted and gracefully acknowledged by Mrs. Kellar, the county president. Greetings were sent to the Good Templars then in session at Manheim; a splendid set of resolutions was adopted and the convention adjourned.

Monroe county, the banner county of the state, held its thirteenth annual convention in the Frank street Methodist church of Rochester, with a delegation of 120 present. The greatest harmony and kind feeling pervaded all the meetings. There are 5,000 pledged children in the Sunday-schools of the county, and the youth as well as the children are being gathered into temperance societies. Thousands of temperance periodicals are being scattered among the people, including many in foreign languages, and the criminal classes are being looked after more carefully than ever by the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Boole was present and not only gave a splendid address, but also conducted a parliamentary drill. This county has a membership of 1,500, besides many honorary members.

The annual meeting of Schuyler county was held at North Hector, a pleasant little village in the midst of the fruit-growing section, on the east shore of Seneca Lake. The election of officers resulted in a reëlection. The reports were fine, and while space forbids a full account, the general tenor was most encouraging. Several unions reported special work. In the evening they listened with pleasure to an impressive speech by Rev. M. H. Coleman. Recitations, readings and music all added to the entertainment of those present.

At Randolph, Cattaraugus county, in addition to the regular delegates—and only three unions were unrepresented—several fraternal delegates were present, Miss Kate Manning, president of Wyoming county, Mrs. Mattie Mead and Mrs. M. R. Almy, the president and secretary of Chautauqua county, and Mrs. Dr. Brooks, of Ellington. Mrs. Charles Merrill, secretary of the Randolph Home, extended a cordial invitation to all to visit that institution, and over two hundred ladies accepted, and were charmed with the perfect arrangements there. Dr. Anna Shaw delivered her forceful address, "The Temperance Problem," to a packed audience at the Opera House. An elocutionary contest was greatly enjoyed, Miss Henry, of Olean, capturing the prize. Superintendents' reports were full of encouragement; the old officers were again elected with one exception. Much work was done which cannot be reported, but the general verdict was, "the best meeting we have ever had."

Martinsburg was the place chosen for Lewis county convention. Twenty-nine delegates and many visitors present. The reports showed an increase of membership and of interest, due largely to the work done in the county by Mrs. Helen L. Bullock. The day of meeting being the birthday of Mrs. Leavitt, fervent prayers were offered for her and for the success of the cause she has labored for in many lands. The afternoon was crowded with reports, a parliamentary drill, a question-box, a conference on scientific temperance instruction and interesting and able essays. In the evening the president's address was given and well received, after which all listened with interest to a lecture on "The Relation of the Liquor Traffic to Foreign Missions," by Rev. John M. Forman, of Tategatt, India. Good music and recitations added their charm to make up one of the best programs ever presented at a county meeting.

Rensselaer county W. C. T. U. convened in the First Baptist church of Troy. Seventy-five delegates responded to the roll call. Mrs. S. A. Kenney, county president, gave the welcome, while Prof. Chas. W. Crockett, of the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, on behalf of the church, welcomed the convention to its hospitality. Professor Crockett stated that this was truly a temperance church, inasmuch as every person was obliged to subscribe to a pledge against the use, manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors before becoming a member of the church. A fine increase both in membership and activity was reported. The county union central of Troy, and the Lansingburg union have each given one hundred dollars to the Temple at Chicago. An eloquent and stirring address was given by Rev. H. O. Hiscox, of Troy, who is an ardent champion of prohibition. In the evening Mrs. Boole spoke on "The Arch Deceiver" and was listened to with marked attention. Excellent resolutions were adopted, and a "most profitable meeting to all" was the verdict at the close.

FRANCES W. GRAHAM,
State Reporter, Lockport.

WEST WASHINGTON NEWS.

We are small in numbers, but earnest in our endeavors to help on the great moral reform in all the branches of work. Mrs. Reese, our state organizer, has written you of her work. She is doing good service for the cause.

The following unions support reading-rooms: Seattle, two; Anacortes, Chehalis, Centralia, Coupeville, Hoquiam, Kent, La Conner, Puyallup and Vancouver, each one. Several unions edit a column in their local newspapers. A large amount of literature has been distributed, and our publications are taken and appreciated. A few unions have Loyal Temperance Legions. Those that have none say it is for lack of a suitable leader. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few."

At Tacoma we have a White Shield Home. Mr. Allen C. Mason gave seven valuable lots in a most desirable residence portion of the city if the women would begin the building in June (one year ago last June) and complete it during the summer. With faith they began the work, not one dollar of building fund in hand when the offer was made. To say we succeeded is only the oft repeated record of the W. C. T. U. the world over. Our Home is worth at least $3,500 besides the grounds. Different unions take upon themselves to furnish each a room; sometimes two unions furnish together. King county union furnished one as a county, besides what the locals have done. We have an able corps of lady managers. We cannot tell much of the unwritten sorrow soothed within its walls. Ten babes have been born there since last June, four months. Two have died—all of mothers under sixteen years of age. Here helpless, betrayed girls are sheltered, cared for, converted to Christianity and started anew in life. If it were not for such a place of refuge, what would these outraged children do? The charitably inclined are increasing in their numbers, sending donations of provisions, clothing, fuel, etc.

Some of our unions keep wall pockets filled in public places with good literature. King county holds four county conventions a year. The last was held at Fremont, a suburb of Seattle. They had a very pleasant session, a fine literary entertainment in the evening and a picnic at Green Lake the afternoon of the second day which was greatly enjoyed. We did not cease to talk and plan for temperance work even at the picnic.

Pierce county's semi-annual convention was held at Sumner. They used printed programs full of promise of good things, and the promises were faithfully fulfilled. Mrs. J. W. Lee presided. Mrs. Shaffer, state president, was present and gave us a parliamentary drill which was highly appreciated. The "temperance fire-works" in the evening were sparkling with wit and pathos, interspersed with music; a cornet duet by a young lady and gentleman was well received. Mrs. Fry, of Seattle, was present the second day and read a paper, by request, entitled, "The Evolution of Woman." She had read it previously at the state convention. It was listened to with great attention on both occasions.

Many of our superintendents of departments deserve special mention, as doing valiant service in their special lines of work.

The rhododendron was elected as the Washington state flower, largely through the efforts of Mrs. Fry. The state W. C. T. U. selected the wild rose as our emblem, as it grows in abundance all over the state. Mrs. Johnson, of Seattle, did good service in public speaking and singing for the temperance cause. A committee was appointed at the state convention in June, to revise our state constitution. They did the work assigned, and the matter will be voted upon next year, and changes accepted or rejected.

Each union gave an entertainment, the proceeds of which went toward printing our minutes, hence they are free of advertisements.

MRS. ETTA JONES,
State Reporter.

OKLAHOMA.

"THE LAND OF THE FAIR GOD."

On the 12th of October, amid a long continued wind storm that blew dust and sand terrifically, followed by a "down-pour" of rain, the white-ribboners of this territory were wending their several ways to El Reno to meet in annual convention.

The convention met in the Presbyterian church. The opening exercises were conducted by the president, Mrs. E. J. Roberts; the local L. T. L. sang a welcome song while marching into the church; an address on behalf of the churches was extended by Rev. Smith, also the acting mayor of El Reno and Mrs. O. P. Light, for the local union; to all of which, Mrs. C. P. Walker, of Oklahoma City, replied gracefully. Music and recitations interspersed made the evening an enjoyable one.

The morning of the 13th the convention was opened for business after devotional exercises, led by Mrs. A. L. Smith, of Frisco. After appointing the various committees, the most important being the one to draft a new constitution, the members of this committee being formerly from Ohio, Illinois and Kansas, felt that they could not do better than have Oklahoma adopt the constitution of states so "well up" in W. C. T. U. work, and each one had the minutes of the several states to prove their position, but happily each was willing to concede something, and the constitution reported, was adopted unanimously.

The annual address of the president was able and comprehensive. I have space for but one extract from it: "The selling of liquor to the Indians has assumed dangerous proportions. Notwithstanding the strict prohibitory laws, the saloon keepers continue to sell intoxicating drink to them and often, on my return from my work among Indian women, I have been obliged to leave the road entirely to avoid meeting Indians so infuriated by liquor that all the wildness of their nature is aroused and they look as if they were capable of committing any deed of barbarism."

An interesting mothers' meeting in the afternoon brought out many questions and answers that showed deep, thoughtful earnestness on the part of motherhood. This was followed by a mass-meeting of the L. T. L. led by our territorial organizer, Mrs. Nellie Swan, of Guthrie. A beautiful autumn bouquet of flowers was presented the convention by the L. T. L. of Guthrie. Mrs. Bradley, the president of the Guthrie union, who has passed "beyond the river," was tenderly remembered by a memorial service conducted by Mrs. Emma Miller.

The result of the election of officers was the placing of Mrs. Nellie Sheplor as our leader for the coming year, the other old officers holding the same places. Mrs. Sheplor, who was mentioned in my last letter, has recently come here from Illinois; she has had experience as a W. C. T. U. leader and under her leadership we hope to make advancement all along the line. The convention closed Friday evening after a strong, clear cut W. C. T. U. lecture by Mrs. Sheplor. She is an easy, graceful speaker and was attentively listened to. At no time during the convention was the audience large or enthusiastic, but we bade farewell to our hospitable friends in El Reno, feeling that plans had been perfected from which good may result to the temperance reform in the future.

The first district convention of the W. C. T. U. of northern Oklahoma was held in the First Methodist church of Stillwater, on September 28 and 29. A practicable program, full of the true W. C. T. U. ring and spirit was carried through in a business manner. The following postal sent the reporter from the president, Mrs. M. A. Copland, while the convention was in session, shows its tenor: "God's work is moving grandly on; we are enjoying this convention as never before in this territory. Spiritual thermometer above zero. Ministers taking important steps. Suffrage meeting to-night. Pray for us."

El Reno union has held two Demorest medal contests; Maggie and Edith Roberts were the successful contestants. The El Reno city council has passed an ordinance that houses of prostitution cease to exist in that community, and the acting mayor, J. M. Kerfoot, who spoke such kindly words of welcome to our convention, gives assurance that the ordinance shall be strictly enforced. Mr. Kerfoot was a candidate before the Democratic convention of the El Reno district for representative to the territorial legislature, and had a fair show to secure the nomination until he was asked for money to treat the crowd to beer and whisky, which he refused to give; he received only four votes.

Frisco is our banner temperance town; it reports not a saloon in it.

An anomalous condition of things was noticed in the attitude of the Oklahoma city press in regard to the sale of beer upon the territorial fair grounds; the Times-Journal, the organ of the party that gives "cordial sympathy" to the temperance reform, advocated its admission, while the organ of the party that does not believe in "sumptuary laws" strenuously opposed beer being sold upon the ground. But the collusion of the saloon element and "cordial sympathy" gained the admittance of this nefarious traffic within the inclosure.

The ballot has been extended to the Cheyennes and Arapahoe Indians, a race of people that does not speak the English language. All instruction, both political and educational, is given to them through interpreters. The Australian ballot system went into practice in this territory on the 8th of November.

MRS. SUE UHL BROWN,
Territorial Reporter, Oklahoma City.

MICHIGAN ETCHINGS.

The trees are all aglow with a wondrous beauty. All over this state the bright, bristling thoughts brought out at convention are lighting up the horizon and we are learning that the littles make up God's magnificent whole.

Genesee county has just held its tenth annual meeting at Swartz Creek. Our county banner, with the local and the flag of our country as decorations, explained fully the cause of the meeting. Flowers and a trained choir that had practiced especially most appropriate pieces; the L. T. L., with song and recitation, were some of the features. We were royally welcomed by Mrs. Goodwin and our sentiments in response were voiced by Mrs. Emerick. There was a full delegation from the ten unions; every one was at his best and a lovely spirit pervaded the whole meeting. The motion made at the last meeting for a money basis representation was presented in a paper by Mrs. C. H. Johnson, discussed and promptly voted down. The basis of representation of the ninth district was adopted.

The reports of superintendents were followed by discussion and a school of methods was conducted. The resolutions rang with no uncertain sound, and the one on the press, presented by our district superintendent, Mrs. Jennings, was as follows:

Resolved, That as our local newspapers enter almost every home and are read by the masses, that we use the press as a means for tunneling under the traffic and depositing the moral dynamite that shall eventually prove its overthrow.

We took a new departure this year, and by vote each superintendent was to prepare a resolution. This was very helpful to the committee. Some subscribers were obtained for THE UNION SIGNAL.

We gave our retiring president, Mrs. Benjamin, a five dollar share in the hall at Hackley Park; to our secretary and treasurer, each, Temple inkstands. Mrs. W. L. Aldrich, of Gaines, is newly elected president. We, of Flint, through the efforts of two women, have had an intellectual treat in Mrs. Lide Meriwether's lecture on "The Silent Seven." Lansing union writes of the removal to South Haven of Blanche H. Mason, a valued worker. Their fair work this year had the additional attraction of a finely arranged program carried out in their tent, which included a chalk talk by Rollo Kirk Bryan.

Mrs. King, secretary, reports the seventh district convention. It took place at Marine City and was the largest ever held. The report showed a membership of 537 in the district. Three of the five county presidents were

(Continued on page 15.)

Our Library Table.

To those who are at all familiar with the inimitable writings of Lucy Larcom, no words are needed to commend to their reading anything from her pen. To the person who has not refreshed himself at the rich feast of good things which she ever presents, no words can adequately portray their loss. She is preëminently a writer on spiritual themes, being in wonderful "touch" with the Divine nature and understanding and handling with rare wisdom and delicacy that "strange, sad, troublous thing"—the human heart.

Houghton, Mifflin & Company have just issued AT THE BEAUTIFUL GATE, a volume of poems compiled by their author, Lucy Larcom.

Out of the wealth of treasures in this little volume, space can be given to but a few lines.

"What is the best a friend can be
To any soul, to you or me?
Not only shelter, comfort, rest,
Inmost refreshment unexpressed;
Not only a beloved guide
To thread life's labyrinth at our side,
Or with love's torch lead on before;—
Though these be much, there yet is more.

"The best friend is an atmosphere
Warm with all inspirations dear,
Wherein we breathe the large, free breath
Of life that has no taint of death.
Our friend is an unconscious part
Of every true beat of our heart,
A strength, a growth, whence we derive
God's health, that keeps the world alive."

OUR CHILDREN IN OLD SCOTLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA is a very interesting history of the work of Emma M. Stirling, the founder of the Edinburgh and Leith Children's Aid and Refuge Society, founded in 1877. The strong, pure, motherly face in the portrait of Miss Stirling corresponds well with the history of this work for the needy children upon whose devoted heads are visited the sins of the fathers. The author gives her "experience" touching the temperance question, saying: "When I began to work at the Day Nursery, I was not a teetotaler. A short time, however, sufficed to entirely change my opinion. It was impossible for any moderately humane woman to witness the sights and hear the stories of sin, suffering and sorrow, which were a considerable part of every-day life there, without feeling horror and disgust at what was only too clearly the direct cause of nine-tenths of all the mischief." Out of this conviction grew Miss Stirling's effort in the direction of coffee-houses.

The book in question, aside from its interest, is one that will prove very helpful in the way of suggestion to those whose work for humanity may tend somewhat in a similar direction.

Published by John Haddon & Co., Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E. C.

For the smallest readers and picture lovers of Uncle Sam's great family, and for the help of the patient mothers in Uncle Sam's big nursery comes BABYLAND, edited by the editors of WIDE AWAKE. Each year brings its tribute to the dainty kings and queens who reign in child dom, in the shape of pure, sweet reading matter and exquisite illustrations which are steadily growing richer and rarer. BABYLAND is replete with original stories and fun, and even a year, though its wear and tear might tell on the clean pages and clear print, could hardly work threadbare "The Tiptoe Twins," "The Sweetheart Stories," dear, old "Nurse Karen's Norway Tales," and the large variety of nature stories and sensible jingles.

D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

Charlotte M. Yonge is the author of a book entitled THE CROSS ROADS. The story is a picture of English life "below stairs," the heroes and heroines being inhabitants of the "servants' hall" in the home of a family belonging to the "quality." The story is strengthened by a good moral, and the plot is well sustained, but it has a peculiar tone with which Americans are not familiar, since American home makers have no such home provisions beneath their roofs for their domestic helpers as is here set forth. It would not be compatible with American democracy to pattern after the English way in this respect in toto, but housewives on this side the water might learn many a wise lesson from a study of the domestic economy as described in such books as the above.

Thomas Whittaker, 2 and 3 Bible House, New York City.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

Fresh Air and Exercise.

Get all that's possible of both, if in need of flesh strength and nerve force. There's need, too, of plenty of fat-food.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod Liver Oil builds up flesh and strength quicker than any other preparation known to science.

Scott's Emulsion is constantly effecting Cure of Consumption, Bronchitis and kindred diseases where other methods FAIL.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

SEE MY NEW DRESS?

It used to be my mamma's old cashmere, but she dyed it with Diamond Dyes, and made me two new dresses, a blue and a brown. Brother's got a new suit, too; it's Uncle Jack's old coat dyed over; mamma said 'twas easy to dye with Diamond Dyes,—that anybody can use them.

Diamond Dyes are made for home use. Absolutely reliable. Any color

Sold everywhere. 10 cts. a package. ☞Direction book and 40 samples of colored cloth free.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

ORGANISTS

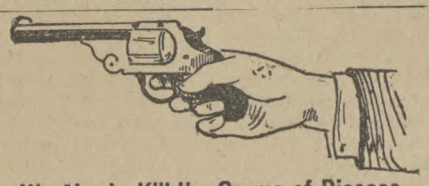
will find a series of articles on Reed Organ playing, and some excellent music for the Reed Organ, in the December

MUSICAL MESSENGER.

Also new Organ Voluntaries and Vocal Music, suitable for Christmas Services. The music is adapted to the popular taste. We are sure a sample copy of this popular musical journal will commend itself to teachers and players.

Single copy 15 cts.; three months' trial subscription 25 cts.; one year $1.00. No free copies.

FILLMORE BROS., 141 W. 6th Street, Cincinnati, O., or 41 Bible House, New York.



We Aim to Kill the Germs of Disease.

PURE BLOOD means Vigor, Energy, Life. Catarrh, Bronchitis, Nerve Waste, Consumption and General Debility are results of impure blood. AERATED OXYGEN cures these ailments. Its history is interesting. Its efficacy marvelous. SEND FOR PAMPHLET. Home Office,

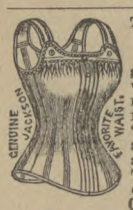
AERATED OXYGEN COMPOUND CO.,

NASHUA, N. H.

Chicago Office: 3 & 4 CENTRAL MUSIC HALL.

New York Office: 19 BEEKMAN STREET.



THE GENUINE FAMOUS SNUG-FITTING JACKSON FAVORITE WAIST.

Fine form, good support, easy as a glove. Miss W., of Chelsea, Mass., writes: "Send two more waists; I like mine very much and now send for friends." Miss E., of Kenneth, Pa.: "Your waists are superior in finish to anything I have yet seen. Please send another." White, Drab, Gold, Black. Trade mark CCC. Warranted. Ask dealers for it. Postpaid, $1.

CORONET CORSET CO., Jackson, Mich.

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " 3 months	.25
" " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15
Per 100 copies	1.00

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

SPECIAL.

In addition to the long list of attractive Christmas goods we have to report the following specialties:

For Teachers: Fine new booklets in boxes 12 in box at 50 cents per box.

The following additions to 15c booklets:

Christmas and New Year's Greetings in lovely jeweled booklets with silver cord and tassels.

WINGS OF GLORY, by Margaret Haycraft, a wing-shaped booklet, illustrated, very nice.

A fine line of 20c. booklets:

LOOK UP: Specially adapted to King's Daughters, finely illustrated, pansies and ferns on cover.

SONGSTERS OF THE AIR: Illustrated. Cover: Marguerites and verbenas in relief.

CHRISTMAS GREETING, brilliantly illuminated. Cover: bells, etc., in relief.

THE DEATH OF THE FLOWERS, very nice. Illustrated. Cover: flowers, ivy and bells in relief.

GOLDEN AFTERNOON, a compilation of poems suitable for gift to older people. Illustrations, monotint. Cover: white; design, red and gold.

SNOW BLOOM, by Lucy Larcom. A compilation of seasonable poems. Cover: white and gilt embossed.

For 25 cents:

HOME, SWEET HOME, a house shaped booklet, 16-pages. Illustrations, poem, music, etc.

A harp shaped booklet containing words and music of the Last Rose of Summer, March of the Men of Harlock, Auld Lang Syne, Home, Sweet Home and four illuminated pages.

For 75 Cents:

CHRISTMAS LIGHTS, a book 6¾x7½ inches, exquisite in design and execution. Board covers. Beautiful illustrations.

Send orders for all Christmas goods to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FOR FARMERS' WIVES.

There was a great deal of talk at the National Convention about something being done to interest the farmers' wives. A large, intelligent, industrious class of women are in the farm-homes of the country and valuable allies they would make. If they have not been reached they should be at once. The initial work can be done during the long winter evenings, when they can find time to read and think.

They would prize a copy of the Convention number of THE UNION SIGNAL very highly. Let every local union select twelve of the most influential women in the farm homes near their organization, and send to us their names and addresses, together with fifty cents, and we will mail to each one of the names given a copy of this twenty eight page paper. Follow this with personal interviews, and the results will be wonderful. For this purpose we will send this large, fine paper —twenty-eight pages—for fifty cents for twelve copies.

Send orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

MISS WILLARD'S ADDRESS

Will be published in two separate forms. THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL of October 28 contains it in full. It is printed in large, clear type, and almost the entire twenty pages is filled with it. This edition sells for five cents per copy. There are only a few of these left, and those desiring them should order early.

Another edition of the annual address will be ready—when you read this—a pamphlet edition, price ten cents. Send in your orders, so that they may be filled as soon as possible.

Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

From $35

WE DO IT EVERY TIME! Save you from $50 to $200

HOW DO WE DO IT?

We sell from our factory at wholesale prices direct to the public, saving them all agents' and dealers' exorbitant profits. We are doing a marvellous business. One thousand Pianos and Organs per month. WONDERFUL, but true! To prove it, send for our new catalogue, illustrated in colors. It is FREE to any address. Examine it, and you will see that we are selling at prices that are simply WONDERFULLY LOW. We have now some of the finest styles of Organs and Pianos ever manufactured. Our new catalogue shows all the latest. Our twenty-sixth annual special offers are now ready. We have bargains in all styles and at all prices. Organs from $35. Pianos from $175, for cash or on easy payment. We have the largest direct trade in the world. We have a larger factory and employ more men than any firm doing a direct business. You can visit our factory FREE if you live within 200 miles of us.

ORGANS and PIANOS For CASH and on EASY PAYMENTS

. . . NOTE . . . We are absolutely responsible for all our contracts.

REFERENCES: First National Bank, and all the great Commercial Agencies.

NO SATISFACTION, NO PAY! All instruments shipped on free trial warranted for ten years.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE AT ONCE TO

CORNISH & CO. Old Established & Reliable Washington, NEW JERSEY.

From $175

A PEERLESS PREMIUM!

DIRECT FROM THE HEART OF AFRICA.

SINCE the days of the Patriarchs the most valuable product of Equatorial Africa has been, and to-day is, its

Ivory of Dazzling Whiteness, being superior in its texture, in the delicacy of its tints, and the grace of its contour lines. Bishop William Taylor, the Editor and Proprietor of

THE AFRICAN NEWS,

The Only Illustrated Journal in America Devoted to Africa, has had the great good fortune to secure a limited quantity of AFRICAN IVORY of the finest quality, being the Tusks of Wild Elephants captured in

The Forests of the Upper Congo, immediately under the Equator, and brought overland to the coast on the dusky shoulders of native carriers, affording him an opportunity of presenting to each and every subscriber of THE AFRICAN NEWS, a Souvenir of genuine interest and artistic worth from that wonderful land. The Ivory has been placed in the hands of skilled artists, who have cut and polished it, until the slender tracings, delicate as a spider's web, are seen shining through the transparent surface. It has been fashioned into Carrying Ivory through the Forests.

Beautiful Ivory Picture Frames

each one cut the diameter of the tusk, handsome in design; and each Ivory Frame contains a portrait of WILLIAM TAYLOR, The Pauline Methodist Bishop of Africa, whose life is devoted to the enlightenment of the dusky races of that Continent. Or, a portrait of STEPHEN MERRITT the "Unique Methodist Preacher-Philanthrophist," Secretary for Africa. Or, if you prefer, we will leave it vacant, for your own portait. Take your choice, for we shall give one of these beautiful

SOUVENIRS OF EQUATORIAL AFRICA

to every Subscriber who shall forward THE REGULAR SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, ONE DOLLAR, for THE AFRICAN NEWS for ONE YEAR, to the publisher, Not Later Than December 31st Next. This valuable offer applies to ALL Subscribers, to whom the Pure Ivory Gift will be delivered ABSOLUTELY FREE OF ALL EXPENSE to them. Address Bishop Taylor's Son.

Rev. ROSS TAYLOR, 210 Eighth Avenue, New York, N. Y

A Choice Gift
A Grand Family Educator
A Library in Itself
The Standard Authority

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

NEW FROM COVER TO COVER.
Fully Abreast of the Times.

Successor of the authentic "Unabridged." Ten years spent in revising, 100 editors employed, over $300,000 expended.

SOLD BY ALL BOOKSELLERS.

GET THE BEST.

Do not buy reprints of obsolete editions. Send for free pamphlet containing specimen pages and FULL PARTICULARS.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Enameline
THE MODERN STOVE POLISH

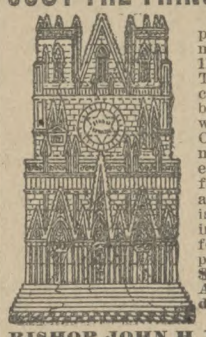
Ready for use. Applied with a Cloth. LITTLE Labor, NO Dust, NO Odor. The BEST and MOST ECONOMICAL Stove Polish in the World. Sold everywhere. Sample mailed FREE.

J. L. Prescott & Co., Box B, No. Berwick, Me.

BEATTY Piano, Organ, $23 up. Want agents. Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beatty, Wash'ton, N.J.

JUST THE THING FOR CHRISTMAS



This Temple is beautifully printed in attractive colors, mounted on ¼-inch board, 11½x18 inches and dissected. The Ten Commandments compose the steps. On each block is a book of the Bible, with number of chapters. On reverse side is found the map of Palestine. With each Temple we furnish a folder of 150 Bible questions, answers and references. It is a Sunday amusement, both interesting and instructive, for children of all ages. Sent, prepaid, upon receipt of price. $1.25. Single folders, 10c. Agents wanted for Holiday Work. From

BISHOP JOHN H. VINCENT, D.D., LL.D.:

"Chautauqua, N. Y., July 15, 1891.

"The Temple of Knowledge is a very ingenious device. I think it would be an admirable help in every home. Faithfully yours, JOHN H. VINCENT."

Address ALICE J. CHAMBERLAIN, 349 N. Academy St., Galesburg, Ill.

Please mention this paper.

The Tried and Proved Plar

For the Successful Distribution of TEMPERANCE LITERATURE.

JUST OUT.

A copy sent free to every Department Superintendent asking for it.

HOLIDAY AND EVERYDAY
Chromo Cards With Temperance Mottoes

at cut rates. Send for lists and terms.

5 TEMPERANCE BOOKLETS

at 5c, 10c, 15c (2), 25c, respectively. Generous discounts by the dozen. Address

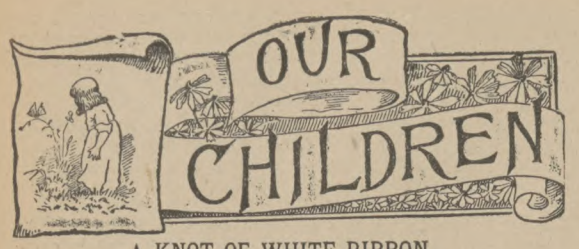
JULIA COLMAN,
47 Bible House, New York City.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

BEAUTIFUL QUEEN MAB'S

curious eccentricities are illustrated by fine original engravings, in Dr. O. P. Brown's unique Shakesperian Almanac for 1893. One or more for distribution among friends, on receipt of address on postal. J. GIBSON BROWN, 47 Grand Street, Jersey City, N. J.



A KNOT OF WHITE RIBBON.

BY LILLIAN BARKER.

No, Miss, 'taint a very long story,
But sadder than most that you hears,
And 'tis all about my poor Bessie—
There, pardon a poor old man's tears.
You see she'd been off to college,
Three hundred miles away,
An' my heart leaped with joy when I saw her
An' she said she'd come home to stay.

To be sure she'd learnt lots of notions,
'Bout dressin' an' bein' polite,
But she was my same bonny Bessie,
And her heart wasn't changed a mite.
I ain't much of a hand to notice,
The fixups you women wear,
But she always had a knot o' white ribbon,
An' I thought it looked kind o' quare.

So I sez to her one mornin',
After a week or so,
"Now if you want any ribbons or sech like,
Why, Bessie, you can have 'em, you know.
An' really, if I were you, dear,"
Sez I, lookin' at the knot o' white,
"I'd buy a bigger ribbon,
That's sech a stingy mite."

An' how her blue eyes twinkled,
When she told me what 'twas for,
An' how she'd joined a Temperance Union,
With several hundred more.
Now, she knew very well, my Bessie,
I was a personal liberty man,
An' didn't believe in sech nonsense,
But voted the high license plan.

Well, she an' a lot more women,
As election day drew near,
Were continually tormenting us
An' temperance was all we could hear.
As she kissed me good-by that mornin',
She said in a pleadin' voice,
"Please, father, vote for temperance,
And make Bessie's heart rejoice."

But I shook her hand from my shoulder,
In a very cross state of mind,
And turned away as I muttered,
I'd do nothin' of the kind.
But a man can't help lookin' back, Miss,
No difference how hard he tries,
An' there my Bessie was standin',
With tears in her bonny blue eyes.

As I stood by my bench that mornin',
A-hammerin' with all my might,
It seemed that her bit o' white ribbon,
Was round my neck chokin' me tight.
As I went down street for my dinner,
I saw a great crowd gathered round,
An' some men were liftin' up somethin'
Very tenderly from the ground.

Somebody was hurt, they told me,
An' I drew up nearer to see,
And, O God, 'twas my own sweet Bessie,
They were liftin' so tenderly.
She had started out to meet me,
An' was comin' down the street,
When two men who'd been drinkin'
Sprang out o' the "Devil's Retreat."

They were a-fightin' and cursin',
An' afore she could get away,
There was heard the report of a pistol,
And there on the sidewalk she lay.
An', Miss, now would you believe it,
I'm only tellin' you what's true,
The bullet went through her white ribbon,
An' 'twas stained a darker hue.

Pardon these bitter tears, Miss,
But I cannot make them stay,
When I think o' my little Bessie,
Who died on 'lection day.
An' that's why I wear a white ribbon,
An' that's why I'm sad to-night,
An' that's why I'm workin' for temperance,
An' tryin' to do what's right.

Dixon, Ill.

UNCLE JOHN'S TALKS.

IV.

WORKSHOP.

Needs a few more touches in this shop, Jimmy. You must have two vises. Some people have more than two, but they are spelled differently. We don't want any of that kind. First, a regular carpenter's vise, two feet from the end of the bench, right where this support is. An iron screw is best, and costs only fifty cents. You will need help to put this on; so I will not give you any directions. Have a strong jaw so it will not bend. In using it, see that the lower end is fastened open a trifle wider than the thickness of the piece you intend to hold, in order that there may be a good grip at the top. You will understand this when you have tried it once.

The other vise is a small iron one, for holding wire, keys, or any small pieces of metal. Its place is on the edge of the shelf right in front of the north window. I think you'd better make a joint or hinge in this north shade, as you saw in mine the other day. Simply cut the side pieces about a foot from the bottom, and put on the cross-pieces which you will see are needed, then attach cords so as to work this small part independently. When you raise the whole shade this will hang down. This jointed shade is an "institution." I should have mentioned it at first, only I was afraid of saying too much, but I find we cannot get along without it. Might sometime want even two joints, and then, of course, three cords.

Never strain your eyes. Have good light, with proper shades. Always use a lamp shade at night. Once you weaken the vitality which God gave them you may never regain it. I can tell you how to fix a common fifty cent lamp with a ten cent paper shade so you can get more comfort from it than from a seventeen dollar, two-story phantasmagoria. Put a thread around the lamp's "neck," with a slipping-noose, and slip it up tight. Then a pin-hook in the edge of the shade, and tie the thread to it, just long enough to let the shade stand level. Now by operating the noose you can tip the shade up to any desired angle, and you have a bushel of comfort to the square inch. When you are working close to the table turn the low side of the shade toward you, etc. When you read turn the high side and sit with your back to it. When you go about the house carry the low side toward you and you can easily imagine you have a locomotive headlight.

What's that, Jimmy, shop? Well, we did get a little out of the shop, but not our subject. I want to impress upon you the importance of treating your eyes well.

The essentials of the shop are done, now, and the non-essential conveniences will vary with the surroundings of each case. You can provide them from time to time, as the need appears. You want a two-feet box to hold odd pieces of wood—small ones that might get lost. A drawer under the bench is a good place. For the smallest bits, use a box in the cabinet. Then, as fast as you accumulate boards and pieces of any kind, put up long pegs, or arrange as best you can, having in mind the possibility of getting any one piece without disturbing the others.

I must say one more word to those who cannot afford the tools I have mentioned—for I remember my own childhood. Use boxes or barrels or logs, only place them properly. Use newspapers for shades, and gather up whatever tools you can find. Keep the ideal in mind, and work toward it, and don't forget that your old uncle sympathizes with all your little hardships.

Now that Jimmy is started, you may come to my shop next time and I'll show you how to make something or other. How many will there be of you? Jimmy and his sister, and these two girls from over the hill, and three boys from the big farm, that makes seven. Oh, no; these four chickens will go home to morrow, so I'll have only the seven. Yes, these nephews and nieces may come again, next year, but if they want to have shops they can make them at home, and write to me if they want to ask anything.

Vineland, N. J.

WHAT IS A BABY, ANYWAY?

A London paper has been gathering in answers to the question, "What is a baby, anyway?" and has just awarded a prize to the best expression. Here are some of the brightest answers:

"Father's rival in mother's love."

"The magic soul by which the gods transform a house into a home."

"A mite of a thing that requires a mighty lot of attention."

"A native of all countries who speaks the language of none."

"A pleasure to two, a nuisance to every other body and a necessity to the world."

"A crying evil that you only aggravate by putting down."

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—Some essays have been sent in and I am sure all the Cozy Corner circle will be interested in reading the following on TOBACCO.

Tobacco is a deadly poison. There are a great many men and women that use it. Boys and even girls use it out here in Oklahoma. Tobacco injures the body and the health. It breaks down more bodies than it builds up. People raise tobacco here and hang it up on long strings in the rooms where they sleep. When it is dry, it is stiff and they crumble it up in their hands and then smoke it.

Oklahoma City. MABEL BROWN.

Just think, boys and girls, of sleeping in a room where tobacco was drying! The air poisoned by the damp, unhealthy odors would be unfit to breathe, just as it is when filled with tobacco smoke.

Ray Dexter, a Cozy Cornerer, of Anatone, Wash., who has been visiting his aunt in the country writes us a little letter "on the subject of tobacco" as follows:

I am a boy twelve years of age. I neither drink, chew nor smoke. The use of tobacco in any form not only injures the health, but the body and mind, and also injures the morals after used several years.

Cannot some members of our circle write us letters in answer to this question: "Why do we include cider in our temperance pledge?" And tell us at the same time how cider is made and of what it is composed. Let them be at least of one hundred words.

Yours to grow in knowledge,

Aunt Jane

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

123.

ZIG-ZAG.

* . . .
. . * .
. * . .
. . * .
. * . .
. . * .
. * . .
. . * .
. * . .
. . * .
. * . .

To unclose; a division of land; the dearest spot on earth; to pain; an alcoholic beverage; a young child; a string; a small quantity; an edge; a store; one and no more. Zig zag, the hope of our nation.

124.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

My 4, 8 is you and I.
My 5 represents a thousand.
My 3, 2 is a salute.
My 1, 7, 6 is a young animal.
My whole is a great discoverer of whom much is said this year.

125.

CONCEALED BIBLE NAMES.

His heart is hard as adamant.
She very obligingly consented.
Rebecca, in union is strength.
Do, Anna, be ladylike.
Please throw them away.
Did she make that herself?
Quick, Hannah, a man is hurt.
Truth is mighty and will prevail.
Anna, Sarah and Josiah went to church.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED NOVEMBER 3.

116. T-here, H-itch, A-bout, N-ever, K-nave, S-pray G-race, I-deal, V-ague, I-slam, N-opal, G-rain. Thanks giving.

117.
W I N E
I D E A N E A R
E A R L

118. Wine—Milk.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED OCTOBER 27.

113. 1, Liverpool. 2, Herat. 3, Teheran. 4, Glasgow. 5, Newburyport. 6, Penobscot.

114. October twenty-first.

115. A-be-T, B an E, S-la-M, T-ra-P, I-dl-E, N-ea R, E-ph-A, N-oo n, C-ai c, E as-E. Abstinence, Temperance.

Correct answers to puzzles published October 20: Frankie Moore; Florence Phillips; Mertie Davis; Edith P. Lambert; Gertie D. Stevens; Alfred Fraser; Ethelyn Pierce; Vida Irene Thompson.

Correct answers to puzzles published October 27: Ella M. Hanson; J. Clinton Perrine; Rebecca.

(Continued from page 12.)

present. The district superintendents gave excellent reports. A fine paper was given by Mrs. D. T. Smith, subject, "The Kindergarten in the Home." The convention voted to raise the $50 assessed as our share in Hackley Park Hall. Our minutes are nearly ready for publication. Miss Griffin spoke for us last evening. On the second evening we had a gold medal contest won by Maude Bishop, of Marine City. The old officers were reëlected.

Clifford, also, reports Mrs. Weeks' famous chart lecture as well attended and instructive. Her work has been very helpful to the local unions. A most successful meeting was held with the Caseville union. The unions at Silverwood and Caseville were organized by Mrs. Weeks on her two weeks' tour through the district. The third district held a branch county convention at Sherwood. The program during the first hour, "Convention Reminders," added no little to the success of the meeting. There are fourteen unions and one Y in this county all represented. There was a children's meeting and a medal contest; a conversation upon "Inspiration to work" with a discussion, "Who is responsible for the saloon and its results?" A paper telling how to reach the country people was by Mrs. Tinn.

The fourth district convention was held at Cassopolis. The five counties were represented, and there were reports from nine superintendents. One evening was given to the L. T. L. The other two were occupied by Miss Frances Griffin and Rev. Henrietta Moore. Papers were given upon "Why Women Need the Ballot," "What is the Object of Our Organization?"

In the fifth district, the fifteenth annual convention of Kent county was held at Grand Rapids. The church was finely decorated with banners, cut flowers and plants. The county officers were all present. The speakers of the evenings were Mrs. A. S. Benjamin and Miss L. J. Newcomb. Rev. Gladden and Mrs. Knogg, of Bay City, addressed the convention in the interest of "Happy Home Clubs"; Miss Lura Mains, superintendent of department of mercy, stated that a W. C. T. U. children's home was to be located at Dutton, and solicited subscriptions. The papers entitled, "Why Does the Cause Lag?" by Mrs. A. Drinkall, and one on L. T. L. work, by Mrs. Dr. Pressy, were published in the daily papers. Mrs. M. E. Bodwell was elected president. There are in the county twenty three unions, with membership of four hundred and sixty. Eighty-one delegates were present. The financial condition of the county is good.

The ninth district convention was held at Reed City. These words came to me in reply to a letter of greeting: "Through God we shall do valiantly."

Eleventh district convention was held at Bay View in Evelyn Hall. Six counties were represented by presidents. In the program was the wise thought of President Howard: "It is desired that the county presidents will not confine themselves to a mere formal report, but will also give the general pulse of the temperance question in their localities. At evening service our round-the world missionaries were especially named and remembered. Conversations upon "What inspires you to work?" "The business woman and the home," were also held.

Mrs. Kinney, National superintendent of penal work, was called to Maine's state convention, and again to Minnesota, stopping at Milwaukee on the way and speaking three times at the prison at Stillwater. She speaks of the kindness of the warden, formerly of Detroit. Her new card for prisoners is called "The Two Ways," Scripture texts are on one side, illustrated by diagram on the reverse.

Our president was at Chautauqua; at Olcott Camp on Lake Ontario; Keuka lake; at several other places in New York, and three days at a school of methods on Staten Island, speaking twice on Sunday to four thousand people, in all making thirteen addresses at assemblies.

MRS. C. H. JOHNSON,
State Reporter, Flint.

MINNESOTA ITEMS.

The seventh district held its fourth annual convention in Hutchinson. The McLeod county convention having been fixed for the same date, a joint program was furnished. Mrs. Hobart and Mrs. Wright, state corresponding secretary, were present, giving an added inspiration, and the district president, Mrs. Clifford, presided. The reports from local and county unions were gratifying, even though some had been hindered by sickness from accomplishing all they desired.

Sabbath observance, narcotics, scientific temperance instruction and other lines of work were ably discussed and favorable action taken to strengthen these lines in the district work. Mrs. Hobart gave in the evening an address, asking, "Who's to Blame?" and answering the question in no uncertain terms.

Among the first unions to send one hundred dollars to the Temple was the Lucy Hayes, of Minneapolis, thus insuring a place upon the marble walls of our House Beautiful for the name of the union. After that had become an accomplished undertaking, a member of the union bethought herself of another name which ought to be placed there, the honored name of Rev. W. W. Satterlee, Minnesota's best known temperance advocate. She whispered the thought to the president of the Lucy Hayes union, who responded, "It shall be done, and the Lucy Hayes union will do it." Everybody wanted to have a dime or two in that one hundred dollars, so the money was raised. Meantime another lady had also had a thought —why not preserve the names of all subscribers to the fund, have them bound into a dainty booklet and present it to Dr. Satterlee as a souvenir? This too, was done, and last Friday evening a large company gathered in the home of one of the members of the union on the occasion of presenting the booklet. The president of the union, Mrs. Neal, in a few well-chosen words, referred to Dr. Satterlee's long and unremitting labors in the Prohibition cause in Minnesota, and spoke of the many, who through his efforts, had been led to give themselves, their time, abilities and vote, to the cause; of the wish of these to see his name upon the walls of the Temple, and their pleasure in helping to accomplish this. Miss A. M. Choate also spoke a few words in behalf of those whose names were in the book, since they were too numerous to allow of each speaking for himself; and Dr. Martha Ripley spoke for those whose names were not there, because they didn't have the chance. Dr. Satterlee responded with feeling, thanking his friends for the honor, and then he did just what everybody always expects him to do when he gets upon his feet—gave a temperance speech, telling of the righteousness of the Prohibition cause and its encouraging outlook. Light refreshments were served, and in very good season the people dispersed to their homes.

The new editor of our state paper, Mrs. E. H. Chase, has taken hold of the work earnestly, hopefully and prayerfully. In the last issue Mrs. Hobart makes an earnest appeal to the presidents, district, county and local, and to all Minnesota white ribboners, for help in the present necessity by a donation to the White Ribboner. Please send all subscriptions with money, and all donations "for Paper Fund" to Mrs. E. H. Chase, office White Ribboner, Travis Block, Minneapolis, Minn.

MRS. AMY A. GREEN,
State Reporter, Minneapolis.

Official Communications.

DEPARTMENT OF SOCIAL PURITY.

DEAR SISTERS:—Once upon a time the sun asked the moon to shine in his place a little time while he turned the light of his countenance upon other lands. The poor little moon, realizing that her light was only darkness, trembled at the thought of trying to shine instead of the sun, until she conceived the idea of calling to her aid the light of a brilliant galaxy of stars and by this plan secured a beautiful and steady illumination. You doubtless perceive the appropriateness of this fable to the present situation.

Our National president, Miss Frances Willard, has been the great central light of this department of social purity, and now she asks that I shall take her place while she goes to England to take needed rest. It would be presumption in me to think that I could shine in her stead, but by the aid of the galaxy of state superintendents I believe we may have an illumination that will help us to work with safety.

I therefore take this as the quickest method of coming into personal relations with you, and ask that each state superintendent in the department of social purity will write me at once, giving me briefly an idea of the condition of this department in her state, and also stating her views of the needs of the work as experience presents it to her.

I am desirous of obtaining as speedily as possible a general view of the subject in its present state and in its needs, and I shall feel grateful for all helpful suggestions from those who, by experience and close observation, have obtained an insight into the vital problems which this field of labor presents.

A few words in regard to Mr. Crittenton's gift of $5,000: All over this broad land the hearts of our white ribbon women are saddened at the thought of the many homeless girls who are being led to ruin, and the news of Mr. Crittenton's generous gift for the welfare of such girls has led many to hope that their community might share in its benefits. Many letters have been written to Miss Willard which she has referred to me in my capacity as superintendent of the social purity department in her stead. These letters, so far, have been answered personally, but others will be written and it seems wise to make this public announcement. Correspondence has been entered into with Mr. Crittenton in regard to the conditions surrounding his gift, and as soon as authentic information is received a definite statement will be made through the columns of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Trusting to receive a prompt response from each of you, and feeling assured of your most hearty coöperation,

I am cordially yours, MARY WOOD ALLEN.
1412 Adams St. Toledo, O.

OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

NEW SUNDAY-SCHOOL LITERATURE.

The quarterly temperance lesson for December 25, chosen by the International Lesson Committee, Rom. 14: 12 to 23, is in such perfect harmony with the spirit of this Holy time that it would be most unfortunate to lose so great an opportunity to enforce the duty of total abstinence on the Pauline principle. For other's sake is the keynote of this lesson as well as that of Christmas in its truest, divinest import. Many requests have come to the National superintendent, from Sunday-school workers, for a leaflet prepared by her on pledge signing. In accordance with these requests, as well as a desire to help make the most of the quarterly temperance lesson, she has prepared a leaflet based upon the subject of the lesson for December 25, entitled, "The Total Abstinence Pledge. What Is It? Why Sign It?" This is suitable for general distribution.

It is hoped that each local union will see that the Sunday-schools in its locality are supplied, free of charge. No better Christmas temperance work could be done than putting appropriate temperance literature into the hands of the members of the Sunday school on Christmas Sunday, and through them reaching the home. The following liberal terms are offered: For 100, 50 cts.; for 500, $2; for 1,000, $3.50; for 2,000, $6; for 5,000, $12. All postpaid.

Will not the local unions and friends of the cause everywhere aid in this effort to help awaken and deepen conviction as to the duty of total abstinence and pledge signing, in the name of Christ, and for the sake of those for whose redemption He was born in Bethlehem's manger? Order from the department secretary, Mrs. Julia A. Bidwell, Deposit, New York.

So grand was the response to the appeals sent out last year, not only in regard to the lesson leaflets but the autograph pledge cards, that 2,048,000 pages of the former were sold, and to date 137,340 of the pledge cards have been ordered from the National department while some states have issued their own. A great and wonderful blessing has been upon the Sunday-school temperance work as a result of the quarterly temperance lessons and the earnest work in the line of literature and pledges that has accompanied them. Shall not this year see redoubled effort and consequently far greater results?

"In His Name,"

LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL,
World's and Nat'l Supt. S. S. Dept.

FREE TICKET TO CALIFORNIA.

For conditions and full information about California, address, A. Phillips & Co., Excursion Agents, 104 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

In addition to the Christmas organ voluntaries promised in the December number of THE MUSICAL MESSENGER, there will be an interesting Symposium on church music by a number of prominent ministers of various denominations. See advertisement entitled "Organists."

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all Throat and Lung Affections also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints. Having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, and desiring to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who wish it, this recipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail, by addressing, with stamp, naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

NATIONAL SUFFRAGE CONVENTION.

For the Woman's National Suffrage Convention at Washington, beginning Jan. 15th, the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. will sell tickets at the rate of a fare and a third for the round trip on the certificate plan. Delegates and others attending the convention should not forget to accept from ticket agent from whom they purchase their tickets a certificate certifying the route traveled and the amount paid; nor should they forget to have this certificate properly indorsed at Washington, so that the B. & O. ticket agents in that city will be in position to accept it, and sell the holder a return ticket at one-third the usual fare. As all Baltimore and Ohio trains between the East and West pass through Washington, the B. & O. ("The Picturesque Route") should be the most convenient to those attending the convention. Those traveling via the B. & O. will see the most picturesque scenery in America while crossing the Alleghany Mountains, and will learn more of the nation's history in traversing the Potomac Valley, which was the pathway of civilization to the West, and which later was the theater of the bloody struggle between the North and the South.

For detailed information as to rates, time of train, and Pullman sleeping car accommodations, apply to L. S. Allen, the Rookery, Chicago, Ill.; C. P. Craig, 415 Broadway, N. Y.; A. J. Simmons, 211 Washington St., Boston, Mass.; James Potter, 833 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., or to Chas. O. Scull, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore, Md.

Family Dormitory Association...

Capital $100,000

Incorporated under the Laws of the State of Illinois...

This Association has been organized for the purpose of enabling families of moderate means to attend the World's Fair safely and economically.

Stock will be issued at $10 per share, transferrable and non assessable.

Each share will entitle the holder to 20 days occupancy of a room in the Family Dormitory.

Beds single, double, or double rooms with single beds.

Seven blocks from World's Fair gates. Electric cars pass the door. Five minutes' ride, fare five cents.

A restaurant will be in connection, where lunches or regular meals can be obtained cheaply.

Parties subscribing now will be assigned to rooms in advance for such dates as they may designate.

REFERENCES:

HON. HEMPSTEAD WASHBURNE,
Mayor of Chicago.
E. G. KEITH, Pres. Metropolitan Bank.
MRS. GEO. M. PULLMAN.
MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE.
MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD.
MRS. HELEN M. BARKER.
MRS. C. D. HAMILL.

All money orders made payable to W. D. Preston, Metropolitan Nat. Bank, Treasurer, but send your letter to MRS. MARY F. HAYDON,

409 Rand-McNally Bldg.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

Mme. M. YALE'S

LA FRECKLA
ELECTRIFIES THE WORLD.

BEAUTY IN A BATH.

La Freckla, the Great Mineral Water discovered by Mme. M. Yale, that Celebrated Woman Chemist. It is the only known natural water that has the power of Purifying the Skin and making a Complexion Beautiful.

LA FRECKLA

was named La Freckla because it is a sure cure for Freckles—all one has to do is to bathe the face in it a few times, when the Complexion becomes radiantly beautiful and Every Freckle disappears as if by magic. It removes any spot or stain from the Skin in the same way, only it seems to favor Freckled Faces.

Mme. Yale's own complexion is the most perfect ever seen. Her lovely neck and arms are so perfect one has to look closely to make sure they are not marble, and her face is as fair as the lily and as pink as the rose.

LA FRECKLA

will make any woman who uses it as fair as she.

Price $1.00. For sale by all Druggists, or shipped by Mme. Yale. Address all letters to

MME. M. YALE,
COMPLEXION SPECIALIST,
37 W. 14th St., New York.
146 State St., Chicago, Ill. Mme. M. Yale Co.
Send 6 cents postage for Beauty Book just out.

SEELY'S PERFUMES
THE AMERICAN PERFUMER
IT GOES ALL OVER THE WORLD
A Superior Toilet Requisite for Imported Perfumes
ODORS
AMERICAN ROSE.
EASTER LILY.
ANEMONE.
COLUMBIAN BOUQUET.
If not to be obtained of your druggist Send 50c for Sample box of four odors.
SEELY MFG CO.
DETROIT, MICH.

A CENT SENT BENT.
Manufacturer of
"CROWN" PIANOS AND ORGANS.
WELL SPENT, is a cent sent to Bent, (your address, on postal) if you wish a Piano or Organ. I want verses about the "Crown" goods, and give Pianos, Organs, etc., for the best ones. Ask and learn how it's done. Catalogue free. GEO. P. BENT, (Clerk No. 52), Chicago, Ill. (Estab. 1870).

BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS FOR THE HAIR AND SKIN.
An elegant dressing, Prevents baldness, gray hair, and dandruff. Makes the hair grow thick and soft. Cures eruptions and diseases of the skin. Heals cuts, burns, bruises and sprains. All druggists or by mail 50 cts. 44 Stone St. N.Y.

$5 to $15 per day, at home, selling LIGHTNING PLATER and plating jewelry, watches tableware, &c. Plates the finest of jewelry good as new, on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. No capital. Every house has goods needing plating. Wholesale to agents $5. Write for circulars. H. E. DELNO & Co., Columbus, O.

DICK'S FOOT WARMER SHOES
Worn everywhere; woven by hand; wool-lined; seamless. Where dealers have none we mail postpaid (any month in year.) Ladies' size, $1.25. Men's, $1.50. WM. H. DICK, Manf'r, Dansville, N. Y.

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

LADIES WHO NEED MONEY should take agency for "Dainty Work for Pleasure and Profit"—just out. The best instructor for fancy needle and decorative work. Ladies go wild over it. DANKS & CO., 334 Dearborn St., CHICAGO, ILL.

WALL PAPER. Good Paper, 3c. Gold Paper, 5c. Large package of beautiful samples and guide, "How to Paper," sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant, 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO, ILL.

BEATTY Pianos, Organs, $23 up. Want agts. Cat'lg FREE. Dan F. Beatty, Wash'ton, N.J

Publisher's Notes.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE IN 1893.

It would be hard for a person who cares for good reading to make a better investment than a year's subscription to The Century Magazine. No region is too remote, no expense too great, if it will only produce what the Century's readers want. This is the policy that has made it, as the Pall Mall Budget, of London, says, "By far the best of the magazines, English or American."

The November number begins a new volume and contains the first chapters of a powerful novel of New York society, called "Sweet Bells Out of Tune," written by Mrs. Burton Harrison, the author of "The Anglomaniacs." In this story the fashionable wedding, the occupants of the boxes in the Metropolitan Opera House, the "smart set" in the country house, are faithfully reflected, and the illustrations by Charles Dana Gibson, Life's well known cartoonist, are as brilliant as the novel.

In this November number begins also a great series of papers on "The Bible and Science," opening with "Does the Bible contain Scientific Errors?" by Prof. Shields, of Princeton, who takes decided ground that the Bible does not contain scientific errors of any moment, and who most interestingly states the case from his point of view. Other articles in this series will include one in the December (Christmas) number, "The Effect of Scientific Study upon Religious Beliefs."

The December Century is to be a great Christmas number,—full of Christmas stories, Christmas poems, and Christmas pictures,—and in it will begin the first chapters of a striking novel of life in Colorado, "Benefits Forgot," by Wolcott Balestier, who wrote "The Naulahka" with Rudyard Kipling.

Papers on good roads, the new educational methods, and city government, are soon to come.

Four dollars will bring you this splendid magazine for one year, and certainly no cultivated home can afford to be without it. Subscribers can remit directly to the publishers, The Century Co., 33 East 17th St., New York. They should begin with November, and so get first chapters of all the serials, including "Sweet Bells Out of Tune."

THE FIRST EDITION

Of the "White Ribbon Hymnal" is all gone. Fifteen hundred copies were ordered, and the first were ready to ship to Denver in time for the National Convention, which opened on October 28. Within twenty days of that time the supply was exhausted, and we find ourselves compelled to hold orders until our busy presses can print another edition. Orders received prior to that time will be promptly filled as soon as the new edition is ready. At Miss Gordon's request, two or three additions will be made, necessitating some slight re-arrangement, and an alphabetical index will be added.

As before stated, in addition to everybody's favorite hymn, and a number of new and beautiful songs, it contains responsive Bible readings for use in local and public W. C. T. U. meetings, both for opening and closing services, and a list of Scripture selections for temperance meetings, chosen by our leading speakers. It should be owned by every member of the W. C. T. U. and their friends. Price 35c.; per dozen, $3.50.

Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TAKE NOTICE.

Those who have sent in new subscribers under our offer to give a scholarship for one month's home instruction in Phillip's Business College are requested to address the College at Syracuse, New York, stating which study is selected, so as to save delay and annoyance.

WHITE RIBBON VIBRATIONS

With Its Stirring Music is just THE THING for Your Public Meetings. It will help Immensely.

YOUNG PEOPLE LIKE IT.
The CHILDREN ENJOY it.
Old Folks are Interested.

PRICE 35c. PER COPY.
Send for Sample Copy to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

One Way

to fill a barrel with water, is to use a sieve. It's a poor way, though. You can do it—but it takes time, patience, care and much work.

So you can wash clothes with soap and a washboard—but it isn't the best way. It's slow work, hard work, costly work. It wears out the things you're trying to get clean. The best and easiest way is to use Pearline. That does the washing while you're doing something else—does it without any of the clumsy rubbing that takes so much time and makes so much wear and tear.

Send it Back Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 320 JAMES PYLE, N. Y.

METAL TIPPED. EVER READY DRESS STAY Will Not Cut through.
See name "EVER READY" on back of each Stay.
ACKNOWLEDGED THE BEST DRESS STAY ON THE MARKET.
PERSPIRATION PROOF. PLIABLE. EASILY ADJUSTED.
Ask for them. Take none but them. BEWARE OF IMITATIONS.
MANUFACTURED BY
THE YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MANUFACTURING CO., YPSILANTI, MICHIGAN.
FOR SALE BY ALL JOBBERS AND RETAILERS.
SPECIAL DEPOTS } MODEL DRESS STEEL and BUSTLE CO. 74 Grand St., New York. BROWN & METZNER, 535 Market St., San Francisco.

"AS GOOD AS HARTMAN" is a worn out chestnut. Few dealers try this deception now as "a satisfied customer is the best advertisement," and it holds trade to sell Hartman Flexible Wire Mats.
HARTMAN MANUFACTURING CO., Beaver Falls, Pa.
Branches: 102 Chambers St., New York; 508 State St., Chicago; 51 and 53 S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga. Catalogue and testimonials mailed free.
Our Mats have brass tag attached stamped "Hartman."

DO YOU CROCHET ?
The GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn., will distribute in Premiums $2,000. Gold Coin, for the best specimens of fancy work, to be made only from the Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread. Open to all residents of the U. S.
Send 10c. for Sample Spool Twilled Lace Thread. 500 Yards.
$2000.00 GOLD COIN in Premiums.
Ask your dealer for circulars giving full information. If not to be had of him, write us. DO NOT DELAY. Thoroughly satisfactory proofs of our reliability furnished.
GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., GLASGO, CONN.
Illus. Crochet Books, Nos. 1, 2, or 3, 10c. each. 24 Bed Spread & Tidy Patterns, 5 cts. each.

One-third Your Life is Spent in Bed!

The Art of purifying Feathers for Bedding purposes has been the subject of close study for many years, and has reached its highest development in the COLD BLAST PROCESS, by which all foreign matter, dust and the causes of odor are eliminated, and the Feathers rendered pure, clean and sweet, as well as permanently buoyant, while retaining their Feathery softness. FEATHER PILLOWS MADE OF THESE ARE HEALTHFUL. Watch for Trade Mark. Your dealer probably keeps them. If not, address
THE COLD BLAST FEATHER CO.
MAKERS OF Faultless Bedding. CHICAGO.

TOBACCO HABIT
HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.
For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others.
Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.
EASILY CURED

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis

FAT PEOPLE
YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of
DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.
Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.
DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S
PILE COMPOUND
Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.
CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.
References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M.D., Helena, Mont.
Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

ROASTER & BAKER
HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES.
Agents Wanted. Catalogue free
Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

New Cantatas, Concert Exercises and Anthems.

EMANUEL, a sacred cantata, in the form of oratorio, by W. A. Ogden. The story of Emanuel told in song. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

SANTA CLAUS' DELIGHT, a merry Christmas Cantata for Sunday schools, by Chas. H. Gabriel. Beautiful music, pretty scenes and a jolly entertainment for the children. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

JOY-BELLS, a new Christmas Concert Exercise for Sunday schools, by J. H. Fillmore. Pretty music, recitations, and readings. Price, 5c.; 55c. per dozen, post-paid; $4.00 per 100, not prepaid.

HARK! WHAT CELESTIAL SOUNDS, a chorus anthem for choirs, by J. B. Herbert. An anthem of unusual beauty. Price, 10c.

☞A full descriptive list of all our Christmas Cantatas, Concert Exercises, and Anthems mailed free.

FILLMORE BROS., 141 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

DARKNESS & DAYLIGHT

OR LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction

By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 41st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published. Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. ☞ We Give Credit, Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for

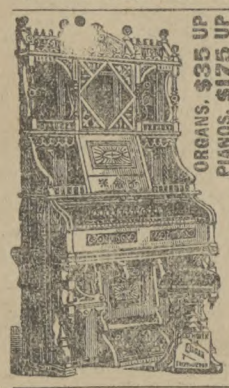
WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE

a New, Choice, splendidly Illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all.—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest, Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.



ORGANS, $35 UP PIANOS, $175 UP

FREE

Our large 24-page Catalogue, profusely illustrated, full of information on the proper construction of Pianos and Organs. We ship on test trial, ask no cash in advance, sell on instalments, give greater value for the money than any other manufacturer Send for this book at once to

BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO., WASHINGTON, N. J. P. O. Box 701

Nasal Catarrh

Is the cause of Bronchitis, Consumption, Dyspepsia, Headache, Cough, Deafness, Loss of Vitality, Insomnia, and many other serious disorders.

Why don't you get relief? You can get relief if you want it. We are not physicians, but we can instantly relieve and cure you. Will you let us do so? We relieve and cure others, why not you? Our treatment has been indorsed by English physicians for 50 years. It is simple and costs but little. You use it at home a little while night and morning. Send postal for our book telling you all about it. GIBBS RESPIRATOR CO., 38 La Salle Street, Chicago.

COMPETITION

THE JUSTLY CELEBRATED

Manitou

MINERAL WATER is above competition. Its superiority over all other mineral waters is acknowledged by all who have tried it.

This water is not only a pleasant drink, but is a sovereign remedy for dyspepsia, liver and kidney complaints. If you try it once you will use it always. Ask your grocer or druggist for it. Drink it with your dinner at club or restaurant.

Unexcelled for Family, Club and Restaurant use packed in cases of 100 Pints and 48 Pints.

Convenient forms for Dealer and Consumer

Address for literature

Manitou Mineral Water Co., Manitou Springs, Colo.

Sold by all first-class groceries. Also by all druggists.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.

CATARRH

Sold by Druggists or sent by mail. 50c. E. T. Hazeltine, Warren, Pa.

Publisher's Notes.

OUR DAY,

A Record and Review of Current Reform.

JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.

Price: Single numbers, - - $ .25
Yearly subscription, - - 2.50

Published by

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TEN CENTS CAN DO MUCH.

With One Dime a Day an Entire Library May Be Secured.

As a matter of fact, the silver dime is the great American coin. It is thoroughly democratic in its character, pressing all palms in its circulating travels, visiting the palace and the hut, the saint and the sinner, the rich and poor, the young and old.

It has a thousand times the carrying powers of its big brother, the silver dollar, and goes on its way serenely indifferent to politics and congress, for it is too small to set the oratorical mill grinding. The catalogue of results obtained by the dime as an active factor is a long one, and contains an astonishing variety. But the most amazing thing which can be accomplished by the nimble, agile 10 cent piece, is the purchasing of an entire library.

Ten cents a day will do it. The price of a cigar or a couple of packages of chewing gum or an ice-cream soda each twenty four hours will give our readers the entire set of twenty volumes of the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica. It seems too absurd to be true, but we have made just that proposition to any and all of our friends and readers.

It is an opportunity that should not be passed by. It is a chance which will only last for a short time. It is a proposition which is gauged to the capacity of the slenderest purse, and it is made only to our readers.

Address all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

To Y's!

To Y Unions!!

To Workers Among Young Women!!!

To Distributers of Temperance Literature!!!!

The organ of the Young Woman's Branch

THE OAK AND IVY LEAF

for December is a

National Convention Number

Of special interest and value. It contains the only complete account of

Y Evening at the National,

With the stenographic report of

Lady Henry Somerset's Beautiful Address

To the Y's of America, and the other speeches of the evening.

The plan of work for the coming year, and many other items of interest to

Young Temperance Workers

Will be found in its ten pages. A large edition will be published. Send in your orders early.

One hundred copies for distribution, $1.50.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

All who desire the complete report of the Denver Convention should send for a file of THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. We have a limited number and while they last will send full set on receipt of 25c.

REMEMBER, the first number contains Miss Willard's annual address in full.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE

Total Abstinence Life Association

OF AMERICA.

WOULD YOU LIKE

To attend the World's Fair at our expense, and to read, free of charge, for one year, our paper, the "TOTAL ABSTAINER"? If so, please send your name and address to this office for further particulars.

902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg.,
165-173 Jackson Street,
CHICAGO, ILL.

GEN. W. F. SINGLETON,	President.
REV. A. J. JUTKINS,	Vice-President.
A. BONNELL,	Secretary.
S. M. SINGLETON,	Treasurer.
E. S. ATWOOD,	Medical Director
J. D. KNAPP,	Supt. Agencies.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Every policy holder is positively a total abstainer from alcoholic beverages.
This is the ONLY Company that does not insure the drinker.
And is, therefore, the only Company in which teetotalers should be insured.
Its risks are unquestionably the best.
Its death-rate for 1891 was over 50 per cent below the average mortality of al other companies.
It has the lowest expenses—only $2.20 per $1,000 insurance for 1891.
It has the lowest average premium charge.
No premiums are required in old age.
Policy contract simple, definite, equitable and limited as to cost.
Its life policies have cash and paid-up values after probable life.
It has an adequate reserve fund.
Expenses of management limited to $3.00 per $1,000 insurance per annum.

FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

Number of policy holders,	5,500
Guarantee Fund,	$ 92,000.00
Amount paid to beneficiaries,	210,000.00
Insurance in force,	11,000,000.00

COMPARISON FOR 1891.

All old Line Companies averaged per $1,000 insurance,	Death Claims $14.55	Expenses $15.07
Total Abstinence Life Ass'n averaged per $1,000 insurance,	" 5.65	" 2.26

AGENTS WANTED

Address A. BONNELL, Secretary.

NO COST

TO EXAMINE THIS WATCH. ☞WE PAY ALL EXPRESS CHARGES! YOU PAY NOTHING.

We are determined to introduce our fine Gold and Gold Filled Watches in every state, and different from all others, we offer as our leader the FINEST SOLID GOLD WATCH WE HAVE. We believe that many of the readers of this paper who heretofore have never answered advertisements will take advantage of our WONDERFUL OFFER and get a SOLID GOLD WATCH and help us introduce our goods.

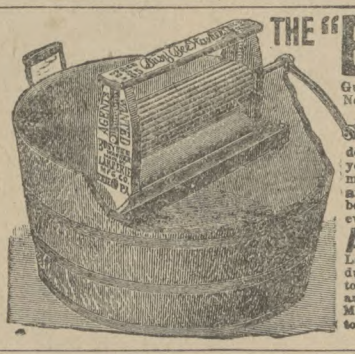
☞DESCRIPTION OF WATCH. THIS WATCH IS WARRANTED SOLID GOLD, AND THE FINEST AND BEST SOLID GOLD WATCH WE SELL. (A Written Guarantee is sent with each watch.) Such watches are never advertised in papers, they are only found in the finest jewelry stores at from $60.00 to $100.00, (consequently heretofore have only come within reach of the wealthy.) The cases are Full Box-Joint SOLID GOLD THROUGH AND THROUGH, Hunting style, Stem-Wind and Stem-Set, Engraved by Hand in the most Beautiful Design imaginable and we guarantee them equal, if not superior, in appearance to any watch you ever saw. The Movement is such as you would want in a fine SOLID GOLD Case. Full Jewelled, Expansion Balance, Quick Train, Full Plate, Stem-Wind and Stem-Set, Accurately Regulated and adjusted and Warranted for 5 years. (A written guarantee is sent with each watch.) This watch is equal to watches that are sold for $100.00, but our regular price is $39.50, but FOR 30 DAYS we make a GRAND OFFER to advertise our goods. ☞READ IT CAREFULLY.

OUR LAST GRAND OFFER!! If you are ordering in good faith, cut out this ad. and send to us by mail, and we will send this watch to you BY EXPRESS, (ALL EXPRESS CHARGES PAID BY US.) Without paying one cent you can examine it thoroughly, and if you do not find it exactly as represented and every word we have said true, LEAVE IT, and you do not pay a cent; otherwise pay the express agent OUR SPECIAL ONE-HALF INTRODUCTORY PRICE and take the watch. We will expect every one getting one of these watches to show it to their friends and thereby get them to send, and in that way for every watch we sell at $18.85 we expect to sell many more at our regular prices.

$18.85

CAUTION!—To protect us against dealers and speculators ordering in large quantities, we shall only sell ONE WATCH to any person at $18.85, after that the price will be $39.50. ☞READ THIS AD. CAREFULLY and reason if you ever saw such a liberal offer before. ☞A BETTER WATCH THAN WAS EVER ADVERTISED BEFORE. ☞A $100.00 SOLID GOLD WATCH FOR $18.85!! EXAMINATION FREE!! WE PAY ALL EXPRESS CHARGES—YOU DON'T PAY A CENT!! After considering what we say, write at once.

KEENE'S MAMMOTH WATCH HOUSE,
1301 Washington Street, Sample Dept. 37 Boston, Mass.



THE "BUSY BEE" WASHER

Guaranteed to run easier and do better work than any other in the world. No rubbing necessary. We challenge a trial with any other machine. Warranted for five years and money refunded if not entirely satisfactory. Fits any tub. Saves time, money and clothes. Just the machine for ladies who are not very strong. Thousands of ladies who used to hire their washing done, now save that expense by using the "BUSY BEE" WASHER. Save your strength, health, time, clothes and money by investing only $2 in this machine. Don't keep the Washer unless it suits you. We are responsible and mean just what we say. We invite you to investigate thoroughly before risking a cent. We will forfeit $100 to anyone who will prove that we ever refused to refund the full amount to a dissatisfied purchaser.

AGENTS WANTED in every county. Exclusive territory. Many of our Agents make $100 to $200 a month. Lady Agents are very successful. Farmers and their wives make $200 to $400 during winter. One farmer in Missouri sold 600. Price $5. Sample (full size) to those desiring an agency, only $2. Also celebrated PENN WRINGERS and other useful household articles at lowest wholesale price. We refer to our P.M. Mayor, Agt. Am. Ex. Co., or editor of this paper. Write for catalogue and terms to Agents. LAKE ERIE MFG. CO., 132 East 13th St., ERIE, PA.

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL in your own home. First class Sewing Machines shipped anywhere to anyone at wholesale prices. All latest improvements. Warranted five years. Complete set of attachments FREE. Send for catalogue. Standard Singer Machines, $9.50 to $15.50 $50 Arlington Sewing Machine for $19.50 $60 Kenwood Sewing Machine for $22.50

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 160 W. Van Buren St. B 26 Chicago.

IMPROVED HALL TYPEWRITER.

The best and most simple machine made. Interchangeable Type into all languages. Durable, easiest running, rapid as ang. Endorsed by the Clergy and literary people. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Agents wanted. Address N. Typewriter Co., 611 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order. American Desk & Seating Co. 270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.

OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEPT 240, CHICAGO, ILL.

BAKER'S COCOA. ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

VOSE & SON'S PIANOS EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.

McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.

Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets, Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.

Signal Notes.

FRANCE has one drink-shop for every eighty seven of her population.

A SMALL boy recently defined moderate drinking as drinking when you like.

IN the world's beer production, the United States has the honor (?) of holding the third place.

THE number of abstainers in Non-Conformist Colleges in Great Britain almost equals the entire number of students.

OF the eighteen thousand, nine hundred and twelve women arrested in New York last year, seven thousand were born in Ireland.

A DISTINGUISHED Englishman gave as the thing seen in America most unlike what was to be seen in England, "The wineless dinner tables of the great middle class."

SINCE women have been appointed state librarians in Kentucky and Mississippi, an absence of whisky and tobacco is noticed and a reign of order and attention begun.

AT the last biennial convention of the Signa Nu fraternity held in St. Louis, no wine was used at the banquet. It is said to be the first instance on record in this Greek letter fraternity.

A CONFERENCE of cultured Hindus appointed Sunday, October 30, as a day of prayer to the Supreme Deity, to aid them in determining the best means for the maintenance of their religion.

IN ten years, Russia produced over eight hundred million gallons of pure alcohol. The twenty million bushels of grain used for this would have prevented the terrible famine and pestilence which has devastated that country.

IN some recently published results of a mess-room census, a French journalist implies that out of two hundred and ten army officers, but thirty-four could boast of abstinence from the habit of absinthe drinking, the most deadly in its results of all forms of alcoholism.

THAT the liquor men are wise in their day and generation, and that they have as their supreme object the control of the great political parties, no one denies. They say: "We have no political bias and mindful of our own welfare will attend to our own business." But they include in their business the special point of defeating any and all parties of whatever political bias who oppose their business.

THE thirty-fifth report of the commissioners of inland revenue showed an increase of five and forty-nine one hundredths per cent in the consumption of spirits in the United Kingdom. Of the three million, eight hundred thousand gallons exported in the year ending March 31, 1892, almost four hundred thousand were shipped to the West coast of Africa, and two hundred thousand to South Africa.

THE memorial services held by the Salvation Army, in Agricultural Hall, London, on the anniversary of Mrs. Booth's death, were very remarkable. There was no speaking, the hymns were thrown on a screen, sayings of Mrs. Booth and General Booth's address were also flashed on the screen. The excitement was greatest over Mrs. Booth's utterances on strong drink, and culminated in an impressive scene when the vast army arose, each man and woman holding up the right hand pledging himself or herself in a mighty "Amen," to a life of abstinence.

WHEREAS, The liquor traffic is a gigantic evil which defiantly ignores this country's noblest interests and

WHEREAS, It has stepped forward to the lawmaking, as well as the political arena, and seeks to make itself thoroughly secured and shall, if therein successful, destroy the otherwise bright and happy future of the beloved land of our adoption

Resolved, That we earnestly urge the members of our churches to support all temperance work which is prosecuted with Christian principles, and

Resolved, That we express our sympathy with the Prohibition party on account of the position it takes against the liquor traffic, and further

Resolved, That we earnestly urge every voter in our churches at the coming election to carefully weigh his personal responsibility before God and thereafter conscientiously cast his vote.

The above resolution was unanimously passed at the Swedish Baptist General Conference, held at Oakland, Neb., this fall.

False Economy

Is practiced by many people who buy inferior articles of food because cheaper than standard goods. Surely infants are entitled to the best food obtainable. It is a fact that the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk is the best infant food. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

Perhaps in no place is Ivory Soap more welcome than in the "down-town office." The hands gather the dust from every object they touch and after a few hours there is a consciousness that they would be benefited by a bath.

Indifference, or thoughtlessness, or procrastination has left you nothing but cheap, greasy, irritating soap. Send your office boy out for a cake of Ivory. Here it is:—divided for separation into two toilet cakes. Now for a month it will be easy work to keep the hands soft, clean, and pleasant to the touch. Within a week you will have Ivory Soap in every room at home. Once tried, always used.

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

Once a Year

a Special Offer is made by the publishers of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION.

New Subscribers

Who send $1.75 at once will receive the paper Free from the time the subscription is received to January 1, 1893, and for a full year from that date, including the Double Holiday Numbers at Christmas and New Year.

The Youth's Companion New Building.

A SOUVENIR OF THE COMPANION describing the New Building, 42 pages, in colors, sent on receipt of six cents or Free to any one requesting it who sends a subscription.

Features for 1893.

Eleven Serial Stories. $6,500 Prize Stories.
The Best Short Stories. Sketches of Travel.
Over 700 Large Pages. Nearly 1,000 Illustrations.
100 Stories of Adventure. Charming Children's Page.

Comes Every Week.—550,000 Subscribers.—Only $1.75 a Year.

Mention this Paper when you Subscribe.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, Boston, Mass.

(Send Check or Money Order at our risk.)

MENDING TISSUE

Repairs clothing better than needle and thread; Silk, Satin, Cotton and Woolen, Kid Gloves, Macintoshs Umbrellas, etc., all colors. Sample yard, 10c. Three yards, 25c. Twelve yards, 65c. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. Address STAYNER & CO., Providence, R. I.

YOUNG LADIES SHOULD WEAR GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS. Permit full breathing

DROPSY TREATED FREE Positively CURED with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured many thousand cases called hopeless. From first dose symptoms rapidly disappear, and in ten days at least two-thirds of all symptoms are removed. BOOK of testimonials of miraculous cures sent FREE. 10 DAYS TREATMENT FREE by mail. DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS, Specialists, ATLANTA, GA.

PLAYS Dialogues, Speakers, for School, Club and Parlor. Catalogue free. T. S. DENISON, Publisher, Chicago

DEXTER SHOE CO. Inc'p'd. Capital, $1,000,000.
THE BEST $1.50 SHOE IN THE WORLD.
"A dollar saved is a dollar earned."

This Ladies' Solid French Dongola Kid Button Boo sent, prepaid, anywhere in th U.S., on receipt of Cash, Money Order, or Postal Note, for $1.50 Equals every way the boots sol in all retail stores for $2.50.

We make this boot ourselves, therefore we guarantee t fit, style and wear and if any one is not satisfied w will refund the money or sen another pair. Common Sens and Opera Toe, widths C, D E, & EE, sizes 1 to 8, i half sizes. Send you size; we will fit you

Estab'd 1881
Illustrate Catalogu
FREE.

Dexter Prices Catch! Our shoes deliv'ed free & guaranteed.

		What you would pay	What yo pay us
No. 305	Ladies' English Grain Button	$2.50	$1.50
" 133	Misses' " " heel, tip, 11 to 2	2.00	1.25
" 132	Child's " sp. or heel. tip, 6 to 10½	1.50	1.00
" 105	Ladies' French Kid Button, A,B,C,D,E	5.00	2.50
" 101	Men's French Calf, tip or plain	3.00	2.00
" 400	Men's Police Heavy Calf, 3 soles, tip	5.00	3.00
" 225	Ladies' Rubbers, high front & back	.75	.50

DEXTER SHOE CO., 143 Federal Street, Boston, Mass.
BEWARE OF IMITATIONS OF OUR "AD."

THE

Amanda T. Jones Association.

"Recreant to no Trust."

MISS AMANDA T. JONES, President.
MRS. MARY BEERS FOSTER, Vice-Pres.
MRS. MINNIE R. LEITCH, Secretary.
MRS. MARY BEERS FOSTER, Treasurer.

Has exclusive right to put up

"New Process Goods"

Owns land and factory at

SOUTH HAVEN, MICH.,

and is manufacturing a variety of desserts and delicacies, with more to follow. The entire practicability and proven economy of Miss Jones' methods, with the unequalled excellence of her goods—which are mostly novelties—warrant us in believing that with a small amount of working capital we can realize a large profit on our products, the demand for which is very pressing! The inventor therefore consents to sell 200 of her own shares at their par value of ten dollars, and all money so received will be used in the interests of manufacture solely, not clipped into nothingness by officers' salaries. Photogravures of the factory (exterior and interior) sent free to subscribers, with photogravure of the President. Ten cents only to inquirers. Former investors who send their names and addresses will be allowed a pro rata share of one-third of Miss Jones' personal profits till fairly reimbursed. No freezing out of the inventor; no disloyalty to stockholders; no false statements; no unfair concealments!

REFERENCES:—Ex-Sen. C. J. Monroe, Pres. First State Bank, South Haven, Mich.; H. G. Edgell and A. S. Dyckman, fruit-growers; O. A. Dean and W. E. Stuart, editors, South Haven, Mich.; Mrs. Lois A. Celley, formerly Vice-Pres. Woman's Canning & Preserving Co., 4808 Prairie Ave., and Messrs. Steele and Howard, Hobbs Bldg., Chicago.

Address

THE AMANDA T. JONES ASSO'N
Suite 54, 95 Washington St., Chicago, Ill.

Or Amanda T. Jones,
South Haven, Mich.

'ACTINA' THE GREAT EYE RESTORER. THE BLIND SEE, THE DEAF HEAR. CURES CATARRH, Asthma, Bronchitis, Head & Throat Troubles.
NEW YORK & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N,
Room 5 & 5 1-2 Lakeside Bldg., S. W. cor. Adams & Clark Sts., Chicago. Prof. J. H. GILBERT, Mgr.

AGENTS wanted to canvass business houses for a New Account-Book. $3 to $15 made daily by energetic parties. For sample sheet and all particulars, address
H. W. PAMPHILON, Publis'r, 17 Clinton Place, N.Y.

PLAYS WIGS, Beards, Make-up materials and all necessary supplies for amateur theatricals, entertainments, masquerades, etc. Catalogues sent free
Barrow & Palmer, 116 Monroe St., CHICAGO

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, December 8, 1892. Number 49

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Jay Gould died at his home in New York, December 2.

The National Prison Congress met at Baltimore, December 3–7.

The second session of the fifty-second Congress convened Tuesday at Washington.

The famous church of St. Michael at Vienna, visited by thousands of tourists annually, was destroyed by fire November 30.

Mary Allen West, so long editor of THE UNION SIGNAL, died at Kanazawa, Japan, Thursday, December 1, aged fifty-five years.

Senator Chandler, chairman of the special committee on immigration, advises the complete suspension of immigration for one year.

Rev. Dr. John Scott, former president of Oxford College, O., and father of the late Mrs. Benjamin Harrison, died at the White House, November 29.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg, December 1, announces that the Russian government has appropriated three million dollars for the relief of the famine sufferers in the Empire.

The annual reports of the postoffice, the interior and war departments have been presented to President Harrison during the past week, all showing an increase of business, prosperity and peace.

As a result of the movement recently started by the ministers of Pittsburgh, Pa., all disreputable houses will be closed in future, by order of the chief of the department of public safety issued last week.

Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the last of the beloved circle of American poets, now nearing his eightieth year, has been invited to write the ode for the formal opening of the Columbian Exposition next May.

It is announced this week that the United States Marine Hospital service has taken steps to protect America from cholera by sending a corps of physicians to Europe to study the disease and institute protective measures there.

Over five hundred delegates, appointed by the governors of the different states, have met in conference at New Orleans the past week to discuss the plan of the Nicaragua Canal with a view to promoting the commercial interests of the United States.

ON January 15–19 the American Woman Suffrage Association will meet in Washington, D. C., in Metzerott's beautiful new music hall. For information concerning railroad rates, address Nicholas Shaw, Somerton, Philadelphia, and for particulars of local arrangements, address Mrs. Ella M. S. Marble, 1328 I street, Washington, D. C.

A CABLEGRAM from Miss Helen Hood, dated London, November 30, states that Miss Willard addressed a splendid audience at Sunderland, the evening previous. We are rejoiced to know that her health is sufficiently restored for public speaking. All that had reached us previous to this news was a cablegram announcing the safe arrival of the party after a tedious and stormy voyage.

ANOTHER martyr has laid down his life in the prohibition cause, this time in Danville, Va. Rev. J. R. Moffett, editor of the prohibition paper, Anti-Liquor, was waylaid and shot after dark, November 12, by J. T. Clark, an ex-barkeeper and a member of the whisky ring which runs the politics of Danville. The wounded man caught his assassin and held him until a policeman came, though Clark continued shooting. Moffett received three wounds and died twenty eight hours later. The murdered man is described as a noble, pure and generous character. He denied himself comforts in order to minister to the needy, and when dying he prayed for his murderer. He leaves a wife and two little children.

DR. HENSON, of Chicago, in a recent sermon on "Moral Microbes," remarked that it was almost worth while to have a cholera scare for it wakes up sleepy officials most effectually. He believes, too, that moral microbes much more deadly than those which attack the body are entering our ports. Rank infidelity and anarchy come on the inside of the passengers, and against them there is no quarantine. To license the pestilential saloon, our domestic microbe breeder is as absurd as if the health commissioner were to propose a high license permit for the entrance of plague laden ships.

THE year has well-nigh run its course. Human thought is turned in two ways—backward over the unalterable past, forward to the unknown future. The Evangelical Alliance has issued the annual call for the week of prayer, beginning January 1, 1893, a call that will be responded to throughout our own country, Great Britain and her domains, and by many Christian hearts in foreign lands. This week is like the holy Sabbath of the year, when people step aside from the busy marts of trade for a little, to thank God for the past and entreat Him for the future. In the brief letter of greeting and invitation which has been sent out by the Alliance is this suggestive sentence: "Let us seek to realize God's purposes as they are revealed in His Word. Let us hold fast to God's promises as they are declared in His Son. Let us expect God's performances to be exceeding abundant, above all that we ask or think." Following are the topics for the week:

Sunday, January 1, Sermons: The Exalted Saviour's "Gifts for Men."

Monday, January 2, Humiliation, and Thanksgiving.

Tuesday, January 3, The Church Universal.

Wednesday, January 4, Nations and their Rulers.

Thursday, January 5, Foreign Missions.

Friday, January 6, Home Missions.

Saturday, January 7, Families and Schools.

Sunday, January 8, Sermons: Joel 2: 28–32. Zech. 10: 1.

May the week be observed as never before in the nation's history, and may God in His loving, tender mercy hear and richly answer the petitions of His children.

"THE ends of the earth" have been brought into close relation the past week by that bond of sympathy, bereavement, which makes the whole world kin. Out of a clear sky a thunderbolt of grief fell at our feet last Saturday morning. Its medium was a cablegram from Tokio, Japan, whose contents read, "Miss Mary Allen West died Thursday." No news more startling could have reached us. At first natural incredulity sprang into being. The signature, Coombs, was unknown to us. We wondered why it was not the familiar one, Sho Nemoto. But investigation soon proved its veracity when we learned that the signature was that of the United States Minister to Japan. Credence was then hopelessly established. The next thing was to act. Telegrams were dispatched to Miss West's brothers at Oneida, Ill., and to other immediate relatives and friends in this country and in England. A cablegram of instructions concerning the care of the body and request for further particulars was sent the Minister at Tokio. The city and associate press were informed, as well as the Illinois Woman's Press Association and Chicago Woman's Club, and soon the city was astir with the sad news. Reporters flocked into our offices, and the afternoon papers all bore large headlines, "Mary Allen West Dead." Sunday morning came this cablegram from Minister Coombs: "Died at Mrs. Winn's, Kanazawa; probably yellow atrophy of the liver; funeral tenth, ship body twentieth. All possible done; sympathy universal." Our hearts were greatly rested to know that her last hours were spent with a dear friend. Mrs. Winn is a missionary and an old school friend from Galesburg, Ill., Miss West's native town, so it was loving hands that administered the last rites, and familiar home faces into which she looked for the last time. This is comfort unspeakable. We are forever indebted to the American missionaries and Japanese friends who have arranged all the details of the funeral at Tokio, and who have previously done all in their power to contribute to the success of Miss West's lecture tour of two months in the Empire. The meager information of these two cablegrams is slightly augmented by a letter from Sho Nemoto dated Tokio, November 9, and containing an itineracy for the month of November. From this we learn that Miss West was due in Kanazawa (where she died) November 14, and that she was to leave there the 21st. Hence, we conclude that her sickness dated back of November 21, and that it was probably of ten days' duration, as she passed away December 1. Although the disease stated in the cablegram is of a chronic nature, there was no hint of ill health in any of her letters or those of Sho Nemoto, who has written us every few days since Miss West's arrival in Japan. As THE UNION SIGNAL has frequently stated, Miss West has been working remarkably hard, speaking often three times a day and receiving calls constantly. The invitations were so numerous that she could not refuse them. We give below an extract from a private letter written to Miss Pugh, the last one received at Headquarters:

"TAKASAKI, Oct. 15.—I am sitting on the floor of the ante-room of a church in this town where the Christian women of the province of Joshin are assembled in convention. I am to speak to them this afternoon. Now they are giving reports in Japanese, so I came out here to write you. A circle of little girls are kneeling around me, watching every stroke of my pen with interest. I am on my way to Tokio, which I should have reached to day but for this stoppage to-night. Miss Parmelee, a missionary from Cleveland, thought I could do much good by coming here and meeting their representative women from all over the province. At ten p. m. I go to Maybaski, near here, where I speak twice to-morrow (Sunday). Then early Monday morning I go to Tokio, reaching there at noon and at two p. m. opening the campaign there with an address in the largest church in the city. This Sappora trip has occupied nearly a month, more than 1,600 miles of travel and cost me one hundred yen, besides an immense amount of hard work, but it has paid. Mr. Tsuda estimates that I have addressed 10,000 people publicly, besides the constant stream of personal conversation, harder, but more effective than the public work. Some impression must have been made; how much I cannot say. But God cares for results when we have done our best. My work has been entirely with the Japanese. I feel no call to work with the foreigners, and the Japanese are eager to receive the truth. I know you are all praying for me. I could not have done this work if you had not been. Keep on. I shall need God's help even more as I go to Tokio and Yokohama. I did not wish to come to Japan, but now feel that God was in my coming." Under date of November 9, Sho Nemoto writes: "Miss West is working day and night. There have been many good results in the work; all difficulties have been overcome, and I only pray to keep up the instruction given us by Miss West, whose loving spirit has made us one accord. I am very thankful for her work in Japan. Wherever Miss West goes she is welcomed by all people. In Tokio she was invited to speak before the Red Cross Society, which was organized by the Empress. She was elected a life honorary member and given a silver medal, which no foreigner ever received before, with the exception of the Prince of Russia." Thus she "died in the harness," as she herself would have desired. It is blessed to know that her last work was so truly great. Her brief tour in Japan was triumphal. The hearts and homes of the Japanese people were opened wide to her, and she was admired and feasted and listened to as few have ever been, in their own or in foreign lands. Her heart was full of peace and joy, and we doubt not that the Lord led her to Mt. Pisgah's top before her spirit took its flight. She had finished her course, she had fought a good fight, she had kept the faith.

FORECAST.

BY JOSEPH COOK.

God only changeth not;
The sun and moon,
And earth's dim wheeling dot,
I shall leave soon;
Nor sky, nor land, nor sea,
Abides with fleeting me;
I shall forgotten be
Beneath the noon.

God will remember me;
To Him I go.
Which shall I choose to be,
His friend or foe?
Behind death's open gate,
What destinies await
My final love or hate,
I soon shall know.

Faith, Hope and Love abide.
God's perfect Whole
Is mine, though heavens wide
Together roll.
His Face I cannot flee.
Complete Thy work in me;
Enrapture Thine with Thee,
Soul of my soul!

My Sun and Moon and Sky
And Sea and Land
And Home eternally
Is God's Right Hand.
From it all blessings fall,
And better He than all,
And rapture is the thrall
Of His command.

Boston, Mass

SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH.*

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

CHAPTER XVI.

"I have a story for all of you," Dr. Scarborough said, entering the long parlor where all were gathered that evening about a great table at one end, some reading, a pair trifling with some chessmen, and one or two sitting a little moodily, eyeing the open fire with thoughts far away. "I have a long letter in this evening's mail and it is part of a story so old now, and so remote from all of you that I feel full right to tell it."

He had seated himself as he spoke, and for a moment sat stroking his thick, brown beard just touched with gray; a habitual movement when thinking. Then he looked about him, the steady gray eyes a promise of help and comfort for every one, and began in his deep, leisurely voice:

"I am going to tell you the story of a life to which a terrible problem came suddenly, with no slightest warning or preparation; a problem that has been met by many a woman, for whom any solution has proved impossible, and who has denied that any could lie within her power. This woman faced it; measured its proportions and its difficulties; realized that neither a month nor a year could hold more than the beginning of an answer, and then and there devoted life and every power in her to a struggle, happily over at last, but leaving ineffaceable marks of its bitterness, its length and dreariness. It is not the common story of intemperance sapping the possibilities of decent living, paralyzing conscience and will, and going down to the gutter, to be dragged from it in the end, when even the most hopeful friend had pronounced it a hopeless case. It is a form seldom encountered, but known to medical men and the heads of inebriate asylums as one of the most difficult of cure, yet cured at last, in this case, by a strength of purpose and a devotion belonging to many women, though seldom joined to the strong common sense, the quiet, clear intelligence of this one among thousands who have suffered from the same cause.

"Like a large proportion of marriages, this had been made without any special investigation into the antecedents on either side. That the lover was of good family all knew, his father having been chief justice in a distant state for several years, till disease of some mysterious nature set him aside and at last killed him. The mother had died young; a sister had married and also died; two brothers had gone to the remote West, and there seemed to be next to no family connections. He came to Woodstock from the Harvard law school; made a brilliant hit in his first case and settled into successful practice.

"It was one of those quiet New England towns, where old traditions still linger; a county seat, and thus the meeting point for lawyers all about, this fact implying a keener intellectual life than is the rule in the manufacturing towns. Mary's father had been one of the prominent lawyers in the state, and this only daughter had been his companion always; more and more fully every year, after the mother's death, practically, at last, taking the place of a confidential clerk, and gaining, half unconsciously, quite as fair a knowledge of law as that owned by many a graduate. With his death came a sudden cessation of all old interests. People wondered what she would do, and wondered more when they found that she simply lived on in the empty house, cared for by the old servants, going through the daily round as usual, though giving the morning invariably to some work in the library, where her father had always sat. The coming of John Devereux, whose letters from her father's old friend gave him place at once as more than a common acquaintance, soon settled the question as to her future. He proved an impetuous and determined lover. Courtship and marriage followed speedily, and the old Allen place, where not only Mary Allen, but her father before her had been born, received the new master with small change in the established routine of life.

"Five years passed, years of steady and increasing prosperity, and of a happiness evident to every looker on. Then, no one knew exactly how, a rumor arose; denied at first, then half believed yet still denied; at last discussed openly. The wife's face alone, pale and quiet, with the happy, assured look of the early years all gone, was sufficient proof of some deep trouble; but the secret was kept, and, suspect as they might, no one ever knew absolutely what had come to the old house under the elms, and in the end doubted if it had ever been anything more than natural causes.

"It is here that the wife's story begins, given as far as may be, in her own words, and holding certain truths, seldom believed in, but tested and proved beyond any chance of denial.

"'You want my story, dear old friend, yet how are all these years to be compressed into any shape that paper will hold? If it were a talk, side by side, that would be quite another matter; for question and comment stimulate thought, and I should know better what to tell and what to leave untold. There is always a sifting process in talk, unconscious usually, but making plain what is the right thing to say, while written words, for me at least, seem always far more inexorable, and demanding an immediate alteration or explaining away. But the story means something—more to me, probably, than it can to any one else, unless it be one in the same strait, perplexed and desperate as I was, and searching, with the same intensity of desire that filled me, for any light on the miserable darkness of that early time.

"'I think two people never began life more utterly content with one another than were John and I. We had both, in spite of many friends, been rather lonely, and there was supreme comfort in the sort of companionship that seemed to be ours from the very beginning. We did not agree on all points by any means, but such disagreement seemed to be quite outside of our joint life. John had a curious respect for my personality; curious, because very few men ever feel it toward the woman they marry, but, on the contrary, often resent its existence. But even when mistaken—stupidly so, as I sometimes proved to be—it seemed to be John's theory that it was all part of my education, not to be criticised or interfered with by him, save as I sought criticism. We assimilated more and more, till I came to wonder how I had ever lived without him and to think of marriage as the very gateway to a heaven that could hardly hold more happiness than we knew from day to day.

"'Till the baby came, our first boy, we were together constantly. His own books were simply added to those my father had left, and the southeast room, you remember, kept its old character as half office, half study. John had an office on Main street, but went to it only in the afternoon, all special cases coming to the house, and there he did his hardest work, studying often late into the night. I fought this habit as far as possible, for it is an exhausting one, but he insisted that he could never think so clearly at any other time. I sat with him at first, but when the time came that I must do the best thing for the new life it was mine to make or mar, I had to leave him, and only beg him to remember how it troubled me. I left always a light lunch, for, though he protested that he needed nothing, I found that he was less exhausted and nervous if he ate after the work was over. Now and then he drank a glass of claret; sometimes I made chocolate and left it for him, but the claret, he thought, suited him better. I was accustomed to see my father take it daily, and, though I half wished that John need not depend on it, it seemed wild nonsense to think the habit a dangerous one.

"'We had been together three years. Stephen was a year old before there seemed any reason for real anxiety. Then I found that his hand shook in the morning; that he had no appetite and was nervous and irritable till the day was well on toward noon, though never to me. I could not bear to question him, but the opportunity came one night when he was specially anxious over a case and I volunteered to help him. I sat with him till one in the morning, and grew more and more startled. Claret had given place to burgundy. The bottle sat by him, and he drank glass after glass as if it had been water. He seldom took wine at the table, and I had not realized how the habit had gained. He looked up as the work ended, pushed away the papers, and came round to my chair, looking at me half startled, but with the fondness he always showed. 'You are worn out, my darling,' he said. 'I had no right to keep you so. What is it?'

"'Then I told him, and as I spoke a horrible dread came over me, and I clung to him as if he were in some mortal peril. He laughed at first and then grew very serious, and sat looking at me as I spoke till finally I could do nothing but cry. 'Dear,' he said, at last, 'all the strength there is in it is not worth the suffering you have had this evening. I'll go back to the claret and half rations, and you must promise me never to worry so again.'

"'Then I implored him to give it all up, and when he urged that he could not work without it, I told him that was the strongest reason for dropping it altogether. But it ended in half indignation on his part that I would not trust him, and the fear on mine that perhaps I was unreasonable, and so it rested there.

"'I did trust him. He showed me the bottle one day, and told me, laughingly, I was carrying my point after all, for he had come down to a third of a bottle, and really thought he felt the better for it. I asked no more questions, thought no more about it, till one day I found little Stephen with the bottle of alcohol I used for the spirit lamp.

"'What are you doing, Stephen?' I asked. He was only four years old then.

"''Melling of it, mamma, an' just putting the cork on my tongue. It has such a nice bite; Stephen loves it.'

"'I think I fainted. At least, all sense went for a moment. I fell back in a chair, and the frightened child screamed so that his father ran up to my room. When I was able to tell him, he sat pale and silent for a moment, then went back and locked the library door. I put the alcohol on the top shelf of the closet, and told Stephen it was a very strong medicine, good sometimes for sick people, but very poisonous for well ones, and that I used it in bathing little Mary, because she was very frail and weak, and it helped to strengthen her. He promised not to touch it again, and he was a very truthful little soul that I could trust; but the sick dread staid with me and I could not shake it off, and it deepened as I saw there was a change in John. It came almost imperceptibly. He grew moody and fitful; irritable to the children and sometimes to his clients; in the highest spirits at times, and then correspondingly depressed. People thought his health was breaking down from overwork, and the doctors told him he was well on in nervous prostration, and a few months or even weeks longer would bring him to a stage from which recovery might be impossible.

"'I think I knew the real cause intuitively, though John never spoke of his state, and a curious silence had grown up between us. That wine had anything to do with it, every one would have denied. His daily habits were as regular as is possible. He was naturally methodical, and an enormous worker, and his singularly quiet, courteous manner was the best shield he could have had. But I had learned some of the signs, and now I studied every accessible authority. I would not ask our doctor for I could not let him suspect my fear, but I sent to New York for every work on alcohol or intemperance that could be had, the medical and scientific books—English, French and German. I hid them in a closet, for I wanted to know the essence of every one before I began the battle that I knew was coming, and I studied them as if my life depended on knowing it all. Something dearer than my own life did depend. It was hard in all the opposing views to find firm ground on which to stand, but I did at last. I found that books on food must be included, and I went through every real authority with this same passion of eagerness to know what was right—what share I had in helping or hindering the work I wanted to do.

"'All this had taken months, and though the predicted collapse did not come, it would have been easier if it had. Still this wretched silence lasted, but the time had come to break it. For a long time John had locked himself into the library on the plea that careless servants sometimes bolted in suddenly and destroyed his train of thought. It was Saturday night in early June—I remember always the breath of the apple-blossoms that came to me as I stood for a moment in the open doorway, then turned and knocked at the library door. John opened it irritably.

"'Haven't I told you I must not be disturbed in the evening?' he began, then stopped short, as I closed the door behind me and drew him to the old sofa, where we had sat before we were married. A bottle stood on the table. There was the smell of brandy in the air.

*Copyrighted

"'I have kept away too long,' I said. 'Whatever the struggle is, John, I must be part of it.' There was a long silence. I prayed that he might speak. At last he turned to me.

"'It is too late,' he said, and he shrank away from me as I took his hand. 'I've given up, Mary, as my father did before me. I'm not fit to touch you, my darling, and I do not mean to. The best thing for you is to leave me altogether. I am the one to leave, for this is your home, and I have planned what to do. I shall go abroad—for rest—as the doctor orders, and let it end as soon as possible. I've fought till there is no fight left, and I'm weaker than water. Nothing helps me. There is no help but in death.'

"'There is no need to tell you of those hours of confession and anguish in which I took the poor, distracted head to my breast, and it lay there quiet but hopeless, till my own faith brought back a glimmer of faith for him. He told me then that the habit began in his early college days, with no knowledge of any inherited love for liquor, and that such knowledge did not come to him till the year of his graduation and of his father's death. The final illness lasted but a week, but in the intervals of consciousness a story was told, as confounding to the old physician who listened, as to the son. For thirty years he had been a secret drinker, though seldom really what is called drunk. He was a solitary night drinker, attending to his business through the day, and noted for his excellent judgment as well as profound legal knowledge. He was an ardent student, but his work was exhausting, and he stimulated himself to labor till sleeplessness came, which in turn had to be overcome by more and more brandy. He never used intoxicants publicly, never was known to enter a saloon, and usually refused wine on public occasions; but every night found him locking himself into what was practically a debauch. Slight paralysis in time followed; the weakness increased, and 'death from dementia,' was the final verdict of his medical attendant, who had never been allowed any knowledge of his habits until the end. He was an elder in the church, a man trusted and loved by all, and had suffered unimaginable remorse in his conflicts with the habit, till hopelessness had settled upon him and he died, convinced that he had thrown his life away, and that there was as little chance for him in any future as the past had held.

"'For a time the terror of this had restrained John, and he gave up every form of stimulant. But he had lost time in the month with his father, and to make it up did night work steadily. Exhaustion came, and the instinctive resort to something that would overcome it; and so the habit confirmed itself, an insidious power that gave no token of its strength, and which, set aside at intervals, returned with all the more force, till now it was a part of himself. I have found lately in a little book on 'Alcoholic Inebriety,' by Dr. Parrish, a description that tells the story, not only for him, but for many who are dying in the same way.

"'Solitary or secret drinkers are to be found in every community. Some of them will never come to the surface. Perhaps a majority of them are able to conceal the habit and it may never be known. They are men generally of mark and of work—intellectual work—men of genius often, men whose habits, aside from the use of intoxicants, incline them to late hours, to study and to seclusion. . . . In these secret night-drinkers the craving which constitutes the morbid state does not manifest itself as it does in persons of different temperament and habit. It is a neurasthenia, but it is associated with the idea of privacy, secrecy, concealment. Drinking is not spoken of. It is regarded as a practice not to be made known. For such a person to visit a public saloon and drink would be as unusual and repulsive to the moral sense as in the case of a temperance advocate. It does, however, happen that there may be a divergence of this impulse into other lines. Like a current of electricity that follows a single wire to a point where the wire is connected with several others, the current will separate into many, and flow in each.'

"Two things were necessary; to change the scene altogether for a time, and to alter our habits once for all, in one essential particular. That food had at any time any influence on this habit had never occurred to me till I came to study the treatises on food. Differ as they might in their views upon alcohol, there was but one voice as to the food essential for a stomach whose powers were half destroyed by alcohol. For the story of intemperance everywhere was the story of heavy over-eating of animal food in highly seasoned forms. The unending pork and bacon of the South and West, the excessive meat eating in our great cities, all create an abnormal thirst which only a powerful stimulant can satisfy. I do not need to go into physiological details, but you know that flesh digests more rapidly than vegetables, certain principles it contains being more quickly absorbed, and giving a sense of strength which is stimulation, but not real building up. A preponderance of vegetables and fruits is necessary, which assimilate more slowly and do not create the thirst which follows inevitably on taking too much meat, just because an oversupply excites the stomach and produces excessive action. There is a regular circle of cause and effect. The stomach, weakened by over-stimulation, develops gastritis, which includes excessive thirst. Animal food keeps up the gastritis by over-stimulation and taxation of the affected organ; the gastritis excites thirst: thirst perpetuates drunkenness.

"Our system of living had been all wrong for both John and the children, and I was directly responsible for the development of the tendency showing itself in my little Stephen. We were all rather light eaters, but accustomed to consider meat essential at least twice a day, and using condiments and many highly seasoned pickles freely. Curry was John's favorite dish, and, while I did not allow Stephen or Harry to eat this, I gave them all the meat they wanted, and hardly noted their indifference to vegetables and fruits. Instead of weakening the tendency and gradually eliminating it altogether, I had lived as if bent upon developing it to the utmost, and habits were already so firmly fixed that change would mean probably months or years of effort. I thought of it all as I sat there, but all must wait till the one thing was settled. Together we faced what must be done. I saw John break those horrible bottles, and then holding my hands as if I were the only thing between him and perdition, vow that while reason was left him no drop of the curse should ever touch his lips again. The next day we left everything behind, and journeyed to a quiet retreat, where other men in the same case had gone through their struggle before him, and then our work began.

"I would not leave him. The children were safe, and, though it half broke my heart to be parted from them, I knew they were well cared for, and that my first work was with the poor soul that clung to me day and night. God spare me from ever looking upon such another struggle! Each day death seemed nearer. The agony of craving was something unimaginable—a possession. He could not eat, he could not sleep, and when I left him for the half-hour in the open air that made it possible for me to endure the steady strain, he would not be alone, but had an attendant sit by him. There were minutes when it seemed as if I must yield, and give something that would relieve the deathly exhaustion; but Dr. J. was firm, and John no less so. 'If I die,' he said, 'it will be because I have forfeited any right to live. Death is better than the ignoble living, the shame, of the last two years. I mean to live if I can, but be glad if I cannot, my darling, that I died fighting. God knows the temptation. If there is a way of escape, He will grant it to me.'

"Out of the depths he came at last; weak as an infant, worn to a shadow of his old self, but lying there with a peace, a quiet in his eyes that they had never known, for at last the craving was stilled, and as he came back to health, there was no return. But we found there was no safety save in the most rigid adherence to the regimen laid down—meat only once a day, and then beef or mutton preferable, broiled or roasted, never fried or highly seasoned, and never allowed to include pork in any form; much fruit, vegetables and grains in every form, but no pastry; in short, nothing that demanded unnatural labor of the stomach, or could create unnatural thirst. John studied the subject with the same eagerness I had felt, discussing every detail with the doctor. 'It is in our own hands, after all,' he said the day we were to leave. 'Why is it that these things are never taught? There is not a mother who could not be made to understand that drunkenness is often a disease, and curable by natural methods. There are hopeless cases as there is hopeless disease, but God does not leave us helpless. We can know, if we will.'

"The children? you are thinking, I know. It was a hard pull for them. But Stephen was wiser than his years. He saw what his father gave up; John told him all that he could of the reasons for it, and though it was months before they became accustomed to the new order, and I was in terror sometimes lest strength would never be fully theirs, it came at last, and has stayed. When Stephen was twelve years old, John told him the whole, and it bound the two in a partnership of effort and understanding, more perfect than anything I have ever known between father and son. Temptation has come for both, but the remedy is in their own hands, and they know it. Stephen became a physician naturally, and holds the theory, which he practices just as far as his patients allow, that nature offers natural means of cure for any and every disease—air, sunshine, sleep and food being able, nine times out of ten, to cure, while their joint forces, understandingly used from the beginning of a life, guarantee a manhood and womanhood not yet believed possible for the world, but a possession that will be the natural life of that better future of which we dream, for which we labor, and which is God's own meaning for us all."

Lanesborough, Mass.

(To be continued.)

TO STRIKE at iniquity is a part of the business of the church—indeed, it is the business of the church.—Dr. Parkhurst.

THE FINANCIAL BACKING OF THE RUM POWER.

BY FRANK J. SIBLEY.

Many thoughtlessly suppose that the liquor purchaser and consumer, the man who pays his cash for whisky and beer is the financial support of the evil business. No greater mistake was ever made in computing a problem in political economy.

Repeated tests made in many different sections of our country, have fully demonstrated that more than three-fourths, and in many cases, more than nine tenths of the liquors purchased in the drinking places, are paid for by working-men or wage earners. A great proportion of these are the employés of Christian men or corporations under Christian control, who pay the wages thus expended.

It may be said that when the wage-earner receives his money, it belongs to him, and he has the right to use it, without regard to the opinions of his employer. This is only half a truth.

An employer has undoubtedly the right to say that the wage-earner shall not use his money in such a manner as shall lessen his capacity to fulfill his contracts: an employer has an equal right to say that the wage earner shall not spend his money and his time among such associations as will undermine his integrity and pervert his sense of right and wrong. But no reasonable mind will question the absolute, undeniable right of every employer to make his own choice of the persons whom he will hire.

To say that the wage earner "has a right to do as he pleases with his money," is a cowardly subterfuge, suggested by the devil to help a lazy or careless Christian to shirk his Christian responsibilities. Every dollar of wages that finds its way to the liquor seller, from the employés of a Christian man or a Christian business is Christian financial backing for the saloon. What is true of wages is equally true of alms.

A few illustrations may more clearly convey the idea. A beggar approached a Christian gentleman, one of the honored staff of temperance lecturers, and asked for money. The rottenness of rum was in the beggar's breath. That Christian gentleman gave that beggar a quarter. Within ten minutes that quarter lay in the cash drawer of a neighboring saloon—a Christian contribution to the support of the rum power. A Christian minister permanently employed a notorious drinker; the money that drinker squandered was a Christian minister's financial backing of the liquor business. Christian merchants employ clerks who openly declare their hostility to total abstinence, and patronize the saloon "whenever they please." The money paid such clerks is the Christian merchant's contribution to the rum power. Christian mill-owners employ drinking foremen and drinking mill-hands. Every dollar of such wages paid for drink is a Christian mill-owner's cash backing of grogshops. How many Christian farmers, too, patiently "do the chores" Saturday night and Sunday while drunken "hired men" are off on "sprees." Every dollar spent in those sprees is a Christian farmer's quota of the funds that entrench the liquor lords.

It is needless to multiply illustrations. In every walk of life, in every avenue of business Christian men and enterprises are bolstering up the rum power, and piling its coffers fuller and fuller with the gold which is used to break down all opposition to its ruinous and despotic sway.

The word Christian is intended to include all moral and temperance men who do not claim to be religious. These grand and good men, by the thoughtless misdirection of their money into the drinkers' hands, have fostered and supported the dramshops, and forged firmer fetters for the beer barons to bind upon the feet of their multiplying victims.

By this misdirection of money what have Christians done? Have they not more than doubled the profits of the traffic, and the number of its victims? Have they not made it possible to plant saloon temptation at the doors of their churches and under the eaves of their schools? Are they not responsible for all the woe and the tears, for all hunger of rum's starvlings, for all the sin and the shame and the sorrow which might have been averted but for their money contributions to saloon cash-drawers?

The objector will say, "Your argument means that Christian and temperance employers should never employ liquor drinkers. Now if these persons are not employed, would not there be greater poverty and suffering among such than there now is?" This is another of the surface sophistries by which Christians shirk their responsibilities.

The answer is easy. Let the temperance and Christian business forces of this nation unite, firmly as the rock, on this policy:

1. No employment for drinkers unless they will immediately and unconditionally pledge themselves to forever abandon the beverage use of liquors.

2. Constant vigilance to detect those who are not honest and faithful to the pledge.

3. Summary dismissal for all who break the pledge.

What would be the result of such a policy rigidly adhered to in the Christian business world? Four-fifths of all the drinking employés would take the pledge and faithfully keep it. In all the history of the temperance work of the world there has never been offered the drinker an incentive so strong, so continuous, so imperative as this policy for his reformation.

The adoption of this inducement on which daily bread depends would brighten homes and hopes long shadowed by the drink fiend's brooding presence; it would feed the hungry and clothe the shivering children of poverty; it would close the doors of a hundred thousand dram-shops in six months; it would put out the fires in half the breweries and stills; it would bankrupt the rum treasury in a year.

One may say: Prohibit saloons in state and nation, and you accomplish all this and more. This is true, but state and national prohibition can only be purchased by long and wearisome political battles. Those battles must be fought; the army of prohibition voters must mass solidly and force the divorce of the liquor power from the protection of church and state. But suppose a general who had marched his army up to the entrench ments of a powerful foe, should be informed that one flank of the enemy's army was unprotected. If he neglected to send an army corps or a brigade to attack that flank he would be court-martialed as a coward or dismissed for incompetency.

Against this policy of non employment of drinkers the liquor lords have no defences. It is a dormant power lying long unused in Christian hands. In this age of rum-shop arrogance and aggression it is a crime against Christianity to longer neglect to bring this mighty enginery into action on the rum enemy's flank.

Gallantly the Prohibition voters charge the rum battlements. With each repulse they gather strength for a new attack. But sleeping in Christian tents in the rear lies the reserve corps of this army, who might and ought to be carrying confusion and defeat into the rum ranks. No army in time of war can afford non-combatants in camp. The great battalions of such Christian employers in Prohibition ranks are but camp followers, computing interest on the gains they are thoughtlessly pocketing while their comrades are slaughtered at their feet.

Demorest, Ga.

THE WIFE OF CHARLES KINGSLEY.

BY REV. DAVID SUTHERLAND.

Mrs. Charles Kingsley, wife and biographer of the celebrated preacher-novelist, has rejoined her husband, after a separation of seventeen years, in that unseen world about which they used to talk so much while together on earth. The story of their wedded life is an idyll of happiness. She loved him with a passionate enthusiasm which grew with the years. What he thought of her cannot be put into words. The whole-souled affection and knightly devotion of the most chivalrous Englishman of the nineteenth century were hers from the moment of marriage onward through all the changes of more than thirty years.

When he paid a visit to America in 1874 he wrote to her, "Few and evil would have been the days of my pilgrimage had I not met you, and now I do look forward to something like a peaceful old age with you." That hope was not realized. On the 28th of January in the following year he was laid to rest under the shadow of his own beloved church at Eversley. His sorrowing widow erected a memorial cross over his grave, on which was summed up in three words the story of their ideal affection—"Amavimus, Amamus, Amabimus." And now, she, too, sleeps under the same cross.

It would be hard to tell how much Charles Kingsley owed to his wife. She entered into every activity of his many-sided life as inspirer and helper. In all his parochial labors for the elevation of the rude and uncultured people at Eversley she was his untiring assistant. In his literary work she was indispensable. He could not sit down at a desk while in the throes of composition, but had to pace up and down the floor of the study, dictating what she quickly committed to manuscript. Her judgment was as useful to him as her pen, for she had an artistic sense of what should be blotted out as well as of what should be put in. In the dark and stormy days that followed the Chartist movement, when the large-hearted rector of Eversley poured forth his strength in denunciation of the burdens that weighed the working classes to the dust, and when he was almost universally abused as a rashly-impetuous demagogue, she was in a special manner the light of his life. In her sympathy he found relief from the unsparing invectives heaped upon his head and in her love he got fresh inspiration to carry on the crusade in behalf > "Of the cause that lacks assistance,

> Of the wrong that needs resistance,
> Of the future in the distance."

Competent critics are unanimous in the belief that Mrs. Kingsley helped in a large measure to make her husband what he became. She filled his life with the poetry and music of love, thereby surrounding his genius with an atmosphere favorable to its development. Her own great gifts are appropriately embalmed in the charming memoir she wrote as a monument to the man she loved so well. In that book the force of her influence on the events she recorded is all the more apparent to the careful reader because of her anxiety to conceal it. With true biographical skill she hides herself behind her hero. Only once does she lift the veil which covered the inner life that made the outer life of Charles Kingsley so strong and fruitful, and that is toward the close of the book when she says: "Over the real romance of his life, and over the tenderest, loveliest passages in his private letters, a veil must be thrown; but it will not be lifting it too far to say that if in the highest, closest of earthly relationships a love that never failed—pure, patient, passionate for six-and-thirty years—a love that never stooped from its own lofty level to a hasty word, an impatient gesture, or a selfish act, in sickness or in health, in sunshine or in storm, by day or by night, could prove that the age of chivalry has not passed away for ever, then Charles Kingsley fulfilled the ideal of a most true and perfect knight to the one woman blest with that love in time and to eternity."

After her husband's death Mrs. Kingsley was tendered apartments in Hampton Court Palace by the Queen, but she gratefully declined the offer. She accepted, however, a grant from the Civil List in recognition of her husband's services to literature and social reform. The greater part of her time was spent at Bishop Tachbrook's near Leamington, in superintending the education of her four children, and in revising for different editions the collected works of her husband. Two of her daughters are on the way to literary success. One, Mrs. Harrison, who writes under the name of Lucas Malet, is the author of "The Wages of Sin," that weirdly strong novel which was one of the sensations of the last publishing season. The other, Miss Rose Kingsley, is well known as a graceful and pleasing writer for the leading magazines.

With her husband passed away the joy of Mrs. Kingsley's life. The years that followed were filled for her with "the long loneliness of waiting." She thought, she spoke, she wrote continually of him in whom she lived, moved, and had her being. Nothing delighted her more than a tribute to the helpful character of her husband's books. There lies before me as I write, a letter she sent six years ago to a young enthusiast who had been smitten with the fever of Kingsley hero-worship, not yet unknown to young men with generous aspirations. In it she said: "Your letter touched me deeply; though I may truly say I have hundreds such from strangers, but each has its own value for me, showing me (if I needed the showing) that my great husband's work grows and widens instead of fading and being forgotten. No memoir could show you what he really was, but it will be revealed some day when we shall know as we are known; and in the meantime he lives in many noble hearts of men and women who feel they owe their best spiritual life to him."

It is well that the days of waiting are now over, and that the prophecy of the cross on the double grave in Eversley churchyard is fulfilled. Amabimus—we shall love! The strong, full love which made the wedded life of Charles and Fanny Kingsley so happy on earth has reached its fruition in heaven.

Charlottetown, P. E. I.

WORLD'S FAIR KNITTING WORK.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

SUNDAY CLOSING.

"'Tend to your knittin' week-days, Columbia, and make all you can out on't, but don't have it 'round Sunday; yer mother that's dead and gone never brought none of ye up to work Sunday," said Uncle Samuel as he gave the dashing daughter "some more money to buy yarn with." That should have settled the Sunday question, but it did not. And now the secular press has it that "Congress is to have the Sunday closing question in connection with the World's Fair brought before it in a manner that will make it impossible for the truth to be hidden."

The full action of the Board of Directors is made public in a letter from its president, a copy of which is sent to every member of the present Congress, and to every congressman-elect. This letter reports the action and incorporates the resolutions of the directory at its last meeting. In a series of whereases the board meekly accepts the appropriation and the conditions, and almost boasts of its meekness and goodness in determining to abide by the will of Congress, reminding the national lawgivers that no action whatever has been taken affecting the control of the Exposition on the first day of the week, as the board holds itself wholly subject to the restrictions imposed as conditional to the appropriation. It then declares "the duty of the board to give formal expression of its judgment of such restrictions," and proceeds to duty. The points of the preamble are: the Exposition is not national but international in character; the trust accepted by the active trustees is of the broadest sort, and one in which all the people are directly interested, hence the management should be calculated to promote the social, moral and educational interests of all the people; the Exposition will offer object lessons in art, science and history, surpassing anything likely to again come within reach of the present generation, the study of which will be worthy of the Sabbath day; closing of the gates on Sunday will deprive thousands of these advantages; it will be a violation of hospitality to foreign guests. These are dwelt upon at considerable length. Therefore, in the words of the labored deliverance:

It is our judgment that the Exposition should be open on Sundays, under such rules and regulations as will prohibit the use of machinery, unnecessary manual labor, and all merchandising, and at the same time give opportunity for the study of the highest standard of artistic and mechanical science; that the art gallery, horticultural building and all other buildings in which exhibits of mechanical arts are installed, should be thrown open to the public on each and every day during the entire term of the Exposition; also that every employé should be given one day of rest each week. We further believe that on Sunday afternoon there should be held within the Exposition grounds religious services so arranged that each of our religious organizations may have a Sunday set apart for its particular service under the direction of its most prominent clergymen. Our original plans embraced a hall capable of seating seven thousand people for this use on Sunday.

Reference is made to the influence of the Sabbath Union and the petitions it collected, and a "stand-off" is attempted by stating the results of the investigation of public sentiment by anti-Sabbatarian committee, of which Bishop Potter, Bishop Spaulding, Rev. Robert Collyer and Rev. Minot Savage are notable members. This committee sent a simple inquiry with return postal card for reply, and without argument, or any sort of effort to influence the answer. These were mailed to six thousand individuals whose names are found in Dun's reference book as guarantee of their good standing in the business world. They were confined to cities of four to ten thousand population, it being believed that these would represent the average sentiment of the nation. The first thousand answers indicated four-fifths of the writers in favor of open gates, and seventy-five per cent of the entire number replied favorably.

In event of a repeal of the Sunday closing clause the directory promises to establish a bureau for the arrangement of religious services, accompanied by music of the highest order, to stop all machinery, merchandising and unnecessary labor and to make a rule that employés shall work but six days in a week.

The final appeal declares the unfailing purpose of the management "to make this event the grandest array of art, genius, industry and progress which perfect organization and $20,000,000 can produce. I ask you: Must this gem of modern civilization—this inspiration to a nobler and better life be covered? Must it be hidden from the toiling thousands because to view it would prostitute the American Sabbath? We trust more to the higher judgment of our senators and representatives, to whom the issue will soon present itself."

Believing that nothing would more interest my readers, I have given the present status of this much mooted "question." This action of the directorate, so fully indorsed by the President, cannot fail to carry influence with Congress. It is noticeable that the financial side of the subject is not brought forward. Is the directory willing to forego gate receipts on Sunday and make admission free? Certainly it would not demand full fee of the "toiling millions" for half a show? To get ground under its feet in the high position taken "to promote morality" et al., it must "come down" at least one half on the entrance fee; otherwise, the laborer pays twice as much for what he sees as the capitalist. With persons of inferior religious development this may be a more convincing argument than any furnished by Moses or the prophets and apostles.

WHEREWITHAL WE SHALL BE FED.

The restaurant concession has been awarded Mr. A. S. Gage, of the Wellington Hotel, this city, he who served 75,000 persons with satisfactory lunch on dedication day. By this plum he comes into possession of about 130,000 square feet of the precious space at Jackson Park, and one of the surest of money making grants. It will be distributed through about twenty buildings, in many of which the architects arranged café conveniences. From twelve to fifteen thousand persons can be eating at the same moment when all these are in operation. The food will be prepared in one immense kitchen on the south end of the park, thus avoiding the obnoxious "cooking smell" in the exhibit buildings. Additional restaurants on the grounds will afford room for twenty to thirty thousand more. The café in the Administration Building will be exceptionally elegant, while there will be all grades of provisions, with prices accordingly, at various places, the aim being to suit every class and purse.

It is a stupendous undertaking, and such monopoly does not promise invitingly low prices to the consumer. Outside the gates, however, competition will not be lacking. It was a good sign that during the dedication season the leading restaurants of the city did not change the prices on their bills of fare.

All this is made public about eatables, but the silence as to drinkables is ominous.

Chicago, Ill.

CORRESPONDENCE

OUR THIRD AND FOURTH ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARIES IN AUSTRALIA.

WORK IN VICTORIA.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—Dr. Bushnell and I sailed from Bombay, April 22, for Ceylon. The heat was almost unendurable, and it is always hot in Colombo; yet even this could not utterly destroy our enthusiasm the day of our arrival, as we crossed the blue waters to the shore in a little open boat and explored the quaint streets of this truly oriental city in jinrikishas.

We could linger only a few delightful hours, however, for we were quickly transferred from the Bombay steamer to a great ship of the P. & O. line, the Massilia, and left Colombo, with its varied population, waving palms and curious architecture, far behind at sunset. We climbed to the highest deck and watched first the low-lying shores, and later the solemn recurrence of lights from the two towers, one in the center of the town and the other built far out on the famous breakwater; these spoke to us of the busy currents of life flowing on in that crowded, interesting city long after all other features of the scene had faded from view, but finally these cheery landmarks disappeared also, and then we knew that we were adrift once more in search of a new continent.

We came into harbor at Melbourne, May 13, just three weeks from the day we left Bombay. Such a voyage makes one regard the six days required in crossing the Atlantic from Liverpool to New York as a very little thing. Melbourne is a beautiful city, with great enterprise in business and many fine buildings. It seemed more like an American city than any we had seen since leaving home. The white-ribboners of Victoria received us cordially, notably Mrs. McLean, acting president of the Colony in Mrs. Love's absence, Mrs. Kirk, Colonial corresponding secretary, Mrs. Press, Colonial treasurer, and Mrs. Wallace, wife of the United States Consul General, formerly of the Missouri W. C. T. U., now superintendent of the department of woman's franchise for all Australasia. Bountiful hospitality was provided for us, which was but the beginning of what has been lavished upon us thus far throughout all the Colonies.

A public reception was given us in the Collins Street Baptist church, Melbourne (Mrs. Love's own church), with Mrs. McLean in the chair, crowded attendance and representatives on the program of the various Christian, temperance and philanthropic organizations, and the universal tea-drinking afterward. We held four public meetings in Melbourne proper, and many in the suburbs and nearer towns. The first of these was in Williamstown, where the W. C. T. U., under the guidance of its brave and intelligent president, Mrs. Press, has taken up many lines of department work, and has its own comfortable headquarters where the meetings of the unions are held, and other rooms in which a holiday home is furnished to working women and girls at very reasonable rates. The Y's have a Loyal Temperance Legion of one hundred and twenty members.

At Port Melbourne, the next place visited, we had a good meeting, and at Malvern also, the latter service ending with a prayer from the pastor, Rev. D. O'Donnell, that has been a blessing through all the days that have followed; the presence of God was very manifest. At Malvern there is also an earnest band of Y's.

Ascot Vale and Surrey Hills were next visited with good results, and later Brunswick, all these suburban meetings giving us delightful impressions of the work and workers. At Lilydale, two hours' railway ride from Melbourne, we found an active W. C. T. U., held a delightful service, and had a view of one of the prettiest towns in all Victoria.

A few days of rest and then we started on the way to South Australia, breaking the long journey at frequent intervals. First at Camperdum, where not only the union turned out in force, but a goodly band of white-ribboners drove over from Cobden, ten miles away, to attend the meeting, and the hall was crowded. Our chairman had been a total abstainer over fifty years; his wife exacted a pledge from him before their marriage, and they represent as a family earnest work for temperance. From Camperdum to Warrnambool, another fine meeting and generous help, financially, for our World's work. Mrs. Barber, the energetic president, told us of the greatly increased interest since the union had changed from monthly to weekly meetings. Here we found a band of King's Daughters, who call themselves "The White Ribbon Praying Ten."

At Hamilton, a little farther on, we arrived in a drenching rain, and were inexpressibly grateful when our hostess, the president of the W. C. T. U., ushered us into our bedroom, where glowed a great wood fire. We had shivered almost constantly since we left India, and were plunged into Australia's mid-winter, and that fire seemed the perfection of hospitality. A good meeting here, though the attendance was somewhat affected by the rain. Several persons signed the pledge and joined the union, and a poor woman came the next morning to take the pledge, a wreck from the drink. The dear president, Mrs. Thomson, spoke wise, sisterly words to her, and then we prayed together; the prospect was dark before her, for her husband sells the drink. In Mrs. Thomson's home we saw a lovely chapel, fitted up with every help for Bible study; her husband has a large class, which meets here every Sunday, and the course of study given is very thorough and ambitious. Then to Ararat, where we had a most enthusiastic though small meeting, the rain still pouring down in torrents. The three ministers and three Sunday-school superintendents of the town were all on the platform. This village is situated charmingly, with its rampart of hills and profusion of greenery.

At Stawell we were over Sunday, with crowded houses and good collections on both occasions, and overflowing kindness in every way, as at all the places visited—an earnest union here, with large membership and broad activities. Dimboola was the last town at which we stopped before crossing the border of South Australia. A good meeting in the Shire Hall in the evening, and then on toward Adelaide by the midnight express, every comfort being provided by thoughtful friends to the very last moment of parting. An account of our tour in South Australia will be given separately, and I will confine myself in this article to Victoria.

ELIZABETH W. ANDREW.

Bathurst, New South Wales.

(To be continued.)

A NOTABLE DAY.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—November 8, 1892, was a red-letter day. I spent it at the home of General John Bidwell and his noble wife, Anne Kennedy Bidwell.

The "Rancho Chico" is the largest and most thoroughly cultivated ranch in California. "Upon it," says Sir Joseph Hooker, botanist, "is the largest and grandest oak in the world." The "Rancho" comprises twenty-four thousand acres. It is threaded with miles and miles of driveways of incomparable natural beauty to which all that art can add to render them perfect, has been given.

These driveways are as free to the public as to their owners. All the year round tourists from "here, there and everywhere," the children and other inhabitants of the city of Chico enjoy its velvety lawns, running streams, vast conservatory, shaded avenues and picturesque beauty. Specimens of almost every fruit, flower, grain, nut, vegetable and tree, whether from tropical, semi-tropical or temperate zones, are here reproduced and cultivated to their point of perfection.

The mansion, which stands a little in the rear of the entrance to the park, is palatial in elegance and the epitome of refinement and comfort. Here is dispensed a broad and generous hospitality, unsurpassed, and which emanates from genuine Christian courtesy. The General and his wife are the ideal host and hostess, as they would have been the ideal President and "first lady in the land," if the suffrages of the people had placed them in the "White House" at Washington. The Saturday night previous to the election, they returned to their home after a five months' absence in San Francisco. The citizens of Chico turned out en masse to welcome the pair and escort them to the large hall prepared for their reception. They rode in their own flower bedecked carriage, friends and neighbors vying in acts of loving recognition. The president and faculty of the northern branch state Normal school of Chico, the pastors, the judges, the people all were there.

There was something significant in the hour as well as the occasion. Fifty-one years previous John G. Bidwell, then almost a beardless boy, from his native state, New York, had landed in California "to seek his fortune," being in one of the first parties to cross the Rocky Mountains direct to California. They found the country full of Indians, and not over one hundred foreigners in this vast state. Half a century later he entered Chico, the "city of roses," a gem of a city, practically of his own making, and of which he is called "The Father"—a nominee for the highest office which his country could offer.

Would that all the young men of America could become familiar with the life history of this Christian philanthropist; with a heart as tender as a child's, he owns a powerful and well balanced brain, and an almost uncanny knowledge of mankind. He is a man of great reading, high culture and refined taste; is possessed of ceaseless and untiring enterprise, is magnetic to a remarkable degree, and his integrity!—"Well," said a prominent Californian to me, "General Bidwell's word is his bond, and it is as safe as the Bank of England." The romance has yet to be written which will contain more fascinating unrealities than the fascinating real in this man's career, and the golden thread which runs through it all is the entwining of moral courage, indomitable will, a child-like trust in God and consecrated common sense.

One of the most fortunate incidents of his life was his being sent to Congress in 1864, for there, in Washington, he met, loved and won Anne Kennedy, to whom he was married in 1868, and who brought to him the crowning blessing and purest joy of his life. Whether as hostess, leader among the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the state, missionary and teacher among the seventy families of Indians upon the Rancheria at Rancho Chico, genial neighbor, faithful friend, devoted wife and helpmate, or unassuming, natural self, with a poet's soul and a statesman's brain, she is the complement of her husband, as he is the materialization of her ideal man.

By ten o'clock on election morning the General had deposited his vote at the nearest voting precinct, remarking as he did so that the present system of voting was the most satisfactory in his experience. An hour later, he, his wife, a round-the-world traveling minister and myself were en route for a quiet drive along, around and across the fifteen miles comprised in the princely estate of Rancho Chico.

What a wilderness of beauty! What a labyrinth of wonders! What a day of days! Through avenues lined on either side with stately walnut and pine trees or aromatic cedar and graceful willows; past orchards of olive, almond, peach and cherry trees, the latter with trunks nearly nine feet in circumference, the conjunction of each two lines of trees forming in the distance a perfect arch; across two hundred acres of grape-vines of twelve choice varieties, but not one adapted to or used for wine making; by fruit packing houses and a cannery the most complete in the state; by a nursery containing thousands of young trees, and a dairy-house as near perfection as money and intelligence can devise, in and, from which the milk from one hundred and fifty high grade Durhams brings a return of $1,200 per month: past a deer park; a hennery; a turkey ranch; a vinegar factory and immense vegetable gardens; on, on, through a dense forest named "Vallambrosa," to a lovely canyon through which runs Chico creek, a stream as clear as crystal and singularly beautiful in its environment of trees covered with the scarlet and green drapery of wild grape-vines, which transformed the woodland into a Brazilian forest. The ground was covered with amber tints, the air full of gorgeous-hued butterflies; there was a whirr of birds' wings, the songs of meadow larks, rocky crags covered with the most delicate ferns, and a sky of cloudless blue.

As I watched with admiration the stately figure of the General I could but think what a matchless leader he would be if the cause which he represented were triumphant, and how unswerving would be his devotion to the great principles which have brought the Prohibition party into existence. At that hour four men in these United States were enduring a similar suspense and one of the four, "the noblest Roman of them all," sat just before me—wonderfully calm. "It is God's cause," he said, "and God will care for His own."

The night before, Mrs. Leavitt, for a few hours the General's and Mrs. Bidwell's well beloved guest, addressed an audience of seven hundred people, for nearly two hours held intent by her unanswerable arguments for Prohibition and political equality for women.

Mrs. Woodman, the local president of Chico's W. C. T. U. and a prominent educator, has hit upon a novel method of winning men's names to our application to the state for suffrage for women. Approaching her victim she asks, suavely, "Do you believe in citizen's suffrage, sir?"

"I do, certainly, madam," is the ready response.

"Will you then sign your name to this application?"

"Why, this is asking suffrage for women!" he adds, after a brief examination of the document.

"And are not women citizens, sir?"

"Why—well—yes, of course. I had not thought of that," and he affixes his name.

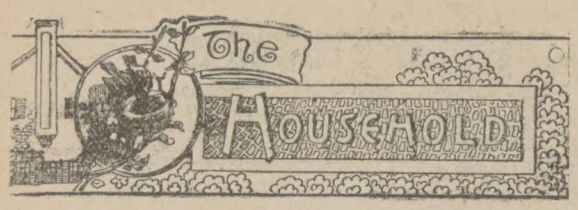
I left glorious "Rancho Chico" and its illustrious owners before sunrise of November 9th, for a field of work among the gold mines of Butte county. I left my lovely hostess standing in the doorway of the great hall in the mansion, with pots of the largest and most gorgeous chrysanthemums that the world can produce, lining it on either side. "God be with you till we meet again," were her parting words as the carriage in which I sat rolled out of the porte cochère.

Of course there were not, as yet, any election returns. All was suspense and the quiet of a sleeping town, except where the yells of a few still drunken foreigners pierced the twilight with their shouts for "the Dimmicratic party." I have a letter from Mrs. Bidwell, a sentence of which I quote. Its date is November 11th. "A telegram from The Voice received last evening stated that the indications were that the Prohibition vote amounted to 350,000. We are not cast down but more than ever determined to continue the fight. I am becoming more rested. Have engagement at parsonage this evening at meeting of Y. P. S. C. E. The weather is perfect. We wish you could have seen this evening about the residence, under the lovely golden glow. We sat upon the veranda without wraps. All was so peaceful and blessed, and the distant peaks of Mt. Shasta were crowned with the sunset glory."

Nothing has been more heartily voted for by the people of California than the following act, submitted by the legislature at its last regular session, to ascertain and express the will of the people of the state of California upon the subject of requiring an educational qualification for voters. It read upon the ballot: "For (or against) an educational qualification requiring every voter to be able to write his name and read any section of the constitution in the English language." When this becomes a national amendment to our constitution we may hope that the right will make the might.

NELLIE BLESSING EYSTER.

San Francisco, Cal.



THE BABY'S HAND.

BY MRS. P. V. HEALY.

Rose-warm, with dainty, pearly tips,
The baby's hand;
A thing to fondle with the lips.
Deep, deep, within my love it dips—
The baby's hand.

. . . . . .

A carven marble lying there,
The baby's hand—
So cold and white I do not dare
To kiss the row of dimples fair
On baby's hand.

Kind God! Across the mystery
The baby's hand
Parts Heaven's gates to beckon me.
And oh! I try to follow Thee
And baby's hand.

Mound City, Kan.

IN THE PINE WOODS.

BY M. E. C.

A SKETCH.

The house seemed to contain but two rooms besides the loft. The one in which I sat was meagrely furnished but scrupulously neat and clean.

A bedstead stood in one corner covered with a white spread, two big, puffy, sleepy looking pillows at the head.

In another corner a small table held a wash basin and ewer. Above it hung a square mirror with numerous knots and blemishes upon its face. The floor was well scrubbed and bare, except for a strip of gay rag carpet which was spread beside the bed. A few stout splint-bottomed hickory chairs completed the substantial furniture of the room.

Here and there upon the rude walls hung a bright hued calendar or advertising card.

A little three-cornered shelf in one corner held the only piece of bric-a-brac. It was a little brown jug with a small, red baby shoe upturned over its mouth. By the time I had finished my survey, the men came in and soon the frugal meal was ready. We partook of it with relish, and after the scant supply of dishes had been washed and put away, our hostess and I wandered out into the dusk, while she talked and showed me as best she could in the fast fading light, her little stock of flowers and "garden truck," in which she seemed to feel great pride.

By and by we came upon a little green mound in a thicket of pine trees. It looked pathetic in its loneliness. A rude wooden cross, all overgrown with tender green vines, marked its head.

"This is the baby's grave," she said, softly, as she lifted a straggling runner and twined it about the cross. "It'll be six months come Sunday, sence we put her away down here, but somehow I jes' can't git used ter not havin' her round."

Her lips trembled and she put up her hand to her throat as if to hold back the great lump that had risen there and was choking her.

"She was sech a purty little un, an' we wuz jes' plum bound up in her. What ailed her? Wall, if ye don't mind, mum, I'll jes' tell ye how it wuz. It makes me feel kind uv easier, somehow, ter talk about it now and agin. Sometimes," her voice quivered piteously, "I jes' git so full an' so choked up, seems like es if I'd jes' run over or die. He can't bear ter speak uv her, nohow.

"Ye see, we hadn't been a livin' here long when she come, an' a rar' blessin' she wuz to us. The house never seemed so lonesome-like arter that, an' when things didn't go right, an' times wuz hard, somehow, it wuz allus so much easier ter git along arter we hed the little un ter keep us heartened. Wall, one day in the fall, he went over ter B—— to sell the cotton crap. It wuz a purty good year an' he got a good price for it.

"Ef he jes hadn't 'a bought that ar whisky! We 'lowed ter build some onter the house an' buy a big doll fer the baby that year. But the hankerin' wuz so strong in him that he jes' got his jug full afore he started fer home.

"The baby heerd him a-comin' through the woods an' toddled out ter meet him, while I stood in the door thar an' watched her. He wuz rar' fond o' the youngster, an' when she put up her little han's he jes' sot down the jug an' tuk ter tossin' her up in the air. I seen his hold wan't steady, and I hollered, but it wuz too late. She fell, an' laid thar so still an' white an' dead like that I knowed, afore I got to her, that she wuz hurt bad. He seemed all kind o' stunned like for a minit, an' then he picked her up an' carried her in, with an awful skeered white look on his face. He never spoke a word, but jes' laid her on the bed an' went off fer the doctor.

"She never did come to no more. She jes' laid thar all night an' moaned an' moaned an' didn't know nothin' a tall. Onct she said, 'Pap! Pap!' so pitiful, an' that wuz all. He tramped up an' down all night outside the door. Every onct in a while he'd come in an' look at her, an' I seen his face wuz all drawed up an' big drops o' sweat a-standin' all over his for'erd, an' he never spoke a word.

"When sun-up come she got cold an' still, an' never moved no more. Then I knowed she wuz gone.

"We dug the grave out here whar she used ter play so much, makin' sand pies an' sech, an' we put her in it while the pine-needles an' the chinkapins wuz a-fallin', an' the rain a drippin' kind o' soft-like all around.

"An' that jug—he hain't never teched it sence. I tuk it an' sot it thar on the shelf, jest ter kind o' mind him like an' I put the little shoes she wuz allus so proud on along side uv it. The first time he seen it thar, he picked up one o' the little shoes an' turned it upside down over the mouth, 'thout ever sayin' so much as a word.

"He never seemed ter take no more notice uv it arter that; but sometimes, in the dead o' night, when he thinks I'm sound asleep, the hankerin' gits strong in him, an' he creeps out o' bed, so easy like, an' goes over ter whar the jug is. But law, he can't lift that little shoe off ter git it. Seems like as ef she's thar ter keep him from it, an' so he jes groans an' comes back ter bed again. We hain't never said nothin' more about the buildin' sence, but this fall, ef the crap turns out good, mebby we'll put up another room."

That night I slept, or tried to sleep, in the bed upon which the baby died. The next morning we pushed on to D.

Boonville, Mo.

THE MISSION OF PLAYTHINGS.

BY MYRA GOODWIN PLANTZ.

"Mamma," said a little friend of mine lately, "can't you find something new for me to play with?"

"Estelle, I'm ashamed of you," answered the mother. "The house is full of costly playthings. One would have made me happy for months when I was a little girl."

"Perhaps I have too many, then," said the seven-year-old maiden with a sigh.

After Christmas last year I happened in where an only darling was surrounded by her numerous gifts.

"Did you ever see such a waste of money?" laughed the young mother, "and that table is the only thing she has not broken."

Another little girl was calling who was delighted over this toyshop; but every time she ventured to touch doll, wagon, or chair, the little owner would shout, "Let my pretties be;" at last gathering the small things in her apron and standing guard with frowning face before the rest.

"How selfish children are nowadays," said the mother as if she were in no way responsible for her pretty child's conduct.

There came to my mind the experience of one old-fashioned mother who made playthings form an important part in the physical, intellectual and moral training of her children, and the suggestion may be helpful to some other mothers.

Play is a natural desire and must be wisely gratified. We see in the museums of the Old World, that even in prehistoric ages the little ones amused themselves with rude imitations of the weapons their fathers used, and the cooking vessels belonging to domestic life.

The little images found among the remains of the barbaric tribes of the Teutons might have been used for worship, yet many of them look as if the uncivilized children of the forest played with dolls. There is no question about the dark-browed little ones of the Nile, for their playthings are found in great variety. The instinct for playthings is a natural one and can easily be made a great factor in the education of a child.

The first object in play should be physical development. The mother whose experience I am relating taught "baby" to roll and kick on a warm comfort before the fire, or in a lined clothes basket instead of being held in a nurse's arms. Later came a baby jumper suspended from the ceiling. Then all kinds of games to develop the physical frame—bean bags indoors, and croquet and ball outside. In time each child had his own set of little garden tools and his own plot of ground to cultivate. Indoors the boys had small sets of tools and the girls little irons, ironing tables, little brooms, washtubs, etc. In their plays the children obtained better and more enjoyable exercise than calisthenics furnishes and also were often very helpful to the busy mother.

In intellectual development playthings had an important part. The baby had to early learn self-diversion from his playthings, as no one thought of giving time for his entertainment. Habits of observation were encouraged, and these children soon learned how and where their toys were made. It is true Johnnie opened his toy watch to see the wheels and his drum to find the music inside, but such things served only as occasions to explain that the inside of a watch must not be touched, and that the music was lost if the drum was rudely handled. The children were taught to invent as many of their plays and playthings as possible. In fact, a "store plaything" was a luxury. Common things, such as clothes pins for baby and wooden blocks for the next in age, were preferred. The children soon learned to make and dress their own dolls, draw and paint their own pictures and make their own books of discarded patent office reports, with the aid of pictures, short verses and stories, the paste being made by the older sister.

When toys were bought they were not allowed to be used just to kill time, but baby fingers were taught to build houses, and later trains and blocks were used for miniature street and railway cars, churches and bridges. The toy books were made the first readers, and the words were spelled and then copied on the little slates.

"Isn't that little one too young to write?" some one asked, when the father was showing a little fellow how to write dog under the attempt of a picture.

"It is just as easy to teach John to make his lines into letters and forms, as to let him scratch his slate with aimless marks," was the answer.

This playing with a purpose became a delightful habit with these children. In their playhouse, which was a copy of a real house, they "kept house," and "visited," sweeping, setting the table, washing dishes, making doll clothes, etc., in a way that gave the girls a natural love for house-keeping, and the boys a knowledge of the art not to be despised in the most manly man.

In their rainy day pastimes they played school and learned to read, write and draw, "just for fun," each child having his own pencils, slate and books, and later, little writing desks.

In winter the father explained the snowflakes and the frost on the window, and in the summer made the children acquainted with animal and plant life to so much profit that one of the daughters remarked when in college, that she had not studied a science of which she had not learned the first principles and leading characteristics in play.

But not only was the playtime used for physical and intellectual training, but for moral and spiritual development. Self reliance was taught and helpfulness towards others; soon as possible the children were shown that they could have a good time, yet amuse the younger ones. They found that their scrap-books and flowers could be divided with sick or poor children.

Next to helpfulness with playthings, came tenderness. They were encouraged to treat their dollies and wooden soldiers as if they felt pins or nakedness or broken arms. This prevented much willful destruction, and made it easier to enforce kindness to kitty and the dog. A worm could be dug up for bait, but even a worm was created by their heavenly Father, and must not suffer pain unnecessarily. This was so much a family sentiment that when a willful little cousin was severely stung after stirring up the bee-hive with a stick, the sympathy was rather in favor of the bees.

This sentiment of tenderness extended to plant life.

"Put the flower back, daughter, it looked so lovely by the walk, and will soon be crushed on the gravel," the father said, when a little girl carelessly threw away a gorgeous lily. The garden was all a-bloom with flowers, but she saw at a glance that was no reason one sweet blossom should be trampled under foot.

"Oh, papa!" she said tearfully. "It must die now. I'm so sorry I broke it, when I can't mend it." And she never forgot when the father said:

"Remember, dear, we can mend so few things we break or hurt, we must be very careful, not only with our hands but our tongues."

This tenderness to things that could not suffer was easily transferred to persons who could, and kept back many rough ways in play, and gave a gentleness of conduct not always seen in a large family of active, strong-willed children.

From first to last obedience was a part of play. If for purpose of quiet while baby slept or grandma rested the drum or noisy game must stop, perfect obedience was expected. Sometimes it looked hard to see a child commanded, even in a pleasant way, to give little sister or brother or the stranger, his treasured plaything, but it soon became a matter of course and such a habit of life that the child who, in babyhood gave up willingly his tin horse, in after years yielded to the father's or mother's advice in great affairs that otherwise would have ruined a life.

The greatest effort in a moral way was made to teach the children unselfishness. The baby was trained to hand around his playthings and candy, and when any child showed selfishness with a toy it was taken away. There was no effort made to get each child the same thing but to make each feel that any unusual gain to one belonged to all. One night the father returned from a distant city and brought a beautiful toy cradle, a wonderful thing for these children who had rocked their babies in boxes on hand-made rockers. The mother sat up and made a feather bed, sheets, ruffled pillow-cases, etc. The next morning the cradle was brought out and five pairs of eyes danced though no one knew who was to be the happy owner.

"I am sorry I couldn't bring each of my good children such a beautiful toy, but I knew you would all be glad for one sister to have it so I bought it."

Five heads nodded approval, but Mary felt it must be hers.

"Mamma and I thought it ought to be Mary's for she has rocked her baby sister so much, and she would take good care of it, but last night we heard her say some very cross words to her sister, so have thought the cradle ought to go to Nettie."

Mary hung her head in shame a moment, but she knew the punishment was just and soon turned with a smiling face to share her younger sister's joy.

"Never mind, Mary," said Nettie. "It's half yours anyway, the side with the fattest pillow," and the beautiful cradle was a means of making two little hearts happy—Mary in receiving and Nettie in giving—as they took turns rocking their large families. It became second nature for these children to divide, so their playthings were only occasionally, for the moment, subjects of dispute and quarrels. They did not have many oranges and when each had one they liked to divide them and later each have a piece again.

"That's a funny way," said a cousin.

"Oh, we think they taste better that way," answered little Mary. "I s'posed oranges were put up in nice little packages on purpose to divide easy."

"I want playthings for my children so that they will give me some rest, and I can't bother myself training them even while they play," some mothers say.

It is a work that becomes more and more restful and delightful to the mother as time goes on, and as unselfish, intelligent children are not half the trouble that selfish, ungoverned children are, in the end the proper training of children is a great saving of time and labor.

But if this were not so the mission of a mother is too high to consider trouble or sacrifice. Well might Margaret Fuller exclaim when her baby was laid upon her breast: "I am the mother of an immortal being! God be merciful to me a sinner."

Higher than mere physical or mental attainments is self-conquest; higher still is unselfish devotion to the good of others. So it is not enough to be an unselfish mother; that is mere instinct; the lioness in the desert will die for her young. The highest purpose of motherhood is to be the mother of unselfish children, for this implies not only this trait in the mother, but wise training of heart and head from infancy. The great souls who have blessed the world began their greatness in early childhood, for

"The child is father of the man,
And I could wish the days to be Bound each to each by natural piety."

Detroit, Mich.

WORDS TO THE WISE.

BY ABBY MORTON DIAZ.

AUNT PHOSIE'S FEW LAST WORDS.

"What more I have to say," continued Aunt Phosie, "can be said in few words. Among the matters you skip over in reading the papers, because they are 'politics' and do not concern women, there is more or less about buying and selling votes and about bribing the men who go every year to Washington or to the state legislature to make laws for all of us to follow.

"Now you would naturally suppose that our law-makers would make laws for the general good and be conscientious about it. But people who know the inside workings of these matters tell us that whichever trust or corporation is able to pay the law-makers the biggest price can help or hinder a law according as this may serve its own interests. This means bribery and bribery means dishonor—dishonor on both sides, the offerers of money and the takers.

"Now follow me close along and you will see what I am coming at. These persons who dishonorably offer or dishonorably take are generally rated as respectable people, and are treated as such. They hold high positions and receive much attention. Hats are taken off to them, their opinions are quoted and their notice is thought something to be proud of. They sit in the front pews, and at big receptions their names stand out on the list.

"Now, what I want you to think about is this. If dishonorable people are held to be respectable, and are shown respect, don't you see that all this brings down the standard of respectability? You mothers are trying to train up your boys to be strictly honest, to love what is right, and to feel ashamed of doing anything dishonorable. You want they should be good men, and you try for this, and to make them despise all kinds of meanness and underhanded doings, and to be unselfish.

"But what's the use if they have to engage in politics? For when these boys grow up to be men they will grow up into a state of things where dishonorable acts and underhanded doings and being all for self are considered matters of course, and good and bad, right and wrong, are all mixed up, and your boy, that you've worried over, and cried over, and prayed over, and given so much instruction to, finds out that he needn't be a mite ashamed of being dishonorable—for what he has been taught to call dishonor is not dishonorable, and as for goodness being more desirable than money gain, why, he finds it is right the other way. He finds 'honorable' men taking government contracts and filling them—or unfilling them—in a way to enrich themselves by cheating the government. He finds them using their public positions for personal gain.

"As mothers, are you not concerned in all this? And how is it as to wives? Are you not concerned in the divorce laws? in marriage laws? and in the legal division of property in case of the decease of either one of a married couple? And what about the ownership of children? Perhaps you are not aware that in some places our laws take away from a married mother the ownership of her children and give it wholly to the father. Do you think that is right? or don't you care to think about it—whether or not you have any interest in these laws? For my part I think we ought to be ashamed to sit still like a parcel of infants and have all our affairs settled for us!

"Now, I want you ladies to go home and consider the matter well. Put your thoughts right upon it, and try to think of a single law which does not concern the women of a family just as much as it does the men. Suppose it to be water-works, suppose it to be roads and bridges, or rivers and harbors, or destruction of forests, or railroading, or lighting the town, or free trade and tariff, or school matters, or property matters, or trusts and combines, or anything.

"And now here is something to consider. People do say that there is a difference between the man-mind and the woman-mind. Now, if mankind were really created in such a way, that is, with this difference of kinds, why, surely it was never intended to be carried on by only one of the kinds. And just as both kinds are needed in the family, so both are needed in every national thing which concerns the individual members. Women's thought is considered of some home value, and what is the nation but one great family?"

Belmont, Mass.

TOBACCO, CHOLERA, AND THEIR CONTAGIONS.

BY GEORGE M. POWELL.

The eminent Dr. John Lizars says: "During the prevalence of cholera, I have had repeated opportunities of observing that individuals addicted to the use of tobacco are more disposed to attacks of that disease, and generally in its most malignant and fatal form."

Dr. Willard Parker, long at the head of the medical profession in New York City, said: "All who smoke or chew, are more apt to die in epidemics than other people."

Dr. O. M. Stone, of Boston, said: "The idea that tobacco prevents disease is an error. A tobacco user's chances of recovery from any malignant disease are lessened fifty per cent."

Capt. G. B. Pettingill, who for many years commanded vessels trading between Boston and Cuba, Mexico and South America, said: "Very few tobaoco users recover from yeliow fever. I once lost half my crew with it in Havana. Every man who died used tobacco, and every one who lived did not use it."

Dr. Harris, of the New York City dispensary, where more diseases are treated than in any other place in America, says: "It is scarcely possible to cure a syphilitic sore, or unite a fractured bone in a devoted smoker."

The London Lancet says: "No smoker can be a well man."

NOTE.—Any reader of the above may do good by getting an editor to reprint it.

BUT, above all, the victory is most sure
For him, who, seeking faith by virtue, strives
To yield entire obedience to the law
Of conscience: Conscience reverenced and obeyed,
As God's most intimate presence in the soul,
And His most perfect image in the world.

—W. Wordsworth.

GO ON and make errors and fall and get up again. Only go on! You were made to fail over and over again, or you would never gain any strength. The harder time you have the gladder you ought to be; for you are getting exercise and experience, and then, God would never spend so much trouble in training you if you were not worth the effort. You really must be of considerable value.—Anna C. Brackett in Technique of Rest.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And the apostles said unto the Lord, increase our faith. And the Lord said, If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up by the root, and be thou planted in the sea; and it should obey you. Luke 17: 5, 6.

The Pemberton, N. J., union is the first W. C. T. U. heard from, that secured, on first opening its mite-box, a round $100. It is what every union might accomplish if the importance of the work was kept before it, and members were inspired by a strong, unfaltering faith. The president of the Pemberton union, Mrs. L. J. Heisler, writes: "One year ago I sent for mite boxes and distributed them among the members of our union. I invited them last Friday evening to my home to a mite-box opening. After a delightful little program of singing, reading of the prophecy "How to make it rise," we opened the boxes. It is with much pleasure that I enclose a check for $100, which the boxes contained, and by which we are entitled to our name upon the New Jersey tablet. Our union is small but our ladies did nobly. After we learned the amount we all heartily joined in singing the doxology." A dear, aged saint, Mrs. S. C. Cunningham, Copenhagen, N. J., writes, with a wisdom that cometh not of this world: "I enclose $100 for the Temple. I have debated whether to use it on ours or send it to yours. It may after I am gone do more good sent to the latter, and it will do our union good to assert itself a little more and not have its bills paid so easily. I want it credited to our union although they know nothing of it. My work is nearly done. I cannot do much with only one eye, ear and hand, aged nearly seventy-two, but will do what I can."

***

Money flows in a constant stream for the Madam Willard window and the Whittier clock. Mrs. Mary T. Lathrap writes: "Inclosed please find $5 for the Madam Willard window, and $1 for the Whittier clock. These finished let me suggest that we lay aside these special things and pull for the chisel strokes in that hall where each name means one hundred dollars." One who is not a member of the W. C. T. U., Miss O. M. Gerry, Chicago, says: "It is with great pleasure that I inclose $5 for the Madam Willard memorial, and hope that soon you will raise the amount needed. It seems, after all she and her noble daughter have done for the world, we should gladly do this little in return." Mrs. Mary B. Monroe, Akron, O., sends $3 to be equally divided between the Madam Willard window and the Whittier clock. Mrs. Monroe states: "We keep our silver Temple on the table in the W. C. T. U. rooms, and now that the Akron union has paid its $100 we enjoy having a small part from time to time in tablets for the honored and gone." Miss I. E. Strachan, Brooklyn, N. Y., sends $1 to the Willard window, $1 to the Whittier clock, $1 for the Jane Weeden tablet, and $1 for the general fund. She says: "This is all from my mite-box; it has very slowly filled up, but I am glad now that I can send a mite to help in the great object lesson which I consider the Temple to be." H. D., a white-ribboner, Greensburg, Pa., sends $1 to be divided between the Willard and the Whittier memorials. Of $5 sent by Mary A. Gould, Wonnepaugh, R. I., $2 is for the Willard memorial. Mrs. S. Case, Wellington, O., sends forty cents for the Whittier clock. Mary I. A. Webb, Savannah, Ga., and Miss E. L. Bailey, Trenton, N. J., send each $1 to the Willard window, the former also sends fifty cents to the Whittier clock. The following unions have contributed the sums credited to them below for the Willard and the Whittier memorials: Brittan, Mich., Winchester, Va., each $1; Brunswick, Me., W. C. T. U., sends $1 to be divided between the two memorials. The following unions have each sent $1 to the Willard window: Douglas, Kan., Scott City, Kan., Clayton, Del., and Pittsfield, Ill. Four dollars and twenty-five cents come from Dickinsonville, N. Y., union for the Willard window. The Central Y. W. C. T. U. of Duluth, Minn., sends $1 to each of the following memorials: Madam Willard, Whittier, Jennie Casseday, Frances Barnes and Julia Ames.

***

The bright little editor, Ethel Stout, of that cutest and cheapest of children's temperance papers, The Midget, (only ten cents a year) proposes, in order to more rapidly raise money to pay for the Jennie Casseday tablet, to sell some beautiful Florida specimens, found both on land and by sea, in that tropical climate, such as golden sea oats, Osceola plumes, silvery hanging moss, which is so much used for Christmas decorations, napkin rings made of palmetto, braid ties with L. T. L. colors, sea shells, sea beans, scales from tarpon fish, either plain or painted with marine views, dainty booklets with all kinds of tropical leaves and flowers. Her mother is now at work preparing these for the holiday sale. She offers to sell them at a very low price. All who desire to purchase these rare, inexpensive and beautiful articles can address Miss Ethel Stout, The Midget, Melbourne, Indian River, Fla.

***

We want to remind our friends of the beautiful silver Temples in the form of ink-stands, jewel cases and banks. The price of the two former is $2.25, banks, $1.75. They will make beautiful Christmas presents. Mrs. Lydia B. Chase, Newport, R. I., sent for a jewel case as a wedding gift for a young friend; on receipt she wrote: "I feel it is not only a jewel case, but a jewel of itself, it is so chaste and beautiful. Words of appreciation came from every one who beheld it." Neal Dow's noble daughter, Miss C. M. Dow, writes: "Please send me the address of the person who has the Temple bonds for sale. I have just looked over five back numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL and do not find it. It seems to me it would be well to keep it always in your column. I want to put $500 in those bonds." Miss Dow's suggestion is a good one and we will try to keep Mr. Speer in the paper constantly until the bonds are all sold. Financial agent for Temple Trust Bonds, Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 LaSalle street, Chicago, Ill.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, MARY ALLEN WEST, } Editors-in-Chief.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, Contributing Editor.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, Managing Editor.
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, Office Editor.
Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH. Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.—Rom. 8:2.

A NEW-OLD REMEDY.

The scientific light of the times is concentrating its intensest rays upon the evil of the drink habit. It is toward the brain, that power house of all mental achievement, that alcoholism aims its first and most deadly blows, and through the brain paralyzes and disables one after another all the functions of body, mind and soul. The drunkard has been so long the subject of such varied practice and experiment that many minds having thus far no anchorage of opinion for or against this or that remedy, stand in an attitude of bewilderment before the present array of specifics, each one "warranted to cure," but of which none has as yet been successful in emptying the dram-shop, or returning more than a few of the victimized ones to their desolated homes. And now the eager multitudes are called upon to examine still another possibility of relief from the galling chains of appetite and inherited curse."

In a recent number of the Medical Pioneer, organ of the British Medical Temperance Association, Dr. Charles Lloyd Tuckey testifies in an able article to the value of hypnotism in chronic alcoholism. Dr. Tuckey takes a quiet but effective stand, placing on the one side actual work with favorable results, and on the other reasonable statements of cause and effect. He speaks for himself thus: "In reporting a series of thirty-one cases which I have treated by hypnotic suggestion during the last four years, I beg to do so not as an hypnotist, or as a specialist in the treatment of inebriety, but as a general physician who feels that as such he has as much right to use hypnotism in suitable cases as he has to employ electricity, massage, hydropathy, and all the other resources of modern medicine."

We live in a marvelous age. The prophecy of the Divine Healer: "Greater works than these shall ye do," is coming to pass. Reason and research, hand in hand with science, have been leading on. One by one the ills to which this mortal frame is heir, have been diagnosed, and the medicines to correspond discovered and labeled. Diseases, the name and nature of which are not found in the materia medica, are happily in the minority. Pain, that most elusive, yet most positive sensation of being, is forced to yield to the power of anæsthetics, while the surgeon's unerring steel seeks out the root of disease in the flesh. All these things are matters of course, and the world demands such triumphs over matter as its everyday due.

And now, slowly and carefully, the healers of the world are feeling their way farther from the realm of the material into the realm of the mind. "A merry heart doeth good like medicine," says King Solomon. "Keep the patient cheerful," says the nineteenth century physician. Deeper than this he goes, probing into the mind-depths of the sick man to see if, perchance, there be some secret disturbance which is jarring the delicately adjusted mechanism of responsive nerves and tissues. "We must rouse him," says the doctor, knowing that unless the patient aid the prescription by a consent to be cured, his best skill may fail.

These things have become the common-sense of practical medicine; the foundation on which every good nurse rests her work of aiding the physician, and the resort of the mother striving to woo back the ebbing life of her darling.

Still more broadly is the principle applied, and now and then a vigorous application of "mind" has set lagging life-centers into motion and overcome what medicine failed to reach.

On the camp ground, in religious services, in places of prayer, such phrases as these are heard: "Holy influences," "The work of the Holy Spirit." What are some of the results of these influences, this work? Are they not seen in the change which has come over that hardened man who was yesterday the terror of the neighborhood because of his lawlessness and hardihood in sin? Yet, at that altar, under "holy influences," "the work of the Holy Spirit" upon the sinful heart has made it as tender as a baby's, has caused the blasphemous lips to sing praises unto God, the cruel hands to do gentle and kindly deeds. In the secular world the phraseology is varied somewhat, and reformation relies to no slight extent upon "arrest of thought" and "creation of sentiment." A teacher lays aside the rod of correction and tries "moral suasion," and who has not seen unruly spirits falter, hesitate, reconsider and finally reform under the latter method?

Holding in mind these instances, is it unreasonable to look for a large hope in this mental suasion or hypnotism—mind compelling mind, a strong, truly poised, pure mentality, governing that which through the subtle influence of a poison has become weak, unbalanced and impure in its considerations and desires?

This "cure" is in an embryonic stage. Not all, nor many, physicians indorse or even consider it as yet. It is, however, attracting the attention of the press and of a limited circle of the profession. Thoughtful people cannot afford to shut their eyes and ears to suggestions—even such as be of hypnotic persuasion. While debate and test are being carried on, what of the victim of alcoholism? He is under the thrall of a spirit than which one fouler could scarce be imagined. To him, in his wretched slavery, comes the hypnotist, saying, "You want help? I can help you. I will hold your poor, sick mind under the control of my healthier one for a time. I will lend you my strength. I will compel you to coöperate with me against your enemy."

Who shall decry such aid as this? What worthier use could man make of mind strength than the restoration to his estate of manhood a fellow-creature, drink-conquered?

In conclusion Dr. Tuckey says: "We only claim that properly used hypnotism will be found to cure, easily and expeditiously, many cases which can at present only be cured by long and expensive confinement in a retreat, and sometimes to reach other cases which have proved intractable by ordinary methods. Suggestion without hypnotism is always with us, and in the shape of public houses, boon companions and mental and physical ills, is ever exerting an overpowering pullback on the drunkard's good intentions. By hypnotism we are often able to reinforce the effect of moral suggestion and exhortation, and prevent the devil having it all his own way. The ills worked by chronic alcoholism are so vast, and some cases seem so hopeless, that the lover of temperance must welcome the arrival of another means of meeting the evil."

And who shall say it nay? Who dare arrest the feet of Progress wherever she may lead and say to her, "Only thus far will we follow thee"? Rather, let all things be tested, remembering God as the source of every good gift. May not this prove to be a good gift from Him who healed diseased bodies and bade unclean spirits come out of the living temples of the Holy Spirit—a power that shall arrest the demon of appetite until reason again ascends her throne and turns in might against the intruder? And when the house is cleansed, lest "seven other spirits more wicked" returning take possession, the physician should be one able to introduce to the waiting abode the Master of souls who shall forever hold the fortress against the devil and all his angels. No charlatan will a true hypnotist be, but a wise man in holy league with God against the powers of sin—sin in the flesh and in the spirit.

HOW TO REST.

It is strange that one of the most difficult things to understand is the needs of our physical natures and the relations of mind and body. Bound together by the most mysterious, the most intimate and controlling ties, there is yet nothing more common than an utter ignorance and disregard of their mutual needs. As one has remarked: "It takes the better part of a lifetime to get acquainted with ourselves, and happy and fortunate are we if we do not kill ourselves in making the acquaintance." Under the ordinary conditions of life mere existence ought to be a pleasure, while the amount of labor required from each in order to earn his living ought only to be a pleasurable exercise of our faculties. Instead of finding life generally conforming to these conditions we find that the majority of people groan beneath the yoke of toil and care. Our bodies break down from being driven and overtaxed by the mind; our brains become disordered and insane from the incessant anxiety and effort of keeping the body at work. And when the human frame finally succumbs to the effect of all this mismanagement, how few there are who know how to place themselves in conditions of recuperation. How few know how to rest.

Real effective rest comes through the brain. Rest of body will be of small effect if the brain does not concur. We all know that nothing is more fatiguing than the condition where the body is unable to fulfill the mandates of the brain, when the anxiety to do is not responded to and accomplished by the body. We often hear a man of business complain that things have gone wrong, his efforts have been fruitless, and that consequently he is overcome by fatigue; we often hear the housekeeper declare that she has worked so hard at nothing, that is, she has accomplished nothing and that she is tired to death. No condition could be more fatiguing than that of the person who wants to do something but is prevented by physical inability. The muscles and nerves feel more fatigue under such circumstances than they would after performing the actual toil. This is the condition called worry, and nothing wears out the strength so rapidly. This may be the condition of the mind when the body is compulsorily idle, but it is the furthest possible removed from the condition of rest.

As one of the most imperative conditions of rest must come a mental acknowledgment of its need and contentment in taking it. Many people are not certain whether they are tired or lazy; they cannot tell whether it is lack of energy or real fatigue that indisposes them to exertion. Such a state of doubt should be solved at once, and the conduct regulated accordingly. A most fatiguing day may result from the mere absence of stimulus to work; a day of lounging is also fatiguing; neither of these conditions gives rest, and this should be understood. On the contrary, a most restful condition is compatible with the performance of light, entertaining employment. No mistake is more frequently made in regard to the convalescing sick than to require of them the absolute non-employment of hand or brain on the supposition that this is rest, when, in fact, it produces the most trying condition of fatigue. Before a person can rest he must understand whether his fatigue comes from doing nothing or from doing too much; and he must regulate his condition and actions accordingly. He may need a rest from doing nothing.

Having ascertained that too great activity or care in any direction causes overfatigue, the next thing necessary is the acquiescence and approval of the mind to the taking of rest. No one can rest who allows the feeling that he ought to be at work to predominate in his mind. Let reason come to the aid in this; if rest is needed, one should compel one's self to take it in some way. Do whatever you like or do nothing, only don't drive yourself; exact nothing of your energy, or will or vivacity even. Relax every tension of both body and mind. Do what you want to, whether it be to laugh, dance, sing, lounge, muse, sleep, go to the opera, play checkers or "sit on a rail fence and see how green the grass is and how blue the sky." Let things go undone and don't fret; cultivate repose; learn how to rest.

"AS ITHERS SEE US."

There can be no doubt that to "see oursels as ithers see us" is a "giftie" which would often be of great benefit to us. Nor would the benefit come merely, as is popularly assumed, along the line of revealing unsuspected faults. It often would, indeed it often does, encourage distrustful souls who appreciate their own faults more keenly than any one else does by a view of certain elements of strength which their friends see far more clearly than they do themselves.

This is no less true in national than in individual life. As a nation we are not given to underestimating ourselves; nevertheless the more thoughtful of our number realize the evils which exist among us with a keenness which sometimes causes them to fear for the life of the nation. The real elements of strength which these very evils draw out, are often not perceived at all until attention is called to them by friendly neighbors. Two statements of this kind made by foreigners concerning last summer's labor troubles contain much encouragement for the overfearful. A military attaché of a European legation in Washington speaking of the calling out of troops to quiet the Homestead trouble said: "I am always surprised at every exhibition of the reserved military strength of the United States, but the sudden assembly of eight thousand men at twelve hours' notice, uniformed, armed, rationed and equipped, prepared to take the field, as was done on Monday last by a single state, eclipses all your previous efforts. Do you know the single incident that most impressed itself upon the Duke of Sutherland during his last visit to this country a year or two ago? Well, he happened to be in Washington one day, when, for some reason or other, your troops were paraded, and we, while riding, turned into Pennsylvania avenue just as the head of a long column of soldiers came in sight, and waited for nearly an hour while it was passing. A few hours later we drove about town again, but every soldier had disappeared; not even a uniform in sight. His Grace, remarking the latter fact, said to me, 'Captain, this is an extraordinary people. It is not a military nation, and yet it is, in my opinion, the greatest military power on earth. I have been in Washington one week, and during that time

I never saw a uniform. Suddenly this afternoon a body of several thousand armed soldiers, foot batteries and dragoons, all in service dress, parade the streets of this little city. A few hours later they have vanished. Where? They have simply doffed their uniforms and resumed their civilian capacity. It is simply astonishing. The nation that can boast of such men has nothing to fear from any enemy on earth.' "

A Paris paper, L'Economiste, commenting upon a strike in France, says: "The incompetency of the government of our country is strikingly apparent, when contrasted with government in the United States. How thoroughly the Republic on the other side of the Atlantic understands its business was proved a few months ago, during the Homestead strikes, when it compelled the strikers to respect the liberty of the workmen engaged by the Andrew Carnegie Company. Why does not government in France act like government in America? The latter acts with resolution and impartiality, and that is the only way to prevent new difficulties arising everywhere. In the United States, government does not undertake to decide which side is right and which is wrong when a strike takes place; it perceives that to pass upon such a question is not at all within the province of government; it simply and purely prevents any attack on property and personal liberty; and it is certain that by such a course, which protects the rights of all, the strife will have many more chances of ending than if the government becomes mixed up with it."

These comments are the more encouraging because they point out, not extraneous nor accidental circumstances, but elements inherent in our people and our institutions. The dangers which threaten us are many and grave. The wisest Christian statesmanship will be required to safely guide our ship of state through the rocks and shoals; but our institutions have a marvelous strength which few of us fully appreciate, even in the light of the terrible tests to which they have been put, and the strain they are constantly sustaining, yet back of all is the life giving power of Christianity. A Christian nation, like a Christian individual, is immortal. It is too much to claim that we are as yet a Christian nation, or that we have a Christian civilization, but we are steadily developing into the one, and shall then produce the other.

SEED THOUGHTS.

Some good women were talking together, and a listener jotted down a few sentences "caught on the fly." In the course of colloquial repartee some of their phrases were playful, but take them all in all there is much that will bear thinking of and we herewith present them to our readers:

"To my mind this is what one must say in every emergency and keep it up from the inmost of the soul, for it is a saying which if we perceive and feel it will carry us through everything: 'After all what does it matter, there is God.' "

"I am going to take as my conversational motto what George Meredith makes one of his characters say, namely: 'The world is my client,' and by this means I shall not be talking to run down the world and everybody in it, but rather to praise them up."

"Robert Browning says there are two portions between which every man chooses. He either has faith diversified by doubt, or doubt diversified by faith, he takes his choice without paying his money; he can will as to which he will have; if he takes the first his life will bring success in the sense of happiness and achievement; if he takes the last, although he may achieve, he will not know much about happiness."

"While it may be perfectly right for a monkey to steal, it would be wrong for a man; ask yourself why it would be; all of theology is bound up in the answer."

"In my judgment man fell up and not down. Suppose you have an idiot to deal with, how do you teach him law? You put it before him and he breaks it, that is just what God does with us, but in the very breaking we learn that there is law, and God said: 'Now man has become as one of us, knowing good and evil.' "

"Prayer has got to be a matter of the will; we cannot drift, we have got to dig and delve and drive."

"You are too introspective, you keep yourself under a microscope. Look at Brother Lawrence (in that wonderful leaflet that everybody ought to read: 'The practice of the presence of God,') when he did wrong, he took it easy, by which I mean that he was so full of love to God that if he made a slip he felt he could, at once, retrieve himself, and set about doing so at once, without wasting his time in vain regrets."

"——'s idea of religion is to talk an immense deal about it, and then go and do just as she likes."

"As for me, I am not religious at all, but I've got God; I find that what people need is less religion and more God."

"I do not think there is any religion except this: When you know a thing is right, go straight and do it, and make no fuss about it."

"Most people's repentance is simply a matter of waiting for their next opportunity."

"Some people are altogether too pious to be good, they go to all the meetings, and work themselves up to a high pitch, but when you expect them to take hold and help make the world better, they won't touch it with the tongs."

"Just as a child chases a Punch and Judy show, so I once chased fanatics, but now I am like a child that has been behind the scenes."

"You find all this among the Buddhists and other oriental religionists; they worked themselves up; they hung themselves on hooks; they strove after feelings; their religion was not in the intellect or the will, but wholly in the emotions. But the apostles were not so; they were among the simplest and most matter-of-fact men that ever lived; they went right about their Master's business. The Bible is a book that has been horribly conjured with; people have used it as a mirror, and each has found in it his own petty distortion. But all this has not touched the truth of the case, or made it more or less; the truth is always there, shining like a star out of heaven, and what we poor little children think about it is of very little consequence. The thing for us to do is to take with simple heart the gospel word that we may grow thereby; to lift up our hearts for guidance in the smallest events of every day, and so to go about our business, or better still, our Father's business."

TEMPERANCE IN SCHOOLS.

Now that temperance teaching in the schools is so largely an accomplished fact, there remains a long and up hill struggle to get the very children into the schools and keep them there, who most need this instruction.

In one city ward of Chicago there are seven thousand children of school age with but twenty five hundred sittings in public schools provided for them. Yet in this same ward there are six thousand parochial school sittings, all Catholic. In the adjoining ward the figures are very nearly the same. These parochial schools are very far from furnishing any temperance teaching.

In these wards the few women interested in the public schools have made a vigorous agitation for several months to secure even one public school for one thousand children. So far they have not obtained the school, but negotiations are pending for a site for it. This will bring one thousand children under temperance instruction. Is there any more effective work that temperance women can do?

Of course the first thing is to find out how many children lack school accommodations. This can be very readily learned from the school board report or the school census. The next thing in order is a careful enlistment of all the forces likely to be favorable to the increase of school accommodations, parents, pastors and school authorities. The work is not difficult, and it is absolutely requisite, unless scores of thousands of children in the foreign wards of all our great cities are to be deprived of the whole benefit of our public schools including the temperance instruction.

There are Polish children who go to Polish schools and Russian children who go to Russian Rabbinical schools to-day in all our great cities who would gladly go to the public schools if there were room for them. There are thousands of Italians who go to no schools, because the public schools have no room for them. The Italians having left their fine light wines at home in Italy, take to beer here as the cheapest substitute. Their children receive no hint of the effects of this procedure, for the instruction is not accessible to them.

In every great manufacturing region there are armies of little lads, whose function is to carry the workmen their beer. These children are found far more in regions where there are no school sittings for them than in those parts of towns where the equipment is adequate.

This neglect to supply adequate school accommodations is a form of "nullification" of the temperance instruction laws, which is the more successful because the "forgotten regions" of the great cities are usually the places chosen for it. They never rebel. Their misery is mute for the present. But it should not remain so, and the energy set free by the accomplishment of the legislation may well be turned now to this phase of its enforcement.

THE roster of National superintendents for the coming year contains many new and well-known names: Mrs. Gen. Bidwell has been made superintendent of work among the sailors. The Pacific coast very properly desired representation among the superintendents and its leading woman was chosen. Dr. Mary Wood Allen will devote her entire time to the department of purity work. Catharine Waugh McCulloch, the young and gifted Chicago lawyer, takes the department of legal work. Her address is 1116 The Rookery, Chicago. Miss Lodie Reed, of Indianapolis, the new press superintendent, has had an experience of years in this department and was chosen as an expert. Her associates will soon be announced.

"The hard turmoil of the pitiless sea
Turns the pebble to beauteous gem;
They who escape the agony,
Miss also the diadem."

***

Scientific experiments have proved that water is not, as popularly supposed, purified by freezing. The most recent experiments show that 34.3 per cent of organic matter, the most injurious portion of the impurities, are retained.

***

Edmund B. Fairfield, United States Consul at Lyons, but formerly a Congregational pastor in Michigan, well known to our readers, writes to our National President the following words of encouragement: "As you desire it, I am ready to make public confession of my faith on the woman's suffrage question anywhere and everywhere. I had long been opposed to it, but when I sat down to prepare an article on the opposite side, somehow I could not find much to write, and when I heard the superb arguments of Rev. Anna Shaw, I cried in the words of the old Methodist hymn, 'I yield, I yield, I can hold out no more.' Miss Shaw's way of putting the matter seems to me peculiarly strong and convincing."

***

Those who believe in the "emancipation of woman" from the thousand and one details of that slavery in which mankind held her as

"Something better than his dog,
A little dearer than his horse," have daily reasons for rejoicing. Round by round she is climbing the ladder from which she shall at last step to her destined place by the side of her brother, in very truth his equal and in every way meet—that is fitted—to be his helper and co-worker. The University of Philadelphia has at last claimed one of her highest privileges, that of admitting women to her halls of learning. The occasion of this forward movement was marked by incisive addresses, notably one from Dr. Thomas, Dean of Bryn Mawr College. One by one the great institutions of our country are thus wheeling into line and none but the pessimist can fail to see that woman's full and perfect day is not far off.

***

An incident of a mother's being forced to appeal to a court to regain possession of her four months' old baby is commented upon with just severity by the Woman's Journal. Yet when the injustice of laws which give the father sole possession of the children is set forth, we are met by the statement that the matter is a most difficult one to decide; that there are equally serious objections to giving the mother exclusive possession. Most freely granted, but it does seem to us that ordinary common sense would suggest that neither parent should have sole possession, rather that the method in practical operation in all well regulated homes, the same method which obtains in regard to some kinds of property, might be made legal; namely that the parents should have joint, equal control of the children and when, if ever, the parents are in hopeless disagreement on the subject, then let the law decide which of the two in that particular case shall have control.

***

Dr. Amy C. Bowen, of California, is the first and, up to the present, the only woman ever admitted to the medical schools of Berlin. She graduated at Hahnemann College, San Francisco, practiced a few years, then went abroad to study surgery. She attended clinics at the university of Zurich and Vienna, then went to Berlin to attend the clinic of a famous surgeon there, but was repulsed by the assurance, "We do not allow women doctors in Germany." Miss Bowen insisted and after many repulses was permitted to attend as a visitor though she was informed that she "could not hope to profit from the advanced instruction." The persistence which had won the first step gained also the second and she was finally permitted to diagnose a case. When she had made her statement the professor shouted, "She is right, gentlemen, she has beaten you all." Several other victories of diagnosis followed, and at length, after correctly diagnosing a test case, she was warmly congratulated and formally admitted to the medical colleges of Berlin. Soon after, she performed successfully a difficult operation and her fame was established in the colleges and hospitals. Since then, during the absence of the first assistant surgeon, she has been appointed to his position in the same clinic where she was at first scornfully refused permission to attend lectures.

ON DUTY.

World's W. C. T. U.

President—Miss Frances E. Willard, Evanston, Ill.
Vice-President-at-Large—Lady Henry Somerset, Albany Buildings, 47 Victoria St., Westminster, London S. W.
Secretary—Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, Ravenna, O.
Assistant Secretary—Miss Anna A. Gordon, Evanston, Ill.
Treasurer—Mrs. Ella F. M. Williams, 26 Chomedy St., Montreal, Canada.

QUEENSLAND.

VISIT OF MRS. ANDREW AND DR. BUSHNELL TO QUEENSLAND AND SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

We have just concluded the most successful convention ever held in Queensland. One hundred and twenty answered to the roll call, more than three times the number of any former delegation. Opening exercises were specially impressive; the Spirit was poured out. We have been greatly blessed by the presence of our dear sisters from America, and their burning words have stirred up many a heart. They had visited several of the unions before convention and given addresses, so they felt the bond of sympathy, and when the president of the Brisbane Y's in her address of welcome gave the keynote "love" and Mrs. Andrew took up the strain we all felt we were "in for a good time," and many a woman has gone back to her home a better Christian.

The convention was held in Brisbane in response to the invitation of the first Y union in Queensland, and the arrangements were perfect. Nothing had been forgotten, not even the waste paper baskets. The walls of the large schoolroom (kindly lent) were almost hidden by the banners of the different unions (one of which, from Maryborough, is to be exhibited at the World's Fair), pictures and mottoes, cunning contrivances for comfort and convenience such as only Y's would think of, the whole affair (luncheons included) showing what our girls can do under the skillful generalship of a real live president. "God bless the Y's" arose from many a mother's heart.

On the platform, amid a profusion of sunflowers and white ribbon, were arranged photos of our dear pioneer, Mrs. Leavitt, Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Ackerman, also a picture of the Temple.

A surprise had been prepared for our beloved Colonial president who this year celebrates her silver wedding. During the first afternoon she was the recipient of a very useful "secretaire," and beautifully illuminated address, in gilt frame, as a token of the esteem and love of the unions throughout the colony. In the border surrounding the address are the mystic letters W. C. T. U., a monogram of Mrs. Brentnall's initials, and a twisted white ribbon. By a singular coincidence a reception had been held the day before, and we had a surprise on being informed it was our president's birthday party. At this reception the delegates and their hostesses were introduced to our American sisters.

During the year nine unions have been organized, one being the result of the labors of our evangelistic superintendent, away in the Gulf country. The number of Y unions has been doubled; they have now 263 members and sixty-three honorary.

The superintendents all reported increased interest in scientific instruction, hygiene, heredity, L. T. L. (on which Mrs. Andrew gave a most instructive address); in literature, of which a vast amount has been distributed in rail ways, to bus men, cab-men; wherever there is an opening our women are ready. The number of Union Signals taken by our members increases every year, and the men look for it as eagerly as the women.

Woman suffrage was adopted as a plank in our platform at the convention last year; this year we had a paper on the subject, by a young member, who expressed the hope that she would live to see the day when she could record her vote. Dr. Bushnell's addresses have aroused a great deal of interest on this subject, and we cannot forget that our petition for the better protection of girls, signed by nearly nine thousand women, was pooh-poohed because there were no votes at the back of it. Queensland women are aroused, and will have to be reckoned with. Dr. Bushnell gave a most impressive address on social purity, recommending the women to study this matter in their union meetings and to become intelligent on the subject.

A great deal of useful information was imparted at question-box time by our distinguished visitors. Their Bible readings and parting addresses were seasons of great profit. When we bade them good-bye at the station, we said, "Henceforth our prayers will follow them."

Among other resolutions were the following:

Resolved, That we express our deep thankfulness for the visit of our dear American sisters, Mrs. E. W. Andrew, M. A., and Dr. Kate Bushnell, and that our prayers follow them wherever they go.

Resolved, That we rejoice greatly to hear of the success of Miss Jessie A. Ackerman's work in western Australia and anticipate with pleasure her visit among us next year.

Resolved, That we recognize with alarm the increasing growth of the tobacco habit among the young of the colony, and would respectfully ask all Christian men to study the matter carefully and do what they believe the Master would have them do.

In connection with the convention two public meetings were held: On the first evening by the Y's, when the program included the "Congress of Nations." the second evening the women gave addresses and both had crowded audiences.

C. P. Britten.

AUSTRALIAN NOTES.

Perhaps, because of their unceasing work, for it would almost seem they are like the cherubim and seraphim, in that "they rest not day nor night," coupled with innate modesty and entire losing of self in the furtherance of the cause they represent, so little has been heard of Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell. We learned they were landed in England; later they were welcomed in South Africa; this much from your paper. Then from American friends arriving in Melbourne, who had but just preceded them in their journeyings, we heard of them as tempest tossed, but arriving safely in Ceylon. We then waited to hear of their leaving India, and grew anxious as the hot season advanced.

One bright autumn morning (May), however, they landed in our own port. The unions arranged a tea meeting and welcome in the Baptist lecture room. After the addresses of welcome Mrs. Andrew attracted all by her gentleness and earnest presentation of the temperance cause and work. After the hymn, "Sowing the Seed," we sang "Sowing in the Sunshine," which seemed so appropriate in this sunny clime, and the opening words of Dr. Bushnell, that her life-work was "in the shadow," and her exposition of that work revealed vividly the great shadow over us, which will not be removed till all women are emancipated, till there is established all around the world one moral standard.

These faithful women are still laboring in Australia. The good accomplished cannot be measured. They are not organizing, but strengthening unions already established, explaining, upholding, giving the experience, methods and results, elsewhere. We wish it might be possible that one after another of the able, eminent, experienced workers in the home field might thus visit and encourage those in remote sections. The constant round of county, district and state conventions, assemblies, etc., furnishes in the states, with the quick, easy transit and low rates, the opportunity to hear and meet the leaders from all parts. Here, it is rarely the privilege occurs of meeting even those from an adjoining colony (state.) There is no desire or intention to have others do the work here for them, but there is an eagerness for ideas and fresh inspiration which those just from the fountain-head can bring, and which seem necessary, if we would have the work advance along the lines and keep in harmony and touch with the home union. The great longing of the W. C. T. U. in Australia and New Zealand, the hope, which they trust may be realized in the near future is, for a visit from Lady Henry Somerset.

Following Dr. Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew came Dr. Emily Brainerd Ryder, who, it will be remembered, accompanied Punditi Ramabai on her return to her native country, and rendered such effective aid in overcoming the difficulties in the way of carrying out the plans for establishing on a firm basis the work for child widows. Suttee abolished, the school for child widows established, Dr. Ryder now pleads for the child wives of India. An abridged edition of her work on their sad condition has been issued and interested meetings held. The W. C. T. U. quarterly meeting at Pt. Melbourne might have been named an Indian meeting, as these ladies (Mrs. Andrew, Drs. Bushnell and Ryder) gave us a little insight of affairs there, and we realized that so long as any women are in bonds all are bound with them.

Meanwhile Miss Ackerman has been seeking "new fields and pastures green," pushing, pressing on the work, anew attesting her well known ability as a pioneer and organizer. It was my privilege to visit West Australia only just too late to hear the sound of her voice, but the echo was yet ringing. In West Australia the consumption of liquors is greater per capita than in any other country in the world, and it had been looked upon as a stronghold of the drink demon, where woman's effort might meet with open opposition. On the contrary, Miss Ackerman met with a most cordial and enthusiastic reception. At Perth, the seat of goverment, where she held meetings in the Town Hall, for a week, each one was crowded to overflowing, and a union of one hundred members organized. Corresponding numbers were enlisted at other points, and everywhere the cordial hospitality of the people was liberally bestowed. Miss Ackerman has gone on to India expecting to return to West Australia in six months. The thorough interest of these women is most promising, but to them all the work is entirely new, many of them had never heard of the W. C. T. U. and are eagerly asking for information. It is hoped that Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell may include West Australia in their line of travel.

In New Zealand the electoral bill has passed both houses of parliament, granting the ballot to women, with the option of voting by post. A petition for the bill was sent in, signed by over 20,000 women, more than double the number that signed the petition last year. To the able leadership of Mrs. Sheppard of Christ church, superintendent of the franchise department, the success may be largely attributed.

None of the Australasian unions have had a paper, but some of the colonies have edited a page in the organ of the temperance societies. It has now been arranged to issue in Melbourne, beginning in November, a monthly paper, under the auspices and editorship of the W. C. T. U.

Catherine P. Wallace.

Melbourne.

PROHIBITION IN MANITOBA.

We, that is, the Prohibition League, composed of representatives from the various organizations, asked our late Provincial Legislature to allow a plebiscite to be taken on the same day (July 21, 1892) upon which our general election for the next Legislature was held on the question, "Do you think the protection of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors desirable? Yes or no," a separate ballot to be prepared for the purpose. It was granted. We then had a pledge prepared, for which candidates of both parties were asked to sign, promising to give us a prohibition law at the first session of the legislature, should a reasonable majority desire it. A large majority have signed this pledge; the Premier, on condition that Winnipeg should give a good majority, which very few expected, but which was secured. The actual figures are: Total vote for candidates, 28,204; total vote on plebiscite, 26,752; total vote for prohibition, 19,637; total vote against prohibition, 7,115; majority for prohibition, 12,522; majority for prohibition in Winnipeg, about 1,300.

It remains to be seen what the legislature will do. The church, notably our beloved Methodist church, worked heartily, and if they continue to do so possibly enough influence may be brought to secure it. We shall see. But while large numbers of temperance workers in Canada think a third party not the best for that country, I am a convert to its necessity, and I am pleased that the first vote cast by my husband in this country was cast for the party that seeks to protect the home.

Mrs. Elizabeth Chisholm,
Former W. C. T. U. President of Manitoba.

MONTREAL MAPLE LEAVES.

Reading The Union Signal's inspiring notices of successful conventions, "Palmetto Leaves," "First Fruit W. C. T. U." meetings, the thought that a few Canadian "Maple Leaves might not be an unwelcome addition to your W. C. T. U. garland of good works occurred to me.

It is true that beautiful Montreal has not yet a monumental Temple, or a Willard Hall to bear everlasting testimony to her women's zeal in the holy cause of temperance and purity, but her youth is a vigorous one, and the deeds she has already accomplished augur a glorious future.

The W. C. T. U. crusade against intemperance, considering its comparatively recent declaration of woe, in a conservative province, three fourths French speaking, and under climatic conditions that give a seeming sanction to the use of stimulants in the "closed," frigid, wintry season, has met with universal success. Three general headquarters, St. Catherine street, St. Lawrence street, and the "Northern," bear witness of the union's rapid growth.

Each has its well patronized reading room and woman's exchange, and in the quarter of the city where the "saloon trust" flaunts its red banner at almost every street corner, there have been established several warm, clean, cheery coffee houses, where, for a trifling sum, the frost bitten laborer—or any one, for that matter—may enter in and be comforted without exposure to temptation from the liquor fiend.

One of these coffee houses, the largest, is situated on Craig street, near the new, large thoroughfare, St. Lawrence street, and its counterpart in size holds the fort in the late famous drinking booth and menagerie, known by the sporting world as "Old Joe Beef's Canteen." To this notorious place the scum of creation resorted until the demise of its owner and subsequent purchase by Christian workers. It was the home of a man who possessed a dime for "bunk and drink," and a few added "sous" to wager upon "Joe's" wrestling powers with a quartette of black bears penned in the canteen's cellar. The walls that echoed vile oaths and ribald song reverberate now with praise to God, and the "Canteen's" mission is one of good will toward men of all creeds and colors.

While the East End of Montreal is so saloon infested, the zeal of the W. C. T. U. soldiers, added to the efforts of the Citizens' Alliance, have abolished all but one saloon—which has a desperate and costly struggle for existence—in the West End from St. Catherine street to Cote St. Antone, covering a radius of certainly over two or three miles.

This past spring a long cherished plan of the union ladies bore rich fruit. They had long desired to found a non sectarian refuge for friendless women, and thanks to their untiring zeal, they this season became the proud purchasers of an $8,000 edifice on St. Urbain street over whose portal now shines in gilded lettering the magic words, "Sheltering Home," and beneath on the shining door-plate the initials, W. C. T. U.

It would be unfair not to mention the name of indefatigable Miss Barber, the editor of the ringing Voice From The Field, whose time, means and heart have done such wondrous deeds for the union. Her name must be inseparably linked with that of temperance work in the Dominion.

It would be impossible within the limits of a newspaper article to enumerate the many charitable offshoots from the present branch of W. C. T. U. effort in Montreal. Every month evolves a new and inspiring surprise in all lines of their especial work. Yet it would be impossible to close these words without alluding to their gentle ministrations to the lumber-camps far north among the pine forests. Deft fingers and loving hearts manage to send these forest workers "bags of comfort" on every possible occasion and they are filled to overflowing with not only copies of the Word of God and inspiring words of hope and good cheer, but good warm clothing and often such food as may be transported over mount and frozen stream.

Isabel Gansoi.

Montreal, Canada.

AMONG THE WONDERS OF THE DEEP.

After a trip to West Australia, where the work was well started, for we formed local unions and a colonial, beside getting together a fine staff of colonial superintendents, I left for Singapore. I think I should add that the work in that colony was attended with more than usual success. In two months we took more than a thousand pledges at the public meetings, beside the women who joined the union, and we all feel the work will stand the test of eternity.

After a visit to the Northeast, which is one of the most desolate regions I have ever visited, for not a drop of rain had fallen in two years, and in many places there was not a blade of grass or a shrub to be seen for miles, the cattle and sheep dying by thousands, and bringing much distress to the people, I left these scenes of desolation, and in a comfortable steamer started for the East. I am thankful to say the passage was a smooth one; we had only a few passengers, and I was enabled to do much writing, and at the same time rest my throat and chest a little, for I had been holding ten and twelve meetings a week for some time.

On the voyage I had a new and very interesting experience. We went to the great pearling grounds of the world, and stopped two days among the pearling fleet, that consists of one hundred and twenty ships and vessels, large and small, with about thirteen hundred men at work. The boats are anchored in the high seas, in from eleven to twenty five fathoms of water, and here, far beyond the sight of land, beyond the pale of the gospel and quite without any civilizing influences, these men spend months and years; the only interruption to the awful monotony of such a life is the arrival of a monthly mail. This is all that connects them with the outside world. The officials seem to be entitled to the hospitality of our steamer, and for two days the boat is thronged with these men. I am sorry to say that such a thing as a missionary steamer is quite unknown and no Christian work is being done. There are some Japanese and a few Malays among them.

Somehow, it was known that I was to be a passenger by this steamer, and the officers brought me a fine collection of shells, corals, seaweeds, etc. They told me so much of the wonders of the deep that I expressed a desire to go down. The passengers said a woman had never done such a thing; and when I had made up my mind to go, some of the officers tried very hard to stop me, but all arrangements were made, and I had the most remarkable experience of my life. I was taken from our steamer to one of the pearling boats, and there I made ready to go down sixty feet, to the ocean's bed, and introduce myself to the many inhabitants of the deep. First of all I put on two suits of very heavy (hand knitted) underwear, two pairs of very long hose and over this the diving dress, made in one garment, to cover the whole body but the head. I got into this, and a very heavy breastplate of some kind of metal was put on. In some remarkable way the dress was screwed onto this around the neck; three men, with wrenches in their hands, stood screwing and twisting away at it. It was such a strange sensation, all I could think of was being screwed up in a coffin. Next came the shoes, these weighed thirty-two pounds, then heavy lead weights, in all eighty-two pounds, were attached to my body to help me to sink. Last came the head gear, a very heavy helmet. This was screwed on, very much as you would adjust the head of a waxfigure. It was large enough so that I could turn my head from side to side, and had three glass globes, one in the front, and at either side. To the helmet was attached a rubber pipe, which was connected with the air pump; one man worked at the pump so I might have plenty of air, a heavy rope was tied about me and I was put over the side of the ship and slowly let down.

I had read so much of the wonders of the deep but they have never been described. Through the glass in the helmet everything can be seen as plainly as possible and a flower garden on a spring morning never presented such a scene of beauty or greater variety of color, ferns of every shade, coral of all size, shape and color, and shells in as great variety, which all go to make up what truly may be termed the wonders of the deep. After a time among all manner of fish, such as we read of but few see, I pulled the signal rope and was brought in safety to the top to the intense relief of the friend on the steamer. When I landed on the deck of the pearling boat we waved to the steamer that all was well and very soon we were on our way north. I have reached Singapore in safety, having gone first to Java, and very soon I hope to be in India to lend them a helping hand.

Singapore, India. JESSIE A. ACKERMAN.

NEW SOUTH WALES.

THE TENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

Of the W. C. T. U. has just closed. The attendance was large, delegates not only representing the city and suburbs but distant parts of the colony. The annual report showed that a large amount of work had been done during the year, and that the outlook for the future was hopeful. There are at present twenty-four departments of work carried on at the various centers. Greetings were read from other colonies including one from Mrs. Harrison Lee Victoria, a letter also was read from the Australasian president.

Deputations were received from the I. O. G. T., the Grand Alliance, the Sons of Temperance, the Congregational Total Abstinence Society, the Orange Good Templars, the Local Option League and the Rechabites. Several suggestive papers were read on woman's work, woman's suffrage, and peace and arbitration, followed by discussion. Dr. Lucas, the American temperance advocate, gave a short address.

The public meeting was honored by the presence of Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell, the earnest all-round the world missionaries sent out by the American W. C. T. U. These ladies both delivered addresses in the course of the evening which were much appreciated.

The principal feature of the convention was the offer and acceptance of a piece of land at Auburn for the purpose of erecting a retreat for the better class of women who may have fallen into inebriate habits and wish to reform.

As the ladies present did not consider that they had been fairly dealt with as regards a report of their work in the existing religious and temperance papers, it was decided to start one of their own, and arrangements were made for editing and publishing the same.

It was decided that a letter of sympathy from this convention be sent to Miss Frances E. Willard, president of the World's W. C. T. U.

The election of officers on the last day resulted as follows: Mrs. Bordes, Colonial president; Miss Hogg, Colonial organizer; Mrs. Masterman, corresponding secretary; Miss Dickson, recording secretary, and Mrs. Rea, treasurer. The superintendents of the different departments were elected for another year, and the convention closed by singing, "God be with you till we meet again."

LAURA HOGG,
Reporter for New South Wales.

NEWS FROM MADAGASCAR.

Our committee recently arranged for two temperance lectures to be given in this city—one to children and the other to adults. Mr. Kingzett of the Friends' Foreign Mission Association was the lecturer on both occasions, and he took great pains to make the lectures both interesting and instructive. A large number of children from the different schools in the town and suburbs attended the first one and the lecturer clearly and forcibly pointed out to them the evils resulting from the habit of indulging in strong drink, and urged them to sign the pledge and become teetotalers whilst still young.

The second lecture, for adults, was also very well attended; Mr. Kingzett showed specimens of different kinds of intoxicating drinks, native made and introduced by foreigners, described the harm they did and refuted the different well known arguments commonly urged in support of the habit of drinking. He quoted frequently from Dr. Richardson's writings and showed a portrait of that well-known temperance advocate which had been copied from an illustration in the Review of Reviews, by a Malagasy youth. The audience listened most attentively and the interest was well sustained throughout. Some pledges were taken at the end. Several English ladies contributed songs and piano forte solos or duets on both occasions for the entertainment of the audience, and a number of boys from one of the mission schools sang some temperance songs in their own language. Special attention is given to temperance work in some of our schools and we trust that many of the rising generation will grow up sworn foes of alcohol in all its forms.

EDITH M. CLARK, Press Supt.
Antananarivo, Madagascar.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. DAY IN CHILE.

Chile's W. C. T. U. work is so exceedingly small that we can scarce claim recognition among our stronger sisters, yet there is surely a future of growth and influence before us. We saw the announcement of World's W. C. T. U. day in THE UNION SIGNAL and received the circular letter and so determined on a public meeting for September 22. It was held in our main school room, which is quite convenient for such purposes. We trimmed with flags, lighted well and hung Chinese lanterns from the arch in the center of the room. There was a good attendance and all expressed much satisfaction with the exercises. The following was the program:

Singing, "Let the lower lights be burning."
Reading, Psalm 145 and prayer.
Singing, "Rescue the perishing."
Recitation, "If I would not be a drunkard."
Piano solo.
Recitation and song, "Dare to do right."
Tableaux.
Solo, "Dream on, Oh queen."
Reading.
Singing, "Little travelers," by eight L. T. L's.
Recitation, "Two glasses."
L. T. L. exercise, "When I'm a man."
Tableaux and song, "Father, dear father, come home."
Duet and tableaux, "Love at home."
Solo and chorus, "Where is my wandering boy?"
Recitation, "Confession of King Alcohol."
Tableaux.
Piano solo.
Recitation, "Mother's prayers."
Duet, "Bands of ribbon white."
President's remarks.
Collection.
Piano solo.
Singing, "What can wash away my sin?"
Prayer.

We have forwarded the amount of the collection to the World's treasurer. IDA A. T. ARMS.

Colegio Americano, Concepcion, Chile.

LITERATURE NEEDED FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

We have opened a depot of literature, but a depot of literature at Cape Town where our few W. C. T. U. women send to purchase a few helps, is no special advantage yet to the thousands of, in most ways, intelligent people who have never heard of the W. C. T. U. I am resolved on a literature campaign for mothers, for young ladies, for children, for merchants, for politicians, for preachers, for natives, for everybody. Literature treating of gospel temperance, of the social phases, of the effects of tobacco, of alcohol in medicine, of the legal and labor phases would do much good. We need £500 for this work right now. If only the people at home could see the possibilities of this South Africa; it is bound to be a powerful force in accomplishing God's kingdom on earth.

Our women are as loyal to each other and to the W. W. C. T. U. as they can be, and are really growing surprisingly when one remembers that it is only three years that six ladies organized the colonial union. A year ago a mass convention was held at which Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell were present just terminating their three months' "tantalizing visit." That visit has been productive of wonderful results. This year we had a delegated convention on the ground of our paid up membership. There were reported nearly seven hundred W's and Y's. Fully half our unions in South Africa are Y unions.

ALICE R. PALMER,
W. W. C. T. U. Organizer for So. Africa.
Wellington, Cape Colony.

NORWAY.

THE NORWEGIAN WOMAN'S TEMPERANCE SOCIETY.

The Lord has been pressing Miss Esmark and myself forward in such a wonderful way, to take a leading part in the temperance work for women, so that it would be disobedience against Him not to take it up.

After a conversation with those ladies who had been at the head of the Temperance Union in Christiania, founded by Miss Gray, we came to the conclusion that the best thing we could do was to organize a National Norwegian temperance society. Without means we could do nothing and only as a Norwegian society we might have any hope of being sustained by the state. Our parliament gives every year some thousand dollars to be distributed among societies working against drunkenness, and from this fund we might now hope to be furnished with some help. The first of November we had a meeting and organized "The Norwegian Woman's Temperance Society." The committee selected was: Miss Esmark, secretary; Mrs. Ignase Carlsen, Mrs. E. Arbo and Mrs. Else Holkermann, treasurer. I was selected president. It was put in our laws that our society should be affiliated to the World's W. C. T. U. IDA WEDEL JARLSBERG.

Christiania.

WORLD'S WAVE CRESTS.

Ida, Countess Wedel-Jarlsberg, of Christiania, is the president of the Norway W. C. T. U.

A letter just received from one of the leading workers of the Cape Colony, South Africa, W. C. T. U. says: "Miss Palmer is proving a treasure for which we feel we cannot be sufficiently thankful, and we thank God daily that you gave her to us."

On the afternoon of the fire at St. Johns, Newfoundland, the W. C. T. U. workers were out canvassing for signatures to prevent the selling of intoxicants on the day of the races. More than thirty white-ribboners lost their homes. A collection for the purpose of starting a fund for headquarters there was taken at the National Convention. Mrs. Rose Peters has been reëlected president of the Newfoundland W. C. T. U.

Nearly all the girls out of 260 or more in the school taught by Mrs. Clark at Antananarivo, Madagascar, have signed the pledge against strong drink and tobacco, and a good number have also signed the one against impurity. An address is given once a month to remind the girls of their promise and to urge others to sign. In the school for little children, boys and girls, there is a temperance society and many have signed the pledge.

The union at Owen Sound, Ontario, Can., entertained ninety teachers by giving them a six o'clock tea. Five clergymen were present and a pleasant program of short speeches and music ensued. Some of the teachers received more temperance information than in all the previous years of their existence. Thought-inspiring and helpful literature was distributed, and the white-ribboners are hopefully anticipating the good results which are sure to follow.

Mrs. Love, former president of Victoria, Australia, W. C. T. U., writes: "I have just now received a letter from Miss Ackerman. She has done a wonderful work in the colonies, the crowning part of which is the organizing of the W. C. T. U. in West Australia. You will see from the paper which I send that she went with a deputation of fifty-five ladies before the Premier of the colony to ask for better protection for their homes, and those within their homes, against the drink traffic."

During the three months since her arrival in South Africa, Miss Alice Palmer has visited the sixteen organizations in existence at the time of her coming, and organized a Y at Port Elizabeth, where she spent two weeks attending the W. C. T. U. convention and the South African Temperance Alliance, which is organized of other societies, to promote temperance legislation. She has made fifty-five addresses, and visited seventeen towns, in some cases traveling all day and all night to reach her next appointment.

Another testimony to the good work of our round-the-world missionary is from the Good Templar Grand Lodge of Western Australia: "Miss Jessie Ackerman has been to our colony and the order has been benefited by her visit. We have had reports from other Grand Lodge jurisdictions in some of these far away countries bearing similar testimony. We are greatly pleased that one of your missionaries while laboring for your great organization finds time while traveling to assist a kindred organization. You have the best wishes of the management of the Good Templar Order for your continued success in your great work of trying to make the people of this world better."

WYOMING.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The tenth annual convention of Wyoming W. C. T. U. met at Laramie, October 25 and 26, in the First Methodist church, Miss Northup presiding. The auditorium was handsomely decorated with flowers, banners and pictures of Miss Willard, the Temple, the state presidents and others. Addresses of welcome were made by Mrs. Wilhelmina Brown and Rev. Chas. Rowe, and responded to by Mrs. Cory, of Cheyenne. We had a very good convention considering the distance apart our unions are, there being delegates from six unions and all the state officers being present. We greatly regretted the absence of our dear sisters in the northern part of the state. They sent many kind wishes. Devotional exercises the first morning were led by Miss Northup, the state president, after which followed the reports of the superintendents of departments.

The evening of the 25th, after devotional exercises, was occupied by the president's annual address, which was replete with good thoughts and plans of work for the ensuing year. After that the World's Petition was presented and signed by every one in the house. Wednesday morning, consecration exercises were led by Mrs. Wotring, of Rawlins, after which followed the report of the superintendent of Temple work, Miss Ella Bullock, of Saratoga; the total amount of money raised for the Temple by the state is ninety-two dollars. A lively discussion was started as to the best method of raising enough more to make one hundred, when our good Mrs. Brown offered, if she were excused an hour, to raise the remaining eight dollars by subscription. It was raised on time. Then followed the election of officers. The following were reëlected: President, Miss L. Annette Northup; corresponding secretary, Mrs. F. A. Jones; recording secretary, Miss S. Louise Ege; Mrs. E. S. Boyd declining reëlection, Mrs. Mary M. Sights was elected treasurer.

The treasurer reported sixty members, while the corresponding secretary reported 208, the difference, of course, being those who had not paid their dues. The treasurer received dues from several unions while the convention was in session. After the election of officers there followed the report of the corresponding secretary and then the appointment of the superintendents of departments. Mrs. Brown, of Laramie, was elected delegate to the National, at Denver, and Mrs. Wotring alternate.

Tuesday evening the convention was addressed by Rev. Mr. Chapman, of Oakland, California, who gave one of the best temperance lectures that we have ever heard. Wednesday evening, Rev. Mr. Oviatt, of Laramie, delivered an eloquent and spirited address, temperance of course being his theme. It did our hearts good to hear him, and we were much encouraged by his helpful words. Indeed, there seemed to be during the whole convention, something cheering and encouraging, making us feel as though we were going to do better work this year. The state flag was presented to Saratoga for greatest increase in membership. The next annual is to be held at Cheyenne. After close of the convention several of the delegates visited the penitentiary, which is situated at Laramie, and later a goodly number boarded the cars for Denver to attend the National.

Mrs. Blair, of Nebraska, and Miss Ida Clothier, of Colorado, have promised to visit our state and give a few lectures during the winter.

F. A. Jones,
State Reporter, Green River.

COLORADO.

CONVENTION AFTERMATH.

"Our guests we bade them welcome,
They bore the Master's name;
They came with deeds of kindness,
Not deeds of battle flame;
They scattered many blessings
Along their peaceful way,
And rays of golden sunlight" beamed most gloriously and continuously upon all who were privileged to attend the memorable National Convention in Denver. We stood as it were upon the mount of transfiguration, and felt inspired and encouraged by the eloquent words of our much loved leaders, Miss Willard and Lady Somerset. The first, whose words are a daily talisman, "I would make the world wider for woman, and happier for humanity," and the last, who said "His new commandment, that we love one another as He loved us," comes to us as a new revelation bidding us embrace the sorrowful, the sinful and the outcast with the outstretched arms of Him who gave His life for every storm-tossed soul." Who would not lead a better life and long for more consecration to the work for the Master along the line of the W. C. T. U.?

Friend and foe alike received a blessing from this "marshalling of the hosts" to the "queen city of the plains," and our pride, "The Silver State." For the four hundred delegates assembled and the success of the Convention the committee worked nobly and planned wisely, and the congratulations expressed and encomiums pronounced were appreciated, enabling all to forget the anxious moments and weariness of mind and body. With the joy, there was the tinge of sadness and heartfelt regret that our dear president, Mrs. Eva Higgins, was prostrated by sudden illness, and her genial face and loving presence were sadly missed in the Convention. Prayers will continue to ascend for her permanent restoration to health.

Our state was reported as numbering sixty-six unions, including the Y's, with a membership of 1,295. Money raised by local unions, $12,072.95; paid National, in dues and for other purposes, $278.

The Central union of Denver has removed to more commodious and attractive rooms in one of the largest blocks of the city, on the sixth floor. where the extended view of the noble "Rockies" and blue, blue skies are brighter and clearer than was ever viewed by mortal eye, and an endless inspiration, calling to mind—"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace" and "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help."

The varied departments of work are well sustained; the day nursery has cared for 862 children during the month. Of that number, 167 were received free of charge. The able superintendent of literature has distributed 1,722 papers and leaflets. In the Sunday-schools were secured 450 signatures to the pledge. A petition is being circulated to suppress the open bar on the grounds of the Denver Athletic Club, that is alluring the young men to paths of vice and destruction of body and soul.

Resolutions of sympathy and respect were sent to the family and friends of a co-laborer for humanity, whom Our Father called "up higher" since my last letter, Mrs. Frances Jacobs, a resident of Denver for many years and closely identified with the associated charities of the city. It was further resolved, "That when a home or hospital shall be built as an enduring memorial of her many virtues" that "means shall be contributed for its erection or furnishing."

The Highland union has accomplished great good with the press. One local paper has granted a column weekly for the past two years. Recently a series of sketches of some of our notable workers, Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Mesdames Woodbridge, Carse and others, written by different members of the union, have been most interesting.

Sarah Lee Teetor,
State Reporter, Denver.

NEWS ITEMS.

According to promise I report local news up to the date of state convention.

The name of Mary F. Shields can never be separated from the temperance work in Colorado, even though we were not reminded by memorials, yet the memorials as they arise here and there through the state impress the name and character of our first president on the minds and hearts of those who are indifferent to our cause. The Highland W. C. T. U., of West Denver, dedicated a fountain as a memorial of Mrs. Shields on September 7th, the plate bearing the inscription, "Erected by the Highland W. C. T. U. in memory of Mary F. Shields, the first president of Colorado W. C. T. U." A paper written by Mrs. C. D. H. Thompson on the life and character of Mrs. Shields formed the principal part of the program. The Highland Chief published a sketch of Mrs. Shields in the W. C. T. U. column. This column is conducted by Mrs. Anna S. Lee, a daughter of Mrs. Shields, who has done excellent work for the convention by having published sketches of "Women we Should Know," these being the leading characters of the National and World's W. C. T. U. "Thumb-nail Sketches," published by the W. T. P. A., are found convenient for ready reference.

Pueblo has four unions; the central Pueblo union carries on eleven departments of work. The Loyal Temperance Legion of the city numbers two hundred and thirty members, East Pueblo Legion being the largest, with one hundred and seven members. The Mesa union is raising funds for a building. The leading departments in Pueblo county are, the evangelistic, jail, prison and literature. Over 7,000 pages of literature have been distributed. The mission Sunday school numbers eighty-nine children, scarcely any of whom would otherwise attend any Sunday school. The Y. P. S. C. E. has assisted in teaching, and the rent of the room has been paid by subscription. The organ has been paid for during the year. The Woman's Exchange connected with the Central union of Pueblo is now out of debt and in a fair way to success.

At the last county convention held in the Mesa Baptist church, memorial services were held in honor of Madam Willard, and resolutions of sympathy were passed. At the close of the session plans were formed to organize a "Temperance Alliance" which was afterwards effected.

The lectures by Mrs. Lathrap, Mrs. Woodbridge, Dr. Mary Allen and Miss Henrietta Moore were highly appreciated, and will leave an enduring influence.

Mrs. Corbin, a princess among hostesses, entertained the W's and Y's of Fort Collins in a "Self-Denial Meeting," at which a social good time was enjoyed. Fort Collins has an L. T. L. of thirty members.

A new way of raising money was adopted by the West Denver W. C. T. U., by holding a "Baby Show," at which six babies contested for the prize of a silver set. The money raised was for the National Convention.

And now, dear sisters, I again say good-bye, having given as much time and thought as I could well spare to finish last year's work, rejoicing that Mrs. Teetor is again able to become your state reporter.

Elsie W. Chambers,
Colorado Springs.

MISSOURI.

ONWARD MOVEMENTS.

Roll on, O slow-wheeled years, and bring the day
When men shall gather wealth to give away;
And spring to help when tempted nature falls,
As when a builder drops from city walls;
When to do good alone men shall be bold,
And seek out suffering as they seek for gold.

One of the notable gatherings of the state was the meeting held in Kansas City, where Lady Henry Somerset addressed an immense audience. Miss Willard was not able to leave her room while in the city, having just come from the Denver convention overworked and tired out. While Lady Henry Somerset was expounding the truth from her standpoint, Mrs. A. S. Benjamin was teaching the women "how to expedite business," giving six parliamentary drills to fine classes. Her instruction in this state has brought the W. C. T. U. of Missouri to a good business management of all their conventions.

The many white-ribboners of the state will regret to learn of the death of "Mother" Phillips, our oldest white-ribbon sister in the state. She was the mother of Rose Phillips and Dr. Bessie Cushman, and has gone to join the triumphant throng in a better land. Our beloved Mrs. Belle Kimball has also been called to mourn. Her son, twenty-two years of age, answered to the Master's call. Our hearts go out in sympathy for these friends and sisters.

In the first district some weeks ago much work was done by Miss Clara Parrish; several new unions were organized and many new members were added to the list. She attended two county conventions and wherever she went endeared herself to those who heard her. Memphis held a parlor meeting with about sixty invited guests and several new members were added to their union.

The Emerson union, located in the country, held an entertainment which netted them fifty-six dollars. Other country unions should go and "do likewise." At Shelbyville they are energetically at work and a series of gospel temperance meetings are being arranged for.

Excelsior Springs has no saloons and our W. C. T. U. women wish they had no whisky drugstore. They have had some excellent lectures. Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason spoke against the use of narcotics to a full house. This town is much interested in medal contest work and is arranging for its fifth medal contest.

Pike county held a very enthusiastic convention at Clarksville. Among the decorations were pictures of our esteemed president, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset. The teachers in the public school asked that some of our W. C. T. U. workers come to the school and pledge the scholars. This invitation was accepted and we wish every public school could boast of as progressive teachers. A new union at Frankford of nine members and a promising Y at New London were organized by Miss Parrish.

Ralls county has just been organized with Mrs. S. Glascock county president. An interesting county convention was held at New London and ten new members joined our ranks. A medal contest was held at the close of the convention, the medal being won by Miss Mollie Johnson. Ten new subscribers were secured for The Union Signal and about as many for The Home Guard.

A most enjoyable convention was held in Kansas City at the First Baptist church not long since by the presidents of the twelfth and thirteenth districts. Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason spoke on the subject of "Narcotics." A clear, concise statement of facts was presented in a charming manner, and was listened to with marked attention. Mrs. Frances Barnes gave a fine lecture and all who heard her were interested in the great work among the young people. Excellent reports were listened to. Mrs. M. E. Golliday's address was highly appreciated as she spoke hopeful, cheering words to her women and urged them to be faithful workers. Madam Loyson, of Paris, France, was introduced and spoke in a pleasing manner. Mrs. Ducher's paper on "Relation of church members to the Liquor Traffic" was one of rare merit. Mrs. A. A. Hawley was elected president of the twelfth district. This was a most successful and harmonious convention.

Two new unions have been organized in the twenty-fourth district, one a colored union in Springfield of several members and a Y of twenty-six members at Stockton, with Mrs. Jean Jackson as president. This is a promising Y, and when we hold our district conference we hope to

(To be continued on page 15.)

Our Library Table.

The Texas Blue Violet is the organ of the Texas Loyal Temperance Legion, and naively announces itself as a "really, truly temperance paper." It is edited by Norma L. Mow, at Dallas. With Wisconsin the proud owner of the first state L. T. L. convention, and Texas that of the first L. T. L. paper, this young relative of the great, world wide W. C. T. U. has a fair show for future greatness. God bless the children!

Wives and Daughters is a Canadian monthly journal, "devoted to the interests of a woman." That is a wide devotion, but the paper seems fully able to meet all demands. Under the editorship of Mrs. John Cameron and Miss Ethelwyn Wetherald it presents clear, attractive pages and a wholesome, satisfying bill of fare. An editorial in a recent number, entitled "Our Platform," is an honest statement of a creed at once broad and sharply defined, one to which wives and daughters can without fear or doubt say a positive "Amen."

418 Richmond St., London, Ontario.

Pentecost's Bible Studies for 1893, by Geo. F. Pentecost, D. D. This volume comprehends the International Sunday School Lessons, for the use not only of Bible student but teacher, superintendent and pastor. Spiritual insight, together with a vigorous grasp of eternal truths, and a fine power of presentation, are the marked characteristics of the author of these lessons. They are full of refreshment and help. All who have heard Dr. Pentecost speak will give this book a warm reception and find it not lacking in those things which have given the author such a hold upon his audiences.

S. L. Sayles & Co., 175 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Monica, The Mesa Maiden, is a touching and thrilling story from the pen of Mrs. Evelyn Raymond, the author of "Mixed Pickles." It is a tale of Spanish life in Southern California with just a touch of the languor of that sunny clime, a languor, however, that speedily vanishes when questions of honor or the welfare of its people are at issue. Monica, the heroine, is a beautiful creation, but perhaps the most engaging character is that of Benito, a helpless cripple, whose deformed body holds as pure and brave a spirit as ever dwelt with the knights of ancient lore. The simplicity of the story is one of its chief charms.

T. Y. Crowell & Co., Boston and New York.

Dorothy Q. is one of Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s choice publications, and claims as its author, Oliver Wendell Holmes. The book also contains his "Ballad of the Boston Tea-Party," and "Grandmother's Story of Bunker Hill Battle." "Dorothy Q." was an ancestress of Dr. Holmes, and a daughter of Edmund Quincy, the poem being addressed to her portrait. The titles of the other two poems speak for themselves, and all three are among the most popular Dr. Holmes has ever written. This volume is perhaps as perfect in every feature as any book that will enter the competition of holiday trade. Howard Pyle has exercised rare artistic taste in the illustrations of Colonial and Revolutionary life, and these, together with choice paper and elegant binding, leave nothing to be desired.

The Congregationalist has changed its form somewhat, appearing now as a magazine, nine by thirteen inches, a shape convenient to handle, and easy to preserve. This paper, ever abreast of the times, is particularly fine in its Thanksgiving number. Among the most noteworthy articles are, "The Ethics of Accumulation," the second paper on this subject by President E. B. Andrews, Brown University, handled in a broad-minded, Christian manner which recommends itself to even critical readers. "Brightening Skies in Utah," is by Edward A. Benner, and gives reasonable hope that this blot upon the nation's fair fame is in the process of being at no distant time forever effaced. "The Persecuted 'Stundists'," by Rev. Benjamin Labarre, calls attention to a class of persecuted Russians who "represent a spiritual revival in the Russian church which carries with it all that is dearest and noblest to the heart of evangelical Christendom."

PAMPHLETS RECEIVED.

The World's Fair and its Relation to the Brotherhood of Man, by W. E. Bonney, Cherryvale, Kansas.

An Elect Lady and Margery Rae, by Mary McD. Santley, Ashtabula, O.

Glimpses of the West, by Mrs. W. Bent Wilson, Lafayette, Ind.

Why Hygienic Congresses Fail, by Dr. Elizabeth Blackwell, London, Eng.

Road Making as a Branch of Instruction in Colleges, Albert A. Pope, Boston, Mass.

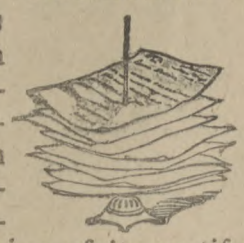
The Betterment of Our Highways, by Prof. Nathaniel Southgate Shaler.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

Valued Indorsement



of Scott's Emulsion is contained in letters from the medical profession speaking of its gratifying results in their practice.

Scott's Emulsion

of cod-liver oil with Hypophosphites can be administered when plain oil is out of the question. It is almost as palatable as milk—easier to digest than milk.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

WOMAN'S CANNING & PRESERVING CO.

MAKERS OF CHOICE PUDDINGS, LUNCH TONGUES, FRUIT PRESERVES AND GENERAL CANNED GOODS.

All put up by competent women. Neatness and care exercised, insuring a perfect product.

Our business is "woman's work for women;" we supply table necessities and luxuries ready for use.

Secure our price list (sent free to any address) before making purchases. It is a revelation.

Our stockholders are requested to insist upon having our goods. By so doing they will further their own financial interests, by increasing the demand for our products, and at the same time secure the best in the market.

Woman's Canning and Preserving Co.,
19 Michigan Avenue, CHICAGO, ILL.

Reduced from $2.00 to $1.00 a year.

RURAL NEW-YORKER

For 42 years the foremost agricultural newspaper, it will, in 1893, be better, livelier, brighter, more practical, more valuable than ever.

$10,000

$5,000 in cash and "special" premiums, to be given to subscribers only for work performed; $5,000 in new seeds and plants for all subscribers, not otherwise obtainable. Only $1.00 a year.

Send for free specimen copy.

The Rural Publishing Co., Times Bldg, N. Y.

NEW MAGIC LANTERN

STEREOPTICONS AND LANTERN SLIDES

For Amateurs, Public Lectures, and the Home Circle. PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENTS ARE PROFITABLE. J. B. COLT & CO., manfrs., 16 Beekman St., New York 189 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. Mention this paper.

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

DON'T BE CHEATED!
ALL GOOD SENSE CORSET WAISTS
Have Clamp Buckle at hip for Hose Supporter.

Agents Wanted — Save Half On New BICYCLES

A $25 cycle for $12; others as low. Largest & oldest dealers in the U. S. We sell everywhere. Easy payments if desired. Cata. free. ROUSE, HAZARD & CO. 77 G St., PEORIA, ILL.

AGENT made $71 in four days, selling my Electric Corsets, Belts, Brushes, Rings. 100 per ct profit Cash Prizes. Samples free. DR. BRIDGMAN, B'way, N. Y.

Barry's Tricopherous for the hair and skin. Druggists or by mail 50 cents. H. Barry Co., N. Y.

Publisher's Notes.

SPECIAL.

In addition to the long list of attractive Christmas goods we have to report the following specialties:

For Teachers: Fine new booklets in boxes 12 in box at 50 cents per box.

The following additions to 15c booklets:

Christmas and New Year's Greetings in lovely jeweled booklets with silver cord and tassels.

WINGS OF GLORY, by Margaret Haycraft, a wing-shaped booklet, illustrated, very nice.

A fine line of 20c. booklets:

LOOK UP: Specially adapted to King's Daughters, finely illustrated, pansies and ferns on cover.

SONGSTERS OF THE AIR: Illustrated. Cover: Marguerites and verbenas in relief.

CHRISTMAS GREETING, brilliantly illumi nated. Cover: bells, etc., in relief.

THE DEATH OF THE FLOWERS, very nice. Illustrated. Cover: flowers, ivy and bells in relief.

GOLDEN AFTERNOON, a compilation of poems suitable for gift to older people. Illustrations, monotint. Cover: white; design, red and gold.

SNOW BLOOM, by Lucy Larcom. A com pilation of seasonable poems. Cover: white and gilt embossed.

For 25 cents:

HOME, SWEET HOME, a house shaped booklet, 16-pages. Illustrations, poem, music, etc.

A harp shaped booklet containing words and music of the Last Rose of Summer, March of the Men of Harlock, Auld Lang Syne, Home, Sweet Home and four illuminated pages.

For 75 Cents:

CHRISTMAS LIGHTS, a book 6¾x7½ inches, exquisite in design and execution. Board covers. Beautiful illustrations.

Send orders for all Christmas goods to.
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

See 1st page for more extended description.

Of our new subscription book, Philip D. Armour, so well known everywhere, says:

"I am very much impressed with the pen pictures presented in 'The Junior Partners.' This book cannot but have a good impression on those who read it.

"Yours truly,
"PHILIP D. ARMOUR."

This book was written especially to reach business men, and, properly handled, must have a large sale.

Agents wanted everywhere.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

While we were at Denver, the Bible Reading by Lady Henry Somerset and the Monthly Reading by Miss Willard were issued, and no mention was made of them. The mere statement that they are ready will cause a great demand for them. In ordering, give us plenty of time.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A DEFENSE OF THE JERICHO ROBBERS.

Do you want a pleasing satire?

Do you want an argument which is not in the form of an argument against high license?

Do you want the attitude of license men toward the liquor traffic portrayed with power?

Then send for

A Defense of the Jericho Robbers

and learn how the types of the saloon men of to day were defended before the court of the Sanhedrim. How the parties to the cause, Achan Sneakthief, Ishmael Bacchus, Cain Adam, Haman Hangman, Demetrius Silversmith, Herman Gambrinus, Isaac Longface, Simon Barabbas, Democritus Balaam, Ahab Dives, Esau Soddom, Simon Magus and Levi Priest argued the case, and a committee was appointed to report a plan of action and a bill was framed entitled:

An Act to legalize and regulate the business of stealing, robbing and murdering between Jerusalem and Jericho.

It will do much good wherever read.

Price 20 cents.

Address

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

FOR SALE.—Four shares of W. T. P. A. tock. Address Mrs. J. L. Stiles, 312 South 18th St., Lincoln, Neb.

Money for Sale!

The World's Fair Directors

Have 5,000,000 Souvenir Half Dollar Coins in their treasury, the gift of the American people by Act of Congress. The patriotic and historic features of these Coins and their limited number, compared with the millions who want them—our population is 66,000,000—have combined to create so great a demand for these World's Fair Souvenir Coins that they are already quoted at large premiums. Liberal offers from speculators, who wish to absorb them and reap enormous profits, have been rejected for the reason that

This is the People's Fair==
We Are the People's Servants== and a divided sense of duty confronts us—

We need $5,000,000 to fully carry out our announced plans, and

We have decided to deal direct with the people---
To whom we are directly responsible---among whom an equitable distribution of these National heirlooms should be made.

The World's Fair Offer to the American People:

That none of our plans for the people's profit be curtailed we must realize from the sale of 5,000,000 Souvenir World's Fair Fifty-cent Silver Coins the sum of $5,000,000. This means $1.00 for each Coin, a much smaller sum than the people would have to pay for them if purchased through an indirect medium. Every patriotic man, woman and child should endeavor to own and cherish one of these Coins, as they will be valuable in fnture years—a cherished object of family pride.

Remember that only 5,000,000 Coins must be divided among 66,000,000 people. These Coins could be sold at a high premium to Syndicates, but we have enough confidence in the people to keep the price at a Dollar for each Coin, as this will make us realize $5,000,000—the sum needed to open the Fair's gates on the people's broad plan.

World's Fair Souvenir Coin for a Dollar.

How to Get The Coins Go to your nearest Bank and subscribe for as many coins as you need for your family and friends. These Sub-Agents of the World's Columbian Exposition will give you their receipt for your money, as delivery of these coins will not begin before December. There is no expense to you attending the distribution of the Souvenir Coins, as we send them to your local bank. If for any reason it is inconvenient for you to subscribe send Postoffice or Express Money Order or Registered Letter for as many coins as you wish with instructions how to send them to you, to

TREASURER WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.
CHICAGO, ILLS.

Orders will be Filled in the Order in which they are Received.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY
or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical [illegible] Pencil. Agents making $50 per week.

THE LITTLE BELL IN THE HEART.

My heart keeps knocking all the day!
What does it mean? What would it say?
My heart keeps knocking all the night!
Child, hast thou thought of this aright?
So long it has knocked, now loud, now low;
Hast thou thought what it means by knocking so?

My child, 'tis a lively little bell,
The dear God's gift, who loves thee well.
On the door of the soul by Him 'tis hung,
And by His hand it still is rung;
And He stands without and waits to see Whether within He will welcome be;
And still keeps knocking, in hopes to win
The welcome answer: "Come in! Come in!"

So knocks thy heart now, day by day,
And when its strokes have died away,
And all its knockings on earth are o'er,
It will knock itself at heaven's door,
And stand without and wait to see Whether within it will welcome be,
And hear Him say, "Come, dearest guest!
I found in thy bosom a holy rest.
As thou hast done, be it done to thee:
Come into the joys of eternity!"

—From the German.

O INE SAN.

BY ADELAIDE DAUGHADAY.

O Ine* San was the daughter of an idol maker in Tokio. As "that great city" is one of the strongholds of superstition he did a thriving business, and so could afford to have a comfortable home and send his little daughter to school.

By "comfortable home" perhaps you will at once picture to yourself a house of many rooms with pretty furniture in it. Tastes differ, and I have no doubt Ine thought her own far better than the one your imagination presents. Ine's home had two small rooms besides the kitchen which were thrown into one room by day, and by sliding paper partitions converted into separate apartments at night. If I tell you that the family almost always occupied the front part of the house you will exclaim, "That is right; keep the best for the home people and give the second best to company." But the Japanese invariably give the best to their guests. You must know on this side of the world most things are the reverse of the order on the opposite side. For instance, when Japanese boys and girls read a book they begin at the back and read toward the front, and read down the page instead of across; and so as Japanese houses open directly on the streets where there are no trees, sidewalks or pavement, and where the various noises of trade, traffic and of passing vehicles, and of children at play make an incessant din, the room farthest removed from the street and opening upon the little garden which is in the rear of every house is the reception room.

When we call upon our Japanese friends, in response to our "gomen nasai," (please excuse me) the barred street door is slipped back and we are invited to enter. We are conducted through the apartments where the various household occupations are in progress, to the extreme rear; not until seated there on the matted floor do the formal salutations begin. Like the other rooms this one has no furniture, but a little recess on one side contains a scroll picture hanging from ceiling to floor, and a tiny table on which is a potted plant or a vase of flowers. We are invited to sit on the soft straw mats, food served on trays is eaten on the same, while heavily wadded quilts are brought out from closets that are parts of the same apartment (hidden by sliding paper doors that are sometimes very prettily painted), and are spread on the floor at night and form for those accustomed to them very comfortable beds.

The tiny gardens are a peculiar institution of Japan. Generally they are only a few feet square, but are so arranged that they seem much larger, for they are really "much in little." O Ine San's might be taken as a typical one, although those of wealthy people are larger. A little mound in the form of a truncated cone represented "Fujisan, the peerless," quartz pebbles at the top imitated the ice and snow that are almost perpetual. At the base of this "mountain" a small stone bridge spanned the dry, pebbly bed of what was to be imagined as a brook, while one tree of medium height overtopped not only many dwarfed trees in pots, but Fuji itself. Years ago I remember reading that the people of Japan take their trees into the house cold nights, and during severe storms. Be that as it may, it would be a quick and easy matter to carry inside the potted palms, pines and plum trees at short notice, as they are ridiculously small. There was no grass in this garden. A stone lantern about four feet high stood at one side, and stones of irregular size and shape were laid on the ground to step on. The principal feature of this garden was a large stone fox on a pedestal. The gods and goddesses are supposed to be attended by certain animals that are their messengers; thus the fox is the attendant of "Inari Sama," the rice god, and so is worshiped as its representative. As the god of rice was the tutelary deity of this family, that may have been the reason for naming their first-born Ine (rice).

When Ine was old enough one of her regular duties was to place fresh offerings before this idol, and she was taught to clap her hands and worship it each day with her parents.

We were once given a feast by O Ine San's parents, and were filled with admiration for the lacquer tray-tables, tiny, covered lacquer bowls, and the quiet, dainty manner of serving. We were seated on three sides of a hollow square, in the center of which sat one waitress at the tea-tray, while another ladled out the steaming rice from a wooden tub. What shall I say about the food? A great deal of it was neither "fish, fowl, nor good red herring." We ate, or rather drank, the watery soup in which was the large eye of a fish floating about, looking quite at home in its native element; we speared the rings of young bamboo with our chop-sticks; did our duty by the lotus roots; enjoyed the excellent rice and fish, but the pickled daikon (radish), well—the enchantment increases with the distance.

Ine was a happy, roly-poly little girl, and why should she not have been happy, for both father and mother, after they had got over the great disappointment because she was not a boy, accepted the inevitable with a good grace, and were very fond of her. There was also the baby sister, O Tatsu San (Miss Dragon). She was usually tied on the back of her nurse, and spent most of her time in the street. When the child-nurse played "tag" with other children, Tatsu, with her head bobbing up and down, laughed and enjoyed the fun; but sometimes the string of the wooden getâ (clog) would break, or the ankle of the nurse would turn, and both get a fall. But these ups and downs were not the only trials that Baby Tatsu suffered. Her eyes, never strong, and exposed to the glare of the sun, as with head thrown back she was carried back and forth in the treeless street, became diseased, and so, little by little, the poor child became blind.

O Ine San's mother, like so many Japanese women, was a model of gentle courtesy and patience. Her father, having nothing to vex him, as the whole household made it the business of their lives to study the wishes and minister to the pleasure of the danna san (master), was an affable, good-tempered man. So her childhood passed quickly and happily, her only trials being the lessons at school on the numeral frame, and the great, square, many-lined characters, syllables, not letters, both Japanese and Chinese, that racked her poor little brain.

The greatest event of her early life was a pilgrimage with her parents to the great shrines of Ise. These are famous Shinto places of worship. If her father had been asked, "Are you a Buddhist or a Shintoist?" he would scarcely have known what to reply, as in common with most people of his station in life, his knowledge of the distinctive points of either was of the vaguest kind, but wishing to be on the safe side, he worshiped at any and every fane that came in his way. As an idol-maker and the son of an idol-maker, he should properly have been a Buddhist, for the pure Shinto faith has no gods; but Buddhism and Shintoism are woefully mixed in this country, idols often being seen in Shinto temples. Shintoism is called the national religion of Japan, but it is really, simply ancestral worship, and its temples often mere gateways set in large groves.

(To be continued.)

* Ine, pronounced e-na.

LITTLE Clifford, when he saw for the first time the new moon, cried out: "Oh, grandma, here's a cut moon! I wonder who cut it!"

"LUCK" and "labor" both begin with the same letter, but end with very different results. "Luck" is ever waiting for "something to turn up;" "labor," with keen eye and strong will, bravely turns up "something." "Luck" lies in bed and wishes that the postman would bring him news of a legacy; "labor" turns out at six o'clock, and with busy pen or ringing hammer lays the foundation of a competence. "Luck" whines, "labor" whistles; "luck" relies on chance, "labor" on character; "luck" slips downward to indigence, "labor" strides up to independence.—India's Young Folks.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—The happy holiday time is very near now. About two weeks after you read this letter it will be Christmas day which comes on Sunday this year and so will be celebrated Saturday and Monday too. What a splendid chance for Christmas work for others! During these extra days we can spread the holiday cheer all about us. Let us try! You and I.

I spoke of plans for making others happy on Christmas day. Somebody has since handed me this notice:

The boys and girls can make it a merry Christmas for the boys and girls in Bethany school, by sending old dolls and toys and some candy. Address Mrs. N. A. Ruth rford, (teacher among Freedmen), Lumberton, North Car lina.

There are schools and homes, too, close at hand where we can give help and cheer for the holiday time. And there's a secret that I'm going to tell you here and now,—nothing in the world will make us quite so happy as to have made some one else happy!

Aunt Jane

I write to tell you of the translation of one of your girls, my daughter, Vera C. Main, almost thirteen years old, who died of diphtheria November 10. She loved your Cozy Corner and we always read it carefully. She was saving Christmas money, and since she died her classmates have added to it. I will give it to the Temple, for she was greatly interested in its success. Tell your boys and girls of the faithful, loving life and tell them to be also ready to go when the Saviour calls. With love,

Sioux City, Iowa. MRS. M. Z. C. MAIN.

Only once before has the Cozy Corner received word of the passing away of one of our circle. Little Frank Wilbur, of Pierce, S. D., was only ten years old when he left this earth last August. He had filled a mite box for the Temple which his mother sent, adding to it the other change that he had. God, who alone knows why these dear ones left so soon, will comfort the sad parents. We send them our warmest sympathy.

I am seven years old and have been an L. T. L. boy two years. When I am a man I won't use tobacco nor drink.

Rockland, Me. S. PERL SAWYER.

I hope you will stand fast to that good resolution, little nephew. You will have many temptations to break it. We all send love to you.

This is the first time I ever tried to write to a paper. I am eleven years old and I belong to the L. T. L. My teacher wanted me to try this game in the Cozy Corner in THE UNION SIGNAL and I told her I would try.

CLARENCE MITCHELL.

Star P. O., Ada Co., Idaho.

We are glad to hear from you, Clarence. The sentence you send is too broken, however. Won't you try again?

I belong to the L. T. L. and would like to join your circle if there is room. ETHEL DARLINGTON.

Morristown, Tenn.

There's always room in our circle, and a member of the L. T. L. never knocks in vain.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

126.

ACROSTICAL DECAPITATIONS.

Behead and curtail: 1, Not to sit and leave to color. 2, Paradise and leave a trough. 3, Begging and leave flesh. 4, Famed and leave at this time. 5, Optics and leave you. 6, Closes and leave a cabin. 7, To beg and leave a meadow. 8, Ground and leave talent. 9, A continent and leave a tone. 10, To ascend and leave to be. 11, A point of the compass and leave a conjunction.

The beheaded letters will form the name of the father of English literature. ALMON KNOWLES.

127.

DROP LETTER PUZZLE.

-o-g-d-n-h-m-a-d-a-i-e-a-d. FANNIE KETTLEWELL.

128.

PECULIAR WORD SQUARE.

1, A genus of trees, including the maple. 2, A village in Tuscola county, Mich. 3, Mistakes. 4, Beautiful flower. The first and the last word read together form a word meaning "chaffy." SOLON.

129.

PROVERB PI.

1, A glornil netso hegstar on osms. 2, Presa eth dor dan plosi hte hldci. MYSIE W. ADAMS.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED NOVEMBER 10.

119. Prohibition. Pro high by shun.

120. Temple.

121. Chasten, haste. Cloudy, loud. Palms, alms. Climb, limb. Sliver, liver.

Correct answers: Fannie Kettlewell, Vida Irene Thompson, Ora Palmer.

(Continued from page 12.)

have the Y's largely represented. Miss Lillian Wood lectured in this district to large audiences at Bolivar, Buffalo, Fairplay, Humansville, and organized the Y at Stockton. Wherever she lectured her audiences were charmed with her Christian manner of presenting our cause.

The colored people of Springfield, thank Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason and Mrs. Allen for the excellent work done for them, and this temperance union of colored women is hoping to do good work for the "Master."

Springfield has been thoroughly awakened to the necessity of work in the narcotic department since Mrs. Gleason's lectures. This city is doing its utmost to have scientific temperance instruction thoroughly taught in its schools. The workers in the twenty-fourth district are sorry to lose from their midst our state evangelist, Mrs. Rebecca Hall, but our loss will be others' gain, we trust. Mrs. Hall was also president of the Stockton union, which has been one of the best unions in the district. This union has recently paid $28 toward their one hundred dollar pledge for the Temperance Temple.

At Bolivar they are doing all that they can to make the coming district conference, which will be held in that city December 20 and 21, a success. The gospel temperance meetings, which were started over a year ago, are still held each month, and are largely attended. The L. T. L. is in a flourishing condition. A series of receptions will be given by the white ribboners each month in addition to the regular weekly meeting. The first of these receptions will be held at the home of our state recording secretary, Mrs. Kate Newton, on Friday afternoon. An informal luncheon was held at the home of Mrs. Bronson, and all present were entertained by listening to a report of the Denver Convention by Mrs. Newton.

All our workers are glad that our president, Mrs. Hoffman, can be with us more this year than for the past two years and we are expecting this to be a red letter year for this state and our cause.

Worth county convention was attended by a large number of earnest, enthusiastic women. Reports showed that unions of promise had been organized by Mrs. J. H. Clark, at Allendale, Denver, Fairview and Sheridan. Several departments of work were taken up. Mrs. J. Clark gave a very interesting lecture. The annihilation of the liquor power and equal suffrage, as a means to this end, is the white-ribbon gospel she advocates with earnestness and tact.

MRS. MARY E. JONES,
State Reporter, Humansville.

Official Communications.

DEPARTMENT OF LITERATURE.

To State Superintendents:

In order to do better work, officers of unions need to fully realize that this department of literature lays foundations upon which every other department may build. "How shall they believe unless they hear?" is just as pertinent now as when first uttered, and what men hear through the eye makes the most abiding impression. Do you want to inaugurate a prohibitory campaign? Scatter literature. A campaign for scientific temperance instruction? Scatter literature. A suffrage campaign? Scatter literature. Does your church use fermented wine? Send leaflets on that subject to ministers and officers. Do you want temperance instruction in Sunday-schools? Introduce The Young Crusader and Sunday-school temperance lesson. So with all other departments. How can they do effective work without the printed page? All should therefore unite in securing an increased interest in and an effort to make more effective this pervasive department. For want of mental food which can be obtained in no other way, local unions starve to death. Point out a discouraged, despondent, weak, dying union, and I will show you one that is starving. The 235,000,000 pages sent out from our official publishing house should be doubled this year, and will be if all do their duty.

From reports before me I have learned of conditions in local unions which can but result in inertia and death. One union of more than 200 members takes twelve copies of the official organ. What do the other members have to inspire them, to energize their efforts? Another union of twenty nine has twenty-seven members who do not read THE UNION SIGNAL; one of twenty-one members has three who are sufficiently interested to subscribe for it, etc. These are not exceptional cases. A large proportion of W. C. T. U. members are not workers, because they have not learned how to work; because they do not know the plans of the leaders. State, district, county and local presidents should make it their first duty to secure a wide-awake, intelligent working membership, well equipped with tools and well informed as to their use—such tools being our papers and our leaflets. The records of every local and state union would then encourage workers to increased efforts, and the result of their labors would be more than can now be estimated. Let us then unite in an effort to place THE UNION SIGNAL for educational purposes in the hands of every member of the W. C. T. U.

No money? True. But why? Can you not have enough for this work? You would be glad to have it, but how can you secure it. Your National superintendent begs leave to offer two suggestions:

1. The use of the literature fund card. This card can be placed in the hands of every member of every union. It asks that friends of the cause contribute ten cents for a literature fund, and has a place for the names and amounts so donated. The National superintendent will send all the cards you can use and asks in return that ten per cent of the amount donated be sent to the National treasurer for the use of the National superintendent. If states would adopt this method and provide that local unions could have a reasonable proportion of the amount raised, all unions, state, local, national, would be able to largely increase their efforts, and every department would be invigorated. Men and women in every community not identified with our work would gladly give a dime occasionally for this purpose, and large sums in the aggregate would be gathered together. The state superintendent in Illinois gathered $38.60 in a few weeks, almost without effort.

2. The use of the W. C. T. U. fountain. By securing this fountain and operating it according to instructions, you can make money for your work. Full particulars will be given to any interested on application.

This year an especial opportunity is offered, and all along the line from local to World's W. C. T. U., a united effort should be made to utilize the great international Exposition for the advancement of our principles.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

1. Raise a fund. Use one or both of the plans outlined above.

2. Educate every member to read THE UNION SIGNAL, that they may become intelligent regarding plans and willing to execute them.

3. Keep on hand in every union bound sets of leaflets from which to make selections for local use.

4. Scatter literature widely, but wisely. Use discrimination that it be made to tell.

5. Keep accurate records, whether you secure it through state superintendents or directly from the publisher. Keep an accurate record of all you use, its character and the date of its use.

6. Give full reports, that the harvest may encourage greater effort.

Respectfully submitted,
F. H. RASTALL.
National Superintendent Literature.
The Temple, Chicago.

THAT TOBACCO PETITION.

At the last National Convention it was decided to send a protest and petition to George Pullman and W. Seward Webb, owners of palace cars, this petition to be signed by the general officers of the National and general officers of the States. This petition will be sent to the officers who have not signed them. Some have signed only one petition. Now we want a great petition, signed by every W. C. T. U. woman.

To W. Seward Webb, Esq. (or George Pullman, Esq.) of Palace Car Co.:

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union makes earnest plea that women paying full fare on palace cars may not be subjected day and night to the poisonous fumes of tobacco, which cause untold sickness and suffering to many. They believe your sense of justice will impel you to care equally for the comfort of women as of men. We therefore pray you to abolish the smoking compartment on the palace car.

Please cut out the petition as given above and paste it upon paper and circulate. The petitions may be copied on paper, or you may send to me for them. Please get all societies of women to indorse this protest, changing the name of our society for that of theirs.

Remember these things, please: Every person must sign two petitions, using ink if possible. The paper containing the petition and names must be just nine inches wide. This work must be done at once, so that the popular petition can very soon follow the one signed by our officers. Head one petition, "George Pullman, Esq.," and the other, "W. Seward Webb."

MRS. E. B. INGALLS,
Nat. Supt. Dept. of Narcotics, W. C. T. U.
4119 Westminster Pl.

SOCIAL DEPARTMENT.

PARLOR MEETINGS.

"Try parlor meetings!" This is the opening sentence of one of our state superintendents of this department, in her annual leaflet, and as it is the burden of our cry to you, we open this appeal in the same manner. Many unions are discouraged and mourn over the fact that old members have waxed indifferent, and new ones do not put in an appearance. My sisters, try parlor meetings! In making out our National report the cheering fact appeared that many unions had increased their membership largely through this important arm of the service. Another wise suggestion: "The means must be adapted to the end. To interest, we must be interesting. To captivate, we must be captivating. To instruct, we must be instructive."

One dear woman writes of a parlor meeting which occupied afternoon and evening, the Loyal Legioners taking the first hours and entertaining their friends, whom they had invited, with singing, recitations, etc. The Y's presided at a supper, to which all were invited, at twenty-five cents apiece (the supper being donated), and in the evening the W. C. T. U. were the hostesses, and gave a fine entertainment consisting of music and an address from a bright speaker. The invitations were written, flowers were on hand, tables were prettily arranged, a good sum was put into the treasury of the union and new members, honorary and otherwise, were added to the working force; and all this for a union which had been heartsick and discouraged. We would earnestly commend this department, and our, suggestions to the Y's, having learned of grand results in this direction.

The W. C. T. U. women talk of the extreme necessity of getting our work into the hands of the best and most cultivated women of our land, in order to reach all homes and enthuse the churches, and yet fail to adopt the methods which are calculated to bring about just such results. Tired workers are oftentimes discouraged by the slow progress of reforms, but tact and perseverance will remove mountains of difficulty. Three meetings at least should be held annually in each local union. Never neglect having the pledge book on hand and white ribbon cut in proper lengths.

Intemperance is the enemy of our homes, but many society women are ignorant of this fact, and unawares are helping this enemy. A judiciously conducted parlor meeting will often cause an "arrest of thought" in such unthinking hearts. There are thousands of women in the United States who would gladly help in our work, if once aroused to its importance.

Invite (by card or otherwise) to the parlor of some prominent and well-known lady, those outside of the work whom you desire to influence, with just enough of the W. C. T. U. element to prevent stiffness. Let the occasion be of a social nature; invite a W. C. T. U. woman to give a Bible reading, or a bright talk on points which you desire to bring out, and allow questions to be freely asked. Papers explaining our methods of work would be very instructive. A question box gives zest to the occasion. A slight collation may be served, although this is not really necessary. Another bright superintendent in writing of this point, however, says, "A dish of cream and a slice of cake will perhaps carry down an otherwise unpalatable pill, and there may enter with a sandwich and cup of coffee, much that would otherwise never be swallowed."

"The Lord will deliver Sisera into the hands of a woman." Oh, then let us do our part to have the Sisera of strong drink overthrown by the true, earnest, cultivated women of the church of the living God. They will never know their power till they see the situation and their God-given opportunities. That this department, so well calculated to show forth our many-sided work, may be pressed vigorously this coming year, is our desire.

ANNA M. HAMMER, Nat. Supt.
MARY D. TOMLINSON, National Associate.

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

TO SEPTEMBER 24, 1892.

California—San Francisco: Ellen Dornett, $1.

Carolina, North—State W. C. T. U.: $16.50; Randleman: Mrs. Ida M. Vickery, $10.

Colorado—Idaho Spring: W. C. T. U., $10; Salida: W. C. T. U., $6.86; Cherub Band: $10; Greeley: W. C. T. U., fifty cents; Denver: Central W. C. T. U., $57.57; Gold Hill: W. C. T. U., fifty cents; Northern District Convention, $8; Lake City: Class No. 2, First Baptist church, $2.

Connecticut—Higgamun: King's Daughters, $2.75.

Dakota, North—Drayton: Y. W. C. T. U., $12.17; East Pierre: Per Mrs. M. J. Stevens, $3.33.

Dakota, South—Sioux Falls: W. C. T. U., $30.

Georgia—Marietta: Per Mrs. W. H. Fox, $5.

Illinois—Englewood: per Mrs. Huntley, $4.55; Miss Kollock, $5; Mendon: W. C. T. U., $10; Lena: Baby Band, $5; Swan Creek: W. C. T. U., $8; Dundee: W. C. T. U., $2.73; Y. W. C. T. U., $4; Evanston: Mrs. Geo. Keys, $5.50; Gillespie: Y. W. C. T. U., $1; Neponset: W. C. T. U., $10; Grand Crossing: W. C. T. U., $15; Jerseyville: W. C. T. U., $25; Carlinville: Baby Band, $5.30; Shannon: Mrs. Dr. Smith, $5; Pana: W. C. T. U., $25; Hazel Dell: W. C. T. U., $1; El Dorado: W. C. T. U., $1; Bloomington: a friend, $1; Bone Gap: Mina Gould, $3; Elburn: W. C. T. U., $3.70; Utica: Mrs. W. N. Smith, $1; Rockford: Social Temple, $15; Davis Junction: Baby Band, $6.10.

Indiana—Bedford: Mrs. Sarah Franklin, $2; Wabash: W. C. T. U., $7; Centerville: J. D. Spahr, $100.

Iowa—Dows: Baby Band, $10.30; New Providence: Mary Andrews, $1.

Kansas—Denison: W. C. T. U., $20; Blue Rapids: W. C. T. U., $1; Salina: Mrs. E. Lusader, $1; Yates Center: W. C. T. U., $2.

Louisiana—New Orleans: W. C. T. U., $3.69.

Maine—Waterville: Mrs. E. H. Williams, $1; Portland: W. C. T. U., $1.

Maryland—Baltimore: Mattie Carlisle, $3.65; Still Pond: Geela Parrott, $3.65.

Massachusetts—Hadley: W. C. T. U., $20; Weymouth Heights: Old North W. C. T. U., $8; North Scituate: Mrs. E. Bailey, $1.

Michigan—Niles: Mrs. T. W. Haynes, $1; Swartz Creek: W. C. T. U., $1; Benzonia: Mrs. Lucy Coates, $1; Mrs. Emma Van Deman, 50 cents; White Cloud: for Mrs. Jane Morgan Roedel, by Mrs. Standish and Mrs. Roedel, $100.

Minnesota—Aitkin: W. C. T. U., $35; Fergus Falls: Per Mrs. J. T. Peck, $3; per state treasurer, $6; per state treasurer, $32.30; Minneapolis: Master Milo Wekter, $3.65.

Missouri—Webb City: W. C. T. U., $15; St. Louis: Carondolet W. C. T. U., $45.40; St. Charles; W. C. T. U. $10; Kirkwood: W. C. T. U., $1; Hannibal: W. C. T. U., $100.

Montana—Livingston: Annie L. Fowlie, $5.

Nebraska—Stella: Ladies of Lutheran Aid Society, $8; Nebraska City: L. H. Hyslop, $4.

New Jersey—Newfield and Malaga: W. C. T. U., $53.95; Millville: W. C. T. U., $38.95; Washington: W. C. T. U. $10.

New York—West New Brighton: Mrs. Alice Barrett, $5; Boonville: W. C. T. U., $5.10; Webster: M. E. Sunday-school, $5; Mellenville: E. S. Tenney, $3.65; Lysander: L. D. Sinclair, $2; Waverley; Willard W. C. T. U., $7.03; Elgin: Justina Day, $1.26; Coeyman's Hollow: Mrs. A. D. Tompkins and Mrs. H. E. Smith, $7.30; New York: Mrs. E. N. Guindon, $4; Millbrook: Rhoda Swift, $2.

Ohio—London: Y. W. C. T. U., $5; St. Mary's: W. C. T. U., $5; Castalia: Baby Band, $1.43; Whitmore: L. T. L., $1; Mrs. B. V. Boice, $1; Baby Band, 75 cents; Clarksburg: Mrs. E. M. Ater, $3.25; Oberlin: W. C. T. U., $12.75; Medina county: W. C. T. U., $10; Ostrander: W. C. T. U., $10; Mrs. Hart and Mrs. Tenney, $1 each; Delaware: Ruth Hawk, $5; Granville: W. C. T. U., $10; Millersburg: Y. W. C. T. U., $10; West Wheeling: W. C. T. U., $12.

Pennsylvania—Claysville: Y. W. C. T. U., $2; New Castle: S. H. Enver, $3; Huntingdon: Adaline H. Beery, $3.65; Hunter's Cave: Ida Jacobs, $6; Midway: Baby Band, $10; Fredonia: Mary Pearson, $5; Berwyn: W. C. T. U. and L. T. L., $2; Townville: S. A. Radle, $3.65.

Rhode Island—Exeter: W. C. T. U., $1; Carolina: W. C. T. U., $5.32; Portsmouth: W. C. T. U., $21.57; Providence: W. C. T. U., $20.

Vermont—Putney: Mrs. S. A. Thwing, $4.

Virginia—Lincoln: W. C. T. U. $6.55; Portsmouth: W. C. T. U., $25.

Wisconsin—Durand: Mrs. Goodrich, $5; Marshall: W. C. T. U., $10; Racine: Mrs. H. Warner, $3.65.

Wyoming—Cheyenne: Mrs. G. E. Stokes, $3.65; sales of models: $55.90.

ESTHER PUGH,
The Temple, Chicago. Treasurer Gift Fund.

THE good suggestion comes from a Kansas worker to keep a copy of the World's Petition on the parlor table, inviting all visitors to sign.

Mme. M. YALE'S

LA FRECKLA
ELECTRIFIES THE WORLD.

BEAUTY IN A BATH.

La Freckla, the Great Mineral Water discovered by Mme M. Yale, that Celebrated Woman Chemist. It is the only known natural water that has the power of Purifying the Skin and making a Complexion Beautiful.

LA FRECKLA

was named La Freckla because it is a sure cure for Freckles—all one has to do is to bathe the face in it a few times, when the Complexion becomes radiantly beautiful and Every Freckle disappears as if by magic. It removes any spot or stain from the Skin in the same way, only it seems to favor Freckled Faces.

Mme. Yale's own complexion is the most perfect ever seen. Her lovely neck and arms are so perfect one has to look closely to make sure they are not marble, and her face is as fair as the lily and as pink as the rose.

LA FRECKLA

will make any woman who uses it as fair as she.

Price $1.00 For sale by all Druggists, or shipped by Mme. Yale. Address all letters to

MME. M. YALE,
COMPLEXION SPECIALIST,
37 W. 14th St., New York.
146 State St., Chicago, Ill. Mme. M. Yale Co.
Send 6 cents postage for Beauty Book just out.

A NEW Twilled Lace Thread FOR CROCHETING. BEST in the world! Send 10c. for sample spool.

Crocheting Book No. 3 50 Illustrated Patterns. TEN CENTS.

Series of 24 Beautiful Illus. Tidy and Bed Spread Patterns from London and Paris. 5 cents each, or 60 cents a dozen including copy of above Book—No. 3.
GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D. W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

A MODERN BATH.
The Latest and Best.
Quick Self-Heating, or Toilet Cabinet in place of Heater. No bath-room required. Ornamental, Inexpensive, Complete, Practical. Desirable for either city or town. Send 2ct. stamp for Catal'ge.
THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB Co.
180 S. Canal St. Chicago.

ESTABLISHED 1850.
"Out of each nook by dingle and brook
The Healing blossoms lean and look."

A POT OF PRECIOUS OINTMENT | Dr. O. P. Brown's HERBAL OINTMENT (Great External Remedy) reaches disease through the pores, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25cts. Druggists or by mail. J. Gibson Brown, 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

MENDING TISSUE
Repairs clothing better than needle and thread; Silk, Satin, Cotton and Woolen, Kid Gloves, Macintoshes, Umbrellas, etc., all colors. Sample yard, 10c. Three yards, 25c. Twelve yards, 65c. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. Address STAYNER & CO., Providence, R. I.

DRESS REFORM.
If interested send for my free illustrated booklet describing Healthful Dress for women and children. MRS. S. W. PIKE, 73 Madison Street, Chicago.

Bickford Family Knitter.
Knits everything required by the household, of any quality, texture and weight desired. A. M. LAWSON, 783 Broadway, N. Y.
Beware of cheap and worthless knitters.

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " 3 months	.25
" " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

SUGGESTIONS

From one of our L. T. L. workers:

"Please send me another '200 Loyal Leaflets, No. 16.' I send them on with my posters where a date is taken, so as to do a little broadcast temperance work before I get there. God bless the little folks who sing the songs, and the homes they carry their melody into."

From a State L. T. L. Supt.:

A short time ago I received a letter from the State Supt. of ——, to whom I had written asking, among other things, how she liked "The Advance Guard." This was the reply: "I have not subscribed for 'The Advance Guard'; was not favorably impressed with first number. What is your opinion?"

I wrote, advising her to send for the October number; to-day I received this encouragement:

"I thank you for your good word for 'The Advance Guard.' I sent for all back numbers, received them to-day, and am delighted with their contents, so far as read. They will be a great help to the Senior Grade."

MORAL:—(Can you find it?)

OUR DAY—1893.

We take pleasure in announcing that important improvements are to be made in OUR DAY in 1893:

1. A photogravure of some leading representative of Current Reform will appear in each number.
2. Special attention will be given to every topic of Reform touching the World's Fair.
3. The contributing editor, Dr. Barrows, will see that the great subjects discussed in the World's Congress Auxiliary and the Parliaments of Reform, more than one hundred of which are already provided for, are duly noticed in OUR DAY.
4. The subjects discussed the coming year in OUR DAY are likely to be of even more commanding and permanent interest than ever before. Every effort will be made to give the periodical not only a national, but a cosmopolitan outlook.

The whole income of the Magazine will be devoted to the improvement of its various departments.

OUR DAY reaches large numbers of college students, teachers, preachers, editors and other educated men, and is more and more quoted at home and abroad.

The subscription price is $2.50 per year; to ministers and students, $2 per year. Single number, 25 cts.; to ministers and students, 20 cts. OUR DAY and THE UNION SIGNAL one year, $2.50. Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

A new magazine, "Child's Garden of Story, Song and Play," makes its appearance with the holiday number. It is a beautifully illustrated paper for the youngest readers, composed and edited from the Kindergarten standpoint, to fit the need of the true school and cultured home.

Scientific child literature has never been attempted before, and mothers and teachers awake to the new educational thought will hail this magazine with delight. It is edited by the editors of the Kindergarten Magazine, and the best of writers will contribute. The subscription price is $1 per year. Send same to CHILD-GARDEN, The Temple, Chicago.

All who desire the complete report of the Denver Convention should send for a file of THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. We have a limited number and while they last will send full set on receipt of 25c.

REMEMBER, the first number contains Miss Willard's annual address in full.

Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE SHAWKNIT HALF-HOSE DESERVE THEIR REPUTATION.

THEY ARE THE BEST-FITTING, LONGEST-WEARING, MOST COMFORTABLE.

LOOK For the trade-mark Shawknit TRADE MARK ON THE TOE.

THEY ARE MADE IN A GREAT VARIETY OF COLOR-EFFECTS IN Cotton, Merino and Wool

SEND For Descriptive Price-List.

SHAW STOCKING CO.,
LOWELL, MASS.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA.

WOULD YOU LIKE

To attend the World's Fair at our expense, and to read, free of charge, for one year, our paper, the "TOTAL ABSTAINER"? If so, please send your name and address to this office for further particulars.

902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg.,
165-173 Jackson Street,
CHICAGO, ILL.

GEN. W. F. SINGLETON,	President.
REV. A. J. JUTKINS,	Vice-President.
A. BONNELL,	Secretary.
S. M. SINGLETON,	Treasurer.
E. S. ATWOOD,	Medical Director
J. D. KNAPP,	Supt. Agencies.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Every policy holder is positively a total abstainer from alcoholic beverages.
This is the ONLY Company that does not insure the drinker.
And is, therefore, the only Company in which teetotalers should be insured.
Its risks are unquestionably the best.
Its death-rate for 1891 was over 50 per cent below the average mortality of al other companies.

It has the lowest expenses—only $2.20 per $1,000 insurance for 1891.
It has the lowest average premium charge.
No premiums are required in old age.
Policy contract simple, definite, equitable and limited as to cost.
Its life policies have cash and paid-up values after probable life.
It has an adequate reserve fund.
Expenses of management limited to $3.00 per $1,000 insurance per annum.

FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

Number of policy holders,	5,500
Guarantee Fund,	$ 92,000.00
Amount paid to beneficiaries,	210,000.00
Insurance in force,	11,000,000.00

COMPARISON FOR 1891.

All old Line Companies averaged per $1,000 insurance,	Death Claims $14.55 Expenses $15.07
Total Abstinence Life Ass'n averaged per $1,000 insurance,	" " 5.65 " 2.20

AGENTS WANTED

Address A. BONNELL, Secretary.

TOBACCO HABIT

For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others. Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.

HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.

EASILY CURED

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE

Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10 cts. to intending agents. F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St. Chicago, Ill.

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S
PILE COMPOUND
Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.
CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.
References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M.D., Helena, Mont.
Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis

LADIES WHO NEED MONEY should take agency for "Dainty Work for Pleasure and Profit"—just out. The best instructor for fancy needle and decorative work. Ladies go wild over it. DANKS & CO., 334 Dearborn St., CHICAGO, ILL.

BEATTY Piano, Organ, $33 up. Want agents. Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beatty, Wash'ton, N.J.

FAT PEOPLE

YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of

DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.

Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.

DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

'ACTINA' THE GREAT EYE RESTORER. THE BLIND SEE. THE DEAF HEAR. CURES CATARRH, Asthma, Bronchitis, Head & Throat Troubles,
NEW YORK & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N,
Room 5 & 5 1-2 Lakeside Bldg., S. W. cor. Adams & Clark Sts., Chicago. Prof. J. H. GILBERT, Mgr.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation, Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

New Cantatas, Concert Exercises and Anthems.

EMANUEL, a sacred cantata, in the form of oratorio, by W. A. Ogden. The story of Emanuel told in song. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

SANTA CLAUS' DELIGHT, a merry Christmas Cantata for Sunday schools, by Chas. H. Gabriel. Beautiful music, pretty scenes and a jolly entertainment for the children. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

JOY-BELLS, a new Christmas Concert Exercise for Sunday schools, by J. H. Fillmore. Pretty music, recitations, and readings. Price, 5c.; 55c. per dozen, post-paid; $4.00 per 100, not prepaid.

HARK! WHAT CELESTIAL SOUNDS, a chorus anthem for choirs, by J. B. Herbert. An anthem of unusual beauty. Price, 10c.

☞A full descriptive list of all our Christmas Cantatas, Concert Exercises, and Anthems mailed free.

FILLMORE BROS., 141 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction

By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 41*st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published.* Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. ☞ We Give Credit, Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn. Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for a New, Choice, splendidly Illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all,—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest, Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.

WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE

CHATTERBOX.

THE KING OF JUVENILES. No book has ever been made for young people which compares in value, or has had one-tenth the sale of this great annual. Millions of copies have been sold. The new volume for 1892-3 is just ready, and has over 200 large and entirely new pictures, several new stories (each a book in itself), and hundreds of short stories, anecdotes, etc. The best Xmas present possible for boys and girls of all ages. Order from your bookseller or us.

ESTES & LAURIAT, Publishers, Boston.

INDIA AND MALAYSIA!

By BISHOP J. M. THOBURN, D. D.,

Thirty-three Years a Missionary in India.

One Royal Octavo Volume. 562 Pages. Beautifully Illustrated. Superbly bound. Half Russia, $2.50. Full Russia, $3.00.

AGENTS WANTED!

LIBERAL TERMS. TERRITORY FREE.

For Descriptive and Confidential Circulars, address

CRANSTON & CURTS, Cincinnati, Ohio.

IF YOU WANT

Work that is pleasant and profitable send us your address immediately. We teach men and women how to earn from $5 per day to $3,000 per year without having had previous experience, and furnish the employment at which they can make that amount. Capital unnecessary. A trial will cost you nothing. Write to-day and address

E. C. ALLEN & CO.,

Box 1150. AUGUSTA, ME.

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS

CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.

Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.

N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,

163-165 DEARBORN ST. CHICAGO, ILL.

New York. Boston.

GOING TO BUILD

SEE THESE NEW 1892 DESIGNS IN BOOKS 4 and 5, "HOUSES and COTTAGES."

Size, 8 x 10 inches. Contains new designs, new styles. No. 4 has 35 designs, classified from $150 up to $1500, about half under $1000. No. 5. contains 59 designs of dwellings costing over $1 500, many $1800 to $3000. $1 each, or the two $1.50t D. S. HOPKINS, Architec. 72 Ottawa Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

STUDY LAW AT HOME.

TAKE A COURSE IN THE SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW. (Incorporated.)

Send ten cents (stamps) for particulars to

J. COTNER, JR., SEC'Y, DETROIT, MICH.

525 WHITNEY BLOCK.

AGENTS Coin Money selling Beveridge's Automatic Cooker. Every woman buys. Best and cheapest cooker sold. Big Profits to good workers, male or female. Sample's weight 12 oz. Adv'g matter furnished

For circulars address W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS

Publisher's Notes.

OUR DAY,

A Record and Review of Current Reform.

JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

ASSOCIATE EDITORS.

Frances E. Willard. Prof. J. E. Rankin, D.D.
Mrs. Mary H. Hunt. Anthony Comstock.
John H. Barrows, D. D. Ex-Pres. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D.
Rev. Jas. B. Dunn, D. D.
Ex-Pres. G. F. Magoun, D. D. Rev. R. G. McNiece, D. D.
Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.

PRICE: Single numbers, ... $.25
Yearly subscription, ... 2.50

Published by

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N.
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

A GREAT WORK! A GREATER OPPORTUNITY!!

The Revised Encyclopedia Britannica which we offer to our readers at the unheard-of rate of only ten cents a day for ninety days, is a unique and splendid work. There is but one Bible for Christians; one Talmud for Hebrews; one Koran for Mohammedans, and there is but one Encyclopedia Britannica for the people who speak and read the English language, and who turn to it as the one comprehensive, all-inclusive and authoritative epitome of human knowledge in all its branches.

To possess this matchless work is to own a whole library and have access to information on every subject within the domain of human experience, study or inquiry. The extraordinary terms announced on another page upon which the Revised Encyclopedia Britannica will be supplied to our readers, are only for such readers.

Remember this fact.

It is an exclusive privilege.

A few years ago the complete edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica cost nearly $200, thus preventing any but the wealthy from purchasing it. We are now able to offer a later and more complete edition in 20 volumes, comprising a total of 7,000 pages, with 96 colored maps.

We have confidence in it, and we know our readers will be benefited by having this great work to consult. We are willing to trust you. In proof of this we send the entire 20 volumes with all charges prepaid on receipt of only $1, and allow you to pay the balance at the rate of 10 cents a day, the same being remitted monthly for a period of 90 days.

Can we do any more?

There is now no further excuse for not owning this great Reference Library. Take advantage of the offer now. Do not delay. The offer is made for a short time only.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TO Y UNIONS AND TO WORKERS AMONG YOUNG WOMEN.

The organ of the Young Woman's Branch, the Oak and Ivy Leaf for December is a National Convention Number of special interest and value. It contains the only complete account of Y evening at the National, with the stenographic report of Lady Henry Somerset's address to the Y's of America, and the other speeches of the evening. The plan of work for the coming year, and many other items of interest to young temperance workers will be found in its ten pages. A large edition will be published. Send in your orders early.

One hundred copies for distribution, $1.50.

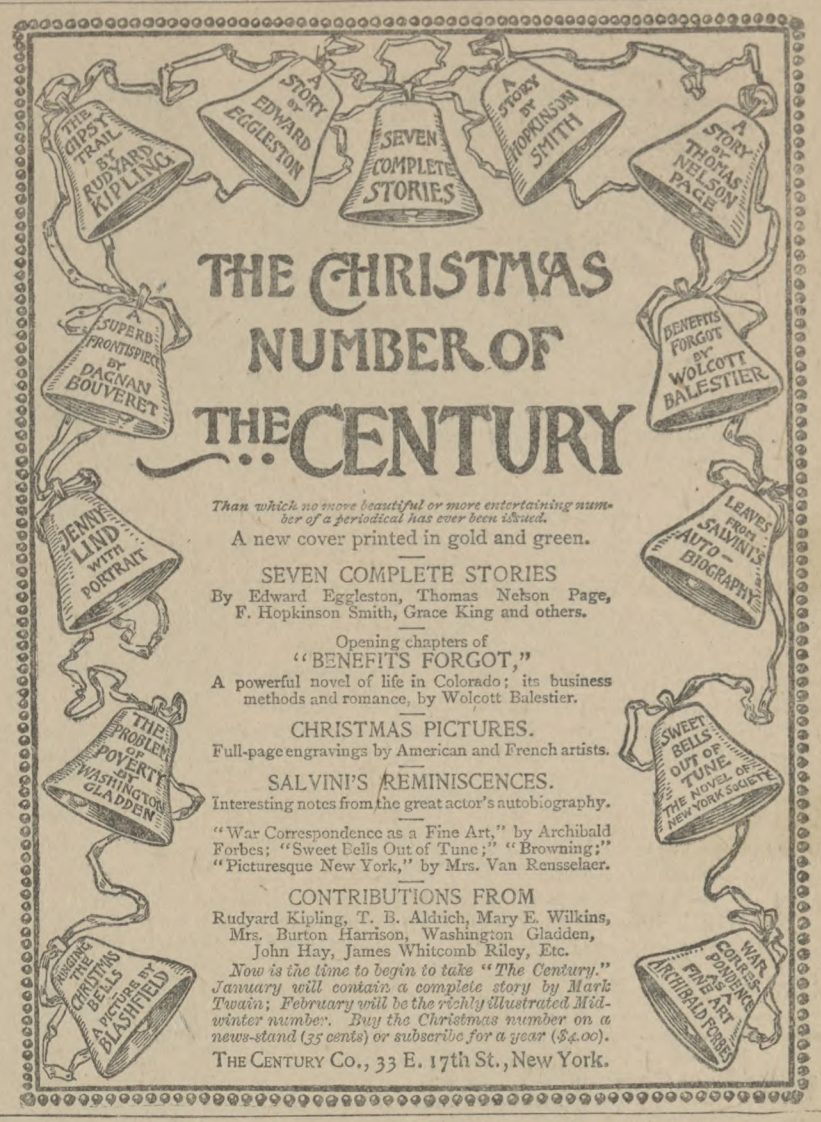
Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

In the crowding of Convention notices, the Readings for November have been overlooked in THE UNION SIGNAL. But it is not too late to call attention to them now. They are by Dr. Cushman, and in her earnest, practical vein. Especially should every W. C. T. U. woman study the Responsive Reading. It is a weaving together of "incidents from life" in Gospel temperance work, and is brimful with suggestions for workers along that line—as why should it not be, since it was written out of a rich experience?

We are happy to announce that Dr. Cushman is to furnish six of the Bible Readings for 1893, a part of them to be on strictly Gospel temperance themes. The Prospectus, ready the middle of December, will be sent free on request.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.



THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF THE CENTURY

Than which no more beautiful or more entertaining number of a periodical has ever been issued.

A new cover printed in gold and green.

SEVEN COMPLETE STORIES

By Edward Eggleston, Thomas Nelson Page, F. Hopkinson Smith, Grace King and others.

Opening chapters of

"BENEFITS FORGOT,"

A powerful novel of life in Colorado; its business methods and romance, by Wolcott Balestier.

CHRISTMAS PICTURES.

Full-page engravings by American and French artists.

SALVINI'S REMINISCENCES.

Interesting notes from the great actor's autobiography.

"War Correspondence as a Fine Art," by Archibald Forbes; "Sweet Bells Out of Tune;" "Browning;" "Picturesque New York," by Mrs. Van Rensselaer.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM

Rudyard Kipling, T. B. Aldrich, Mary E. Wilkins, Mrs. Burton Harrison, Washington Gladden, John Hay, James Whitcomb Riley, Etc.

Now is the time to begin to take "The Century." January will contain a complete story by Mark Twain; February will be the richly illustrated Midwinter number. Buy the Christmas number on a news-stand (35 cents) or subscribe for a year ($4.00).

THE CENTURY CO., 33 E. 17th St., New York.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s HOLIDAY BOOKS

HAWTHORNE'S WONDER-BOOK. Illustrated in colors by Walter Crane.

Containing 20 exquisite full page pictures magnificently printed in colors, and about 40 head-pieces, initials, etc., also in color, by Walter Crane. Beautifully bound. $3.00.

WHITTIER'S LAST POEMS.

At Sundown. By John Greenleaf Whittier. With portrait and photogravures from designs by E. H. Garrett. $1.50.

WARNER'S IN THE LEVANT. Illustrated with Photogravures.

New Holiday Edition. With portrait and about 25 full-page photogravures. 2 vols., $5.00.

LONGFELLOW'S EVANGELINE.

New Photogravure Edition. With photogravures of 16 designs by Darley. $2.00.

HOLMES' DOROTHY Q. With Illustrations by Howard Pyle.

Dorothy Q. A Ballad of the Boston Tea-Party, and Grandmother's Story of Bunker Hill Battle. By Oliver Wendell Holmes. With about 100 illustrations, borders, etc., by Howard Pyle. $1.50.

LANCIANI'S NEW BOOK. Pagan and Christian Rome

A book of remarkable interest. Fully illustrated. $6.00.

For Sale by all Booksellers, Everywhere.

DON'T CHEW TOBACCO.

Beeman's Pepsin Gum

Helps to overcome the Habit.

CAUTION—See that the name Beeman is on each wrapper.

Each tablet contains one grain pure pepsin, sufficient to digest 1,000 grains of food. If it cannot be obtained from dealers, send five cents in stamps for sample package to

BEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 64 Lake St., Cleveland, O

ORIGINATORS OF PEPSIN CHEWING GUM.

DEAFNESS CURED

BY ELECTRICITY.

Send 10 cents for our 100 page "Electro-Medical Theory and Practice."

B. B. BLISS, Iowa Falls, Iowa.

Pinless Clothes Line

WANTED—Salesmen to whom we will give EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY to sell our celebrated PINLESS CLOTHES LINE, the only line ever invented that holds clothes WITHOUT PINS—a wonderful success; or our famous FOUNTAIN INK ERASER which will erase ink instantly, and has NO EQUAL. The success of our salesmen shows the great demand for these articles, many making $20 to $50 per day. On receipt of 50c. will mail sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with price-lists and terms. PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 184 Hermon Street, Worcester, Mass.

Fountain Ink Eraser

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to H. E. EAGLE & CO., 63 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill

We do not sell liquors in any shape.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.

Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets, Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

WALL PAPER. Good Paper, 3c. Gold Paper, 5c. Large package of beautiful samples and guide, "How to Paper," sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant, 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO, ILL.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTIGIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

ROASTER & BAKER HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES. Agents Wanted. Catalogue free Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago

FREE A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant, richly jeweled gold finished watches by express for examination, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25.00 gold watch, pay our sample price, $4.50, and it is yours. We send with the watch our guarantee that you can return it at any time within one year if not satisfactory, and if you sell or cause the sale of six we will give you ONE FREE. Write at once as we shall send out samples for 60 days only.

THE NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn St., Chicago, Illinois.

Signal Notes.

It is said that juvenile crime is largely on the increase in France.

"Cholera sold here," has been suggested as an appropriate sign over spirit shops.

Dr. Richardson's Temperance Lesson Book has been admitted into the prisons of Holland.

Whisky causes drunkenness in the Bowery, alcoholism on Wall street, and heart-failure on Fifth avenue, N. Y.

The chief of police in Baltimore says that he never found boys in the saloons until lager beer was introduced and games prepared to entice them in.

A great step in Hindu social reform was taken recently in Madras when a Brahmin widow was re-married in the presence of one hundred and fifty Hindu gentlemen.

An Indian zenana missionary testifies that the brains of many of the children are so stupefied with the nightly dose of opium given when babies that it is almost impossible to teach them the simplest thing.

It is noteworthy that the national government rarely adopts new legislation for the Indian that has not been approved by the Lake Mohonk Conference. This year it recommends compulsory education for Indian children.

Five thousand laborers were employed this summer to make some changes on the Great Western Railroad of England, during the very hottest weather. Not one was overcome by the heat, for all were supplied with nothing stronger than oatmeal water to drink.

It is said that one of the severest liquor laws ever passed is that of the Dramshop Act in Mississippi. A liquor dealer can only do business in the front of his shop, and it is counted a misdemeanor to put up a screen. There are many and heavy fines for any infringements of the law.

The saloon is not only the power behind the throne but it is the throne itself, and the distinguished gentlemen who are the standard bearers of the opposing political parties know this better than myself, yet they would not dare say one word against this corrupting and murderous foe.—John Sobieski.

The absurdity of putting the tariff issue before the drink problem in our presidential campaign is easily seen when a comparison is made in statistics. The total of collections for tariff, in 1891, was about two hundred and twenty millions, while the total consumption of liquors in that period was over one billion two hundred million dollars.

The citizens of Buffalo, N. Y., have entered on a vigorous crusade to close the saloons on Sunday. Taking warning by past failures, they do not depend on hired help to secure evidence, but do it themselves by purchasing liquor in parties of two to six and by taking photographs of the interior of saloons.

The domestic science department of the Mechanics' Fair in Boston was a very prominent and interesting feature. The furniture of the dining-room was designed and made by women. The kitchen was occupied by twelve cooks, graduates of different cooking schools, each of whom had her own stove, explaining the chemistry of food and showing the way food should be cooked and served.

A sixteen year old boy was convicted of murder in the first degree in New Jersey. It was the occasion of a terrible indictment by a high authority, the presiding judge, of the vile fiction with which our country is flooded. It should arouse public sentiment against the sale of a class of tales sold on almost every street corner. After speaking of the character of the literature which the boy had read, Judge Depew said that it was the first time he had ever seen such novels, and that he felt it was the most pernicious literature that could possibly fall into the hands of children. He said further, that upwards of twenty people in the city were engaged in selling such literature to boys and girls, and from an authoritative source he had obtained an estimate of the relative ages of persons brought before the courts for offences involving attempts to rob and steal and similar offences. The figures given were: Persons charged with larceny under eighteen years, 30 per cent; between eighteen and twenty-three, 60 per cent, making 90 per cent; over twenty-three, 10 per cent. It is safe to say that of persons charged with some form of stealing, over 60 per cent are under eighteen years of age.

Good Cooking

is one of the chief blessings of every home. To always insure good custards, puddings, sauces, etc., use Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk. Directions on the label. Sold by your grocer and druggist

THOUGHTFUL SANTA CLAUS.

"I've traveled through the sleet and snow,
Across the country high and low,
To fill the stockings small and great
That here in line my coming wait.
In creeping baby's tiny hose
The India rubber rattle goes;
A handsome doll, with staring eyes,
Will much the little miss surprise;
And what will more delight the boys
Than musket, drum or bugle toys?
And now, before I climb the flue,
I'll bear in mind the mother true,
Who works so hard by day and night
To keep the clothing clean and white,
And in her stocking, long and wide,
Some cakes of Ivory Soap I'll hide."

Copyright 1890, by The Procter & Gamble Co.

From $35

WE DO IT EVERY TIME! Save you from $50 to $200

HOW DO WE DO IT?

We sell from our factory at wholesale prices direct to the public, saving them all agents' and dealers' exorbitant profits. We are doing a marvellous business. One thousand Pianos and Organs per month. WONDERFUL, but true! To prove it, send for our new catalogue, illustrated in colors. It is FREE to any address. Examine it, and you will see that we are selling at prices that are simply WONDERFULLY LOW. We have now some of the finest styles of Organs and Pianos ever manufactured. Our new catalogue shows all the latest. Our twenty-sixth annual special offers are now ready. We have bargains in all styles and at all prices. Organs from $35. Pianos from $175, for cash or on easy payment. We have the largest direct trade in the world. We have a larger factory and employ more men than any firm doing a direct business. You can visit our factory FREE if you live within 200 miles of us.

ORGANS and PIANOS For CASH and on EASY PAYMENTS

. . . NOTE . . .

We are absolutely responsible for all our contracts.

References: First National Bank, and all the great Commercial Agencies.

From $175

NO SATISFACTION, NO PAY! All instruments shipped on free trial warranted for ten years.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE AT ONCE TO

CORNISH & Co. Old Established & Reliable

Washington, NEW JERSEY.

FREE! FREE!

You cannot afford to buy any piano until you have examined our new Catalogue. Containing not only illustrations and descriptions of our Pianos, but full information of their construction and all that is required to constitute an A1 instrument. Of immense value to any one about to invest in a musical instrument, and whether you purchase of us or not it will be to your interest to send for our Catalogue, which is FREE TO ALL. We ship on test trial, ask no cash in advance, and sell on installment plan. PIANO SHIPPED THE DAY ORDER IS RECEIVED. No Agents, sold direct from factory. You save all middlemen's profits. $175.00 will obtain a Superb Upright Piano, 7 1-3 Octaves, Overstrung Bass, full French Action, Capped Hammers and Ivory Keys. Warranted for twenty years. Shipped on test trial. Greatest bargain on earth. We refer to four banks for our responsibility.

BEETHOVEN CO., P.O. Box, 701, Washington, N. J.

YOSE & SONS PIANOS. ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue.

170 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.,
OR
LYON, POTTER & CO.,
176 WABASH AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILL.

A CENT SENT BENT.

Manufacturer of "CROWN" PIANOS AND ORGANS.

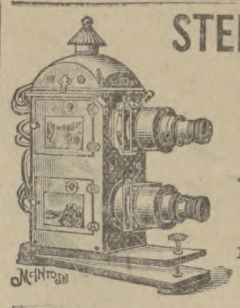
WELL SPENT, is a cent sent to Bent, (your address, on postal) if you wish a Piano or Organ. I want verses about the "Crown" goods, and give Pianos, Organs, etc., for the best ones. Ask and learn how it's done. Catalogue free. GEO. P. BENT, (Clerk No. 62), Chicago, Ill. (Estab. 1870).

MAGIC HEATER—Ingersoll Heat Battery Metal Table. Elegant Mammoth Lamp. Heat Light, Comfort, Convenience and Economy. All for $10. Send for facts. INGERSOLL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Lansing, Mich.



STEREOPTICONS

AND

Lantern Slides

FOR THE

"SCHOOL,"
The Sabbath Schoo
THE CHURCH.

Write for Catalogue. Mention Union Signal

McIntosh Battery and Optical Co., Chicago.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and easily digested.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

PRINTING OUTFIT 15c

COMPLETE, 4 alphabets rubber type, type holder, bottle indelible Ink, Ink Pad and Tweezers. Put up in neat box with directions for use. Satisfaction guaranteed. Worth 50c. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Sets names in 1 minute, prints 500 cards an hour. Sent postpaid 15c; 2 for 25c. Cat. free.

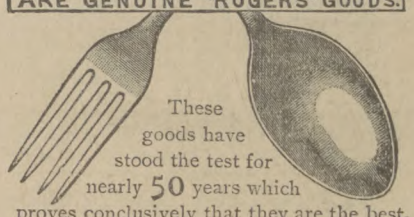
R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y. City.

SOLD BY FIRST-CLASS DEALERS

SILVER PLATED SPOONS Forks etc STAMPED

1847 ROGERS BROS. A1.

ARE GENUINE "ROGERS" GOODS.



These goods have stood the test for nearly 50 years which proves conclusively that they are the best.

If you are not sure where the genuine 1847 Rogers Goods can be obtained, address the Meriden Britannia Co., Meriden, Ct.

Illustrations of latest designs and valuable information will be mailed you. (Mention this paper.)

A GOOD THING

TO ALWAYS HAVE ON HAND

Manitou

Table Water.

A NATURAL SPARKLING MINERAL WATER.

Unexcelled for Family, Club and Restaurant use packed in cases of 100 Pints and 48 Pints.

Convenient forms for Dealer and Consumer

Address for literature

Manitou Mineral Water Co., Manitou Springs, Colo.

Sold by all first-class groceries. Also by all druggists.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, December 15, 1892. Number 50

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

The American Federation of Labor met in Philadelphia, December 13.

The first of the winter blizzards swept over the northwest last Wednesday and Thursday.

Gen. W. S. Rosecrans, famous during the civil war, and register of the U. S. treasury since 1885, is dangerously ill.

A special guard is maintained over the government buildings at London, plots to blow them up having been discovered.

The fine building of the Philadelphia Ledger, published by the philanthropist, Geo. W. Childs, was destroyed by fire last week.

Owing to labor troubles and the depressed condition of the iron trade, ten thousand iron workers are idle at Pittsburgh, Pa.

At Lansing, December 9, the Michigan Sabbath Observance Union, in its first annual session, protested against Sunday opening of the World's Fair.

The plan of Mr. Rothschild, presented to the International Monetary Conference at Brussels, making gold the only standard for currency, is rejected.

The Whittier homestead has been conveyed to a board of nine trustees who will preserve it as a memorial of the poet, which is to be at all times open to the public.

The National Prison Congress, which met at Baltimore last week, reëlected ex President Rutherford B. Hayes, as president of the association, and adjourned to meet at Chicago next year.

The Iowa Sabbath Association in fifth annual convention at Cedar Falls, December 10, passed strong resolutions condemning Sabbath excursions and the effort to open the World's Fair on the Sabbath.

The French Minister of Justice has ordered the immediate arrest of the members of the Panama Canal Company for breach of trust. Ferd. de Lesseps, the great engineer, and others are under indictment.

The Journeymen Barbers' International Union in convention at St. Louis, December 8, requested the ministers of that city to aid their movement for Sunday closing, by preaching sermons simultaneously against Sunday shaving.

The annual report of the secretary of the treasury appears in the public prints this week. It shows that foreign commerce has increased, and that immigration from Europe was never so great, numbering 579,663 during the past year.

MISS WILLARD, Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Anna Gordon left London, November 28, for Sunderland, where they held a week's conference of white-ribboners, going thence to other leading towns. They are all well and in good heart.

THE following interesting item is extracted from an English exchange: "Nothing gives brighter augury for the future success of the temperance cause than the universal effort now being made to spread temperance truth in the thought of children. Miss Anna Gordon, Miss Willard's private secretary, while residing in England with Miss Willard during the present winter, will lend her valuable aid in the children's cause. Meetings are already being arranged for Miss Gordon, who is superintendent of juvenile work for the World's W. C. T. U. Children receive truth with avidity. They learn quickly. A little girl who holds a Demorest medal, aged about thirteen, gave a speech of Lady Henry Somerset's in excellent style, at the recent anniversary meetings of the united Bands of Hope. A Y Branch in connection with the Young British Woman's Temperance union was recently started successfully in Birkenhead by Miss Helen Hood, the secretary of the World's W. C. T. U. in England."

SOME good people fear that our National leader purposes starting a new church after the plan set forth in Mr. Stead's brilliant sketch of her in the November Review of Reviews (English edition.) But nothing could be further from the facts. "Doing good according to a plan" is Miss Willard's announced purpose in life and has been for over half a century, but ecclesiastical plans are altogether foreign to the simple, work a-day methods of that white ribbon army which she has been recruiting ever since the Crusade and intends to continue enrolling while life and strength shall last.

THE liquor dealers of Michigan, when about to organize a liquor men's association, were recently interviewed concerning the political affiliations of the proposed association. They said emphatically that the organization would not ally itself with any political party, but would vote for men, regardless of party, from whom they had reason to expect favorable legislation, and added: "It is astonishing to note the unanimity with which liquor men are sinking political and religious prejudices in their efforts to make the scheme of a state association a success." The opponents of the liquor traffic are forced to place beside this the statement that a majority of their numbers refuse to sink political or sex prejudices and that therefore defeat still rests upon the prohibition banners. Strange, discouraging fact! that the old, old utterance made nearly 1,900 years ago should be true to-day, "The children of this world are wiser than the children of light."

THE last manifesto from the National prohibition committee is encouraging. It has been decided to issue a monthly magazine devoted to all political reform questions, as well as prohibition. It will contain the latest and most reliable statistics upon all questions of current interest. This magazine will not attempt to publish news, and in this way will not conflict with the prohibition weeklies already established. It will be of the pocket edition size, and the first number will appear in January. The circular says concerning the recent election: "Through the conspiracy of silence maintained by partisan newspapers, falsely so called, we are yet unable to obtain accurate information as to our total vote. Present indications show a gain of from twenty to twenty-five per cent over the Fisk vote. Though this increase is probably less than our most enthusiastic workers expected, it is far from discouraging, but on the contrary is full of cheer. Against overwhelming numbers and amid violent and unscrupulous opposition, not only does the old guard stand, but it makes a forward movement demonstrating its unabated vigor."

A SOUVENIR program has been brought out by our friend, Mr. H. J. Osborn, of England, which we wish might be imitated in every public meeting to be held this winter. In the first place this program is attractive by reason of good paper and clear print; it has a tinted cover, the sky-blue of hope. This is given up to reputable advertisements, by means of which the entire program is paid for. Then it contains soft and attractive cuts of the speakers, with brief, well-written sketches of their work; there is also a cut of the presiding officer, who is a member of Parliament. Then comes the program with attractive music all set forth in due order; then the temperance speech, with a statement of the advantages of membership in the society. There is also a sketch of the World's W. C. T. U., its aims and objects, and a list of its publications with their prices and the addresses where these can be obtained. Beside this are two pages of items concerning the temperance reform. All this literature has been put forth in order to work up the mission of Mr. John G. Woolley, whose success in England is assured. And this is the fashion in which they do their advertising in England; one might almost say that the temperance people advertise as well as do the promoters of organizations of evil.

IN Miss Willard's absence, Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, vice-chairman of the World's Women's Temperance Congress Auxiliary, will hold conferences and make the preliminary arrangements for the W. C. T. U. conventions next year. The general officers and Mesdames Rounds, Lathrap and Hoffman have been made the committee on the time, place and plan of these conventions. Mrs. Carse represents the Columbian Exposition management, and Mrs. Helen M. Barker, the Congress Auxiliaries. With this strong array of faithful women the conventions are sure to be so provided for as to leave nothing to be desired. THE UNION SIGNAL will chronicle from time to time the methods and plans agreed upon. Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, general secretary of the Y's, has some unique ideas on the subject of the Exposition which she will give to the committee. Mrs. Helen Rice and Miss Anna Gordon are working away with a hearty good will in an effort to have the Loyal Temperance Legion properly represented. A committee has been appointed to select space for the W. C. T. U. exhibit. Mrs. Dr. Felton, of Georgia, is chairman.

THE National Temperance Society has acted most commendably in sending to all religious and temperance papers of the nation an appeal protesting against the indiscriminating sale of alcoholic beverages at the Columbian Exposition. It has been frequently asserted that only the "milder beverages" are to be sold, but the truth is that the only limitation is that the drinks shall not be sold at "open bars" or "saloons." We emphatically indorse the following petition sent out by this society for presentation to Congress:

"To the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

"Your memorialists, citizens of———, respectfully represent that the sale of intoxicating beverages in connection with the Columbian Exposition would be a public peril and a National disgrace; that with the consent of the National Commission, concessions have been granted for the sale of intoxicants upon the grounds of the Exposition, with no restriction except that they shall not be sold at 'open bars,' or 'saloons'; that such sale would be in violation of the laws of Illinois; and we, therefore, earnestly ask that by appropriate legislation you will provide that no intoxicating beverages shall be sold, or dispensed in connection with, or upon the grounds of, the Columbian Exposition."

WILL Congress rescind its action of last August which closed the gates of the World's Fair on Sunday, is the question of vital concern just now. When the gift of $2,500,000 was granted by the Fifty-second Congress in its first session, coupled with the condition that the Fair be closed Sundays, a thrill of joy passed through the hearts of thousands of Christian people, not only of the United States but of the world. The World's Fair Directory in accepting the munificent gift of Congress acceded to this agreement. Under these circumstances it is surprising, to say the least, that this honorable body of business men should petition Congress at its second session to grant them the gift without the condition! The fight for the repeal of the law is now on and it is highly essential that Sabbath observance workers continue to send their protests and petitions to their nearest congressmen. Two large public mass-meetings are to be held in Chicago this week. For the encouragement of the workers we quote from World's Fair Commissioner Britton's remarks as given in the Chicago Inter Ocean of last Monday: "The World's Fair will not be open on Sunday. It is easier to pass an original bill in Congress than it is to repeal one and substitute another for it. On this ground alone many congressmen would vote against a repeal of the law. This might be overcome, but there is a stronger force against it in another direction. Petitions and delegations are pouring into Washington from all parts of the country against the opening of the Fair on Sunday, and not many congressmen are going to vote against the wishes of their constituents. I believe that the matter is now settled."

OUR COLUMBIA AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

"Let There Be Light."

BY D. S. PENNELL.

Backward, from the world's great prime,
Past the century belts of time,
Where the changing eras stand,
Waymarks through that vanished land;
Where the flowing thought of old
Crystallized in giant mould,
And the pulse of progress thrilled
With the life her veins had filled—
Till imagination's light
Dwells upon that storied night,
When the cry of "land" was heard,
Startling with its welcome word
Troubled chief and restless crew;
And the dawn disclosed to view,
Lying on that sea of calm,
Verdant isle of fronded palm;
And the brave undaunted heart,
Proving true his cherished chart,
Praise uplifted to the Power
Who had guided to that hour,
Bent his knee unto the ground—
And our western world was found.

Looking from our height to-day,
On that moment far away,
Fraught with destinies so grand,
Trace we not the Ruling Hand
That has shaped the plans of earth
Since creation's mystic birth?
When on chaos and on night
Broke the words, "Let there be light!"
He who first the secret thought,
In the Genoese bosom wrought,
Gave the strong, intrepid will,
Ardor that no check could chill,
Courage failure fanned the more,
Patience in exhaustless store;
He upheld the wanderer's bark
On the waters, waste and dark,
Kept the fearless spirit true,
Held the beacon star in view,
On the Old World's shrouded night
Breathed again, "Let there be light!"

Oh, Thou giver of all good,
Still reveal Thy fatherhood!
Yet inspire the sons of men
With Thy wisdom once again.
Make them dauntless in the right;
Girded with Thy strength and might Guide them on the rum cursed deep,
Whose engulfing billows sweep
Madly to perdition's grave
Souls Thy son hath died to save.
Lift the shadow from our homes,
Till this fairer land becomes
Rosy with the glow of morn,
And a purer world is born.
Roll the darkness from our night
With Thy words, "Let there be light!"

New York City.

SOME PASSAGES IN THE PRACTICE OF DR. MARTHA SCARBOROUGH.*

BY HELEN CAMPBELL.

CHAPTER XVII.

"It's a kind of spiritualized hypnotism," said Dr. Sterling, reflectively, looking after Dr. Martha, who, a day or two later, a little pale from long sitting by a patient, was making her way from the new building toward the orchard and the waiting Johnny.

"The shadow of a shade, that must be," said Marston, looking up from his paper as the young doctor came out and sat down at the end of the piazza. "But I know what you mean. The child has extraordinary power over every one whose nerves are uppermost. I don't know that these stolid villagers would feel it, but she seems to have a warrant to cast out devils, wherever she got it. It's the father a hundred times refined, though after all, his quality in its way is pure as her own. What is she born to?"

"To grow up in the work and into a fitness for it that not even strong bent and rare training give the best of us," said Dr. Sterling, his eyes still following the little figure, running now like any other child, and stooping to seize a ripe apple as she went. "If she were not on one side so utter a child she would become an insufferable little prig, but there is where her father's glorious common sense has come in. I am as interested in the unfolding as he almost. With his theory of education she will not have to undergo the cramming process that goes on in most of the schools, for he says she shall not enter one till she goes to college and that he shall fit her for that himself. I question if the discipline of contact with other children might not have its own education, but he says Johnny, who, by the way, is no common specimen, will do part of that, and that a year from now he proposes to have a widowed sister, who has always been in close sympathy with him, come here with her two, a girl and a boy, and all will study together. The curious thing is, they all want to be doctors, and while they must have an all-round training the whole thing will be planned in such manner that no time will be wasted over side issues. I am to be allowed a hand in the matter of languages, for they are my recreation and chief pleasure outside my work, and I dare say all concerned will join. She has done something for you, Marston, as well as the rest of us."

"This place will mean for all of us a passage out of hell into, if not heaven, then that side of purgatory nearest it," Marston said after a little silence. "Purgatory, you know, has two doors, one into hell, the other into heaven, and both stand open. We who have known hell cannot be quite certain in this life, I suppose, that there may not be other tastes of it, though indeed, speaking for myself, I seem made over, and to need only resolution enough to hold to the regimen I have learned here. Spencer, that broker fellow, admits that nothing before has had power to make him feel indifferent toward liquor; he signed the pledge when his first boy was born, but broke it a week afterward. All these fellows had taken it in one form or another."

"The pledge is too often useless unless a man has an iron will," said Dr. Sterling. "It can be kept in that case, but vitiation of will being one of the first and surest results of the drink habit, it is impossible that mortal man should feel secure. The point is to kill the longing, and you know now how it is done. As for Spencer I doubt if his courage will hold out when he gets back to New York, and the set of fast men whose life is dinners and drinking. He has no idea beyond a swell dinner. The only point where you can touch him is his terror lest his two boys should have his own weakness, and for their sake he is studying this food question just as far as his brains admit. If the mother can be made to understand, she will take her turn, and guard them all, but they say she has no thought of anything but to spend the money and be at the top of the heap. Heaven help the boys, and help all boys who are turned loose in the world with this sort of thing for beginning!"

"Woman's work is entwined with everything," said Marston after a pause, in which he had looked steadily at the doctor. "That seems to be true for poor as well as rich."

"Always. These wives of drinking men among the poor, if they were taught wholesome, savory cookery would find their numbers diminishing day by day. I don't wonder the men drink. Housed in dens, the most of them, where no man would dream of keeping a decent horse, and packed into them like so many herrings, many a one has told me he waked up with the feeling of an iron band screwed about his head and ran for his 'sup of whisky to take away the goneness.' A bit of beef or pork fried to a crisp, baker's bread rank with alum, and tea no less rank, boiled in a tin pot—that with a cabbage now and then is their notion of diet. Till they are taught better there is small hope for them. My propaganda would come from the kitchen, but there is no instantaneous process of any sort. When those we call educated are as ignorant as barbarians of how to live, what can you expect from the class at the bottom? Slow evolution out of darkness, helped along by every effort conditions admit, is what we have to fall back upon, and I am glad that I am here and not in the midst of the sink from which I came. You will have a chance, Marston, to preach this food gospel and so will Prescott."

"He will do it with all his might and strength," said Marston. "The change in him is beyond belief. He is being made over. Some of the wrinkles are smoothing out, and that dead weight of oppression and melancholy are occasional and not permanent. That is what six months has done for him."

A bell struck within and the two men went in still talking, followed closely by Dr. Scarborough, whose eyes rested on Marston with a look of satisfaction so deep that his face lightened and glowed. Only the beginning of the work in which each cure, whether whole or partial, meant constantly new discoveries of methods and possibilities for others.

"Wait till we get Dr. Martha," he had said that very day as they discussed the latest arrival and his needs: and there were days when it seemed scarcely possible to wait till she had grown. "Poor old Squire," he had added hastily; "he was in just as much hurry for Johnny as I for Dr. Martha, and there he lies in the churchyard. That makes no difference though. I don't doubt he sees it all, and knows a good deal better than he did, just how much this place is atonement for a good deal of the folly of the Templeton race. He ought to be happy over the way things are going."

The Squire had gone as suddenly as Dr. Scarborough had long known he must, rousing long enough to say stammeringly, "Hold on to Johnny, Nathan. Never let go," and then, as he stretched his hand toward the boy, falling back lifeless.

More than one question had been settled by his death. Henceforth, till Johnny came of age there would be no danger of conflict of authority or division of opinion as to administration. The field was clear, and the children would grow into helpers and successors in a work of which this was but tiniest seed.

"How can you be so patient?" Dr. Sterling asked at times, and the elder man looked at him with half quizzical, half solemn eyes.

"Do you ever reflect how many thousands of years it has taken to bring us from the original protoplasm to our present development? Luckily for us, swifter and swifter movement seems possible, but work and wait is the only word even when the utmost is done. Patience has waited on us since time began. The least we can do is to emulate it. By the time Dr. Martha is ready,"—he checked himself with a laugh, then went on: "We are laying foundations for her, Sterling, as she will for those who follow her. Though it may be, a stone or two of the new temple will be added under our own eyes. What matter who lays it when once it has risen?" and with a half sigh Dr. Scarborough turned away, then, after an instant of hesitation, turned back and laid his hand on Marston's arm. The young man shrunk perceptibly; then with one quick look into the doctor's face rose, and stood almost as if expecting a blow.

"It isn't the old story, my boy. That is plain enough. But something is very wrong with you and I cannot afford at this stage to let you brood for a moment unnecessarily. I ask no questions, but when you are ready I shall help you if I can."

Marston put out his hand and wrung that of the elder man, whose keen, kindly eyes searched his face. His own were clear and quiet, but they held a secret, too, and Dr. Scarborough, who had waited a moment for some word, finding that he was silent, turned away and went to his own room. Marston lingered for a moment, as if half inclined to follow him and made a step toward the door, then with a frown and some muttered words took his cap and went out to the hemlocks, to find Johnny there impatiently waiting for Dr. Martha.

"The new doctor up there gets hold of her all the time," he said, indignantly. "She goes and sits by the new boy, so's to encourage him, you know, but I think he'd better encourage himself, don't you, Mr. Marston?"

"Is that the way you do, Johnny?"

"Well, no, not all the time," Johnny admitted, candidly. "But then you know I'm different. I'm one of the family and she has to encourage me and all the rest. That new boy, always whining and fussing, hasn't any right to her. She belongs just to us."

"She belongs to herself first of all, and so she has the right even to leave us if she wills."

"What?" Johnny said, a little puzzled, for there was something in the tone he could not understand. Marston's eyes were fixed on the open door of the old place, from which two people were issuing, Dr. Martha, and at her side the slender, upright figure of the newcomer.

"Dr. Scarborough went up there this morning," pursued Johnny, after a pause, in which he also watched the pair with jealous eyes. "Old Potter said he thought somebody ought to interfere, for folks said she did all sorts of things to the children, and most likely she would kill some of them. I went up because I thought I'd tell her maybe, though I wasn't sure I would, and she asked me to ask the Doctor to go up and see this very Tommy, that howls if you look at him. So I came down and told him, and he said, 'All right,' and went up, and when he came back I heard him tell Dr. Martha she was just what he wanted her to be, and he wished some of the other women"—

"Johnny, you are as bad as old Potter," said Marston with such unusual energy that Johnny looked at him astonished and aggrieved. "What do I care what old Potter says? Haven't you anything to think about but unending gossip?" but Johnny with a leap and a whoop had run forward to Dr. Martha and taken his place at her side.

Dr. Althea looked at him with reflective eyes, pondering his story, and wondering if her most troublesome charge would ever blossom into equal vigor. There were other means still to be tried, and she paced slowly down the meadow path, Dr. Martha after a moment's look taking Johnny's hand and jumping from hummock to hummock in the boggy spot where she often tempted fate. Dr. Althea had skirted it, and sat down for a moment on a ledge whose moss cushions Dr. Martha had shown her the day before. Her eyes were on the piling clouds in the west, already faintly tinged with sunset color, nor did she hear the footfall that came slowly nearer and nearer, hesitating at moments as if it would turn back, then once more impelled forward. The children had vanished below the hill and were running through the orchard. In all the serene landscape not a human figure showed itself. He left the covert of the little wood and in a moment was at her side, and kneeling there bowed his head before her as if he prayed. Dr. Althea grew very pale but her eyes did not falter as they searched his face, with such a look as the angel of judgment may wear, pitiful, yet inexorable. Then they changed. Something in his own answered the unspoken word. He stretched his hands and she took them and as he held them against his heart, still silent, said low,

*Copyrighted.

"You are quite changed. I think you would promise now, John."

"I promised as I came to you," he answered. "I will do your will, Althea, for it is God's will for me. Can you trust me?"

Once more her eyes searched his face, and he as he stood trembling saw that she believed, and with one low word of thanksgiving took her into his arms and stood with bowed head and a look of divine peace in the worn, young face. Tears came as she looked at him.

"It has been cruel for you," she said, "but poor John, I could do nothing else. I never dreamed you were near. I never dreamed this could come and go in a moment."

She had freed herself as she spoke, and now turned hastily toward home. "Did you know I was there? Are you one of the patients at the Cure? Come home and tell me everything, where no one will interrupt. What a marvel that I should have chosen this spot out of all that offered."

"God bless every inch of it," said Marston, fervently, and followed her up the hill.

"Martha," said Johnny solemnly, watching the pair from the fence rail on which both had perched as they saw the two whom they had meant to seek again turn back and ascend the hill, "what do you s'pose that means? They didn't ever see each other before, and he is going right along with her. There's something the matter with him to-day."

Dr. Martha smiled her wise, sweet little smile:

"You're not to tell anybody, Johnny, because nobody must talk about it, but I know."

"What do you know? He isn't any relation, is he?"

"I don't know whether it is exactly relation or not, but I know it is what he said one day when he was most miserablest, and I was in his lap, and he said he had lost the dearest he ever had and didn't know how to find it, or even if it was really his; and he had a picture and I looked at it, and when I saw Dr. Althea, I knew she was the picture, Johnny, and I kept thinking till I knew a little bit what it meant, and now I know the whole."

"But you haven't told me what," said Johnny, severely, after a long pause in which he stared first at Dr. Martha, and then at the figures as they disappeared in the deep doorway of the old place.

"Boys never understand," returned Dr. Martha, looking at him reproachfully. "Don't you see, Johnny, it was Dr. Althea he lost, and now he has found her, and he will always be glad now, and never miserablest any more? Come. We will go home, too."

Here the record must end. Those who best know Dr. Martha and her present work, but just begun under the title she has earned, tell me that even in college she acted as missionary, and that under her influence a kitchen, endowed by certain good Quakers in the quiet city where she studied, is already started and doing efficient work, not only in providing perfectly cooked food for the poor at cost, but in giving instruction, to all who will receive it, how to do the same for themselves. And Dr. John Templeton is looked upon as the most promising experimenter in food values and properties that the neighboring college has ever known, and has already been urged to give his services there where they will be appreciated and redound to the glory of the institution, rather than hide himself away among the hills, as it is reported he intends doing. The professors think he will by and by be persuaded, but Dr. Scarborough, gray-headed now, but still young in face, knows better. Another year and his dream will be no longer a dream. The two children are children still, in the love and faith his from the beginning, and strengthening with every year. Long ago Dr. John discovered that neither life nor practice could go on successfully unless Dr. Martha had closer place at his side than even childhood had given. On her part, doubt seems never to have suggested itself, and thus, such practice as lies before her will be no longer that of Dr. Martha Scarborough, though she contends that her old name better suits the simplicity of Martha than the Templeton, at the sound of which a little flush still creeps into her cheeks as Dr. John experiments with it, waiting with such patience as he can for the day in which experiment will give place to assured fact.

Lanesborough, Mass.

THE END.

UNION OF FORCES—WHY? WHEN? HOW?

BY G. M. MILLER.

(Chairman of Executive Committee of National Reformers.)

So self-evident is it to many of us, who have for years advocated a union of reformers, that there should be but one reform party in the field, that we tolerate the first question in the above caption only because its answer helps in formulating a reply to the third, which is not so easy a matter, hence our

WHY? Because the enemies of reform are united. True, they maintain two party organizations, but the object of this is to keep the better elements of our citizenship divided. They take care that the policies of these two parties shall be substantially alike on all questions that concern their interests; then by an adroit massing of the most mobile elements into one party or the other they elect the one or the other as policy may dictate.

For this reason the Republican party will not die if the corrupt element can prevent it, hopes and prophesies of many reformers to the contrary notwithstanding. They can and will prevent it unless there shall be a union of new party reformers strong enough to attract to itself the major part of the better element of that party, before there is an opportunity to put the party into power again.

Because the large mass of even good and intelligent citizens goes more by the force of moral gravity than by well defined convictions, and the weight of numbers as well as of right principles is absolutely necessary for rapid growth of a political party. Union would mean hope, enthusiasm, magnetism for the cause of reform. Because the elements of the two reform parties are complements of each other and united would make a strong, uniform, symmetrical organization. The one strong in the West and the South has almost no hold in the North and East. The other with strong, well organized forces in the North and East has but a meagre and uncertain strength in the West and South. The one has a good hold on the rural districts in its territory, but is weak in towns and cities. The other with a good following in the towns and cities is weak in the rural districts. The one strong in its appeals in behalf of the rights of property is weak in its appeal to the higher law. The other, with holy zeal for a great moral issue, is negligent of the direct appeals to immediate personal interest by which only can certain large masses be aroused to action. Each has the elements the other needs and united they would constitute the nucleus of a party, having within it all the elements necessary for permanency, power and victory.

Only such a nucleus will be able to gather to itself the millions of good citizens now in the Republican and Democratic ranks that are not ready to become pioneers for reform, but are ready to join in establishing reform principles when the pioneering is done, and the hundreds of thousands of well disposed new voters that want to cast their first votes where they can see that they will count.

WHEN? As soon as possible. Four states elect governors next year. If the reform forces should unite now and concentrate as much of their campaign thunder and lightning as possible in those states they could be carried for reform. This would be a grand harbinger of victory in the state and congressional elections two years hence. The Democratic party will utterly fail to satisfy the vague unrest that made its victory overwhelming, contrary to the program of the corruptionists to keep the old parties nearly balanced. In the next congressional election this dissatisfied element will be ready to try a new party if there is one in the field that gives reasonable hope of success. There will not be such a party unless the elements constituting the two reform parties now in the field unite to a nucleus for it. In the absence of such a party the Republican party will regain much that it lost in the last election, and the old equipoise between the Republicans and Democrats may continue for another quarter of a century if the nation can survive so long with such a state of anarchy as that would mean.

HOW? By the representative men and women from the various reform elements joining in an invitation to several hundred of the most level headed men and women of all parties, and no party, who are likely to be favorably disposed toward such a movement, to meet in a great national reform congress for the purpose of formulating a declaration of principles that may constitute a basis of union, and, by petitioning the national committees of the reform parties to call conventions of their respective parties for the purpose of ratifying this declaration and providing for an organic union of their constituent elements under one party management.

Let this declaration of principles be as conservative on all questions as is consistent with an honest, straightforward statement of the great political issues that are before the people for settlement. Extreme radicalism belongs to the period of agitation. The period of establishment calls for more careful methods. Pell-mell Titanic force will do in tearing down an old worn-out structure, but the building of a great temple requires a different application of mechanical power. Disintegration, demolition can be accomplished by various forces working by different methods, but construction requires unity of purpose, plan and workers. The anti slavery agitation was accomplished by various methods and organizations with but little regard for unity of effort. To incorporate anti-slavery principles into laws required the formation of the Republican party. This required unity of method and organization. This required the most conservative policy consistent with the accomplishment of the object in view; a policy that at first was hooted and hated by the more radical Abolitionists, but was the only one that could win.

A statement of each issue radical enough to directly antagonize the foes of that issue ought to satisfy the most ardent advocate of the principle which the issue states. Let the union platform be composed of the fewest planks possible—not to exceed half a dozen. These are sufficient to state all the great problems that demand solution. All other questions, important though they may be, are but corollaries of these and their solution will follow inevitably. If the spirit of brotherhood and of mutual concession, where no sacrifice of principle is required, can only be had at such a congress a successful union can be formed and nothing can defeat such a grand consummation but the short sightedness, suspicion, envy or selfish ambition of would-be leaders, from which let all true reformers begin now to pray and keep on praying that the good Lord may deliver us.

Let there be no contention about a "dominant issue" or nonsensical talk about "class legislation" when reference is made to a wrong against any class of our people that calls for righting or to any rational method proposed for righting it, for in our nation the rights of one class are the rights of all, and a wrong against one class is a wrong against all; otherwise the boasted theory of our government is but an Utopian dream. And as to the "dominant issue" idea, let the issues be stated coördinately and each be presented fairly on its merits. When the battle is once on, should the enemies of good government consider any one of these issues more vital than the rest, that fact will soon be announced by the manner in which they will concentrate their artillery against it. Good generalship will then marshal the strongest forces on our side at this point, and thus the "dominant issue" affair, if there be such a thing, will take care of itself. But insisting on the massing of our entire army at one important point while the enemy presents a battle-front as long as the nation is wide, and is thus able to surround us by a double flank movement at any time, is but to invite defeat and Hull-like, prepare for surrender before the battle begins.

If a single battle-cry is wanted let it be "Restoration." Government by the people is now only a mocking farce in our nation and has been for nearly a quarter of a century. Restoration of the government to the people is the one great reform that is wanted and when that is accomplished the dethronement of the composite oligarchy that presides over our so called republic by a system of robbery which is termed "administration" will be complete. Any "dominant issue" method, if it could attain to power, could at best give us reform only on the "installment plan," and as it would require a new party for each installment the installments at best could not be delivered oftener than every quarter of a century.

Then why delay longer the great restoration movement without which we shall drift hopelessly into the twentieth century as into the realm of "chaos and Old Night," but with which we shall emerge into it triumphantly as into the "dawning of the better day"?

Chicago, Ill.

NUTRITION AND WHISKY.

BY MARY H. ABEL.

It has been well said that drunkards are not made in the saloon only graduated there and it is a pertinent question: Where are they made?

Not so often out of total depravity and malice afore thought as we once judged and the abandonment of this former ground marks a great step forward in sociological study. It has long been recognized that the tendency to drunkenness is often a matter of depraved heredity and we are now coming to suspect that conditions exist in respectable and well intentioned homes that are preparing fertile ground for the first seeds of temptation.

We must lay a large share of blame upon home discomfort in its many forms, bad air, disorder, bad manners and that intensified form of fretfulness known as nagging, for whether in the home of the rich or of the poor all those conditions that all the air with little vexations and annoyances drive boys and men out into temptation.

But there is a more important factor, the home table. What light is modern knowledge shedding upon that? Far behind us, let us hope, is the view that eating is a necessary evil, something quite beneath the nobler nature of man and only grudgingly to be attended to at nature's imperious demand. More and more do we respect the table as the place where these wonderful bodies of ours are renewed and where social life is at its best, and more and more do we consider worthy of study those viands on whose right assimilation depends the action of brain and heart as well as muscle. But very far are we yet from knowing the full meaning of this recreation of the body by food. When we do right feeding will become an act of dignity and importance, the palate will not be held sole judge and arbiter for the needs of the body, nor will half-knowledge coax the unwilling palate into compliance with an erratic or one sided diet. In that golden time not only shall we "eat to live" but we shall know the value of that continual sense of physical well-being that is in itself a great addition to the joys of life, and also a stranger to the craving for unnatural stimulus.

It has come to be a commonplace among students of sociology that a half-fed peasantry in times of want resort to alcohol to whip up the flagging energies and to bring forgetfulness of misery. Matthew Williams tells us that he spent an entire year traveling in Italy during a season of great abundance and that he never saw in the time a drunken Italian. But a few years later during a period of scarcity and trouble when "the three plagues," the potato disease, the silk worm fungus and the grape disease had brought about general privation, he found drunkenness very prevalent. There was little to eat but "polenta," a sort of corn mush; "there was no wine, and potato spirit and coarse beer had become the general drink."

There is no doubt that better food would do much to wean the Russian peasant from his vodka, and the common people of central Europe from their excessive use of beer. About such plain instances as these there can never be two opinions. The drink habit here must be attacked directly by an improvement in the food.

But the insufficient dietary is not confined to the poverty stricken. The world over, and perhaps more in America than anywhere else, there are many people, especially those of delicate or nervous habit, or living a sedentary life who are under-nourished. So much has been said of the prevalence of overeating, and the extravagance of the American nation as to food has so often been held up to us that we are apt to think that if a given diet contains the estimated requirements in proteid fat and carbohydrates, the person fed upon it must be well nourished, and that, except for the very poor, we are a well-fed people.

But the nutrition of the family is not measured by the grocery bill. We must first reckon with the cook, who is capable of turning the best materials into a mess utterly lacking in food value; and then we have another great factor, the assimilative power of the individual.

Here we have a problem not so easily dealt with. Why is the foreign laborer who eats his noon luncheon by the roadside well nourished on his beans and bacon, and that day after day, while the sedentary student of somewhat delicate tastes would starve on such a diet? Why is the peasant used to one dish at a meal, fully satisfied and nourished by it, if it be of the right quality and quantity, while for the man of cultivated tastes it has become well nigh impossible to eat day after day enough of any one kind of food, however good, to keep him in a fully nourished condition? How could one Lewis Cornaro, as we are told, keep up his health, strength and vigor for fifty years on a daily diet of fourteen ounces of food, mostly vegetable, an amount quite inadequate for the wants of the ordinary man?

The only answer is that individual requirements as to food differ very greatly both as to kind and quantity, and also that the palate and digestive organs come in for their full share of the modifications that civilized life has brought upon us. Now shall we take civilization as it comes to our hand or shall we rigidly adhere to what we suppose we know of the needs of the human body on the basis of laboratory work or to the opinions of our ancestors, and condemn all longings for anything beyond as cravings for luxury? There are many set dietaries, and especially those of the ascetic type, like vegetarianism, that should be regarded from the physician's point of view as therapeutic measures, very useful under certain conditions for a longer or shorter time, but wrongly applied, sure to lead to mal nutrition.

In the present state of our knowledge we cannot dogmatize about food. We can only be sure of certain broad principles, and for the application the individual must be studied, and especially the effect of different kinds of diet. We must repeat that access to abundance of food does not insure proper nutrition, and that there are large numbers of people in the classes quite removed from poverty whose needs in this respect are almost ignored.

Then, too, as to the number of meals. There are many people who, by reason of a small stomach, delicate appetite, or unusually active habit, seem to require food at shorter intervals than elapse between our regular three meals a day. For them the arrangement of meals prevailing on the continent of Europe seems better fitted. "I was traveling," said a lady, "with a rather delicate girl who never could 'hold out' when called on for any unusual exertion. I became convinced that she was not eating enough, and I adopted the plan of taking her into a restaurant whenever she began to flag. 'But I am not hungry,' she would say. Still the chop or glass of milk swallowed under protest had all the desired effect, and aided by the fresh air and exercise a good quantity of food was assimilated, and the girl grew daily stronger."

The time will surely come when it will be the part of some medical or hygienic adviser to warn the man who is falling below the safe limit, and to prescribe food in the proper amount and variety, and also the surrounding conditions of the meal.

There are deep physiological reasons for the relish and no doubt good digestion that attended that ancient dinner of herbs at which love presided. This physician of the future will have it to say whether teacher and pupils are ready for their year's work and the drain it will be on their vitality; whether the pedestrian has the stored up muscle, and the lungs trained to oxygenating large quantities of air that shall fit him to climb the mountain without dangerous draught on his forces; under his reign the school boy or girl will not be allowed to bolt a breakfast of doughnuts and coffee, with pie and cake and a lemon stuffed hastily into the school-bag as lunch, and pass all their growing years under a nervous strain that the physique is all unable to meet. Nor will the clerk who perches on the high stool of the cheap lunch counter be allowed to hold the delusion that he can safely scrimp on his food in order to buy theatre tickets. No wonder that part of this saving is directed to the saloon.

We know already how to feed the college athlete for success in football and boat race; it is the average man that needs more attention, and especially that increasing number of sedentary workers among us that they may be kept, not only in condition for work, but for some rational enjoyment of the pleasures of life. The physical condition that makes half of the temptation to drink must be more studied. Perhaps the same low state of vitality that renders a man unable to withstand the invasions of the tubercle bacillus makes the lights of the saloon so irresistibly attractive.

Whether a man yields to the longing for the temporary stimulus that whisky gives depends on many things; his enlightenment, his strength of will and the general surroundings, or it may be the more respectable morphine or chloral habit that ensnares him. But at best the being that is illy nourished and of deficient vitality is a waste in our civilized life and sadly unable to hand down to his descendants the vigorous inheritance that is in itself a long step toward the virtuous life.

Ann Arbor, Mich.

FOCUSING REFORMS.

BY AMOS WELLS.

A blast of air drives a cloud of sand particles against a pane of glass, and the design is rapidly etched in wherever the glass is not protected. The same cunning contrivance is capable of eating its way in a minute through a block of marble. But the air itself, though it blow a hundred miles an hour, would effect nothing. Neither would the machine work if bits of soap or of chalk were propelled, instead of sand. It is efficient simply because the sand has hard, sharp edges that focus upon one small spot all the face of the blast. Bits of soap or of chalk would flatten out and scatter weakly over a large surface whatever power is in the impelling air.

Now, it is precisely thus with the reform organizations of the world; they make their mark only as they are focused, decisively and sharply, on one small, definite point. All the enthusiasm in Christendom, blown vacantly against the hard and obstinate world, will not leave a scratch. All the soft soap in the world, and all the crumbling, incoherent chalk will fail to add effectiveness to the enthusiasm of reformers. No, "combine," that nineteenth century watchword, is the watchword of reform. Combine, consolidate, focus, bring forces to a phalanx, bring the phalanx to an apex.

With what thriftlessness our reforms are conducted, with what a spendthrift prodigality, as if reformers grew on every hilltop, and willing followers in every valley! There are legion forms of temperance organizations. There are societies without number aiming at social purity, the downfall of polygamy, the sanctity of the home, the reform of divorce laws. There are organizations for the reform of prisons, for the improvement of the criminal classes, for the education and protection of Indian, of negro, of newsboy, of sewing girl, of sailor. There are societies innumerable looking toward the betterment and the conserving of our public schools. There are missionary organizations for every hour of the day and every day in the year, each with its own distinct and important field to cultivate. And when we come to political reforms Alps upon Alps arise, scheme upon scheme for reconstruction of this, that and the other, each with a society of some sort to back the scheme.

Now it would be manifestly unwise, as well as impossible, to unite in one immense body of reformers all these far-seeing men and women of the future. Such a body would be cumbrous, myriad faced and myriad-purposed. As foolish, this, as to mass in one babel of a denomination all the scores of sects discovered in our last religious census. Indeed, the very idea of focusing requires that the thing focused shall have faces looking in various directions.

Just what is needed may be seen by calling to mind the recent (and let us pray that it may not be re-opened!) contest over the Sunday closing of the World's Fair. For years there have existed in this country societies to promote Sabbath observance, and they have done valuable work. But how incompetent they were to cope with that great emergency, which called out the entire Christian force of the nation! For decades there have flourished in these states anti-lottery associations, and they have done inestimable good. But how impotent they were to conquer the giant Louisiana lottery, which the universal moral sentiment of the country defeated with the utmost difficulty! Not that leagues of Sabbath observance and the destruction of gambling need, necessarily, to be enlarged, but there come frequent great emergencies that require the focusing upon certain evils of all the reform sentiment that is available, both within and without the particular group of reformers dedicated to the struggle with those evils.

What is needed is a federation of reforms. Our model way will be a well-organized army, a division bombarding Vicksburg, a division at New Orleans, a division in Tennessee and one in Virginia, but, when the time comes, a masterful focusing, and on to Richmond! A parliament of reforms! What a magnificent spectacle that would be, and how the monetary conference now in session in the beautiful Brussels palace, with its paltry talk of dollars and cents—how that and all such solemn, petty confabs would sink into insignificance! And if, as the result of such a parliament, the force of all reformers could, on emergency, be summoned effectively to the aid of each, what might not be accomplished for the good of the world?

Obstacles? There is but one—human pigheadedness. It is not in man that walketh to like another's way as well as his own. Reformers are no exception to this rule; no, indeed. Divorce reformers, university extension men, missionaries to the Indians, Salvation Army lassies—they all have ideas on the temperance question; and it is even whispered that temperance leaders themselves do not always see with single eye. How are all these diverse elements to be directed in a consistent temperance campaign; or, for that matter, in a consistent campaign in the interests of any reform?

But never fear. Christian reformers have too much of the grace of God in their hearts to remain pigheaded very long. Let a great parliament of reforms, composed of the earnest, devoted leaders of all the reform bodies, decide after full debate on any course of action, and you will not see Christians reluctant to follow. Reformers are learning daily how to merge individual opinion in the drift of a common enthusiasm. Daily they are learning to submit their clashing judgments to God's, which is but one. A parliament of reforms is not far off.

Boston, Mass.

FROM THE LAND OF THE DAKOTAS.

BY ALICE BRIGGS.

On its way southward there came to Rest Cottage, a few days since, for the inspection of its inmates, a most dainty and exquisitely beautiful souvenir to be forwarded to our invalid sister, Miss Jennie Casseday, of Louisville, Kentucky. The gift is a floral album of unique design and delicate workmanship and is arranged as a portfolio, the leaves of the album being laid in loosely like unbound engravings, every leaf holding flowers from a different state or country with a comforting Scripture text for each. The cover is of pink celluloid, decorated with a charming landscape surrounded by dainty blossoms, all in hand painting and tied with a silken cord of white. This artistic production is the work of Miss Emma L. Swartz, of Parkston, South Dakota, state evangelist of the W. C. T. U., who was assisted in its preparation by her sister-in-law, Mrs. L. H. Swartz, to whom much praise is due for the skillful arrangement of the flowers and for the beautiful painting that adorns the cover.

This is how Miss Swartz came to make the album; somewhat more than a year ago a friend sent to her and her sisters some books of Colorado wild flowers which were so beautiful that she began immediately to think of utilizing in the same way the wild flowers of her own state for her friends. Then came the thought of Miss Casseday's shut-in life and she felt that she would like to make her a collection of the prairie flowers of Dakota, in the hope that it might be a source of real pleasure and a comfort to her in her sick room. After a time she decided that it would be a still greater pleasure to Miss Casseday to see the wild flowers from all the states of our Union, and she determined to try to make this possible, and at once obtained a list of the W. C. T. U. state presidents and secretaries, to each of whom—as well as to the general officers of the National union—she wrote asking for contributions of pressed flowers. She intended to have the album ready for presentation at the time of the Boston Convention, but was prevented by the delay in responding on the part of many of those to whom she had written, and her greatest regret is that so many failed to reply and that only thirty-four states and territories sent contributions. She knows this failure was not from lack of interest but because the work was put off from time to time for a more convenient season. Wyoming is omitted because the flowers were so injured in transit they could not be used.

White-ribboners of Burmah, the Hawaiian Islands and other foreign countries, who, as the plan widened were asked to contribute, are represented by their silent proxies that tell in mute but eloquent language of the

. . . "Tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love,"

the world round, while the sprig of white heather from the land o' Scott recalls his delightful romances; and the sprays of willow leaves brought by Miss Willard from the traditional site of Grand Pré, from trees said to be descendants of slips carried over from France by the early settlers of Acadia, bring to mind the pathetic story of Evangeline.

Among the prettiest pages are those of Montana, Idaho, Indiana, Nevada, California, Burmah and the Hawaiian Islands. But time fails to enumerate all the interesting features of this exceedingly interesting book and with this imperfect description it is passed along to its worthy recipient, hoping that it will carry with it the cheering influence, not only of the visible flowers of the field and wildwood, but of those imperishable blossoms of prayer and loving wishes that accompany them and are entwined with them on every page.

Evanston, Ill.

THE OPIUM CURSE.

BY NARCISSA WHITE KINNEY.

Address at National Convention, Denver.

The W. C. T. U., so far as I know, is the only organization outside of the church of God that is universally recognized as being opposed to every form of iniquity, and so I come before you to-night to present a subject that has not been to any considerable extent brought before the National Convention of the W. C. T. U., but a subject concerning which, through the mysterious dispensations of God's providence, I had an arrest of thought a few years ago, and since that time the burden has been growing so heavy upon my heart that I can bear it alone no longer. I refer to the great prevalence in America of the opium curse.

Dear friends, I wish it were possible for me to give you some conception of this evil, as I see it to day on the great Pacific coast, and you may see it in other places, some conception of the vice itself, or of the danger from it. The most effectual way would be, if it were possible for me to take you into one of the great opium dens of this nation and let you see those tiers upon tiers of men and even women, lying with ghastly faces, with drawn lips, with the only sign of life about them their gasping breath, and I believe that many of you, like myself, would be unable to sleep after such a vision.

You say to me, perhaps, that these are largely Chinese who occupy those opium dens. Granted, though they are not exclusively Chinamen by any means, but these Chinese are human beings with souls. The foreman of my husband's Chinese employés, himself a Christian Chinaman, tells me that no less than 1,000 pounds of prepared opium are annually consumed by the few Chinamen of the little city of Astoria, Ore., alone. Now, my friends, add to that all the Chinese population of this United States, and add the army of opium victims, who are found not in the Chinese population alone, and you will have some idea, perhaps, of the extent of this vice.

Two years ago the Medical Association of California, in a ringing resolution, called the attention of the medical fraternity of the state to the great and growing increase of the vice among the home population of California, and especially in the form of morphia, administered as pills or by hypodermic syringe, and called special attention to the fact that this vice is on the increase among the women of the state, and when I asked a leading physician of San Francisco, who has a world-wide reputation in his specialty, why it was that the women of California were becoming addicted to this vice, he answered that in these years of unhealthy living the pains and duties of social life and of maternity had rendered many women simply nervous wrecks. They have not the fortitude to endure pain, and the result is that in some crisis of pain, a kind-hearted physician will administer morphia, and then these women will afterwards continue its use, self administered, until the patient becomes the victim.

Now, ladies and gentlemen, do not misunderstand me; do not think that I condemn the use of morphia or chloroform administered under the eye of a thoughtful and conscientious and experienced physician. On the contrary, I believe that the discovery of anodynes under the surgeon's knife is one of the greatest discoveries in this nineteenth century, but alas! the ignorance of the mass of the people concerning the danger of these drugs is rapidly rendering this one of the greatest of curses.

A young Christian woman, the wife of one of our leading merchants, a little time ago told me the following pointed story: "I am addicted to severe sick headaches, and one day after enduring the pain all day, I called in my physician, and told him he must give me something to reduce the pain. He gave me two pellets of morphia, and told me to take one that evening, but on no account to take the other pill that day, as the two would be certain death if taken the same day. I took one of the pills, lay down by the side of my sleeping babe, and in a few moments all sense of pain disappeared. I was filled with the most beautiful sensations, and it seemed to me it would be simple ecstasy if I could continue these sensations. My baby was asleep, my husband was in his store, my servant was in a distant part of the house; there was no one present to oppose my insane idea, and so I arose from my bed, found my way to where that pill of morphia was, took it in my hand, and with flashing eyes and trembling lips, in another moment I would have taken that pill and ended my life, if God in His mercy had not at that moment sent home my husband, and the sight of him broke the spell that was upon me, and weeping and trembling, I ran to his arms, and begged him to take that morphia out of the house that very night."

Dear friends, this evil of unconscious self-administering of morphia is not confined to women. In the last year no less than three of the leading business men of the city of Portland have died from a dose of chloroform self-administered, and yet in the coroner's investigation in each case, it was shown that these men had no intention of committing suicide, but were in the habit of using these drugs self-administered, to deaden pain.

I bring you these little examples to show you the danger to the refined Christian young men and women of our nation, but what shall I say of the thousands and thousands who are to-day deliberately taking these drugs until they have become actually opium fiends. It is not confined to the Pacific coast. You have all read Dr. Talmage's sermon to his New York congregation where he says, "It is one of the besieging thoughts that are brought to us that there are to day 600,000 victims of opium in the United States of America." Says Dr. Talmage, "I myself in this beautiful church have knelt by the side of elegantly dressed men and women, crying out in agony to God for deliverance from the opium habit." But he goes on to say the deliverance rarely comes. And why? Because there is not a physician in this nation to-day but will tell you that there is not one tenth as much hope of the reformation of an opium eater as there is of a drunkard, and the moral degradation is a hundred times as great.

I might give you statistics of the thousands in Minnesota, in Wisconsin, in Michigan, white citizens who are to-day opium eaters, eating this drug almost as they eat their food, but, dear friends, I will not take your time to give further statistics. Assuredly I have given you enough to convince you that there should be careful thought and action upon this subject.

Shall I give you another phase of the question, and that is, the trade itself? You are perhaps all aware that the importation of opium into this nation is not permitted by the United States government. On the contrary, it has done just what it has done with the liquor traffic, it has gone into partnership with the business. A law has been passed that any ship knowingly carrying smuggled opium will be subject to confiscation by the United States government, and yet, to-day, this opium can be procured in any of our seaports, because opium is in such great demand in the United States—the sale of opium is such a profitable business that ship captains can afford to run the risk of confiscation of their vessels, and do carry smuggled opium. It is estimated by the internal revenue commissioner of Astoria, Oregon, that there is enough opium smuggled, without paying duty, into the single port of Astoria to supply all the physicians of this United States with opium for legitimate purposes. Now, my friends, what becomes of the rest?

Just a week before I left my home, a ship from China sailed into Astoria harbor, the commissioner of revenue went on board the vessel and examined it for smuggled opium, he dug down in the coal bins, in the hold of the vessel, and there he discovered sealed in oil cans, two thousand dollars' worth of smuggled opium. He thought it was all and he let the ship go on to Portland, but after it had sailed, it occurred to him there was one part of the vessel he had not searched, and so he telegraphed up to Portland to search the water pipes of the ship, and the officers did that, and took six thousand dollars' worth of smuggled opium out of the water pipes of that vessel. There is a whisper on the Pacific coast that after all it would be better to license this traffic, according to the old policy of the liquor traffic.

Oh, my friends, it is time that every Christian man and woman was arrested upon this question, and so I come to lay this burden upon your hearts. I have done what I could in the port of Astoria, I have done it individually, personally and single-handed. Since I have come here to this Convention I have interviewed our publishing association, and arranged that some material will be furnished, tracts and leaflets upon this question, and I hope that our foreign superintendent of work will see that some of the leaflets are translated into the Chinese language, that we may save our fellowman and brother, the Chinaman, while we are saving ourselves.

Astoria, Ore.

OUR THIRD AND FOURTH ROUND-THE-WORLD MISSIONARIES IN AUSTRALIA.

(Continued from last week.)

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—On our return toward Melbourne, after a month spent in the sister Colony, we visited Horsham over Sunday, holding crowded meetings; then Maryborough, where the town hall, a huge building, was filled, and the feeling very enthusiastic. Another good meeting the following night, and then off for Maldon, a picturesque town in the hills, eleven miles from the railway station. Here a tea-meeting had been arranged in advance of the evening service, at which over one hundred white-ribboners and honorary members sat down together, and had a packed house in the temperance hall. The next morning our genial host drove us eight miles to catch the train for Ballarat, where we had a grand meeting the same night.

This is one of the most interesting mining districts in Australia, and a beautiful spot. We were taken by our hostess to see the public gardens, which are famous through all the country because of their unusual richness in trees, flowers, ferns, and other exquisite growing things, besides which there are pieces of statuary in different parts of the grounds and a glass house in the center where the liberality of an honored citizen has placed some rarely perfect expressions of the sculptor's art, especially a group wrought by an Italian genius, called "The Flight from Pompeii." One could scarcely conceive that cold marble could so flash with life and motion; it is wonderful.

And now a few days of rest and visiting with Mrs. Ballantyne, the president of the Malvern W. C. T. U., in her delightful country home, and later with Mrs. McLean at East Melbourne; the latter has christened her lovely place "The Anchorage" for our weary hearts and bodies, and her kind magic has made this a blessed realization. One of these days we hold as memorable because we had the honor of being invited to meet the venerable Dr. John G. Paton, the account of whose perils and toils as a missionary in the islands of the new Hebrides, has thrilled thousands of hearts within the last two years. He is a veritable patriarch in appearance, with snowy hair and beard, and the gentlest voice imaginable. He and his wife and daughter were leaving for America the same day we met them, and his parting prayer will linger long in our memories.

After this brief surcease of labor we held a farewell meeting in Melbourne, for the Y's and other friends, and started on our way to the northeastern borders of Victoria, visiting Benalla, Beechworth, Rutherglen, Euroa, Wahgunyah and Wodonga. In the four places last named, the W. C. T. U. has not yet taken root, but there is good promise that there will be a new departure soon. Rutherglen and Wahgunyah are situated in the very heart of the wine growing district of Victoria. At Benalla we found a live union doing good work, especially with the children, and winning favor with the press.

We penetrated into "the strength of the hills" in reaching Beechworth, through most picturesque country, and had a grand view from the home of the secretary, Miss Fletcher, to which we were welcomed. In the evening a good meeting was held in the Presbyterian church, the interest being very great, and the godly, devoted president, Mrs. Warren, making an earnest appeal for our World's work, a fine collection resulting, for which we praised God and took courage. This union is a cheering illustration of the success with which our work can be carried on in a country district. Much good has been done in different departments, and four of the five Protestant churches in Beechworth use unfermented wine at the Lord's table, three of these through the appeal of the superintendent of this department.

We were deeply impressed in our visits to all the unions with the earnestness and self-denying devotion of the

(Continued on page 15.)

IMPOTENCE.

BY KATHARINE C. PENFIELD.

Christ, Thou art all, art mine, alone canst bless;
Yet I've no will to claim Thee.
Still in my yearning wishfulness
Faintly I name Thee.

Take Thou the faint breath upward fluttering
Ere it have fallen, dying.
Lift Thou my will, dead, helpless thing
To noble trying.

Rockford, Ill.

SHE FOUGHT THE GOOD FIGHT.

BY EVA KINNEY GRIFFITH.

The Lord has different ways of dealing with different individuals, and in leading the lost ones back to Him we should each of us be careful to follow His plan. Some He seems to heal instantly, and both sins and the physical effects of sin disappear with the acceptance of His grace. Others have a long battle to fight before the rest of assured victory comes to them. Jennie Stowell was one of the latter.

It was five years ago that, calling at the little country postoffice in the small town where I had stopped to hold meetings, I received my first letter from her. The letter had been forwarded from my home and had been several days on the route. It was a wild, despairing cry for help.

It was a pitiful story the letter told and it brought tears to my eyes as I read it. The writer was a stranger to me but somewhere on my route she had heard me speak on social purity and believed that I would understand and sympathize with her. She had been a wild, lost girl, living a life of constant excitement and folly for six years. Suddenly God's spirit had called her through a sermon she had heard, a hopeful conversion had followed and nearly a year of right living. Then came a fall. The old temptations had closed around her, and in a moment of weakness she had slipped almost unconsciously into her old ways. Goaded on by remorse she had then plunged into wild orgies which had ended in disgrace and physical prostration. Her church had cast her off, her pastor refused to speak to her and, with faith and self confidence flung to the winds, the poor girl was in despair yet could not quite give up without making one more effort to rise.

I answered this passionate appeal by writing Jennie that I would pass through her town on a certain day not very far distant, and would be obliged to wait there two hours for a train. If she chose she might come to the depot and have personal talk with me.

The day came, and when the train stopped at the station in her town, there she was waiting for me. She was attired in coarse, plain clothing, with no effort at adornment, and none of those little femininities about her that are common to young girls. We walked away from the crowd, and sitting apart from the other passengers, she told me all the story of her sinful life, her conversion, her struggle to stand, her second fall and its sad consequences. Then she told me of herself, of the burning appetite for drink that raged within her, of the uncontrollable passion that inspired her, and the wild love of excitement which drove her to the gaming table and race track.

"They tell me," she cried bitterly, "that if I would only have faith, I could conquer. But they do not know these inward demons I have to fight. How can I keep my brain calm enough to have faith, with these terrible battles going on within me? Now, tell me, do you not think my case a hopeless one? I know God is willing and able to save me. But habit is so strong I am helpless in its grasp. There is no chance for me, is there?"

"There is about one chance in a thousand that you will be saved," I replied speaking the thought that was uppermost in my mind with emphasis; "with God all things are possible, but with such habits as yours fastened on one there is not much chance of your holding out, especially against the odds of plotting men and seducing pleasures all around you."

Jennie at first looked at me as though surprised that I should speak the truth so plainly. Then a sigh of relief escaped her. She had at least found some one who realized the gravity of the situation, and that was some comfort.

"Then there is nothing more that I can do or that any one can do for me, is there?"

"That depends on whether or not you decide to take the one chance? Suppose you give up trying and go on as you are, what do you believe will be the result?"

"Eternal loss," she answered, with a shudder.

"And suppose you should try with all your might and yet should lose, would you be any worse off?"

"Not that I know of."

"And suppose you should throw you whole soul into the struggle for that one chance, should sacrifice time, money, health, and even life itself, and should gain the victory, would it be worth the sacrifice?"

"Yes, it would be worth the struggle."

"Well, then it is for you to decide whether you will take the one chance, with a thousand odds against you, or whether you will give up and go with the tide, losing heaven without a struggle. If you decide to try for the one chance I will help you all I can, but until you have made your decision I cannot see that I can be of any use to you."

I arose from my seat and started toward my train, whose whistle I had heard in the distance. Jennie followed me, with a half dazed expression in her face.

"What would you advise me to do?" she asked, vaguely.

"Count the cost, look the discouragements all straight in the face and decide once for all whether you are going to fight the thing out through dark or light, sink or swim, for better or for worse."

"But you don't say anything about faith as every one else does."

"If every one else does, then it is not necessary for me to say anything about it. You must know all about it by this time. When you decide let me know."

The train had arrived, and stepping quickly up the platform I entered the car waving her a final farewell, and was soon speeding away to my work in a distant town.

Three weeks afterward I received a timid note which simply said, "I have decided to try for the one chance: what shall I do next?"

It was a brave resolve for a girl to make, with a thousand odds against her and I knew God would honor her for it.

"Drink milk, eat fruits and grains, study hygiene and keep yourself busy with some useful labor," was all the advice I sent back to her.

Frequent letters passed between us after that. She told me of her struggles in trying to keep busy. She was unaccustomed to work, she had no application, knew nothing about work. She washed dishes and was told that she did not do it right. She attempted to cook and was told by her friends that she was simply in the way. She took up sewing and crocheting and the threads snarled, and the seams puckered, yet she persevered, and at the close of each letter she would assure me with a little gleam of hope that she was all right so far. Thus she lived from day to day, until a month passed by, then two months and then three.

About this time it became convenient for me to take Jennie to my home, where she could be given congenial employment day-times and be under my personal influence and supervision. I did not talk religion to her but let the surrounding influences breathe into her heart as they might. The regular hours, simple amusements and never-ending work seemed tame to her and for a long while she found her task exceedingly irksome. She was a trial to my patience also. She was continually doing queer things. Now she grew enthusiastic over some neighbor's fast horse and rushed bareheaded to the barn to pat him and perhaps to try his speed. Again it was a dog of fine breed that attracted her attention which she was trying to purchase with her last cent. She was continually longing for the race-course, the gaming table or anything to break the monotony of a regular life, while every now and then she would come to me with white face and drawn lips begging for a drink to assuage the alcoholic thirst that was raging within her. Sometimes I grew discouraged about her and wondered if her tastes would ever change and she become gentle and womanly.

All sorts of plans she took up only to drop them again. Now she meant to train herself for a missionary to Africa, then she would conclude that her call was to become a singing evangelist. Then she decided to learn a trade and then gave it up to enter a profession. Nothing about her was stable except her decision to stick to the one chance for salvation. That decision never wavered or faltered. Sometimes we had long, sweet talks together when we studied the Bible and drew from it helpful lessons for both of us. At such times she seemed very near the Master, yet a few hours afterward would find her off on a tangent longing for or taking some forbidden thing.

At the end of four months she left me to go to another Christian home. But she was not contented there, and soon flitted away to places of her own seeking. Occasional letters came to me, telling me that now she was studying stenography, or again, she was learning teleg raphy. Always something different, yet ever the same assurance that she was still striving for the one chance.

Two years went by, and she wrote that her appetite for alcoholic drinks was completely conquered. It troubled her no more. Another year and she wrote that other appe tites and desires had become subdued. She was in college, taking a course of study, her nervousness had disappeared, and her purposes were growing calm and steady.

Two more years and I met her in city missionary work. Her wild nature was all subdued by the love of Christ. A sweet womanliness was shining out of her eyes, a gentle dignity was in her face and manners.

"I've had a hard fight," she said, when we went aside for a little talk; "the world, the flesh and the devil were combined against me, and I had only the one chance of succeeding, but I clung to that, and through Christ the victory is mine. I at least have the prospect of a useful life before me."

I looked into her calm, bright face, noted her composed manners, looked about on the work she was doing and said to myself, "She has fought the good fight of which St. Paul has told us."

There are many Christians who believe that had Jennie had enough faith she might have had the appetite for drink taken away from her at the very beginning and her body healed of its nervous derangement. Perhaps this is so. Yet I believe she was the stronger for the long fight, and the angels will not ask when she reaches Heaven's gate how long or how hard the battle was, but "Did you win the victory?" It is not so much matter how we get into the kingdom if we only are there, and God always honors the feeblest desire to come to Him.

Jennie Stowell was saved through a long process, but she was saved, and others like her may also be saved.

Chicago, Ill.

THE WOMAN'S AUXILIARY HIVE.

BY A RUSTIC.

I had often wondered if the ladies connected with the World's Fair were really busy, or if it was only an honorary place with little work and much talk; and so I wended my way to the Rand-McNally building last Thursday morning to see with my own eyes. I opened the door to room 409, a nicely furnished, cheerful and pleasant room; a dozen people were sitting in silence, seemingly waiting for some one. A very interesting and stately lady approached me, and asked in a low voice what I desired. I said tremblingly:

"To see Mrs. Palmer."

"Oh! that would be impossible; you must make an engagement days beforehand."

I felt that I had committed an unpardonable sin, and said quickly: "Oh, I only wanted to look at her, I did not expect to have an interview."

The firm voice took a kindlier tone as she replied: "Well, be seated and your wish will soon be gratified, or would you be better pleased to step into Mrs. Cooke's room and look at the immense number of carved panels that have been sent from all over the world to decorate the Woman's Building?"

I was only too glad, and soon was deep in the study of different woods—colors, grain, design and outline. Some of these panels have been done by very young girls, and are perfect in execution and finish. One from Louisiana, a bold, free pattern of magnolia blossom and bud and leaf; another from Ohio, of a palm so perfect as to be a delight to look upon. I could write a column all about these panels if I knew you would like to have me. Some very, very queer; one with two horses rampant trying to climb over the United States shield; another with rabbits, lizards and frogs blooming on a pine tree.

My attention was attracted to the lovely face of a lady near me who, in conversation with the always sweet-tempered and piquant secretary of the Board of Lady Managers, Mrs. Cooke, spoke interestingly of the beauties of the work now being done in the Woman's Building. I listened intently, and was delighted when told that the speaker was Mrs. Candace Wheeler! then I knew an artist whose soul is as pure as her talent is great had been near me.

I leaned over the desk of a very interesting girl who was busily engaged engrossing a book of state reports; her workmanship was exquisite. Here I also heard Miss Crocker, the linguist and interpreter for the Board of Lady Managers, who was entertaining people from over the sea, speaking in one language after another with a laughing joke for each foreigner, making them feel at home at once. I was delighted that a woman was filling this prominent place so successfully.

I found on the shelves of a great book case immense supplies of "World's Fair literature"—and you people who say you don't hear enough about it, write a letter to 409 Rand McNally Building, Chicago, and a liberal education for your family will be sent to you.

A very pretty little English girl, with great delight showed me an immense number of large scrap-books, which it was her duty to fill with items of interest about the World's Fair. These will be kept among the archives as a running history of the way the wonder grew.

At this moment I heard a great hearty voice, and looking up saw President Palmer. Well! he looked strong enough to hold the World's Fair upon his generous shoulders, and in conversation with him I saw a woman, and knew at once it was Mrs. Potter Palmer. The pictures we have seen have not half revealed the winsome woman, who "puts a spell" upon the world of intense interest for our great exhibit. She spoke rapidly, but with the most absolute command of language, and I felt peculiarly "in luck" to have seen the president of the Board of Lady Managers.

I then dropped into Room 405, the Industrial Department, Mrs. Helen M. Barker, superintendent, and a grand, right woman in the right place. It is well known how she marshaled the W. C. T. U. hosts in South Dakota, and now she is calling from all parts of the world "the organizations controlled by women" to come and enlist under her banner. Her most efficient helper is Miss Anna Frantz, whose work in compiling the encyclopedia of women's work is a marvel of neatness and patience in execution. This encyclopedia will be a monument long after its builders have passed away. Mrs. Barker has under her charge the Woman's Dormitory Association, but all the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL know of this enterprise. It is prospering finely, and bids fair to be far more popular than its promoters dared to hope.

While we were talking Mrs. Matilda B. Carse came in. I knew her instantly. She looks like the princess builder she is, as her works do testify. Mrs. Mary Haydon, financial secretary of the Woman's Dormitory, greeted me cordially, and said, in a cheery voice, "Oh, I know every one of the stockholders of the Woman's Dormitory, and I expect to stand next spring on expectant tiptoe to greet you all as you come to Chicago; and not alone the Woman's Dormitory, for next door here is the office of the Family Dormitory, in room 403, where all the fathers and brothers, sweethearts and swains, children and 'grown-ups' can come and find a safe, sure abiding-place, where prices will be within the reach of the most limited means." I was then introduced to Mrs. Lucy D. Fake, secretary of the Family Dormitory, a woman who needs no adorning to add to nature's gifts of attractiveness and ability.

I promised all my country friends should know who would take care of them when they came to the great show.

I must not forget to tell of meeting the "Little Lace Peddler" of Helen Hunt's "Ramona," and oh, the exquisite collection she showed us of finest drawn work, done on linen cambric by squaws of Southern California. You must all find her when you come, for one little article from her collection will be a beautiful souvenir.

On Mrs. Barker's table was some very beautiful embroidery done by a negro woman in South Carolina. It was a marvel of design and workmanship, and was sent by Mrs. Brayton, of Charleston, to interest the Board of Lady Managers in the work of colored people.

I came away reluctantly assured that not only were the women busy, but they were kindly to strangers, and I should ask my sisters to make them a call when in the city, and know for themselves how the woman's cause moves for the great, needy world, helped and helpful through this wonderful power of organization, the product of co-education and higher colleges for woman.

Rocky Bottom, Kan.

A STEERAGE PASSENGER.

After the Quarantine.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

The mail-train going west was side-tracked and the passengers going east via the Michigan Central from Ypsilanti were waiting for the fast express.

It was thirty minutes late, and the impatient crowd amused themselves by promenading the long platform, and by following the winding walks around and through the park at the pretty depot.

The morning sun lit up the dew on the morning glories, trellised everywhere over the unsightly fence, with the ivy and clematis making a garlanded bower along the trimly kept borders of foliage plants, and the flower beds were ablaze with asters, geraniums, petunias, pansies, and every variety of fall blossoms.

Two little girls in white dresses and broad-brimmed hats, swaying baskets laden with bouquets, to each one attached a card, "With the compliments of the chief engineer," tripped up and down, adding beauty and color to the picturesqueness.

An old woman came feebly to the door of a second-class carriage in the waiting. She was only a poor old emigrant, a steerage passenger on one of the ill-fated vessels that had been in quarantine for more than twenty days.

She had seen her whole family sicken, and many die with the dreadful cholera; had heard the agonized, despairing cries for water; had seen them grow cold and rigid, and had them torn one by one from her and consigned to a watery and nameless grave.

Then she had been ill, and all her kindred and friends had hurried on to the far west, leaving her alone, in a land of strange people, strange language and customs. Her heart was full of its own bitterness and she seemed dazzled at first by the blaze of sunlight, the flowers, the children, the passing and repassing of the multitudes. Then suddenly all the pent up emotions of her heart seemed to burst forth in one passionate cry of pleading as the little girl drew near with the basket of flowers.

Was it some blossom familiar to the faded eyes in the dear fatherland, or the innocent sweetness of the child bringing back the remembrance of her lost little ones, over which the angry sea sang its dirges? No one knew; but she flung out her arms to the child, begging piteously, and the frightened little girl shrunk back, and stopped in amazement, though she comprehended not a word, except the rapt, suffering lines on the aged face, worn with sickness and sorrow.

"Give her some flowers," exclaimed a gentleman coming forward, "she is asking you for them."

The child flung her one, two, three sprays. She seized them eagerly, she pressed them to her faded cheeks. She kissed and fondled them, she wept and prayed, all oblivious to the curious gaze of the crowd gathered around her while she rocked to and fro crooning a soft cradle song—the song of her dead baby, perhaps.

An old man came out on the platform, said something tender and soothing and drew her in. A thrill of pity ran through the crowd, tears stood in many eyes. The tall gentleman passed around a hat and gold fell with the silver in it as he rushed in and emptied it in her lap with the whole basket of flowers intended for the ladies on the fast express.

I like to think that man might have been the chief engineer of the road who witnessed the joy that came to a breaking heart from the giving of his daily gift of flowers.

Then came a flash, a crash, the crowd parted, the fast express came and went, and the mail-train and its freight of steerage passengers with their heart-aches were left behind.

Pittsburg, Kan.

LARGE GOSPEL TEMPERANCE.

BY JOHN G. WOOLLEY.

From address delivered before the Christian Endeavor Convention.

I have seen a thousand men, and women, too, make splendid breaks for liberty. And even while I watched their frantic flight and cheered them on their way I have seen the majestic lion of the law leap from his marble lair in the capital and fell them by a blow of lethal velvet. Then—every hill and vale re-echoing his savage roar, that told the lesser beasts of prey the king would hunt that day—I have heard the saloon jackals come yelping along all the ways to shred the fallen bodies, aye, souls, too, and, gagged by the quivering hearts of women, fly back in awful stealth to their screened caves to mouth them there in cat-like lust of death and blood.

And to-day, wailing through all aisles and arches, I can hear cries of minor treble calling, "Save my father!" "Save my husband!" "Save my child!"

Hear it, oh, friends: "It is not the will of your Father that one of these little ones should perish." Oh, hear it, and help me for the love of human kind to grasp the reasons why the slaughter of the weak and innocent goes on unchecked, and why God's men stand by, holding the garments of the murderers.

Open your Bibles at the end of Jeremiah 6, and read: "The bellows are burned, the lead is consumed of the fire; the founder melteth in vain; for the wicked are not plucked away." It reads like an invoice of the temperance cause.

"The bellows are burned." The fires of this reform are over blown. "Gospel temperance is apoplectic with idle sentiment. Speaking broadly, temperance work is temperance meetings, in which the same speakers, year after year, convince over and over the same people, mostly women, of the same thing, by the same arguments, to the same music, and the same collection; and "the founder melteth in vain," because for three generations we have been re-smelting the same batch of overdone slag and pyrites, mourning meanwhile a discouraging lack of visible, tangible product.

"For the wicked are not plucked away." We flux our formative citizenship with saloons, and sandwich "saving grace" with damning laws. Dram-shops are as lawful as churches, and distilleries as legitimate as public schools.

Too long we have heard and preached and lived a dwarfish and little gospel, under stained glass, in artificial heat, making nosegays of personal experience. Too long have we kept the face of Jesus Christ like an old ambrotype in limp morocco covers to ornament withal our spiritual center-tables. Too long we have employed the church as an ambulance and deployed ourselves for "stretcher" service, digging graves and bearing off the dead, while at the cradle of our citizenship, "license," the harlot midwife, sits and rocks and sings her bawdy lullaby.

You must add a word to your motto yonder, so that it will read "For Christ, the Church, the Country." It is time for Jesus Christ to go to Congress as well as to the slums. The time has come when we must stretch up to the larger life in Him, or bleach to sallow, pious inefficiency; and you are the arms of the church body.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And he arose and rebuked the wind and said unto the sea, Peace, be still, and the wind ceased and there was a great calm. And he said unto them, Why are ye so fearful? How is it that ye have no faith?—Mark 4: 39, 40.

Another shadow has come to darken our earthly path, but it has made more effulgent heaven's light. Like a thunderbolt from a clear sky came the news of the death of that beloved and illustrious white-ribboner, Mary Allen West, in Japan on December 1. In the midst of the most glorious work she had ever undertaken she fell, with all her armor on. Well may we all envy a like departure. In her last letter to the writer before sailing to Japan she says: "I am so thankful you are so blessed in the beautiful Temple and thank God for you and for it. I have written a new lecture for Sunday nights on 'The Tomb and the Temple,' and in it I describe our Temple and show how its different parts typify W. C. T. U. work. It 'takes' the best of any lecture I have. Two weeks ago I gave it in a large church to a packed audience, and the minister at its close gave me the most appreciative indorsement I have ever received." In the same letter she sent $10 for the Yolande Ames window, and gave the inscription she desired placed on a tablet in memoriam for her mother, the $100 for which she had given some months before. The first memorial service held in Willard Hall, which took place last Saturday afternoon, was in memory of her beautiful, unselfish life. Only a few days more and we, too, will join her. Until then, beloved comrade, hail and farewell.

***

Mrs. Isaac Roberts, Conshohocken, Pa., sends $100 from "The Young Temperance Workers" of Philadelphia (they mostly belong to the Friends Society) for a tablet in Willard Hall in memory of that great philanthropist Lucretia Mott. Mrs. Roberts writes: "The memory of Lucretia Mott is especially dear to us who are members of the religious body to which she belonged, but her name and fame belong to the whole world, and we are glad that the Temple Beautiful will bear on its walls the name of one whose faith worked by love, and whose loving spirit knew no distinction of race, or creed, or color." To all of which we say amen. Miss May Vose, Prairie City, Ill., has undertaken a most noble work, nothing less than the raising of $100 to place the name of Abraham Lincoln on a tablet in Willard Hall. She sends $20 which she has collected towards it. We are sure others will gladly help in this patriotic work. The great statesman was a consistent temperance man as well as patriot. His name by all means should be inscribed in Willard Hall. Millville, N. J., W. C. T. U. forwards $38.95 for a tablet in honor of their former president, Mrs. Sallie Sheldon, who over a year ago joined the great host of the redeemed.

***

Mrs. Hettie Tomlinson, Perry, N. Y., sends $25 for the Perry union, making fifty dollars it has now paid on its pledge. She writes: "This is the result of an experience social, at which the ways of earning the money varied from a literary production to the making of soap." The W. C. T. U. of Black River, N. Y., sends $17.75, first installment on a $100 pledge; $70.91 comes from the George Institute W. C. T. U., West Philadelphia, Pa., which completes its payment on a $100 pledge; $40 has been received from the Humboldt county, Cal., W. C. T. U., completing its pledge. Union, Me., W. C. T. U. sends $20, completing its pledge. Mrs. Carrie D. Hale, Dover, N. H., sends $27 for the Dover W. C. T. U., which completes its pledge; the money is to be applied to a tablet for Mrs. Mary H. Fenner, who for many years has been the loved and honored president of the union. Mrs. H. C. Pharr sends $40 as a first installment on $100 for Morgan City union, La.; the L. T. L., of Berwick, La., sent $10 of the above amount, and her little nephew, John Milton, eight years old, sent $4; the balance was raised by herself. Yates Center, Kan., W. C. T. U. sends $2 and Blue Rapids, Kan., W. C. T. U. sends $1 for the Lucy Webb Hayes tablet.

***

A beautiful photograph of the interior of the Crusade church at Hillsboro, Ohio, as it looked on the day of the Columbian anniversary, accompanied by a letter has been forwarded to the writer by our beloved Mrs. E. J. Thompson. She writes: "Tall oaks from little acorns grow," so thought I as my son Henry handed me the picture of the old Presbyterian church internally ornamented. It is the little acorn that has grown so rapidly and almost miraculously into the 'Temple Beautiful,' under wise, diligent, fostering care. . . . . So, my well beloved, I thought I would send to you this picture by way of encouragement as an object lesson for your faith. With God all things are possible. How my heart rejoices at the success of the Temple. 'Praise ye the Lord,' and let all the women say amen!"

***

Mrs. E. B. Murdock, Baltimore, Maryland, writes: "I have to-day forwarded to Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 La Salle street, Chicago, $2,000 to be invested in Temple trust bonds. Believing in the righteousness of the great cause and its ultimate triumph, I have profound admiration for the faith and heroism manifested in the building of our grand and magnificent Temple." Won't some more of our moneyed women and men show their sincere interest in "the great cause" by investing in Temple trust bonds, as Mrs. Murdock has done; by so doing they will obtain a safe and excellent investment for themselves, and help the trustees the more speedily to acquire the Temple stock for the W. C. T. U.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, MARY ALLEN WEST, } Editors-in-Chief.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, Contributing Editor.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, Managing Editor.
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, Office Editor.
Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

And they remembered that God was their Rock, and the high God their Redeemer.—Ps. 78:35.

OUR BILL OF FARE

opens appropriately with a Columbian ode to the Liquor Traffic. Every one of our hundred thousand readers will regret to find the long-dreaded words, "The end," at the close of Helen Campbell's remarkable story, "Some Passages in the Practice of Dr. Martha Scarborough." The first of a series of articles on the vitally important theme, "Union of Reform Forces," is presented by Mr. G. M. Miller, chairman of the executive committee of National reformers. The ever important subject of the relation of "Nutrition and Whisky" is ably discussed by Mary H. Abel. "Focusing Reforms" is a thoughtful, breezy article by Amos Wells, managing editor of the Golden Rule. "From the Land of the Dakotas" is the ingenious title of Miss Briggs' description of a beautiful souvenir for Miss Jennie Casseday. "The Opium Curse," by Mrs. Narcissa W. Kinney, is a powerful plea for effective action against the growing evil. The Correspondence Department is well nigh filled by accounts of the travels of three of our well-known Round the-World Missionaries—Mrs. Andrew, Dr. Bushnell and Miss Ackerman. The subject of "Egret Plumes" is timely presented by Mrs. Mary F. Lovell. The Household furnishes an interesting story by Eva Kinney Griffith, a picture of the woman's division of the World's Fair, a touching account of "A Steerage Passenger" and the eagerly read Temple Items. The Queen's Gardens offers one of Mrs. Poole's interesting sketches on "The Needle-Work Guild of America." Pennsylvania, Kansas, Maine and Kentucky are represented in the Field, and Our Children are well cared for by Aunt Jane and other good friends.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The most important event of the past week is the reassembling of Congress, and the presentation of the President's message. Following closely upon the greatest political event of the generation, we see the representatives of every section of the country quietly assembling, meeting political opponents in perfectly friendly attitudes, and preparing to take up the usual routine. No governor of any state has considered the question of disrupting the government, or repudiating the authority of congress. So entirely unanimous are the entire people that no one thinks of mentioning as a subject of thanksgiving and congratulation, that the machinery of government goes right on, with not jar enough to arrest attention.

And this, too, when a great party which has made such a remarkable history as the Republican party is obliged to succumb to a party which the Republican campaigners love to speak of as "the enemy they whipped in the sixties with bullets, not ballots." Doubtless thousands of citizens are just as sure that with the advent of the fifty-third Congress March 4, 1893, "the Rebels will be in the saddle" as they are sure of anything, and they expect that evidences of that fact will appear in due time. They will be grievously disappointed if bills to compensate slaveholders for their lost slaves are not introduced and passed. Of course such citizens regard the existing conditions as a disgusting evidence of the stupidity of "the masses," but nevertheless there appears no one to move that the verdict be set aside, and the rebel President and congress be prevented from taking office. No matter how intense may be the disgust, or how vivid the apprehension of disaster, revolution is not one of the contemplated remedies. "The Mexican Plan" does not flourish in our latitude.

But the evidence is strong that the great mass of the people are not anticipating any disaster from the advent of Mr. Cleveland and his party. They could not be scared as they had been either by a recital of Southern outrages, or by the alleged collapse of manufacturing industries. The Republican party leaders seem to have lost the confidence of the people. The parading of statistics showing immense growth in wealth and attributing it to the wisdom and integrity of the Republican party did not greatly impress "the masses." In their view the wealth and prosperity might have existed equally, or nearly to the same extent, if there had been no high tariff. Some insisted that the prosperity of the country was in spite of the protective tariff, and not in consequence of it, that while great fortunes were piling up they were an evidence of vicious legislation, not a matter of public thanksgiving; that the two extremes in society, the tramp and the millionaire, were alike evil and bitter things, burdens on the industrious and frugal classes. Without claiming to understand political economy, the intricacies of tariffs, the adjustment of taxation, they were not afraid of a change.

"Will you have tea or coffee?" said a landlady as she held the boarder's cup. "Well, that depends. If what I had last was tea, then I want coffee; if it was coffee, then I want tea. Anyhow I want a change."

The message of President Harrison is an able state paper judged by partisan standards. He skillfully masses his figures to impress the student with the success of the measures which were favorites of his party, and beyond doubt he is able to make a stupendous exhibit. We can pronounce the words, a thousand million, but we can have no conception of them. We are, however, compelled to use them to express several facts in national finance. In money values we think this government is at the head of the nations—this young Republic!

That President Harrison anticipates for the wage-earner an era of uncertain employment, and a lower scale of wages, he is at no pains to conceal. That he contemplates such a result with a grim equanimity is to our mind quite evident. He "recommends that the whole system of tariff revision be left to the incoming Congress." He urges that the incoming administration must enact a revenue law on a free trade basis. The people have so decreed, and there is a profound respect felt for the people, all at once. We think it means in reality, "Give them a heavy dose, Mr. Cleveland, give the people a large dose of free trade. You are under bonds to do this. There is nothing else you can do."

That the results of this policy will be to bring the people to their senses is the confident expectation of Mr. Harrison and his friends. It is not distinctly stated in the message, but it is stated most emphatically in the party papers, and the sympathy of Mr. Harrison with his party is open and emphatic. This feature is, perhaps, something to be expected, but we regret it none the less. Partisanship is one of the great and destructive elements in our national life; we would prefer very greatly that Mr. Harrison had risen superior to party considerations and advised that the Fifty second Congress should heed the voice of the American people, and draft a tariff bill in the light of the supreme verdict of the American people as rendered in November. Instead of frittering away the nearly three months from now, till the fourth of March, 1893, let an honest effort be made to frame a bill such as will promote the best interests of the people, and on which Congress can agree. Such a sinking of partisanship would do more to restore confidence in the party leaders than anything else they could do. But if Mr. Harrison and his friends prefer to regard their party, the autonomy of the party, the perpetuity of the party, the success of the party, as the chief thing to be considered we fear we must go on in the old way, the same dreary old way which politicians, not statesmen, have surveyed.

Mr. Harrison has a word to say about the liquor traffic. It is to recommend "stringent restrictions and limitations upon the traffic" in the District of Columbia.

LIQUORS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

In answer to numerous letters from all parts of the country and believing it will interest our readers everywhere, we give the law of the state of Illinois relating to the sale of liquors at fairs.

Chap. 5, Sec. 12, Revised Statutes of the state of Illinois:

"Whoever shall keep any shop, booth, tent, wagon, vessel, boat or other place for the sale of spirituous liquors, or expose for sale, or give away, or otherwise dispose of any spirituous liquors, or engage in gaming at or within two miles of the place where any agricultural, horticultural or mechanical fair is being held, shall for each offense be fined not less than five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars. Provided this section shall not affect tavern-keepers, distillers or others exercising their calling at their usual place of business."

Section 13:

"Any person violating the provisions of the preceding section may be arrested upon view or upon warrant by any sheriff, coroner, constable or other officer authorized to make the arrest; and such officer may also seize the booth, tent, wagon, vessel or boat and articles to be sold and convey the same before a justice of the peace, with the offender, and upon a judgment being rendered against the offender, the same may be sold upon the execution issued upon such judgment; and if sufficient property is not found to satisfy such fine the offender may be committed to the county jail until the fine and costs are paid or the prisoner discharged according to law.

Another statute, framed to "strike straight from the shoulder," is: (Chap. 38, Sec. 259). "Whoever keeps open any tippling-house or place where liquor is sold or given away upon the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, shall be fined not exceeding $200. Sunday shall include time from midnight till midnight."

Here is prohibitory law for the World's Fair all the time, and for the World's Fair city one-seventh of the time, with all the mechanism of enforcement. Yet, notwithstanding the opinion of the ablest attorneys of the directorate that these laws are binding, contracts have been let for supplying the restaurants of one with intoxicating liquors, and in the other, "the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday," is the day most profitable to the saloons and most destructive to the homes. Truly the situation challenges all the attention it receives, proving as it does that prohibition is effective only when a party in power is committed to its enforcement. "A party in power" consists of a majority of the people, and is powerful in direct ratio to the numbers supporting its principles. Moral measures need more; they need the indorsement of all parties. The bondman became debtor to war Democrat as well as to radical Republican in the great throes that set him free.

Theocracy had, and still has, in its own peculiar realm, high commands enforced by thunderbolt and fiery serpent; autocracy has its arbitrary law, executed by headsmen and standing army, but popular government, in both legislative and executive departments, obeys the behest of the average man, most arbitrary of tyrants, though composite. America's standing army stands in civilian shoes, saluting no command save that of the people. How far does the average man desire protection for person and property? How far is he willing to accord protection to his neighbor's person and property? Does he, for his own sake, or for the sake of his brother who stumbles, consent to abstain from strong drink as he consents to abstain from stealing? The laws actually in force in his locality reflect his answer. Should the mean opinion advance or retrograde, the statute is practically abrogated long before it is officially repealed.

In the turbulent, early days of the frontier the average man chose to arbitrate with the revolver; city ordinances were few and official duties light in his territory, while in the peace-loving villages of New England to carry fire arms was a misdemeanor. Both existed under one general government and party. No feat of civic engineering has yet been able to lift the moral life of a republic higher than its reservoir in the conscience and conduct of the average citizen. Monarchical precedents are little guide to us in prosecuting a movement affecting the habits of men, the customs of society, and through them the tissues of government. We shall find no strategic point other than the individual.

It follows then that by patient, loving effort we must persuade men, agitating, educating—finally prohibiting, in order to get the reactionary power of civil law upon the weak and vicious—all to the end that man, the elementary atom of civilization, the unit of government, may be self-governed.

When the general assembly of this state meets next month an effort will probably be made to repeal the acts cited, or by special legislation to make the dispensing of liquors in World's Fair eating houses legal. Will it succeed? That depends. Let a temperance revival sweep the state like a prairie fire and it will not. Convince the "boss" of the car shops or of the lumber yard in your district that he "doesn't want beer poked at his boys with their meals when they go to the Fair," and it will bias the opinion of your Senator more than the desire of the Rev. Waters, for the reason that pastors usually have less influence upon the votes of their flock than foremen have upon theirs. Let Hon. Mr. Jones hear that "everybody in Jonesville is signing the pledge," that Tom's place, main rendezvous of his constituency during the last campaign, is closed because "Tom has ji'ned the pledge—they do say he's got religion too"—and that member's vote can be relied upon for temperance measures.

Legislators are but servants of the people, some of them honest and faithful, others time-servers watching for "tips," but all servants in some degree striving to carry out the Master's will. Greatness of purpose and principle count little extra here. Numerical strength alone commands, hence the necessity of winning numbers. They cannot be forced, but must be won if gained at all. It may be exasperating to those who, by virtue of integrity are conscious of their divine right to rule, but it is the condition we find and with which we have to deal. Because it is a condition made flesh, sin calloused or temptation torn, we must deal with it tenderly. We may not be impatient, for some of us were not always total abstainers, and more were tardy Prohibitionists. How can I condemn my neighbor, not knowing what influences held him behind me in the moral race at the start, or have given him slower gait? Humility becomes us too, for in the increased light of future reformers we and our methods may not be wholly vindicated. Sarcasm and censure are as ineffectual as brute force in forming the public sentiment which is to law and executive what steam is to locomotive and engineer. The fire is back in the bosom of the masses, where every man's conscience is a coal, alive or dead, according to the quickening of his moral sense. Brotherly kindness alone carries the flame from heart to heart.

It is a pertinent question, "What move will rum make next?" but a more vital one is, "What move shall we—shall I—make to subvert and checkmate the great enemy of soul, fireside and state?" It takes courage to see-saw in the "double corner" of politics and legislation—God keep faithful those He has placed there—but the game finally depends upon skill in the field, where pawns are brought into the "king row" and made strong for reën forcement. From the very gutters we may bring them to be crowned with salvation and truth and made kings and queens.

A grand rallying of young men around the standards of highest manhood—the total abstinence "jack" floats always from the topmost—making the right path plain to those just starting in life, calling back those who have strayed, and lifting up the fallen, would make the blood tingle and circulate through all this body of reform and prove both means and end of its success. A "move" having for its immediate and most important object the rescue of men from the claw of strong drink, whether they be overtaken or only exposed to its devastation, promises strength for the things that remain, furtherance of every expediency of the reform, and, best of all, the restoration of many lives and homes to purity and peace.

A MEMORABLE MEMORIAL MEETING.

On last Saturday, December 10, in the far-distant city of Tokio, Japan, occurred the funeral services of the senior editor of this paper, Miss Mary Allen West. Not being able to participate in those sad exercises, the W. C. T. U. of Chicago decided to hold a memorial service at the same date. As Tokio is half way around the globe and the hour of the service was unknown, it was not possible to have the two meetings identical as to time, so the convenient hour of three o'clock was set for the home meeting.

Willard Hall was the place selected, and none more appropriate could have been chosen. This was only the second W. C. T. U. meeting ever held within those sacred walls and the first memorial meeting. Miss West firmly believed in the Temple, although she had never viewed it in its finished state. When she left Chicago last January the walls only of the building were completed, so she had not seen the beautiful interior.

The decorations last Saturday afternoon were simple, but very pretty and appropriate. Large palms furnished a graceful finish to the edge of the platform, and a tall vase of Easter lilies adorned the table. On an easel stood a life-size crayon portrait of our translated friend, draped with the Japanese and United States flags. On the wall back of the platform hung the Scriptural motto, traced in beautiful bronze letters, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." This linked Miss Willard with the occasion, for that was the message she cabled from London as soon as she heard the sad news.

Miss Pugh presided. Dr. Goodwin, of the First Congregational church, Miss West's pastor for seven years, read the Bible and prayed. Mrs. Kimball sang "Jesus, Lover of my Soul." Then Mrs. Carse spoke in part as follows:

"This is a sad occasion on which we are gathered to-day. It is sad for us, but, oh, so bright and glorious for our sister. We come here looking into the open grave of one who so suddenly, it seems to us, was summoned from life's battle-field with all her armor on to the infinite glory that is beyond. I am asked to say a few words in regard to our beloved Miss West in her association with the W. T. P. A., and the Central W. C. T. U. I have known Miss West intimately for thirteen years. Thirteen years last November it had been decided to establish a Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, and especially a weekly paper as the organ of the National W. C. T. U. A committee was appointed and we met in Indianapolis. Miss West was one of the first on that list to be asked to come and consider the matter. From then on until her summons home to heaven that true and noble heart beat faithfully to this organization. She gave her very best to it. From the first afternoon that we were incorporated she became its secretary, and every year thereafter has been reëlected to that position.

"Our first editor, Mrs. Mary B. Willard, after serving for almost three years, in '83 required a change and went abroad. Some one had to fill the gap and Miss West, with her usual broad nobility of character and generous heartedness said, 'I will go, I will edit the paper and stay until Mrs. Willard returns.' She would not take any money—her time was given freely and she gave her best. When Mrs. Willard went to Berlin in '85 and finally decided not to return, Miss West became our editor. She gave up her superintendence of schools in Knox county, which she had held for nine years, gave up her home in Galesburg, where she had always lived, and gave herself to the interests of our paper and of our Publication Association. The young men and women of the W. T. P. A. who are here to day, all loved Miss West. She was truly a woman of the people. It was to the humble, always, she went—not to those who were called to stand in the high places. If there were sickness and sorrow, her great motherly heart went out to it and her arms were ever open to receive the sad ones and to comfort them and it was not merely sympathy; she was ready to give her purse, she was so large hearted.

"As a member of the Central W. C. T. U. she became the chairman of our Bethesda mission. What an interest she took there! She delighted to go and talk to perishing souls and probably attended those gatherings more than any other member of our W. C. T. U. Whatever she was she was faithful. If on Thursday she was asked to lead the regular meeting, she would leave her busy editorial room and cheerfully fill the place. She loved the things that took hold on eternal life."

The present managing editor of THE UNION SIGNAL then spoke of Miss West's many and unusual qualities as an editor, of her faithfulness and promptness, her wonderful capacity for hard work and great endurance under trying circumstances; of her fearlessness and directness, and the power of unconsciously weaving her own personalities into her editorials, so that readers who had never seen her face loved her and grieve her departure as that of a personal friend.

Mrs. C. H. Case delineated Miss West's constant interest in missionary work as follows:

"Miss West was a child of Puritan fathers. She was the first-born child in the colony of Galesburg, which established the college and town in whose articles of incorporation provision is made that no liquor is ever to be sold on that ground.

"Her first connection with the Woman's Foreign Missionary work was in taking charge of a young ladies' missionary society which was organized auxiliary to the Woman's Society. That was in 1866. Early in 1870 she became president of this society. She had a large young ladies' Bible class from which she gathered many others into this missionary work. Suffice it to say of her interest in this work that eight of those young ladies became, in later years, foreign missionaries, and in the home of one them, Mrs. Willard Winn, she closed her eyes on earthly of scenes."

Mrs. Dye, acting president of the Illinois Woman's Press Association, said, among many loving tributes: "Miss West was strong and sweet, fearless and tender, brave and true; she was the most natural mother, I think, that I ever saw. She believed most emphatically in rotation of office, yet we would not allow her to put her theory into practice in the blessed years we had her with us. She was our first and only president.

"On returning from one of our meetings Miss West said: 'I am so rested; these meetings are such a comfort to me; I do not know how it is, but I always go home feeling so much better from them!' That was a blessed thing to say, and a more blessed thing for us to remember.

"Once in a while when a few of us had to meet for quick consultation, she would say: 'Now, girls, what are we going to do about this?' When gray-haired women and beautiful old grandmothers call one another 'girls,' it stands for a mighty love in their hearts."

Miss Emily Kellogg, another representative from the Press Association, and a life-long friend of Miss West, said: "In her press work as in every line of her life, she was preëminently educative. She brought her interests as an educator into the journalistic field and made her mark through that means upon the world.

"Her plans and thoughts for the Association were always for influence, for real work. She did not want a show society of any kind, she wanted one that was for mutual help and for the help of others, and laid out our plans of work so that we might in every way encourage those who were beginners. She, in her strength and wisdom, never scorned a weak beginning.

"Some have spoken of the open grave. I cannot say that—I can only say we are looking into the open heaven, for I believe that same humanitarian instinct which, as a child of the King, she had for every other child of our heavenly Father, made her what she was, and that her life has not ended but has gone on, and that whatever work is laid before those who have passed the bounds of this life, is to-day in her hands and that she is doing what we cannot conceive of in the life beyond."

After the singing of "The Half has Never been Told," by a charming soloist, Dr. Gilbert, editor of The Advance, gave this beautiful tribute in behalf of the religious press of this city:

"It is a privilege, although a painful one, to stand with you in this memorial gathering. I suppose our country has not produced a nobler woman than Mary Allen West. That she should have ended her career of ever-widening beneficence in far-away Japan, does not seem to me unsuitable. The deep, strong sympathies of her great heart had been widening with her years, and in every field of Christian missions, the world over, her heart was at home. That she should have passed away from the mission-home of one whom, years ago, she had taught and inspired with the enthusiasm for missions, seems a beautiful ordering of Providence. How true the words of the song just sung, 'The half was never told.' The possibilities of our human nature, the resources of the grace of God in raising up the workers gifted and fitted for the hour and the occasion—the half has never been told. Miss West is gone; but by all our loving and grateful admiration for her, we are confident that others, also, shall come, divinely chosen and magnificently equipped for their part, as she was for hers.

"Miss West possessed great qualities for her work as a Christian journalist. She, in association with those other rarely gifted women, made THE UNION SIGNAL the right arm of her power, and of your power, as representing the total spirit and aim of this vast Woman's Christian Temperance undertaking, and by means of this instrument of power, this agency of influence, she touched the lives of myriads all over our land and other lands. The Prophet of the Revelation, you know, speaks of seeing an 'angel standing in the sun,' the fittest conceivable point of view for one competent to occupy it, who would see things as they are. With somewhat of this divinely illuminated vision and sympathy and faculty, Miss West used her signal position of journalism for seeing, and for showing to the leaders in this mighty movement, the reasons for it and the work for the hour.

"But Miss West was herself always greater than any single thing she ever did. Although in her early youth she was considered precocious as a scholar, she was not a genius. I would not care to say even that she was a 'born journalist.' That extraordinary capacity of hers as editor came to her as the natural resultant of all her previous acquirements and experiences. As Moses declared to Pharaoh, when the crafty Egyptian would have the Israelite leader leave his flocks behind: 'Not a hoof shall be left behind! For we know not with what we must serve the Lord.' So Miss West kept on increasing every possible acquisition of culture and of moral power, and thus became fitted for the continually enlarging scope of her service in every Christian cause, near and far. And so it is also, in this great organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. 'Not a hoof shall be left behind,' but all of culture, every phase and department of power and influence are wanted, are being needed and gathered up into use. And thus, as I believe, a new day is coming. This crusade which has now spread into lands near and far, is but the beginning of greater things that are speedily to work out their gracious issues, not by evolutions only, but by revolutions, it may be.

"For the extinguishment of the monstrous curse there are to be gathered up, not men's influence only, not women's influence only, but that of the boys and girls as well, caught up and bound up into the one supreme undertaking to which our sister had devoted every atom of her being and her power, and so we can never think of her but with affection and with a new inspiration of hope.

"A great personality, wonderfully sane and wholesome in every fiber of her being; a great mind, a great heart, a great will power, utterly and joyously devoted to the greatest of all causes; immensely loved and trusted by not only this charmed circle of her more immediate associates and fellow-workers, but by a vast fellowship of all who knew her, herself the impersonation of a great benevolence, only she has lived a great life; her translation leaves a great vacancy, and yet, the memory of her, as all this assembly attests, remains, and will ever remain, with us all, a great and noble ideal, a continued inspiration, until we, too, thanks to the same Leader of us all, ascend to the mountains of myrrh and hill of frankincense, where the shadows shall all flee away. And so she shall remain to us

> "'Like some clear, large star, which pilgrims
> At their back leave and see not always,
> Yet, whensoe'er they list, may turn
> And with its glories gild their faces still!'"

Mrs. Rastall then read selections from the numerous letters of condolence already received, prefacing the reading with the following: "'He who is greatest among you, let him be the servant of all.' This text seemed to fit the character of Miss West most truly. I do not think any of us can recall the time when she was not ready to serve any of us." One of the letters read was from Mrs. Rounds, who regretted that she could not be present to take part in the exercises.

Miss Guernsey read a beautiful poem from her own gifted pen.

The audience joined in singing, "Rock of Ages," Dr. Goodwin pronounced the benediction and the congregation slowly dispersed, casting fond glances on the excellent life-like portrait of their departed friend, for the five hundred present were all there because of their friendly relations to Miss Mary Allen West.

THE NEEDLE-WORK GUILD OF AMERICA.

BY HESTER M. POOLE.

That works of charity and of reform always go hand in hand is well understood by all interested in either. The struggling, ignorant, untrained man or woman must be helped to be self-supporting, but in exigencies each must be helped to something more than that.

Accidents take place or sickness prostrates the worker, who is then sent to the hospital for treatment. Perhaps it is a widowed mother, with helpless little ones clinging to her garments and crying for bread; perhaps it is one worse than widowed, or a hard working father, whose earnings scarcely cover the cost of rent, fuel and food.

However that may be the sick poor, discharged as cured from any hospital, are generally objects who excite the deepest commiseration. But pity does not clothe or feed until something is practically done. The best thing which I have ever seen in this relation is the benefaction of the Needle-work Guild.

Ten years ago Lady Wolverton, of England, found that the destitution of clothing among patients discharged from hospitals, not only entailed suffering, but frequently caused relapses which negatived the good effects of treatment already received.

She found that the poor man or woman, convalescent but still weak and sensitive, went from the hospital door without proper clothing with which to begin work. With a system let down by disease, and a warm, almost luxurious room, provided by public beneficence, the weak, wan convalescents donned garments which scarce shielded them from bitter blasts and drenching rains.

Accordingly, Lady Wolverton instituted the Needle work Guild, which, under one name and another, is now known over nearly the entire civilized world. Last year H. R. H., the Princess Mary, president of the London Guild, collected over 2,000 articles, many of them made by herself.

Seven years ago last April the Needle-work Guild of America was organized in Philadelphia. It has spread rapidly, as philanthropic persons have recognized the needs which it supplies. Already there are over seventy Guilds in sixteen states, and new ones are constantly being formed.

In organization nothing can be simpler than the Guild. There are no salaried officers, the labor connected with it is one of love for our fellows. Neither is it sectarian. Here, in fulfilling the Golden Rule, there is no red tape, no clerical force, no large expenditure for rent. The charity, and the objects for which it is instituted, are brought together as swiftly and easily as possible.

The conditions of membership, also, are simple enough. These are the gift of two new, plain, useful articles of clothing annually.

Each branch of the Guild consists of a president, secretary and at least three directors, with the understanding that each of these will secure either ten members or their equivalent, that is, including her own contribution, twenty-two garments altogether. The branch once formed can thereafter grow to any extent by the addition of directors and members.

In a city, ten sections formed in this manner elect an honorary president, president, secretary and treasurer, who have oversight of the branch. To promote unity of interest and give a voice to all concerned, the Central Bureau legislates for the entire body. This is composed of the four general officers of the Guild, the officers of the parent Guild and the presidents of all the branches, who meet annually in Philadelphia the first Thursday in December.

A month or two previous to this are held the meetings of each separate branch or section. At that time, before the severe winter's cold has caused great suffering among the recipients, the garments are brought together and distributed according to the votes of the officers and directors. In cities, section presidents form the committee for management and distribution; in villages directors share in the voting. Thus, while the officers and members are quietly making and soliciting garments, there is but one meeting annually for carrying on this useful work. A society less complicated it would be hard to find.

This clothing, comprising everything which men, women and children need, may be given where the directors think best. That is, local wants may be supplied by the branch in their immediate vicinity, In all cases, strict examination of the soliciting charity is made by directors and members, to the end that pauperization may not be encouraged. There is earnest striving that only real and prospective suffering shall be met.

Beside ministering to the convalescent, the Guild has furnished garments to the destitute in Orphans' Homes, Women's Hospitals, Maternity Hospitals, Homes for Invalids, Homes for the Friendless, Diet Dispensaries, Day Nurseries, Homes for Consumptives, Old Ladies' Homes, the College Settlement, the local W. C. T. U's, etc., etc.

Considered from an economic view, the Guild is a boon to all classes. Insufficient clothing, especially to the frail invalid or convalescent, means relapse, and relapse means expense to the philanthropic or to the tax-payer. The new, comfortable garment is often about as much needed as the bread loaf. Cast-off clothing often fills in the chinks, but it does not make comfortable the entire human house in which dwells the spirit of man.

Touching instances might be given, thousands of them, where warm hosiery, skirts, shawls and gowns have helped the impoverished, refined gentle woman out of the slough of desperation. She could not solicit public charity. To the last she put on a brave front with her one decent, oft-made-over frock, and went out in search of work.

Alas! what could those delicate fingers find to do? A little fine sewing and mending, dusting and putting rooms in order. Such occupations are few and many stand ready to fill them. A sup of broth or tea and toast suffices to allay her hunger. But clothing is more expensive and she is ashamed to beg of the few friends whom adversity has left her.

To such, the directors of the Guild come as ministering angels. Their gifts are not the dole of public functionaries, they are the private offerings of those to whom life has been kinder, or who were better equipped to meet its reverses.

Again, even the moderately poor—if such a term can be used—are thus able to help those poorer than themselves And, surely, no more generous people exist than those who have to economize closely; knowing the need of things, they also appreciate their value.

Dear readers of THE UNION SIGNAL! As you sit by the fireside during the long evenings of the winter, can your dexterous fingers not fashion two plain garments for some worthy sister? Just a little less crochet and embroidery, fewer scallops and trimmings, and in place of them a pair of skirts, sacques or wrappers, gowns, merino or Canton flannel underwear, anything you can do best. From knitters, stockings, socks, bed-shoes, comforters, hoods, shawls and mittens will be most acceptable.

The honorary president of the Needle-work Guild is the wife of the vice-president, Mrs. Levi P. Morton, of Washington; Mrs. J. W. Stewart, of Glen Ridge, N. J., who established the American guild, is the general president.

To the general secretary, Miss S. B. Hodge, 2040 N. 12th street, Philadelphia, Pa., should be addressed all letters of inquiry and requests for leaflets and reports. Among the section presidents are Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mrs. Lyman Abbott, Mrs. Anthony Drexel and other notable workers. Mrs. John R. Drexel, 3907 Sprucé street, Philadelphia, is the general treasurer.

In all towns of moderate size, as well as in all cities, the local W. C. T. U. will be glad of such an auxiliary to supply the necessities of the victims of the rum-seller.

To pay the necessary running expenses, gifts are always in order. One of the best gifts which could be made by energetic women would be the organization of new branches in which the young as well as the mature of each locality should be practically interested.

Metuchen, N. J.

PENNSYLVANIA.

CONVENTION GLEANINGS.

[An onlooker at the Pennsylvania convention sends us the following which we publish in addition to the regular state report.—ED.]

The preparatory or delegates' prayer-meeting that was held in the Christian church on the preceding evening, struck the keynote for our state convention. On the morning of Oct. 7 the convention opened in the commodious First M. E. church, the main auditorium of which was decorated with taste and elegance. There were beautiful flowers and tropical plants in profusion, with many banners, and everywhere there were thousands of autograph cards festooned, each one representing a pledged child, and was one of the best object lessons that could have been employed to show the great work that had been accomplished by our indefatigable state superintendent of juvenile work, Miss Belle Braham. Miss Willard's picture on an easel occupied a conspicuous place on the platform, and over and above all floated the American flag, the large white star in the center indicating Wyoming.

The convention opened by singing "Coronation" in which all joined. The opening prayer by Mrs. Lacy was a solemn invocation to God for help, and of thanksgiving that so many had been permitted to come together again, to review the work of the past year and to plan for the future. All were rejoiced to see our beloved state president, Mrs. Jones, after her perilous voyage and imprisonment on the plague ship Normannia.

The local sisterhood tendered a tribute of respect to Madam Willard and also a delicate compliment to our beloved National President by presenting with each badge a beautiful steel engraving souvenir picture of dear "Saint Courageous." They were very fine and much appreciated by the members of the convention.

One of the great sources of inspiration was the Bible readings by Miss Greenwood, National evangelist. She spoke with the pathos and eloquence of the sublime precepts as laid down by Christ. No business was permitted to interfere with the hour from eleven to twelve each day that was set apart for this Scriptural reading.

The annual address of Mrs. Jones was full of noble thought and purpose. The reports of the corresponding secretary and of the treasurer were noteworthy for the great amount of work done, which was no doubt a revelation to those who wonder "what the W. C. T. U. is doing anyway." No one who listened to the president's address and those reports could resist admiring the courage and persistency of our women who are honestly and conscientiously endeavoring to remove a great curse from the pathway of humanity. They reported 6,924 local union meetings held, which was an average of nineteen per day during the entire year; also 1,563 public meetings, being an average of four per day; 312 Loyal Temperance Legions with a membership of 18,927.

The evening of the 7th was chiefly devoted to the several addresses of welcome and response. The first was by Mrs. L. A. McBride in behalf of the W. C. T. U. of Lawrence county. Social and industrial problems were commented on, but the purport of the address was to show that the cause of temperance was the most important one in which humanity is interested. She said that when temperance principles prevailed a new and pure party would be in the ascendency, the reign of the demijohn and demagogue would be over. The Rev. Dr. R. A. Browne, on behalf of the ministerial association of New Castle, welcomed the W. C. T. U. as co-laborers in the vineyard, and assured them that the ministers of the city were in perfect harmony with the work of the W. C. T. U. He paid a glowing tribute to the organization, and was received with the Chautauqua salute. Hon. J. B. Brown, mayor of New Castle, welcomed the convention on behalf of the city. He gave a gracious welcome, and received an ovation similar to Dr. Brown. These eloquent addresses were all gracefully responded to by Mrs. Henrietta Forest, corresponding secretary. The evening closed with one of Miss Puella Dornblaser's inimitable addresses, in which wit and sentiment were commingled to a nicety, and which had the effect of extracting the dollars from the pockets of her hearers.

Saturday was chiefly devoted to business, but Saturday evening brought the children in great numbers, who sang their sweet songs, and assured us that "saloons must go." Dr. Anna Shaw delivered one of her best lectures to a crowded house. Those who wondered "why they needed such a large church for a woman's meeting" found before it was over that they could have filled a much larger one, as standing room was at a premium during most of the meetings.

The ministers of the city and surrounding towns were an inspiration to the convention from the beginning to the end. Fifteen ministers were introduced and gave a "Godspeed" to the work. Besides the ministers several gentlemen, prominent as educators and in business circles, were introduced. The convention was honored by the presence of several of the National superintendents, Miss Elizabeth Greenwood, evangelistic, Mrs. Helen G. Rice, juvenile, Mrs. Frances W. Leiter, of physical culture and also Miss Elizabeth U. Yates.

Sabbath day was a "feast of good things" from early morning till late at night. All the church services were conducted by ladies of the convention. Dr. Shaw preached the convention sermon in the convention church and all other pulpits of the city were filled by the ladies upon invitation from the pastors. The services under the auspices of these ladies were a revelation to the people of New Castle. They had not realized before the latent talent that a great cause had aroused and sent abroad in the world. Some said, "Truly, it must be the voice of God speaking through these women."

All states should follow Pennsylvania's plan, and arrange to have their conventions extend over the Sabbath. In no other way can such a vast number of people be reached. Men who seldom attend any church, scarcely missed a session of this great convention, and said that they could not stay away. The children's meetings in different churches on Sabbath afternoon, under the care of Mesdames Chase, Rice, and Misses Braham and Jones, were largely attended, and productive of much good. It is impossible to tell of all the good meetings, and indeed, one can do little more than hint at them without being too lengthy. The exercises of Y night were interesting and varied, a pleasing feature being the address of welcome by Miss Jessie Rearic, and the response by Miss Guthrie, of Armstrong. Miss Ada Rice's song of "Come and join our Y," to the air of "Coming through the rye," was highly appreciated.

The closing session on Tuesday afternoon was one of the most remarkable meetings ever held in New Castle. The citizens had filled the church to overflowing. The W. C. T. U. love feast conducted by Miss Greenwood was a precious season. Then, too, came the "good-bye" of our beloved president, Mary H. Jones, who was retiring from her post, after taking her state out of the "slough of despond" up to the "mount of rejoicing." At the request of Miss Greenwood the old hymn was revised while all clasped hands and sang, "God be with us till we meet again," and adjourned to meet in Lancaster in 1893.

This was pronounced the best convention the state has ever held. It is worthy of note, that from beginning to end there was not one word of censure or unkindness spoken of any other organization. We have too holy a mission to perform and too much business to engross us to take precious time to pick flaws in others' methods.

Much of the success was due to the perfect arrangements of the local committees for the entertainment of the convention. The sisterhood left for their homes, their hearts glowing with appreciation of the hospitality they had received.

RUTH.

KANSAS.

"PRAISE GOD FROM WHOM ALL BLESSINGS FLOW."

The Kansas W. C. T. U. asks all white-ribboners everywhere to join with us in the temperance doxology, for we feel that it is a providence direct from God, that the efforts of the destroyer of the home have been foiled once more, and we are saved from the evils which would have been sure to come to us through a constitutional convention. We worked and prayed that the measure might be defeated at the polls, yet as the returns came pouring in from the large cities, it looked as though all was lost, and the evil one began showing his designs at once by unaccustomed boldness, but when the rural districts were heard from the tide was turned in our favor, and I have it from good authority that it was defeated by 1,300 votes, while about 100,000 failed to vote either way, which were legally counted as votes cast in our favor. This we trust settles that question for a time at least, and now we naturally ask ourselves, What will be the next point of attack? What form will it take? for we have no idea that King Alcohol will give up the battle, and we will need to be constantly on the watch for something new. Truly, "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

Reports have been widely circulated that our governor-elect has promised aid and comfort to the liquor interest as soon as he comes into power. I think such reports or "interviews" must be the product of the fertile brain of the reporter, whose "wish is father to the thought," for Governor Lewelling denies having made any such statements, saying: "There is absolutely no truth in the report that I will connive with the police board in violating the prohibitory law. It is not a question with the governor what his personal opinions may be concerning a law, but it is his duty to have it enforced." Hence, for one, I see no reason to fear trouble with the new administration when it comes into power in the state any more, at least, than with the one now going out, whose governor, it was proven, for political purposes, issued blank pardons ready signed before conviction had been obtained against violators of the prohibitory law. Surely the new one can not do worse than that, and though not belonging to either the old or the new régime myself, I think we have no reason to be disheartened, as the new party will be "upon its good behavior" during its first term of office holding at least, and we may be enabled to secure the ballot through its influence. They promised as much in their platform of principles, and with such a genius as Mrs. Lease to keep them "stirred up" they will not be likely to be allowed to lapse into forgetfulness.

By the way, Mrs. Lease is a candidate for United States Senator in place of Mr. Perkins. While I have not the faith to believe she will be able to convince the majority in the legislature that she ought to have it, I have no doubt she is perfectly competent to fill the place. It would be as bad as women "crowding men out of General Conference." Wouldn't it make a political sensation if she should succeed? The pros and cons are being investigated from a legal standpoint, so there is something gained at least in agitation and "arrest of thought." Should she be elected it must surely rejoice the hearts of Lucy Stone and Susan B. Anthony, even if she should not happen to be of their political faith. Such an innovation would eclipse the Columbian Exposition as a matter of interest to the world at large. As Kansas is famed for doing startling things, it may be that this is to be the next movement forward, and it would give a mighty impetus to the "woman question," both in state and nation. I believe as yet there have been no legal barriers found which would prevent her election.

The recent political landslide in Kansas was a surprise to every one, and must have been doubly so to the party in power. The W. C. T. U. is very much like the brooklet which said, "Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever," so, no matter what party governs the state we expect to keep right on in our work "For God and Home and Native Land," still keeping, as we ever have done, an eye on public affairs, lest the enemy, thinking us asleep, should steal in and rob us of some of our hard-bought victories.

My last letter was, unfortunately, a little "mixed" as it appeared in print, owing, I presume, to my sending in additional notes from the state convention, and it so happened that they were not entered in the proper place, but we know that "mistakes will sometimes occur in the best regulated families."

The Morrill union reports a membership of twenty-eight, with twelve honorary members. Several of their number have moved away, very much to the regret of the union, which meets once in two weeks, and has superintendents for twelve departments. It has organized an L. T. L., which is doing nicely, and has contributed a dollar and ten cents toward the Willard fountain fund. Under the superintendency of Miss Fannie Dustin, two silver medal contests have been held, Miss Lizzie Cottrell winning the medal in the young people's class, and Joy Campbell in the junior class. The union sent two delegates to district, and one to state convention, held a mass meeting, also had a dinner on election day for the financial benefit of the society. It sent provision and clothing to destitute Nebraskans and takes nine copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, and ten of Our Messenger.

Salina county W. C. T. U. met in the Y. M. C. A. rooms in Salina. All the unions of the county were represented, and each came with good reports, and great enthusiasm for the work of the future. The officers elected were, president, Mrs. E. J. Lusadder, of Salina; corresponding and recording secretary, Mrs. O. B. Merrill, also of Salina; treasurer, Mrs. Nash, of Bavaria.

Butler county union convened in the M. E. church of Augusta. There were three business sessions and a lecture. All but one of the "locals" were heard from and each was trying to do what it could for the cause. Seven departments were reported. An interesting paper, subject, "Why I am a W. C. T. U. woman and why I am not," was read by Mrs. Hazelrigg, also one by Miss Alta Ruland, "Woman's sphere; is it only in the home?" The church was beautifully decorated with water lilies by the Y's. Mrs. Shaffer, of Wichita, gave the evening address. The convention pledged one hundred dollars for the Temple, the funds to be raised by each union giving an entertainment, the proceeds to go towards the Temple fund. Mrs. Moffatt was elected president, Mrs. Shamleffer, secretary, and Miss Minnie Horton, treasurer.

The state superintendent of evangelistic work has started out her first crusade band, consisting of two young ladies, Miss E. May Jaquith, of Americus, and Miss Edith Hill, of Emporia. They have done a good work so far as heard from. The superintendent, Mrs. Henderson, says of them: "I believe God is with them in a wonderful manner and they will be a power in His hands in saving souls."

MRS. S. S. WEATHERBY,
State Reporter, Le Roy.

MAINE.

A BREEZY REPORT.

Our state president and the New England prize banner are safe home again and we are all glad, for we always feel half orphaned when Mrs. Stevens is out of the state for any length of time. Of course we have not felt the stimulus of the National Convention as much as last year, since, on account of the great distance, but few of our members could attend and the newspaper reports were limited. Mrs. Stevens sent the state press superintendent the Denver dailies from which she collected material for seventeen articles of varying length, sending them to leading papers in different parts of the state, and in almost every instance they were published. Many local press workers also sent notes on the Convention to their respective editors, so that those outside our society must at least know that there was a Convention.

A good Houlton sister sends a report of a union temperance concert recently held in that place so delightful and suggestive that I cannot do better than copy her description of it: "The concert was the plan of our local superintendent of temperance in Sunday-schools, Mrs. Maud Ingraham. Every Sunday-school in the city was represented, Baptist, Free Baptist, Congregationalist, Methodist, Catholic, Episcopalian, Presbyterian and Unitarian. Mrs. Ingraham had a conference with the superintendents of the different schools, and they gave her lists of their best speakers, and she asked them to speak for her in her concert. The singing was by the children from all the schools. The exercises began by the children marching around the hall and through the aisles, bearing very suggestive banners, among which were, 'Saloons must go,' 'For God and Home and Native Land,' etc. The smallest children came first in the march; the first ones were just little tots, but the size increased until at the end of the procession were full grown girls. They filed on to the platform and completely filled it. Such a beautiful sight it was, all those boys and girls looking so pure and bright and rosy! I am sure the very sight of them did good. They remained standing while a letter was read which had been written to them to be read at this concert by Mrs. Annie Bradbury, now of Milwaukee, Wis., and superintendent of juvenile work for that state, but formerly our own dear superintendent of juvenile work in Houlton. I wish you had space to tell some of the touching things in that letter as she told our boys and girls of the terrible rum curse of Milwaukee. The concert was a grand success. The Opera House, the largest auditorium in Houlton, was packed and the closest attention given throughout. More than $30 was taken in the collection, and all above the actual expenses sent to Mrs. Bradbury to help in her mission work in Milwaukee. In Houlton we feel that the liquor curse is a common foe, and we thank God that He put the thought of this concert into Mrs. Ingraham's heart, and that all the schools were so willing to coöperate. I wish there might be similar concerts all over the land."

For several years the Auburn union has conducted meetings at the county jail on the last Sabbath of each month. These meetings are of great interest. Perfect order prevails and the prisoners always give the closest attention. There have been a number of conversions among them. One man, who a year ago was in jail, is now helping the city missionary to hold gospel meetings in outlying districts. This man and his wife are both very intelligent and good singers (it was liquor that brought him into jail) and are now a great help in these meetings. Another interesting case is that of a Catholic prisoner who has recently come into the light and liberty of the gospel.

The union at Orono has accomplished a purpose for which it has worked with untiring zeal for the past two years. On the evening of November 23 they had the pleasure of opening a public library and reading-room. The library contains eight hundred well selected volumes. Many of the leading papers and magazines are to be found in the reading-room, and more are soon to be added.

Augusta white-ribboners recently struck a valiant blow for the observance of the Sabbath. A concert had been advertised to take place on Sunday evening in one of the halls, but on the previous Saturday afternoon the president and the superintendent of Sabbath observance presented the mayor a protest signed by the officers of the union. The mayor instructed the city marshal to use all lawful means to prevent the entertainment, and he ordered the janitor not to open the hall.

An incident occurred on Columbus Day in a certain Maine city which may be enjoyed by such of our Democratic friends as read THE UNION SIGNAL. As the long procession moved down the street one of our adopted citizens didn't understand what so much demonstration was for. A by-stander informed him that it was in honor of Christopher Columbus. "Co-lum bos, who is he?" inquired the foreigner. "Why, he was the man who discovered America 400 years ago," replied the obliging by stander. At this the foreigner began to look interested, and when at last the carriage containing the democratic mayor and ex mayor came in sight, his countenance fairly shone. Springing upon the curbstone, he swung his cap and shouted: "'Rah, he Democrat, 'rah, 'rah!" No doubt the Democrats do almost feel that they own the country just now, but this is probably the first time the claim has been made that it was discovered by one of their party. But some of the "strong minded" women standing near couldn't help thinking they were as well able to perform the duties of citizenship as a man who supposed Columbus was a noted Democrat.

MARY L. FRENCH,
State Reporter, Auburn.

KENTUCKY.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONVENTION.

The twelfth annual convention of the Kentucky W. C. T. U. was held in Newport, October 4, 5 and 6. The session was opened on Tuesday morning in the Christian church, which was indeed "a thing of beauty," decorated with its banners, flags and mottoes, and we noticed particularly the red, white and blue pledge-cards signed by the children of Newport. The ladies of Newport union met us with the cordiality that always characterizes the W. C. T. U. women, and the manner of entertainment left nothing to be desired. A bountiful lunch was served each day at headquarters. Programs, tied daintily with white ribbons, were provided for all, bearing upon the cover 1881–1892, and this for our encouragement: "For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach because we trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men."

The memorial service was very tender. During the year twelve members had gone to live in the "house not made with hands," and Newport counted herself poorer in the loss of Bertha Givan, who, as was said of Miss Ames, went away just when she was most beloved and would be most missed. Her life was full of sweet promises of usefulness, and truly of her could be said:

"She doeth little kindnesses
Which most leave undone or despise."

And we felt our hearts burn within us throughout that hour, and through the devotional exercises which opened with the Crusade psalm, and as each woman responded with something helpful and comforting.

A report of the credential committee showed fifty seven delegates, all the officers and thirteen superintendents present. Mrs. Henam, as superintendent of evangelistic work, Mrs. Beauchamp for the juvenile, Mrs. Dodge for social purity, Mrs. Sue Davis for railroad, and Mrs. Pope for mothers' meetings, and indeed all made reports which showed advancement and encouragement to still "go forward." This was especially true of Mrs. Beauchamp in her juvenile work. She has a zeal that knows no languor. Her motto, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might," is carried out in whatever she undertakes. Mrs. Dodge made an earnest plea for help in social purity work. She is an intelligent and sweet-spirited woman, calculated to do much good.

Mrs. Munnell gave a spirited report of flower mission work, and, as a token of appreciation of some good done, used during convention a gavel made by a prisoner in Frankfort penitentiary and sent to her with the request that it be so used.

The report of the corresponding secretary showed a healthy gain in membership. The treasurer reported $612 paid for dues. The county president's and school of methods superintendent's reports were good, and one encouraging feature is that the numbers are being increased from the ranks of women who are refined, cultivated and influential.

Miss Clay and others contributed much to the convention by their knowledge of parliamentry rules, and we indorse Miss Griffin and make our bow to her for the remark that it was a body of wide-awake, bright women, taken all in all.

Mrs. Munnell's address was beautiful in diction and helpful in suggestions. On motion, it was handed to the plan of work committee. Women are to be placed on school boards, and Miss Clay and Mrs. Beauchamp were appointed to aid in regard to houses of reform, for the benefit of children of incompetent parents.

Miss Clay moved: "That seeing the legal prohibition of the liquor traffic can only be effected by the will of the voter, and believing that as women are the worst sufferers from the traffic their preponderating voice will be against it, it is the sense of this convention that the time is ripe that the Kentucky W. C. T. U. labor to secure the ballot for women, and that accordingly it will take up the National department of franchise, and elect a superintendent to take charge of that work." This was fully and intelligently discussed, and adopted with an enthusiasm unmistakable. So if the brethren listen right sharp, they will hear a sound in the tree-tops. Mrs. Jones, of Newport, was appointed superintendent.

Telegrams of greeting from twelve states in convention were sent and received. Mrs. Munnell was reëlected president, and we greeted her with the same feeling that prompted another to say once of Miss Willard, "Our new president, our old president, our always president." Mrs. Munnell accepted with a few loving words from a very full heart. Mrs. Givens was reëlected corresponding secretary, then Mrs. Lizzie Myall, recording secretary, Mrs. M. E. Bryan, treasurer, and Mrs. Sue P Brown, vice president.

A number of visitors were presented to the convention, among them many ministers who almost all spoke in favor of woman suffrage. Two sweet old mothers in Israel, one sixty seven and the other seventy six represented the oldest temperance women in Kentucky. Miss Clay addressed the people on Tuesday evening, subject, "The woman and the law." She was warmly applauded. Miss Frances Griffin, of Alabama, spoke on Wednesday evening, "A byway to a highway," and Mrs. Woodbridge, our statesman, delighted and instructed her audience (and this closed the series of meetings) with "The nation's legacy to the next generation."

The welcoming addresses of the pastors of the Baptist and Christian churches and of Miss Morgan, for the local union, were sufficient to make us feel good and they did. Mrs. Givens responded on behalf of the delegates. The convention was the best one ever held, in point of numbers, interest and enthusiasm, and the benefit given and received through knowing each other will help us through the year "as new occasions" teach us new duties.

As superintendent of press work I would ask the unions to please send me reports of work and I promise to send the same on to THE UNION SIGNAL.

NELLIE SLOY,
State Reporter, Lebanon.

AN L. T. L. started at Mannington, W. Va., last July, now numbers thirty three boys and girls, the result of faithful work.

REV. C. H. ST. JOHN has just returned from work in Iowa to his home at Topeka, Kan. Mrs. St. John, who has been ill for the past two months, is now recovering.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

INLAY CITY, Mich., W. C. T. U. is much pleased with the recent lecture delivered there by Mrs. Weeks.

MRS. ANNA R. SIMMONS, vice-president of South Dakota W. C. T. U., has removed to Aberdeen, South Dakota.

MRS. ATKINSON, who died recently at Moline, Ill., willed to the Moline W. C. T. U. eight hundred dollars, the interest on this amount to be used in the prosecution of the local work.

THE Nebraska Woman's Suffrage Association have announced prizes for an essay contest on political equality topics, full particulars regarding which can be had by writing Mrs. M. E. Smith Hayward, Chadron, Neb.

THE Woman's Columbian Association of northern Ohio, said to be one of the best in the whole circle of associations of its kind, has called to its presidency Mrs. Mary B. Ingham, of Cleveland, a white-ribboner, and leader of the Temperance Crusade of that city in 1874.

MISS R. ANNA MORRIS, who has again been elected Iowa's state superintendent of physical education, has been successfully presenting this important subject to the residents of the Pacific coast. Her book on this subject has been placed in every school in San Francisco.

MRS. STODDARD writes regarding the error in the telegram read at the National Convention, from Dr. J. B. Cranfill. Rev. 9:6, not 19:6, was his message to the Convention. Referring to the verse read, Dr. Cranfill remarked to her laughingly, "I don't want to die, and the Prohibition party never will die."

MRS. JANE STAPLER, president of the Indian Territory W. C. T. U., states that the sale of Jamaica ginger—90 per cent of which is alcohol—in the territory is large; but on account of the poverty of their unions, evidence sufficient to convict for violation of law cannot be collected. Mrs. Stapler asks: "Will not every state help us by the contribution of two or three dollars to secure these violators of the law?"

THE ladies of the Elsah, Ill., W. C. T. U. went last month in a body to register. The privilege was at first refused, but the refusal was afterwards apologized for by the county clerk. On election day they demanded the right to vote. No printed ballots could at first be "found" but they were finally supplied with the Prohibition ballots they desired and deposited them. Persistent endeavor will win in the end.

MR. JOHN HIPP, of Denver, who was Colorado's nominee for Prohibition governor, spoke at Greeley recently for the W. C. T. U., receiving forty-five active and honorary members. He also organized a union at Brighton with fifteen active and five honorary members, of which the following is the most excellent corps of officers: President, Miss Carrie Draper; recording secretary, Mrs. A. E. Abrahams; corresponding secretary, Miss May E. Gibson; treasurer, Mrs. S. Z. Upton.

THE Massachusetts W. C. T. U. are waging a vigorous no-license campaign towards which, it will be remembered, their good friend, Henry H. Faxon, contributed one thousand dollars. The literature which they are distributing includes three telling dodgers, entitled, "Why should I Vote No?" "Why should I Vote Yes?" and "Vote for Me," the latter being a touching poem by Mrs. Katharine Lente Stevenson. The hearts of all white ribboners are with them in their earnest endeavors.

THE twelfth district of Michigan W. C. T. U. met in convention at Marquette, October 18 to 20, Mrs. E. N. Law, the president, in the chair, and forty-seven delegates in attendance. The weather was all that could be desired, the church appropriately decorated, the delegates charmed by the kindly greeting of the Marquette sisters, imbued with the spirit of love, and full of enthusiasm and energy. Miss Frances Griffin, of Alabama, was present the last day and delighted an attentive audience by her spicy and wise answers to a question-box, delivering a masterly address in the evening to a large audience.

AT the McKean county teachers' institute held at Smethport, Pa., recently, when the question, "The best mode of hiring teachers" was discussed, one of the school directors, Charles A. Thropp, of Otto township said, "I believe in giving women the same chance in all the pursuits of life that men have; that they should have an equal right to engage in any and all the occupations of men, and that they should receive the same compensation for the same achievements that men receive. Equality of rights is the first of rights." Mrs. E. E. Brown is the only lady director in the county, and is the president of the Otto township school board.

THE following is sent us by a correspondent and may give a hint to other country unions how to remove the bar from a country hotel when opportunity affords: "There is a hotel in our small village which has been a menace to the peace and safety of the people for many years. The proprietor of the hotel died and his wife who had two grown sons, determined to continue the business. The W. C. T. U. saw its opportunity and with other good citizens pledged themselves to patronize the house by buying domestic cooking and ice cream as well as tropical fruits from the carts driven by the sons provided no liquor was sold. The mother now keeps a comfortable home and not a degraded rum drinker's lodging house."

CORTLAND union, at Sherman, out on the frontier of Eastern Washington, is composed entirely of farmers' wives, mothers, daughters and sisters living remote from any city. It was organized September, 1891, and holds fortnightly meetings, from house to house. The question, "What Next?" suggested by THE UNION SIGNAL, came up at a recent meeting and the general answer was to make a greater effort to have every woman in the land become a white-ribboner, and thus make every home center pure and helpful. With all the generosity and helpfulness of the western pioneer, this union reaches out beyond itself and bestows its mite upon all the great National W. C. T. U. enterprises. Their advice to farmers' wives is, "Organize W. C. T. Unions among yourselves."

Official Communications.

DEPARTMENT OF LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

It is earnestly hoped that the following suggestion made by one of our National L. T. L. workers may be promptly received and acted upon by each L. T. L. company: That Crusade Day, December 23, be made the occasion for our boys and girls to hold a gift service in anticipation of Christmas. On this day shall be appointed a special L. T. L. meeting to which each child shall be requested to bring a gift of a toy, book, fruit or other article, for distribution to those who might otherwise know little of Christmas joy. At this meeting plans should be made for distributing the gifts, and committees, consisting as largely as practicable of the young people, should be appointed. The children's gifts might receive additions in the following manner: Ask some obliging storekeeper to allow a hamper to be placed in some conspicuous place in his store a few days before December 23; over this hamper hang a card with such an inscription as this printed upon it: "All dropping Christmas gifts into this hamper will give the Loyal Temperance Legion the joy of distributing, and some needy ones the joy of receiving, these gifts." In private homes and institutions the Legioners might leave behind not only the gifts but the echo of some of their beautiful temperance songs.

We hope many of our boys and girls will write cheery "pillow letters," with Christmas cards inclosed, for the sick children in homes and hospitals to find and enjoy on Christmas morning.

The special regret of our beloved Miss Anna Gordon in the necessity of being absent from her native land for the next few months, was the fact that during that time her plans for the children's part in the Columbian Exposition must be carried on to their completion. The least that we, as state, district, county and local workers can do for Miss Gordon, who has done such grand service for our L. T. L. department through her "Questions Answered," her "Marching Songs," and in numberless other ways, is to put forth our utmost endeavor towards perfecting her plans. Let us in the months that remain pile up the autograph cards for the chain, the dimes for the fountain, and the articles for the sale table, to an extent that shall surprise and gladden our esteemed co worker.

HELEN G. RICE,
Nat. Supt. Loyal Temperance Legion.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL NOTES.

A bequest left to the hospital by Mrs. Sarah Pennock, late of Philadelphia, Pa., has been received. This true-hearted Christian woman knew that "They serve God who serve His creatures," and her deeds live after her.

An operation known to the medical profession as laparotomy, with many complications, some of which were exceedingly critical, has been performed at the hospital. It is now the fourth week since the operation and the physician and nurse pronounce the patient to be ont of danger. Her spirit hovered near to the border line, and yet no alcoholic stimulant was administered to sustain the weakened vitality.

Emma Tilden, a little girl twelve years of age, suffering with curvature of the spine, and threatened with paralysis of the lower extremities, is undergoing a thorough treatment at the hospital and is gaining strength in every way. Though the treatment has been severe, she has been patient through it all, and has enjoyed the books, papers and games that have been sent to the hospital by children from various parts of the country. This little girl, though a Swede, is a great reader, and when she has nothing else the hymns furnish her entertainment. The child's invalid chair has been a great comfort to her.

A little boy has undergone a surgical operation and the bandages sent in by the children's societies have been of use, for many of these have been needed.

Another of the critical cases that has been operated on at the hospital lately, has been the removal of a cancer. The patient is doing nicely and feels that her life has been spared.

Blankets instead of quilts are needed and any kind friends intending to send bed furnishings should bear this in mind. Any one sending a box should mark the sender's name in some way, so that the matron can acknowledge the receipt of it. ELLEN SNYDER, Sec.

TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL BUILDING FUND.

Florida—Highland: Mrs. E. J. Mayhew, $5.
Illinois—Morris: Mrs. D. Skidmore, $5. Chicago: Mrs. M. S. Embree, $25; Miss Leadbetter, $2; Mrs. M. A. Morse, $1; Mrs. M. W. Mabbs, $5; Mr. J. Mabbs, $5; Mr. J. W. Mabbs, $5; Collected by Mrs. M. E. Andrews, $54; Collected by Mrs. Hornby, $2.40; Mr. R. B. Arnold, $6. Dover: W. C. T. U., sent by Mrs. Wilkins, $25. Hennepin: H. J. M. and M. Carson, $5. Robinson: Rev. Mrs. Young, 50 cents; Glen Ellyn: Mrs. Emma Lloyd, $50. Moline: Mrs. L. D. Bearby, $5. Morrison: by Nellie M. Hawse, $5. Du Quoin: W. C. T. U., $5. Grand Crossing: Y's, $10. Wheaton: Mrs. M. A. Wahelee, $10. Bristol: W. C. T. U., by L. C. G., $2. Hennepin: A. E. W., "In memory of mother," $5. Pana: Rounds W. C. T. U., $10. Stillman Valley: Mrs. Ann Freeman, $5. Morrison: Mrs. M. E. Dubridge, 50 cents. Crawford: Miss A. M. Denmer, 50 cents.
Iowa—W. C. T. U. by Miss Pugh, $100; Danville: Ida B. Mix, $5.
Indiana—Michigan City: Mrs. J. B. Halliston, $1.
Kansas—Clifton: W. C. T. U., $2.
Kentucky—Pine Grove: W. C. T. U., $5.
Minnesota—Vernox Center: by Miss Pugh, $10.
New York—Ransomville: Mrs. M. G. Crosby, $5. Haraman: Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Hopkins, $10. La Grange: W. C. T. U., by Mrs. V. M. C., $12.67. Homer: Collected by E. S., $10.
Ohio—Hillsboro: Mrs. E. Thompson, $1.
Pennsylvania—Pulaski: Mrs. H. B. Reno, $1.
Vermont—Montpelier: Department of H. and H., $60. Pawlet: By Mrs. Hornby, $2.
Bank interest, $9.10.

ELLEN SNYDER, Sec. C. E. BIGELOW, Custodian.

Our Library Table.

Ready for Christmas is a book full of the yule tide spirit—the spirit of Christ. It is CHILD'S CHRIST TALES; the author, Andrea Hofer. The tales are brief, detached, within the easy grasp of a child's comprehension, but nothing lacking to his ever deep hunger of the beautiful and the true. Some of the stories are of the child Jesus, and others are after the style of that rare German lore that weaves for this special season winsome stories based upon the holy life of the Child of Bethlehem. The book is beautifully illustrated, from Murillo, Correggio, and other well known masters; bound in cloth with appropriate Christmas decorations of holly, green on a gray background.

Published at the Temperance Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

A choice sample package of literature published by the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union for the British Empire has reached our library table. It contains SURSUM CORDA, an address by that vigorous worker and clear thinker, Josephine E. Butler. THE NEW HOPE, an eloquent appeal to women, in whom, says the author, Mary A. Ward Poole, "lies the 'New Hope' God has inspired in us for the world's need." A WIDER OUTLOOK and WOMAN'S WORK FOR A SOBER ENGLAND, in whose pages the reader recognizes the large faith and strong purpose of the author, Lady Henry Somerset. CHARACTER BUILDING, a beautiful analysis of this finest of all the arts, by Miss Helen L. Hood. A PLEA FOR TEMPERANCE UNITY is a ringing call from Rev. Canon Wilberforce. TEMPERANCE AS IT AFFECTS WOMEN OF THE UPPER AND MIDDLE CLASSES is a comprehensive view of the subject by the Duchess of Bedford.

These are a few of the leaflet publications at British Headquarters, Albany Buildings, 47 Victoria Street, Westminster, London, S. N.

THE SILVER CROSS CALENDAR for 1893 is more beautiful than any of its predecessors and will stand a fair show of distancing most, if not all souvenirs of this class, by its unique and exquisitely chaste design. It is printed in dainty colors on parchment paper, mounted on a roller and hung with white silken cord and tassels. On the first page Mary Lowe Dickinson greets the wide circle of King's children in these words:

"As ancient monk of old in convent cell,
Searched 'neath the 'lumined missal's burning lines
For hint of God's great heart of living love;
And seeking, found all peace and grace and power.
So, searching in this treasure house of grace,
This missal, 'lumined by His Spirit's light,
May we, the countless children of the King,
See in each sacred word our Lord's own face."

Each month has devoted to it one page, on which is the calendar for the month, and under a topic for thought and study, are Scripture references carefully classified, a suitable selection in prose or verse completing the page. The arrangement, coloring and design make one think of the ancient "'lumined missals." On the last page is the year's full calendar, with the list of church days and their dates.

Published by the Central Council of The International Order of the King's Daughters and Sons. 158 West 23d street, New York City.

THROUGH ARCTICS AND TROPICS. Around the World by a New Path for a New Purpose. By Harry W. French.

Mr. French has been all over the world, and has passed through experiences which do not fall to the lot of ordinary men; so that he is fully equipped by his knowledge of many countries and people to write such a book as the above. Two sturdy New England boys, seventeen years of age, are the heroes of this book. The story is intensely interesting from beginning to end; and the illustrations on nearly every page bring the various scenes vividly before the reader. Scott Campbell, one of the young heroes, says: "We have driven the dogs in their sledges in Greenland, the reindeer in their poulkas in Lapland, the cobs in carjols in Norway, three horses abreast in a hayrick in Russia, and camels on the Syrian desert, but whoever thought of riding in a horse car in Bangkok or crossing Siam on a bicycle?" They traverse forty-one thousand, two hundred and sixty miles, through Arctics and Tropics, in the course of their year's journeyings, and have a royally good time in spite of some perilous adventures. But the story has a value beyond its mere attractiveness, in the accurate and interesting information it gives of the scenery, social customs and general mode of life of different nations the world over. The book will be eagerly welcomed by all who are looking for a genuinely absorbing yet wholesome story for young people.

D. Lothrop Company, Boston.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

A Powerful Flesh Maker.

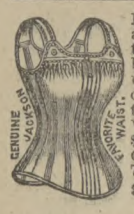
A process that kills the taste of cod-liver oil has done good service—but the process that both kills the taste and effects partial digestion has done much more.

Scott's Emulsion

stands alone in the field of fat-foods. It is easy of assimilation because partly digested before taken.

Scott's Emulsion checks Consumption and all other wasting diseases.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, Chemists, New York. Sold by druggists everywhere.



Recommended for Comfort, Support and Fine Form. Combines best features of Corset and Waist. Much worn by women and misses unable to bear a rigorous garment. Snug fitting, beautifully made. Warranted. Equal to any $1.25 Waist. White, Drab, Gold, Black. Genuine marked CCC. 7,000 dealers sell it. Sent post paid for

Jackson Favorite Waist.

$1. CORONET CORSET CO. JACKSON, Michigan.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations. NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

PLAYS WIGS, Beards, Make-up materials and all necessary supplies for amateur theatricals, entertainments, masquerades, etc. Catalogues sent free. Barrow & Palmer, 116 Monroe St., CHICAGO

Enameline STOVE POLISH THE MODERN

Ready for use. Applied with a Cloth. LITTLE Labor, NO Dust, NO Odor. The BEST and MOST ECONOMICAL Stove Polish in the World. Sold everywhere. Sample mailed FREE. J. L. Prescott & Co., Box B, No. Berwick, Me.

NO MONEY WANTED IN ADVANCE

EXAMINATION FREE. A WONDERFUL OFFER.

$20.00 OUTFIT FOR $5.65.

READ We have bought at a forced sale for CASH, the entire lot of over 2,000 handsome cases of Silverware at LESS THAN ONE-THIRD the cost to make them. You can have one case for less than half the cost to make. JUST THINK! A handsome large plush and satin ornamented and decorated silver case (case retails at $5.00, and you can't imagine from the picture how beautiful it is) and the following described extra heavy plated silverware of a very high grade, made of heavy plates of coin silver over hard inner metal and fully warranted, viz: 6 Table Knives, 6 Forks, 6 Table Spoons, 6 Tea Spoons, 1 Butter Knife, 1 Sugar Shell and 1 Napkin Ring, (a place arranged in the beautiful plush and satin tray for each piece). The silver alone being of such high quality would be VERY cheap at retail for $15.00, or the complete case a bargain at $20.00.

OUR OFFER Cut this advertisement out and send to us immediately and we will send the complete outfit to you by express C. O. D. subject to examination (all express charges paid by us). You can examine it at express office, and if satisfactory PAY THE EXPRESS AGENT, $5.65 and take the regular $20 outfit. Order at once, there is only 2000 of them. Address ALVAH MFG. CO., 170 W. Van Buren St., Chicago, Ill.

CANADIAN EXCURSIONS VIA WABASH RAILROAD.

The Wabash Railroad, in connection with the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk from Detroit, will run a series of cheap holiday excursions from Chicago to Canadian points, leaving Chicago December 20, 21 and 22. Tickets will be good returning until January 10, 1893.

For railroad and sleeping car tickets, and full information, apply at City Ticket Office, 201 Clark St., or write F. A. Palmer, Asst. Gen. Pass. Agt., Chicago.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " " 3 months	.25
" " " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

A SPLENDID OFFER.

After careful deliberation it has been decided to make the following very liberal offer to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL:

Fully believing that it would be one of the greatest aids to our cause, as has been said again and again in these columns, if THE UNION SIGNAL were more generally read, and being unable to personally canvass all the territory of all the local unions, nearly 10,000 of which are scattered over this country, and desiring your help in this direction, the proposition here outlined is made to all ages and sexes. It is a very fine opportunity for you to secure a valuable and beautiful New Year's gift, if you do not secure it before Christmas.

NOTE.—To any one, young or old, readers of "Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner" included, who will send us a club of eight new subscribers at one dollar each, we will forward promptly one of our beautiful W. C. T. U. solid silver after-dinner coffee souvenir spoons. These spoons have the die of the Crusade Church at Hillsboro, Ohio, imprinted in the bowl; Miss Willard's picture embowered in the National floral emblem, the trailing arbutus, on the handle, while the top of the handle is surmounted by the world belted with the white ribbon. The back of the handle has the World's floral emblem, the water lily, and the initials of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. It is both beautiful and valuable, being of solid sterling silver.

REMEMBER, we will send an after dinner coffee spoon, polished or oxidized, for eight subscribers at one dollar a year.

FOR TEN subscribers at one dollar each, we will send a similar spoon with gilded bowl.

FOR TWELVE subscribers we will send a tea spoon of the same design, or with the Temple in the bowl, instead of the Crusade Church.

FOR FIFTEEN subscribers at one dollar each, we will send a teaspoon with gilded bowl.

FOR EIGHTEEN subscribers at one dollar each we will send an orange spoon, polished or oxidized, with the Temple or the Crusade Church in the bowl.

FOR TWENTY subscribers at one dollar each, we will send an orange spoon with gilded bowl.

This offer is open until January 1st, 1893.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The "Junior Partners" is finding favor everywhere. Remember it is a book for business men and when they have read it they want their wives and children to read it. It is sold by subscription only or sent from this office on mail orders. Agents wanted. Splendid terms. Apply to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE responsive reading for December, "Looking Backward," is by Miss Alice M. Guernsey. It is very practical. A one cent stamp will bring you a copy, so that you can judge for yourselves.

All who desire the complete report of the Denver Convention should send for a file of THE DAILY UNION SIGNAL. We have a limited number and while they last will send full set on receipt of 25c.

REMEMBER, the first number contains Miss Willard's annual adrdess in full.

COLUMBUS

Will be ready to entertain you and show you "what he found" by December 20th. Send $1 with your invitation to call. He will be a charming visitor.

YOU NEED

A set of bound leaflets for reference, that you may carefully select for special occasions and be ready with the "word in season." We send them for just the price of the loose leaflets. Here is the list:

Timely Talks	$ .15
Signal Lights	.05
Gospel Lights	.03
Total Abstinence	.05
Teachers' Series	.10
Suffrage	.07
Temperance and Labor	.05
Mothers' Meetings (Purity)	.10
Home Leaflets	.25
Social Purity Series	.30
White Cross Series	.30
Loyal Leaflets	.15
Evangelistic Series	.10
Y. W. C. T. U. Series	.03
L. T. L. Series	.03
Local Union Helps	.15

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Reduced from $2.00 to $1.00 a year.

RURAL NEW-YORKER

For 42 years the foremost agricultural newspaper, it will, in 1893, be better, livelier, brighter, more practical, more valuable than ever.

$10,000

$5,000 in cash and "special" premiums, to be given to subscribers only for work performed; $5,000 in new seeds and plants for all subscribers, not otherwise obtainable. Only $1.00 a year.

Send for free specimen copy.

The Rural Publishing Co., Times Bldg, N. Y.

DO YOU INTEND TO VISIT THE WORLD'S FAIR?

IF SO, send us your name and address, and we will explain to you how you can visit THE FAIR AT THE LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENSE, while increasing the pleasure of the same. Separate department for ladies.

Address at once

THE VISITOR'S GUIDE AND AID ASSOCIATION, 116 & 118 La Salle St., CHICAGO, ILL.

From $35

WE DO IT EVERY TIME! Save you from $50 to $200

HOW DO WE DO IT?

We sell from our factory at wholesale prices direct to the public, saving them all agents' and dealers' exorbitant profits. We are doing a marvellous business. One thousand Pianos and Organs per month. WONDERFUL, but true! To prove it, send for our new catalogue, illustrated in colors. It is FREE to any address. Examine it, and you will see that we are selling at prices that are simply WONDERFULLY LOW. We have now some of the finest styles of Organs and Pianos ever manufactured. Our new catalogue shows all the latest. Our twenty-sixth annual special offers are now ready. We have bargains in all styles and at all prices. Organs from $35. Pianos from $175, for cash or on easy payment. We have the largest direct trade in the world. We have a larger factory and employ more men than any firm doing a direct business. You can visit our factory FREE if you live within 200 miles of us.

ORGANS and PIANOS For CASH and on EASY PAYMENTS

...NOTE...

We are absolutely responsible for all our contracts.

REFERENCES: First National Bank, and all the great Commercial Agencies.

From $175

NO SATISFACTION, NO PAY! All instruments shipped on free trial warranted for ten years.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE AT ONCE TO

CORNISH & CO. Old Established & Reliable Washington, NEW JERSEY.

DON'T BECOME DISCOURAGED.

—TRY—

AERATED OXYGEN.

THE FIRST. THE LAST.

The first gasp of the babe is for air,—the last gasp of the aged is for air,—and all life between these extremes goes on by breathing.

Pure air means good health. Bad air makes bad blood, poor health, misery. Pure air makes people better. AERATED OXYGEN is an everyday blessing of germless air, a powerful antiseptic, and a cure for Catarrh, Lung Troubles and Nerve Waste.

Home Office,

AERATED OXYGEN COMPOUND CO.,

NASHUA, N. H.

Chicago Office: 3 & 4 CENTRAL MUSIC HALL.

New York Office: 19 BEEKMAN STREET.

WALL PAPER The select colorings and designs of the season, 100 samples for 8 cts. A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St., Philadelphia.

☞ For 6 cts. postage and addresses of ten friends, the Housekeeper's Weekly, 14 N. 9th, Phila., sends FREE a supply of safety cases for mailing coins, and one number of that charming magazine. MARION HARLAND is chief contributor.

MAGIC LANTERNS And STEREOPTICONS, all prices. Views illustrating every subject for PUBLIC EXHIBITIONS, etc. ☞ A profitable business for a man with small capital. Also Lanterns for Home Amusement. 236 page Catalogue free. McALLISTER, Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

$12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.

OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, Ill.

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL in your own home. First class Sewing Machines shipped anywhere to anyone at wholesale prices. All latest improvements. Warranted five years. Complete set of attachments FREE. Send for catalogue. Standard Singer Machines, $9.50 to $15.50 850 Arlington Sewing Machine for $19.50 800 Kenwood Sewing Machine for $22.50

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 160 W. Van Buren St. B 26 Chicago.

CANCER HAVE NEVER FAILED To Effect a PERMANENT CURE Where We Have Had the First or Reasonable Opportunity for Treatment. References and complete information free.

THE BERKSHIRE HILLS SANITORIUM. CANCER

Drs. W. E. Brown & Son, North Adams, Mass.

$4.50 HUNTING CASE GENT'S OR LADIES SIZE FREE

A fine 14k gold plated watch to every reader of this paper. Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address, and we will send you one of these elegant richly jeweled gold finished watches by express for examination, and if you think it is equal in appearance to any $25.00 gold watch, pay our sample price, $4.50, and it is yours. We send with the watch our guarantee that you can return it at any time within one year if not satisfactory, and if you sell or cause the sale of six we will give you One Free. Write at once as we shall send out samples for sixty days only.

THE NATIONAL M'F'G & IMPORTING CO., 334 Dearborn Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

THE BEST DRINKING PLACE.

BY MARY L. WYATT.

On a pleasant day in the early fall
A stranger rode into the town,
And stopping his horse in the public square
Glanced this way and that with a frown,
For the place that he sought he could not find,
(Saloons had been banished that year)
So he called to a lad who passed that way,
And said to him, "Sonny, come here,

"Here's a nickel for you to show the way
To the best drinking place you know."
"All right!" he answered—a quick-witted youth,
"Just turn up that street, sir, and go,
Till you come to another upon your right,
Then turn into that and keep on,
Till you come to another, turn right again,
And you'll see it quite plainly," said John.

So, thanking the lad, the stranger rode off,
And John gave a hop, skip and jump.
For back came the stranger within a trice,
Brought up—at the old town pump!
"Here you are, sir," said John with a smile,
"The best 'drinking place' to be found,
Take a drink, sir, it's free, and you're welcome, too,
It's good for your health, I'll be bound!"

He took the glass in a good natured way,
And drank of the water clear,
Then said, "'Tis an excellent drink, I'm sure,
The best I've had for a year."
So saying, he tossed the lad a coin,—
"The lesson is worth that to me,
Keep on playing your temperance joke
'Twill make the world better," said he.

West Medford, Mass.

VOTE FOR ME.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

"Say, papa, how are you going to vote?"
'Twas a child's bright word and he could not note
How the red blood mantled his father's face
As he clasped the wee one in close embrace;
But he prattled on in his childish glee,
"Say, papa, why won't you vote for me?"

Out of the door strode the father fast,
And never a glance behind him cast,
As on to his place at the polls he went;
But the words the boy spoke were surely meant
By God above to follow him there,
For they haunted his steps like a mother's prayer.

"Vote for me, papa," the bells rang out;
"Vote for me," sounded the school-boy's shout;
"Vote for me" came from the rum seller's door
In the oaths he had never thus heard before;
At last, with a smile he whispered low,
"If I vote for my boy I can vote only, No."

Boston, Mass.

O INE SAN.

BY ADELAIDE DAUGHADAY.

(Concluded.)

Pilgrimages are not made solely with the idea of worshiping at famous spots, they are taken quite as much for pleasure and curiosity. The springtime, when the fruit blossoms appear, is the favorite time for pilgrimages Large parties are formed of men, women and children old enough to bear the fatigue of walking day after day for weeks, sometimes months. These great companies, often dressed in white and wearing immense straw hats, not equipped with scrip, staff and scallop-shell, but with fans, paper umbrellas and blankets, go from town to town, not only visiting the noted temples, but seeing the interesting sights by the way, yet always having some Japanese Mecca as the ultimate point to be reached. Ise is one of the most popular of these, and it is beautiful. The great camphor tree groves of Yamada, and the wonderful charm of the sea, mountains and picturesque rocks of Futami tempt the worshipers of the beautiful of all faiths and nationalities to make the journey.

"The groves were God's first temples." The sacred stillness, broken only by the songs of birds and murmur of brooks, and the dim lights of these grand old woods should incite in the heart of even the most careless tourist thoughts of "God, the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth." No wonder, then, to these untutored, beauty-loving people these should seem to be sacred places, the appropriate abodes of their numerous divinities. The cherry and peach orchards, in all the glory of pink and white loveliness, and the flowers of the rape covering the fields with a cloth of gold add very much to the pleasures on the way of these pilgrimages.

Footsore but happy-hearted were O Ine San and her parents when they returned to their home; they had seen wonderful sights, gained a world of new ideas, and had the sweet satisfaction of believing they had accumulated a vast amount of merit to offset sins past, present and future.

O Ine San's father was of a quiet, reflective turn of mind, and often when fashioning wood and stone representations of men and animals, this thought would present itself to him—"How strange it is that this thing my hand is forming, which shall be large or small, pleasing or grotesque, according as I will, is some day to become an object of worship. I can destroy it if I wish, and it cannot help itself, yet human beings shall yet seek for comfort, aid and protection from this lifeless object. Is there not something higher, greater than this to satisfy the wants of the human soul?"

Thus was he, though in great spiritual darkness, feeling after God. It chanced one day—"Eternal God that chance did guide"—that while passing through a crowded thoroughfare the sound of singing in a peculiar looking building that was neither house nor shop attracted his attention. "I will step inside and see what kind of a show this is," he thought. At the door a Japanese man very kindly invited him to enter and listen. A Japanese always quickly responds to politeness, so, pleased at the attention, he accepted an offered seat. After the singing there followed a prayer to what was to him an "unknown God," whose name he was now hearing for the first time; then came a sermon that he could not understand, so new and strange was the doctrine set forth. Completely mystified, he rose to leave, fearing he would be bewitched, but was followed to the door by the same man whose courtesy had prevailed upon him to enter. The man said: "This is a church, and we worship but one God, named Jesus. His doctrine is one of love for himself and for all men. There will be a prayer-meeting here to-morrow night. Please come."

All the next day he revolved these things in his mind, and full of superstitious fears decided not to go again. but in the evening curiosity overcame all scruples, and he again listened to the "Jesus Way." But the "natural man cannot discern the things of God," and he returned more perplexed than before. Simple-hearted, earnest believers had noticed him, however, and not only renewed the invitation to "come again," but asked for his address, and the next evening one called to invite him to attend a great preaching service to be held in a theatre, it being the largest building available.

Becoming deeply interested he now sought the Christians for help in his mental bewilderment. Gradually light dawned, and then followed a perfect blaze of spiritual illumination. Like Saul of Tarsus, it was revealed to him "what great things he must suffer" for Jesus. At once his business was given up, friends at first ridiculed then forsook him. During the long time which elapsed before he could obtain employment, one by one the household treasures, pretty lacquer dishes, and the best clothes of the family were pawned, but these trials only developed his faith which was at last rewarded by help coming at the darkest hour. For the next few years his spiritual life was characterized by steady growth and Christian activity, and the souls of not only those of his own household, but many others were given to him as seals of his sonship.

But again troubles gathered about him, yet, although sorely afflicted, so deep and constant was the "joy of the Lord" that unbelievers marveled at the power that sustained him. In his former occupation the fine particles of stone, as he chipped the blocks to fashion his idols, had injured his eyes so he became blind. Their pleasant home was given up and he could do nothing but push a little cart before him selling small wares, O Ine San directing his footsteps. Meekly, uncomplainingly, almost joyfully, he bore his reverses, but at last fell ill and died. Christian Japanese and missionaries came to the relief of the family. A home was offered to the widow and little blind Tatsu, while O Ine San was received into a mission boarding school, where now she is an efficient, Christian teacher, entirely supporting the little sister to whom she is devoted.

LITTLE boy (pointing to window of rubber store)—What's them? Mamma—Those are diving suits made all of rubber, so the diver won't get wet. Little boy—I wish I had one. Mamma—Why, what for, my dear? Little boy—To wear when you wash me.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—I want to say just a word this week to those who have written such nice letters to the Cozy Corner, and which have not yet been published. That means many hundred of you. Your letters have all been carefully read and treasured. You cannot write too often, and especially when you have such words as these to say: "I am a temperance boy or girl," "I am going to do all I can for temperance" or "I like the Cozy Corner." Our little corner has proved quite too small to publish even a small part of your letters, but do not be discouraged if your first letter has not been printed. Your second or third letter may have something of great interest to the Cozy Corner circle and is sure to be warmly welcomed

By your

Aunt Jane

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

We go to the Band of Hope and we enjoy it very much. I have just seen a letter from Lady Henry Somerset in which she speaks about the cards signed by the temperance children which are to be festooned around the temperance section of the World's Fair, and she invites English children to sign them. I mean to show the letter, so that all our Band of Hope may sign. I hope to visit America some day, and you may be sure I will visit the beautiful Temple. ANNIE EDINA WILSON.

29 Hartington Place, Edinburgh, Scotland.

We are glad to receive this letter from our Scottish cousin and to welcome her to our Cozy Corner circle which extends clear round the world.

I am nine years old. I have no brothers nor sisters. I like to read the Cozy Corner letters. Mamma is a member of the W. C. T. U. Papa is a Prohibitionist. I love to go to school. FLORENCE P. BUTLER.

Newark, Del.

The brothers and sisters of the Cozy Corner give you a hearty greeting, Florence.

Here is a sentence for Cousin Mollie's game: Anna's bright composition dwelled earnestly, faithfully, giving helpful instruction, joy, kindness, loving memories, new opinions, persuading quietly, reasonable science; to understand various works yielding zealousness. I am a little girl ten years of age and am corresponding secretary of our L. T. L. GERTIE D. STEVENS.

Lyons, Ind.

That is an excellent sentence from the dear little L. T. L.

I am a Prohibitionist, and wish that boys could vote. I have a type writer, and like to write with it better than with a pen. I send you an alphabetical sentence which grandma made for me: A big cat did enter, familiarly, grandma's house, in June, killed little mouse near our professor's quadrant, ran straight toward uncle's valuable wardrobe, yowling zealously. JESSE A. HESELTINE.

Alfred Center, N. Y.

Grandma's sentence tells quite a story. We are delighted to see such an interest in Cousin Mollie's game.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

130.

CROSSWORD ENIGMA.

My first is in laugh but not in cry,
My second's in look but not in spy,
My third is in vale but not in hill,
While my fourth is in dress and not in frill.
My whole is the greatest thing in the world; how many, I wonder, know this word? CAROLINE L. HAWKE.

131.

HIDDEN RIVERS.

1. The miss is sipping her tea.
2. We miss our Ida.
3. Do not encumber land with that poor building.
4. The ogre entered his den.
5. Did you see those yellow stones in the bed of the river? "FRISCO."

132.

NUMERICAL ENIGMA.

My whole is composed of 29 letters.
My 13, 2, 6, 4, is a fastening for clothing.
My 19, 21, 29 is to unite.
My 24, 25, 27, 14, is to grow weary.
My 15, 16, 11, 28, is an intoxicating drink.
My 9, 8, 22, is a kind of wit.
My 5, 3, 12, 18, is a character in music.
My 1, 10, 7, 20, is unwilling.
My 26, 23, 17 is what we should not do.
My whole is a verse in the Bible. M. P. S.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED NOVEMBER 24.

122. BeeT; squasH; salAd; craNberry sauce; turKey; Soup; dressinG; chIcken; graVy; pIe; Nuts; fiGs: THANKSGIVING.

(Continued from page 5.)

white-ribboners, and were delighted to see how many departments of work they had taken up. Many of these women have heavy household cares—for the question of domestic service is almost as trying and unsettled here as in the United States—yet these Australian women plan large things for our beloved cause in addition to the conscientious fulfillment of home duties. It is not surprising, therefore, that the W. C. T. U. has wonderfully extended its borders in Victoria, so that the corresponding secretary was able to report at the last annual convention—its fourth anniversary—an increase of twenty-seven new unions and fifteen new Y's during the year, with a complete total of eighty-eight, and a membership of three thousand two hundred and fifty; this year twenty-one new unions have been added to the list. The following departments are carried on: Press, drawing-room meetings, lockup and jail visitation, Y. W. C. T. U., peace and arbitration, juvenile work, rescue work and midnight missions, heredity, hygiene and narcotics, scientific instruction, foreign correspondence, ship visiting, work among cabmen, railway employés and soldiers, hospital visitation, evangelistic work, Scripture instruction in state schools, social purity, woman's franchise, church and Sunday school and unfermented wine.

The women of Victoria circulated and presented two petitions to the legislative assembly last year: One to obtain the passage of the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, raising the age of consent from twelve to sixteen, which bore over three hundred signatures of physicians and philanthropists: and the other, pleading for equal suffrage rights in behalf of women, with thirty thousand signatures. The age of consent was raised to sixteen by the passing of the law above referred to; woman's franchise was defeated, but there is great enthusiasm in regard to the measure, and it is believed that it will soon be an accomplished fact.

It is a pleasant sight to the eyes of white-ribboners to behold the huge lettering on the outer wall of the brick building, No. 28 Russell street, Melbourne, used as colonial headquarters, and conspicuous from afar: Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Victoria. Here are not only rooms for the meetings of the executive committee, and a cozy office for Mrs. Kirk and her efficient secretary, Miss Barwood, with a good depot of literature, but a coffee house, well patronized, a home for working girls, at a price within their means, and a bureau lately opened for aiding women to find situations. A very blessed work is being done by the devoted matrons in charge of all these activities at headquarters, and the result is sure.

We record gratefully our appreciation of Mrs. Kirk's energetic helpfulness in introducing us to the public of Australia and arranging for our engagements. Everywhere we have heard expressions of the most reverent affection regarding Mrs. Love, whose spiritualizing touch has left an abiding impression upon all W. C. T. U. work in Victoria. The white-ribboners lament her departure and pray for her speedy return. Having looked the field well over, we praise God for the past and the present standard bearers, and believe that the Victoria union shall yet know more and more of the blessing of the Highest.

Elizabeth W. Andrew.

Bathurst, New South Wales.

A SPIRITED LETTER FROM MISS ACKERMAN.

Dear Union Signal:—After my visit to Northam, where so much good fortune and sympathy were meted out to me, I journeyed on to Guildford. Here the work first started, and here I was very specially blessed. On the coast Fremantle came in for a three days' mission, the enthusiasm was simply unbounded; the Good Templars took charge, a fine local committee was formed, the town hall taken, the whole town billed, the band secured—the temperance societies and band marching in the streets and attracting great crowds; hundreds could not enter the hall. During the mission one hundred and fifty men signed the pledge; the Good Templars sent a letter to each of these and invited them to join the Lodge, and sixty women took up the union work.

At this point is one of the great prisons which is now being used as the jail for the Colony. Here I found a large number of prisoners, and was allowed to speak to the women, forty-seven there, and all save one for drunkenness. The union took up this work and has been granted the privilege of visiting them. They have also taken up work among sailors, and the superintendent has raised some hundreds of dollars for it; they hope to build a home.

After this came what was regarded the most important mission in the Colony, a week in the town hall at the Capital. Often when special effort meets with great success in smaller places the same effort fails in the large centers of population. Such a thing had never been known before as "a woman doing such things," and the movement was frowned upon, even by some of our stanch supporters, but the committee was bent on success; every effort was made to make it the grandest triumph. The churches joined us, as also did all the temperance societies. The whole program was printed on fine cards, with the compliments of the committee, and an invitation to the meetings. Armed with these, accompanied by a young lady, I started out to visit all the saloons and to invite the young men to our meetings. Several hundred of them were personally asked; in each place I was treated with the greatest respect, and when I inquired if I might speak or sing or pray in no case was I refused. This had the effect of bringing out hundreds of young men. At the first meeting the hall was simply packed. Among the multitude I saw the governor's wife and daughter; they attended a number of the meetings. The second night was a welcome to me, in which the army and churches joined; many hundreds were turned away, and on the whole we had one of the grandest meetings we have had in the Colony.

The interest was kept up all through the week. A very large local union was formed; an all-day convention was held; delegates came from all the unions we had formed, and we organized a union for the whole Colony. A lady of influence was elected president, and the mission closed with heavenly powers about us that will be felt for many a day. I record the success of this mission with all humility and special thanksgiving, returning praise to Him in whose name we go forth from "victory unto victory, conquering and to conquer." At the close of each service we had a prayer-meeting, at which some hundreds stayed, and we closed, feeling we had a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God. In all we held thirteen meetings, besides those for special prayer.

After the mission closed, very much tired out and brain weary—for I had been holding ten and twelve meetings a week while in the Colony—I started on a two days' stage ride to a southern city. It rained all the way, a cold rain, and I reached the place, tired, cold, hungry, and scarcely able to speak. The usual gatherings were held with the usual results, the mission closing with the lecture "Women of Asia," to a packed house. The city band had been engaged to see me off, for I was to sail that night after the address, but there came up an awful storm, such as is seldom seen, the ship could not come up to the wharf, so a life-boat was sent for me. The night was so black, the clouds so heavy, the wind so strong, and the waves rolling so high, that, as I was handed down to the boat, I took my seat quite resigned to anything. Ten strong sailors dashed to the oars, and soon we were riding the awful billows that rolled "mountain high"; the voice of one man could be heard above the roar, "Now, for our lives, boys!" "Now, all together!" till everything seemed din and confusion; but I thought of One who "stilled the waves on the lake of Galilee," and I heard His voice saying, "It is I, be not afraid."

The journey was a short one, for the next day before noon I had reached the capital city, where a woman's mass-meeting was called. Here we decided to form ourselves into a deputation to wait upon the Premier. This was something so new and novel that only a few women would go, but we ranged ourselves in line in the town-hall, fifty-five strong, and marched through the street to the Premier's office; he had consented to receive us, so a reporter was there.

As we passed through one of the leading streets, men and women came to the doors and windows, and in great astonishment inquired, "What does this mean?" and not a few expressed themselves as out of sympathy with "such doings" by women. Sir John, who evidently expected half a dozen or so of women, was quite overcome as we filed in, in what seemed to him an endless procession. We made known our wants to have the laws for Sunday closing and against selling to minors enforced, to amend the licensing laws, and to raise the age of consent to sixteen years. Of course I had to present these, but the women "stood by me to a man." Two delegates from Fremantle, asked for a site of land on which to build a sailors' home; this was granted, and amid much confusion Sir John promised anything. "Yes, anything, ladies, you shall have the land. Your object fills a long-felt need. Yes, I will use every effort to see that the laws are enforced." One of the ladies said, "If he doesn't give the matter his attention there is but one thing to do, worry him till he does!"

We formed in line again, and marched down to the depot where a Coffee Palace is being erected. I was asked to lay the corner-stone. A great concourse of people had gathered and as we appeared upon the scene the crowd made way, the flag was removed, the stone placed in position and declared laid. It bears the inscription chiseled in the stone: "This stone was laid August 16, 1892, by Miss Jessie Ackerman, World's missionary for W. C. T. U." A silver trowel beautifully inscribed, a large white bow on the handle, was then presented to me, and a little boy came from the crowd with an immense bouquet of flowers.

In the evening a great farewell was held in the town hall; about a thousand were present, and after a most delightful reception I took the train for the port from whence I was to sail for the north. A large number came in from Perth, and as the boat steamed down the bay I heard voices singing, "Shall we gather at the river." Many on board joined, and under the inspiration of "Yes we'll gather at the river," the waving of handkerchiefs and kissing of hands, I went on to other fields.

This bay is sheltered from the swells and blasts of the open sea by a range of hills. But once beyond these hills we found the sea still wild and stormy. I was rocked and pitched about in a small coasting steamer; the storm raged with such great fury that we were unable to put into the port for which I was destined, so I was carried on far to the north. On reaching this place I found a friend with whom I had stopped in South Australia, who took me to her home where I rested for the night, and went overland to the places I was unable to reach by steamer.

Missions in three places closed my work in Western Australia.

If I had a choice to live over any two months of my public life, I should choose the two in this Colony, not because of the great crowds, but my life has been brought into such close touch with so many, and never in the same time have I had so many letters from those who have been blessed; then, too, the work has been a blessing to myself.

I am off now for Singapore; then, the Lord willing, I shall go to India for six months, and return to Sydney for the great convention. I have no hope of coming home next year. I can clearly see my duty will keep me in Australia just at that time. It is a very great trial, but I see the way and I must walk in it.

As the work rolls on I am doubly conscious that the mission is ever in your prayers, which thought is a continuous inspiration to me. Pray on, for we have a prayer answering God. Yours in the conflict,

Jessie A. Ackerman,
World's Missionary for W. C. T. U.

Geraldton, West Australia.

THE WEARING OF EGRET PLUMES.

Dear Union Signal:—At the close of the reading of the report of the department of mercy at the National Convention, some one remarked that those present wearing egret plumes "need not feel uncomfortable, as they are manufactured." As I was not at Denver I could not answer this mistaken assertion and therefore ask the privilege of answering it here.

The pretty, little, delicate, airy plumes to be seen standing upright on the head of nearly every woman we meet, are "manufactured" by nature as the nuptial adornment of the white heron. In speaking of the excuses made for wearing these, W. H. Hudson, C. M. Z. S., author of "The Naturalist in La Plata," and part author of "Argentine Ornithology," says, "Ladies have repeatedly assured me, in all seriousness, that milliners make these fine plumes out of the commonest feathers. . . . . The egrets worn by ladies in our day are, in very nearly all cases, actually made of the slender, decomposed feathers that grow at one time of the year on the egret's back, and drop gracefully over the sides and tail of the bird. The less fine plumes with shorter and stiffer filaments, are from the squacco heron which is not an egret."

Mr. Hudson adds that those who engage in the business of procuring these plumes know that to obtain a good supply with little trouble, the birds must be taken when the breeding season is well advanced. The best time to attack them is when the young birds are fully fledged, but not yet able to fly; for at that time the solicitude of the parent birds is greatest, and, forgetful of their own danger, they are most readily made victims. "And," he continues, "when the killing is finished and the few handfuls of coveted feathers have been plucked out, the slaughtered birds are left in a white heap to fester in the sun and wind in the sight of their orphaned young, that cry for food and are not fed. There is nothing in the whole earth so pitiable as this—so pitiable and so shameful—that for such a purpose human cunning should take advantage of that feeling and instinct which we regard as so noble in our own species and as something sacred—the tender passion of the parent for its offspring which causes it to neglect its own safety and to perish miserably, a sacrifice to its love! . . . . And those, who, not ignorant of the facts, encourage such things for fashion's sake and for the gratification of a miserable vanity, have a part in it, and are, perhaps, more guilty than the wretches who are paid to do the rough work. . . . .

"When the poor bird, uttering piercing cries, its sensitive frame quivering, its bill gaping, as if the air could no longer sustain it in its intense agitation, and fluttering its lovely wings to make them more conspicuous, and by such means to draw the danger away from its treasures and on itself when it has been ruthlessly shot for its feathers its fledgelings are left to starve in the nest. And if to the starved young, we add all the birds that fly away with pellets of lead in their bodies, to languish and die of their wounds, it would be no exaggeration to say that for every plume worn in a lady's hat, at least ten birds have suffered the death-pang."

The mania for egret plumes is so great it exceeds, if anything, that for wearing the bodies of birds; and in what is it better? Any observant person who notices these plumes waving, not singly, but often in clusters, on the heads of nearly every woman, must know that the slaughter has not been thousands, but millions. Dear friends of the W. C. T. U., is it becoming, and does it consist with our profession as promoters of reform, that we should be seen carrying on our heads the trophies of such brutal work?

Mary F. Lovell.

Bryn Mawr, Pa. Nat. Sup't Dep't of Mercy.

Mme. M. YALE'S

LA FRECKLA
ELECTRIFIES THE WORLD.

BEAUTY IN A BATH.

La Freckla, the Great Mineral Water discovered by Mme. M. Yale, that Celebrated Woman Chemist. It is the only known natural water that has the power of Purifying the Skin and making a Complexion Beautiful.

LA FRECKLA

was named La Freckla because it is a sure cure for Freckles—all one has to do is to bathe the face in it a few times, when the Complexion becomes radiantly beautiful and Every Freckle disappears as if by magic. It removes any spot or stain from the Skin in the same way, only it seems to favor Freckled Faces.

Mme. Yale's own complexion is the most perfect ever seen. Her lovely neck and arms are so perfect one has to look closely to make sure they are not marble, and her face is as fair as the lily and as pink as the rose.

LA FRECKLA

will make any woman who uses it as fair as she.

Price $1.00. For sale by all Druggists, or shipped by Mme. Yale. Address all letters to

MME. M. YALE,
COMPLEXION SPECIALIST,
37 W. 14th St., New York.
146 State St., Chicago, Ill. Mme. M. Yale Co.
Send 6 cents postage for Beauty Book just out.

BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS FOR THE HAIR AND SKIN.

An elegant dressing, Prevents baldness, gray hair, and dandruff. Makes the hair grow thick and soft. Cures eruptions and diseases of the skin. Heals cuts, burns, bruises and sprains. All druggists or by mail 50 cts. 44 Stone St. N.Y.

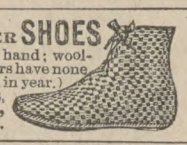
BEAUTIFUL QUEEN MAB'S

curious eccentricities are illustrated by fine original engravings, in Dr. O. P. Brown's unique Shakesperian Almanac for 1893. One or more sent for distribution among friends, on receipt of address on postal. J. GIBSON BROWN, 47 Grand Street, Jersey City, N. J.

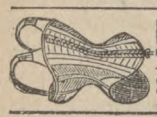
MENDING TISSUE

Repairs clothing better than needle and thread; Silk, Satin, Cotton and Woolen, Kid Gloves, Macintoshes, Umbrellas, etc., all colors. Sample yard, 10c. Three yards, 25c. Twelve yards, 65c. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. Address STAYNER & CO., Providence, R. I.

DICK'S FOOT WARMER SHOES



Worn everywhere; woven by hand; wool-lined; seamless. Where dealers have none we mail postpaid (any month in year.) Ladies' size, $1.25. Men's, $1.50. WM. H. DICK, Manf'r, Dansville, N. Y.



LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order.
American Desk & Seating Co.
270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

BAKER'S COCOA.
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

VOSE & SON'S PIANOS
EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to
H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.
Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets' Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

WALL PAPER. Good Paper, 3c. Gold Paper, 5c. Large package of beautiful samples and guide, "How to Paper," sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO, ILL.

ROASTER & BAKER HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES. Agents Wanted. Catalogue free Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago

BEATTY Piano, Organ, $33 up. Want agents Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beatty, Washton, N. J.

Publisher's Notes.

WHO IS SHE?

Do you who live far away from this great, bustling city called Chicago ask this question regarding Mrs. Mary H. Hull, the author of "Columbus and What He found?" To answer: She is a writer of growing popularity, and a platform speaker on temperance, social purity and literary topics. In introducing a former work in 1888 Miss Willard wrote:

"I have known Mrs. Mary H. Hull for several pleasant years, and am always rejoiced by the wholesome, dauntless spirit that leads her ever onward and upward through the mists of table land and valley toward the heights where lies repose. . . . Her mission is so high and pure that it would be a churlish soul indeed who would not say, 'God bless the missionary.' So I write these loving lines commending my good friend to all."

These words might be repeated regarding her latest work: "Columbus and What He Found," which will be ready December 20, price $1. As the writer has made original translations from the Spanish and settled disputed questions regarding the great discoverer, it must be considered the most reliable volume extant.

Send orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

OPINIONS.

The following valued opinions of distinguished people are from recent letters received by the publisher:

I think Our Day one of the most valuable publications which reaches me. I do not know where one can get a better view of the great and constantly emerging questions of the day. WAYLAND HOYT.
Minneapolis, Oct. 14, 1892.

Our Day is a stirring periodical, true to its name, engaged in discussing the tremendous problems of the times, and battling for all that is best in our modern complex civilization, with ability and effectiveness.
HERRICK JOHNSON,
McCormick Theological Seminary.
Chicago, Ill., October, 1892.

Our Day is about to enter upon a new year; I wish it a large following and abundant success. Of the many magazines which come to my table I value this the most. It treats with great ability, with eminent fairness, without fear, favor or hope of reward the great questions which concern the religious, moral and material interests of the country and the welfare and happenings of the people in a manner peculiar to itself which renders it especially valuable to me.
NEAL DOW.
Portland, Me.

The Kindergarten Magazine says:

"Parents wishing for an excellent gift volume for their little ones can do no better than order the book 'Columbus: and What He Found,' by Mrs. Mary H. Hull. It is a wonder-tale filled with all the romance and truth of the great event of America's discovery, and told for young readers in a pure, yet thrilling manner. The book will be ready before Christmas, and the price is one dollar. Send in your orders early and they will be filed and filled among the first. There is already a large demand for this unique child's history."

We approve every word. The book will be ready December 20. Send orders to the
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ALCOHOL HABIT BAD.

Opium Far Worse.

The press daily records the commission of some lawless act committed by some poor victim of the use of opium, yet no action has ever been taken by the public to suppress the evil.

The careers of these so called cures are tarnished with the tears of loved ones over the graves of suicides and prison bars that confine the hopeless imbecile or raving maniac.

To Dr. S. B. Collins, located in the American Express Building of our city, alone can be ascribed the honor of a sure, painless and permanent cure. For twenty-five years he has devoted his money, energy and brains in combating the evil. Through his efforts and skill, over 100,000 human beings rejoice in absolute release from the clutches of the opium habit. Health and mental vigor follow his treatment. Not one case of suicide or insanity mars his record. The press in speaking of the dire effects of opium should also publish the fact that at least one safe remedy can be secured.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA.

WOULD YOU LIKE

To attend the World's Fair at our expense, and to read, free of charge, for one year, our paper, the "TOTAL ABSTAINER"? If so, please send your name and address to this office for further particulars.

902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg.,
165-173 Jackson Street,
CHICAGO, ILL.

GEN. W. F. SINGLETON, - President.
REV. A. J. JUTKINS, - Vice-President.
A. BONNELL, - - - - Secretary.
S. M. SINGLETON, - - Treasurer.
E. S. ATWOOD, - - - Medical Director
J. D. KNAPP, - - - Supt. Agencies

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Every policy holder is positively a total abstainer from alcoholic beverages.
This is the ONLY Company that does not insure the drinker.
And is, therefore, the only Company in which teetotalers should be insured.
Its risks are unquestionably the best.
Its death-rate for 1891 was over 50 per cent below the average mortality of all other companies.

It has the lowest expenses—only $2.20 per $1,000 insurance for 1891.
It has the lowest average premium charge.
No premiums are required in old age.
Policy contract simple, definite, equitable and limited as to cost.
Its life policies have cash and paid-up values after probable life.
It has an adequate reserve fund.
Expenses of management limited to $3.00 per $1,000 insurance per annum.

FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

Number of policy holders,	5,500
Guarantee Fund,	$ 92,000.00
Amount paid to beneficiaries,	210,000.00
Insurance in force,	11,000,000.00

COMPARISON FOR 1891.

All old Line Companies averaged per $1,000 insurance,	Death Claims $14.55	Expenses $15.07
Total Abstinence Life Ass'n averaged per $1,000 insurance,	" 5.65	" 2.20

AGENTS WANTED
Address A. BONNELL, Secretary.

NO TRIAL IS NECESSARY
a mere examination suffices to prove the superiority of Hartman Flexible Steel Wire Mats. Ask your dealer for one.
HARTMAN MANUFACTURING CO., Beaver Falls, Pa.
Branches: 102 Chambers St., New York; 508 State St., Chicago; 51 and 53 S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga. Catalogue and testimonials mailed free.
Our Mats have brass tag attached stamped "Hartman."

DO YOU CROCHET ? The GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn., will distribute in Premiums $2,000.00 GOLD COIN in Premiums. specimens of fancy work, to be made only from the Glasgo Twilled Lace Thread. Open to all residents of the U. S.
Send 10c. for Sample Spool Twilled Lace Thread. 500 Yards.
Ask your dealer for circulars giving full information. If not to be had of him, write us. DO NOT DELAY. Thoroughly satisfactory proofs of our reliability furnished. GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., GLASGO, CONN.
Illus. Crochet Books, Nos. 1, 2, or 3, 10c. each. 24 Bed Spread & Tidy Patterns, 5 cts. each.

TOBACCO HABIT
For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others.
Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.

HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.
EASILY CURED

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S
PILE COMPOUND
Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.
CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.
References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M.D., Helena, Mont.
Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis

IF YOU WANT

Work that is pleasant and profitable send us your address immediately. We teach men and women how to earn from $5 per day to $3,000 per year without having had previous experience, and furnish the employment at which they can make that amount. Capital unnecessary. A trial will cost you nothing. Write to-day and address
E. C. ALLEN & CO.,
Box 1150. AUGUSTA, ME.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.
CATARRH
Sold by Druggists or sent by mail. 50c. E. T. Hazeltine, Warren, Pa.

FAT PEOPLE

YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of
DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.
Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.
DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

'ACTINA' THE GREAT EYE RESTORER. THE BLIND SEE, THE DEAF HEAR. CURES CATARRH Asthma, Bronchitis, Head & Throat Troubles
NEW YORK & LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N,
Room 5 & 5 1-2 Lakeside Bldg., S. W. cor. Adams & Clark Sts., Chicago. Prof. J. H. GILBERT, Mgr.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood, and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLUREDRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.

TO BRIGHTEN THE HOME
THE HOUSEWIFE
FREE BULBS FOR 1893.

3 CHOICE BULBS WORTH 75 Cts. FREE
CROCUS, Assorted
NARCISSUS POETICUS
TULIP, Duc Van Thol

CROCUS.—The varieties we send are among the kinds best adapted for window culture to produce the most pleasing results.
NARCISSUS POETICUS.—The finest of all their class for winter blooming. Flowers large snow white with bright orange-red cups, fragrant and early flowering.
TULIP, Duc Van Thol.—The best varieties for window culture, and especially for early flowering. Color, scarlet, the most beautiful of the many colors.

THE HOUSEWIFE
is a monthly journal Exclusively for Ladies, 24 to 32 Pages, bound in an Artistic Cover.
HANDSOMELY ILLUSTRATED.
Fiction, Fashion, Flowers, Fancy Work, Home Decorations, Art Needle Work, Cooking, Housekeeping, Care of Children, Chatbox, etc. In short, everything pertaining to Woman's Work and Woman's Pleasure.
ANY LADY interested in such a paper and desiring to brighten her home with lovely winter blooming flowers without expense, can have THE HOUSEWIFE sent to her address on trial

THREE MONTHS FOR ONLY 10 cts. and receive the 3 Bulbs above described FREE AND POSTPAID as a premium by mentioning this paper and sending 10c. (stamps or silver) to pay cost of postage and mailing. Address
The Housewife, 81 Warren St., New York.

The Sweet Strains of the Zither, falling even upon the untutored ear, have a soothing effect, but are not equalled by the salutary influence exerted on the system by that "marvel in medicinal magic,"

Manitou
MINERAL WATER.

It flows from the celebrated soda springs at Manitou Springs, Colorado, and is naturally effervescent. In the spring house it noisily churns and bubbles like a thing of life. The American Indians looked upon this as the one great fountain of life and a cure for all their ills. Hence they called it "Manitou Spring" (the Great Spirit spring).

For Centuries

People who use it for the first time exclaim,

"Such a Draught."

It hisses and bubbles when poured from the bottle, just as it does at the spring, being heavily charged with its own surplus gas. It should be drank with meals as a table water.

Nasal Catarrh

Is the cause of Bronchitis, Consumption, Dyspepsia, Headache, Cough, Deafness, Loss of Vitality, Insomnia, and many other serious disorders.

Why don't you get relief? You can get relief if you want it. We are not physicians, but we can instantly relieve and cure you. Will you let us do so? We relieve and cure others, why not you? Our treatment has been indorsed by English physicians for 50 years. It is simple and costs but little. You use it at home a little while night and morning. Send postal for our book telling you all about it. GIBBS RESPIRATOR CO., 38 La Salle Street, Chicago.

A CENT SENT BENT.

Manufacturer of "CROWN"
PIANOS AND ORGANS.

WELL SPENT, is a cent sent to Bent, (your address, on postal) if you wish a Piano or Organ I want verses about the "Crown" goods, and give Pianos, Organs, etc., for the best ones. Ask and learn how it's done. Catalogue free.
GEO. P. BENT, (Clerk No. 52), Chicago, Ill. (Estab. 1870).

Publisher's Notes.

OUR DAY,

A Record and Review of Current Reform.

JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

ASSOCIATE EDITORS.

Frances E. Willard. Prof. J. E. Rankin, D.D.
Mrs. Mary H. Hunt. Anthony Comstock.
John H. Barrows, D. D. Ex-Pres. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D.
Rev. Jas. B. Dunn, D. D.
Ex-Pres. G. F. Magoun, D. D. Rev. R. G. McNiece, D. D.
Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.

PRICE: Single numbers, ... $ .25
Yearly subscription, ... 2.50

Published by
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

A VALUABLE BEQUEST.

Something that Every Man Can Give His Sons.

The number of parents who can leave their children a fortune is comparatively small. The greater portion of fathers have little or nothing in this world's goods with which to endow their offspring. But there is something better by far than riches that every man can give his children, and that is an education.

Plato, the philosopher, said: "Do not, then, train boys to learning by force and harshness, but direct them to it by what amuses their minds, so that you may be the better able to discover with accuracy the peculiar bent of genius of each."

Rich people have no difficulty in doing this, and they do it. They know it is best. They send their boy to college. Boy studies almost everything and learns nothing. Some day, somehow, boy chances on something that interests him, and his face is a study to see. That day he decides to become something, somebody.

You think, "Oh, that's only a boyish fancy. It'll soon pass away." It will if you let it. You mustn't let it. You may be losing your boy's only chance to get on in the world. Take it up there and then. Educate him on that line, and he'll make his mark. Or let him educate himself. He'll do it if he has a chance. He'll study if you give him the books.

You can do the same as the rich man. You can give him a college education. You don't have to send him to college for it, either. When he has fixed on something you can give him a full education on that line at home. The REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA is a complete education. It is a college education—a home college education.

You can give your boy all this for 10 cents a day. It's surely worth that. Besides, you can encourage him to save the dime a day himself, and teach him economy while giving him an education.

You can get the entire set delivered to you for $1.00 down and the balance in monthly payments. You agreeing to pay 10 cents a day (paying the same monthly) until settled. This is certainly a very reasonable offer. You may be sorry some day you didn't do it when you had the chance. You won't have it long. These are special offers, and the wise ones won't wait until the eleventh hour.

Read our special offer printed elsewhere. Send all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE sales of literature from our stock during November included the following:

Manuals	8,903
Programs	439
Leaflets	147,788
Pledges	11,728
Badges	4,524
Song books	3,227

By an inadvertence, an advertisement recently appeared in THE UNION SIGNAL which said, "We are now offering about $20,000" of Woman's Temperance Publishing Association stock for sale. There is less than $6,000 worth of stock unsold, and those who desire it should apply without delay.
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

READY DEC. 20.

"Columbus and His Friends." Price, $1.
Send orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

ST. NICHOLAS

THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER
NOW READY : CONTAINS A CHRISTMAS POEM, BY MARY MAPES DODGE.
CHRISTMAS STORIES AND PICTURES.
THE PERSIAN COLUMBUS.
HAROLD AND THE RAILWAY SIGNALS.
A RACE WITH AN AVALANCHE, Etc., etc., etc.
Price 25 Cents.

is a good name to remember when selecting a Christmas gift for a boy or girl. It is The Century Co's magazine for young folks. "The best child's periodical in the world," is what the poet Whittier called it.

A YEAR'S SUBSCRIPTION to ST. NICHOLAS costs $3.00. No other gift you can buy for that price will give a boy or girl half so much pleasure or will be productive of so much good. The child who reads ST. NICHOLAS cannot help being well informed.

THE NEW VOLUME, which began with the November number, promises to be one of the best ever issued. There will be among other entertaining features:

SERIAL STORIES by Kate Douglas Wiggin, W. O. Stoddard, Mrs. C. V. Jamison, author of "Lady Jane," Mrs. Mary Hallock Foote, and others.

SHORT STORIES by Rudyard Kipling, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Frank R. Stockton, Susan Coolidge, Nora Perry, and many other well-known writers.

PICTURES by the leading artists and engravers, and rhymes, jingles and puzzles innumerable. Subscribe now, beginning with November, the first of the new volume.

All booksellers and newsdealers take subscriptions, or remittance may be made by check, draft, money- or express-order, or in registered letter direct to the publishers,

THE CENTURY CO., 33 East 17th Street, New York.

FERRIS' GOOD SENSE WAISTS
Have MANY IMITATORS but NO EQUALS.
Be sure your Waist is stamped, 'Good Sense.'

THE BABY will be given a beautiful birthday card if the mother will send baby's name and age to Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. This is done to advertise LACTATED FOOD The food that SAVES BABIES' LIVES.

Money for Sale!

Worth more than standard value,—worth two for one for the World's Fair,—and more than that to you.

We are selling half-dollars for a dollar a-piece. You get a

Original in Design.

World's Fair Souvenir Coin for a Dollar

Beautiful in Execution.

A Work of Art in itself.

We devote the entire amount towards developing and ennobling the People's Great Fair.

Souvenir and Rare Coins as an Investment.

Coin.	Face value.	Market value.
U. S. $5 Goldpiece 1822	5.00	900.00
U. S. 1804 Silver Dollar	1.00	900.00
U. S. Half-Dollar 1796	.50	52.50
U. S. 1802 Silver 5-Cent Piece	.05	100.00
U. S. 1856 Eagle Penny	.01	5.00
U. S. 1793 Copper Cent (Ameri)	.01	50.00
Queen's Jubilee 5-Sovreign, Eng.	24.33	32.00
Napoleon's 100-day 5fr., French.	1.00	4.00
King William Coronation, Ger. 1861	.66	1.25
German "Peace" Coins 1871	.66	1.25

This will be the best investment you ever made—

A World's Fair Souvenir Coin—

A National Heirloom for only $1.00.

Under Act of Congress we have 5,000,000 Souvenir Coins, of the denomination of 50 cents each. That the money may go as far as possible, and that all the people may have a chance to procure these artistic and patriotic souvenirs of their own Exposition, we have resolved to offer the whole issue for sale—at $1.00 each.

Apply to any Bank, or send Post Office or Express Money Order, Bank Draft, or Registered Letter for as many coins as you wish, with instructions how to send them to you, to

TREASURER WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION.
CHICAGO, ILLS.

Signal Notes.

THE ancient Indians killed their kings if they became drunk.

IT is stated there were sixty two boy suicides in Berlin last year.

OVER thirty of the newly elected mayors in England are total abstainers.

"No political party will ever do right if you give it your vote when it does wrong."

SEVENTY-SIX thousand children of ten years of age are working in English factories.

MR. MOODY secured four hundred subscribers to the pledge in one meeting recently in Dublin.

A NEW liquor law in Cape Colony prevents a traveler from securing drink except with a bona fide meal.

THE people in certain parts of Germany say that the devil invented brandy, citing a legend to prove it.

MISS FULLER, of New York, is the first woman in this country to receive a government contract for engraving.

THERE are one hundred and sixty societies and clubs in Bohemia, it is said, which are devoting their influence to the advancement of woman's cause.

"SOME people say, 'Don't mix politics and religion.' You know what the matter is with them? They ain't got any religion to mix."—Sam Jones.

IN a small English village £15 is given to the poor at Christmas time. The vicar marked the coins last year and traced £11 to the village alehouse the next day.

THE Sheffield, Eng., Women's Christian Temperance Association has a membership of one thousand three hundred women who carry on a vigorous work along many lines.

A DECLARATION as to the use of alcohol is a medicine is going the rounds of the British Medical Association. It is said that over six hundred names have been obtained against the use.

THIRTY years ago "winter evenings" in Bath, England, were begun under the leadership of Rev. G. M. Murphy. In that time he has secured twenty-five thousand pledges and the entertainments have been enjoyed by almost three million people.

SOME one says that the most discouraging feature to-day of the temperance question is that from some cause or other the majority of American voters are not ready to do any part of what seems their duty toward the monster iniquity of the age.

WHAT a tale statistics might unfold! In New York last year one thousand four hundred men secured divorces from their wives on the ground of drunkenness, and during the same year over twelve thousand wives secured divorces for the same cause.

THE Lend-a-Hand clubs of Boston have leased rooms and opened a noon-day resting place for workers, where they can take their lunch or buy one at a moderate price. The patrons can also put on exhibition any articles produced by their own industry.

A MODERN version of an old riddle:

"A moderate drinker sat on a wall,
A moderate drinker had a great fall,
All the king's horses and all the king's men,
Couldn't pick that moderate drinker up again."

What was he? Answer: A drunkard.

A MEMBER of the board of lady managers for the Columbian Fair proposes a plan for giving musical recitals in the Woman's Building. These recitals are to be given by amateur musicians, the invitations to be considered as diplomas of excellence. The plan comprehends the examination of all applicants by a jury in their own state appointed by Theodore Thomas. The amateurs will appear before a second jury in Chicago before making a public appearance. The diplomas awarded would be a great assistance to many a woman who earns her living by the profession of music.

FORTY years ago Whitechapel, London, was so unsafe that no stranger could go through without a policeman. To-day services are held anywhere that a clergyman can get an audience. The Salvation Army, Ragged Schools, and Charrington Assembly Hall are aiding in the great work. The latter was built by the son of a brewer, who dedicated his life to undoing some of the evils of the traffic.

Sickness Among Children,

Especially infants, is prevalent at all times, but is largely avoided by giving proper nourishment and wholesome food. The most successful and reliable is the Gail Borden "Eagle" Brand Condensed Milk. Your grocer and druggist keep it.

The first necessity in all hospitals, asylums and institutions is cleanliness. Soap is used hourly. You can not send a better contribution to your favorite charity than a box of good Soap.

What Soap will you send? Nearly every person selects Ivory because it is equally well adapted for the laundry, toilet or bath. Hospitals prefer Ivory because it is $99\frac{44}{100}$ pure and for this reason always used by physicians in bathing sores or wounds.

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

RAMEY'S CATARRH MEDICATOR

GUARANTEED.

WILL CURE YOUR CATARRH

Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Headache, La-Grippe, Etc., Or Money Refunded!

We mean just what we say. Medicine enough to last four months with each medicator. Price complete by mail $1.50.

The medicine is put on sponge in enlarged part of medicator. Insert twin tubes in nostrils, single tube in mouth, then blow; thus your lungs force highly medicated air into all parts of the head and throat.

AGENTS ARE REAPING A RICH HARVEST.

Send for terms, testimonials and further particulars.

Ramey & Co., 85 Dearborn street, Chicago.

We have thousands of testimonials like these for proof that we can cure all head and throat troubles. Write us. Ladies make good agents. No experience required.

A Physician of 26 Years' Practice, says:

I have used your Medicator in my practice, and I know of no instrument so good for the introduction of Inhalent Medicines to the nose, throat and lungs. By your instrument the patient can send the medicine to the lungs, throat and all parts of the head. It is very useful in the treatment of Catarrh, La Grippe and kindred troubles. T. M. TRIPLETT, M. D.

CHICAGO, ILL., Jan. 10, 1892.

RAMEY & CO., 85 Dearborn St., Chicago.

I have been using one of your Catarrh Cures, with Medicator, and am well pleased with it. It has performed a wonderful cure for me for an aggravated case of catarrh long standing. I consider your method of curing Catarrh, La Grippe, etc., as the best known treatment, and cheerfully recommend it.

C. S. NELLIS, 6240 Yale St.
With the U. S. Express Co.

CAN YOU SPARE $25?

We do not want to borrow it. We want you to invest it where it will be doing great good, and at the same time be earning good, liberal dividends. The "great good" to be accomplished is at the National Bichloride of Gold Institute, Chicago. It has been in operation since last March, and hundreds of drinking men and slaves of the opium habit have been cured, and are living clean lives. Do you know of any better business? If you received no other return from your investment than the satisfaction of having a part in this grand work, you would be well repaid, but you will also receive Good, Liberal Dividends.

THE SAVING OF DRUNKARDS

Our first quarterly dividend paid to our stockholders the first of last July was three per cent. The second quarterly dividend was paid October 1st, and was also three per cent. (Our earnings would have authorized us to have paid more, but our officers thought best to accumulate a small reserve.) Our third quarterly dividend will be payable January 1st, 1893, and will be a liberal one.

REMEMBER, our stockholders are not interested in the Chicago Institute alone, but in Dr. Thompson's wonderful treatment for the entire world. We have now a large number of branches in the United States, and some in foreign countries, and the work is being pushed vigorously in every direction.

We have for sale less than

THREE HUNDRED SHARES.

These will all be taken before we have time to make another announcement, so if you want any you must act promptly. The price is $25 per share. The shares are full paid and non-assessable. You can pay $5 per month on each share if you desire, but all payments must be made before stock participates in dividends. Write at once.

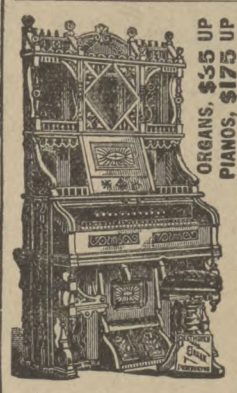
NATIONAL BICHLORIDE OF GOLD COMPANY,
19 TO 21 QUINCY STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

THE
HARVEY ACADEMY

Prepares for college, for business, and for the shop. It is located in the temperance town of Harvey, near the Columbian Exposition, and its students have great advantages in connection with the Fair. Those who are willing and able to work earn money enough to pay their tuition and boarding.

Winter term begins January 4.
Address

L. BEERS, M. A., Supt.,
HARVEY, ILL.



ORGANS, $35 UP
PIANOS, $175 UP

FREE.

Our large 24-page Catalogue, profusely illustrated, full of information on the proper construction of Pianos and Organs. We ship on test trial, ask no cash in advance, sell on instalments, give greater value for the money than any other manufacturer Send for this book at once to

BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO.,
WASHINGTON, N. J.
P. O. Box 701

HEADQUARTERS FOR LOW PRICES!
SCALES OF EVERY VARIETY.
A 1,000 Articles Less than Wholesale Prices.

Carriages, Buggies, Wagons, Carts, Sleighs, Harness, Safes, Sewing Machines, Blacksmiths' Tools, Bone Mills, Feed Mills, Cider Mills, Corn Shellers, Feed Cutters, Lawn Mowers, Land Rollers, Road Plows, Dump Carts, Steel Scrapers, Sinks, Fanning Mills, Stoves, Kettles, Jack Screws, Hand Carts, Wire Fence, Letter Presses, Coffee and Spice Mills, Guns, Pistols, Bicycles, Tricycles, Cash Drawers, Clothes Wringers, Meat Choppers, Trucks, Lathes, Engines, Watches, Organs, Pianos, Etc.

Send for free Catalogue and see how to save Money.
151 S. Jefferson St., CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

$25 to $50 per week, to Agents, Ladies or Gentlemen, using or selling "Old Reliable Plater." Only practical way to replate rusty and worn knives, forks, spoons, etc.; quickly done by dipping in melted metal. No experience, polishing, or machinery. Thick plate at one operation; lasts 5 to 10 years; fine finish when taken from the plater. Every family has plating to do. Plater sells readily. Profits large. W. F. Harrison & Co. Columbus, O.

ONLY 10% ABOVE FACTORY COST

$8.87 buys a $65.00 Singer Style Machine.
$18.98 buys Highest Grade modern style machine in the world. 25 different styles at intermediate prices. Warranted 10 years. We are the only manufacturers selling machines direct. Send for catalogue C50 Terms for securing a sewing machine FREE
CHICAGO SEWING MACHINE CO. Chicago, Ill.

CARDS FOR 1893. 50 SAMPLE STYLES AND LIST OF 300 PREMIUM ARTICLES FREE. HAVERFIELD PUB. CO, CADIZ, OHIO.

BEAUTIFUL AND UNIQUE

W. C. T. U. Photo frames by mail. Send a two-cent stamp for price list. M. N. EDGERTON, Smith, Mich.

HOLIDAY RATES VIA WABASH LINE.

The Wabash line will sell tickets for the Holidays to all points within two hundred miles of Chicago and between Chicago and Detroit at a fare and one-third for the round trip. Tickets will be good going December 24, 25, 31 and January 1 and 2; good returning until January 3, 1893. Ticket Office, 201 Clark Street, Chicago.

GORNISH IN CONGRESS.

Our readers will be interested to know that State Senator Johnston Cornish, of the world famed firm of Cornish & Co., Piano and Organ manufacturers of Washington, New Jersey, has been triumphantly elected to represent the large and important Fourth District of New Jersey in Congress. From Mayor of Washington to State Senator and thence to Congress is a remarkable record for so young a man as Johnston Cornish, but his personal magnetism, his unstained record and his undoubted abilities both as a business man and a politician make it apparent that his success is deserved. The excellence of the Cornish Pianos and Organs is well known, and the remarkable plan of business by which Messrs. Cornish sell their instruments at factory cost direct to the general public has been so wonderfully popular, saving to the people the enormous profits made by agents and middlemen, that we should not wonder if we have to chronicle in a short time yet another addition to their extensive range of factories at Washington, New Jersey. Their beautiful catalogue, the finest ever issued, and containing photographs of the members of the firm and full particulars and prices of all instruments manufactured by them, is sent to any one free on application.

THE UNION SIGNAL

Christmas Number

Volume XVIII. CHICAGO, December 22, 1892. Number 51

Presented by Ursula Hettrick at Meigs 1114 Murdock

HAVE YOU ANY IDLE OR LAZY MONEY?

Men and Money are idle when they produce nothing. They are lazy when they produce little. Is your money producing nothing? Then it is idle. Or is your money earning only 5 per cent or 6 per cent per annum? Then it is lazy. Set it to work in earnest. We guarantee the principle and 6 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and a pro rata share of one-half the profits. We have applications for $60,000 more business than we are able to handle. All our patrons are skilled workmen regularly and profitably employed, and we deal with total abstainers only, with a Prohibition clause in every contract drawn by us. We are earning 20 per cent on every transaction entered into by us.

DO YOU LIVE WITHIN YOUR INCOME?

REMEMBER, "All the world's a stage and all the men and women merely players." There may be seven acts in some lives, but there are three in all: Helpless childhood, helpful manhood or womanhood and helpless age. In the first act you are cared for, in the second act you care for others, in the third you must care for yourself. You are working for money now; save a part of it, and make it work for you, or farther on you must become a public or private charge on the charity of others. If you can save from your earnings only one dollar per month, we can help you. If you can save ten dollars per month for eighty months we will guarantee to pay you at the end of seven years $1,040.47; at the end of nine years, $1,425.72; or at the end of twelve years, $2,096.27 And, besides this, you get your pro rata share of one-half of all the profits of the company for the whole period. Guaranteed earnings on full paid certificates are even higher.

The assets of this Company are now $170,000, and are increasing at the rate of more than $1,000 per day by the sale of Profit-Sharing Trust Certificates issued in sums of $100 or any number of hundreds of dollars. But the demand for Homes outruns the supply of Money. If you are able to command any sum, large or small, write to us at once; state whether you wish to make full payment or on the installment plan

REMEMBER, that you get perfect safety, regular interest and a share of the profits.

Directors and Officers.
WALTER THOMAS MILLS, President,
MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, GEN. W. F. SINGLETON,
HON. G. P. WARING, CLARA C. HOFFMAN,
ELMER E. WAGNER, C. L. WARING,
C. R. MORRISON, Secretary.

Address WALTER THOMAS MILLS,
Pres. Mutual Home Improvement Co., - 161 La Salle St., CHICAGO, ILL.

TEN CENTS
FOR THREE MONTHS

BEST FAMILY
ReligiouS PAPER

THREE MONTHS
FOR TEN CENTS

WE HAVE 7,000 SUBSCRIBERS and UNTIL WE GET 20,000 THIS OFFER IS GOOD.
Preference given in order received.

Address

ILLUSTRATED CHRISTIAN WORLD

THREE MONTHS FOR TEN CENTS

AS A TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION

The Illustrated Christian World is prepared for CHRISTIAN FAMILIES, who wish a paper that will give the RELIGIOUS NEWS OF THE WORLD, in short articles and items presented in attractive form.

YOUNG PEOPLE READ IT WITH INTEREST

IT IS

A 16-Page Illustrated Religious Monthly

The departments for the Family, Young Folks and Household, interest Every Member of the Family.

THE WORLD'S FAIR DEPARTMENT Contains fresh, bright matter of value and interest to every one, and especially desirable to all intending to visit the Great Exposition. Religious Items of Interest and monthly reports of striking sayings from Chicago's most Prominent Divines. YOU WANT TO READ THEM.

Address ILLUSTRATED CHRISTIAN WORLD, 159 La Salle St., CHICAGO

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

NEWS NOTES AND EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.
EDITORIAL ARTICLES.
Our Bill of Fare ... 8
The Christmas Day, and More Christ-days Demanded ... 8
Holidays ... 8
Christ In Us ... 9
Take Notice ... 9
THE WATCH TOWER ... 9
CONTRIBUTED:
Poem, Christmas Day. By Katharine Lente Stevenson. ... 2
The Capture of Colonel Solon Adsit. By Elizabeth Cumings ... 2
Random Thoughts on Current Themes. By B. O. Flower ... 3
Fair-y Tales. By B. V. Cushman, M. D. ... 4
A Christmas Thought of the Boys in Blue. By Kappa. ... 4
CORRESPONDENCE:
Editorial Correspondence ... 5
Annual Congress of the National Prison Association of the United States ... 15
The Hour for Action ... 15
THE HOUSEHOLD:
Poem, Christmas ... 6
Holidays and Holy Days ... 6
Tenement House Reforms ... 6
Christmas Eve in a Danish Farm House ... 7
Temperance Temple Items ... 7
QUEEN'S GARDENS:
A Christmas Sermonette ... 10
NEWS FROM THE FIELD:
Massachusetts—Texas—Ohio—Nebraska Notes ... 10, 11
News in a Nutshell ... 12
OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS:
The Sabbath Work ... 12
School Savings Banks ... 12
Temple Receipts ... 12
World's Petition ... 12
OUR CHILDREN:
Poem, Christmas Eve. By Emma Playter Seabury ... 14
Christmas Stockings ... 14
Soft-Shelled Nuts For Christmas ... 14
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT ... 13-16

Our Library Table.

THE CENTURY piles up good things in the issue for this month. Among the noteworthy illustrations are several full-page engravings on religious themes. One of the Present-Day Papers, is by Washington Gladden, on "The Problem of Poverty." Mr. Gladden uses the minute researches of Mr. Charles Booth among the people of London as a basis for his most interesting and able paper. "My Cousin Fanny" is a quaint character sketch, by Thomas Nelson Page. Christmas stories and poems give the volume its fitting holiday tone. Editorial comment covers "The First Duty of Congress," urgently advocating the repeal of the silver law of 1890, "Immigration Problems," and "Government Architecture in America." These are but a few of the large variety of contributions in this altogether first-class periodical. A bright sketch from Mark Twain is promised for the January number.

The Century Co., Union Square, New York City.

This month's issue of the ARENA opens its seventh volume. The topics discussed in the holiday number are live ones in which all thinkers are more or less interested. Among these may be mentioned: Rev. Lyman Abbott's "Compulsory Arbitration"; "Evictions in New York Tenement Houses," by W. P. McLaughlin; "Are we Socialists?" Thomas B. Preston; "Government Ownership of Railways," by T. V. Powderly, and "Occultism in Paris," by Napoleon Ney. The editor, B. O. Flower, gives a vigorous article on "Religious Persecution in the Republican."

The Arena Publishing Company, Boston, Mass.

The December COSMOPOLITAN contains two articles akin in theme: "French Journalists and Journalism," by Arthur Hornblow, and the "Varieties of Journalism," by Murat Halstead. Thomas P Gorman contributes an article of interest upon "The Silent Monks of Oka." Of the other eighteen valuable contributions, most of which are richly illustrated, space forbids even the briefest mention. This magazine will mark its first edition of 150,000 copies—that for January—by the offer of one thousand free scholarships. In return for introducing the magazine into certain neighborhoods the COSMOPOLITAN offers to any young man or woman free tuition, board, lodging and laundry at Yale, Vassar, Harvard, or any of the leading colleges, schools of art, music, medicine or science. They send out a pamphlet on application telling how to obtain one of these free scholarships.

Published in New York City.

The bright PANSY which the children love so well is brighter than ever for Christmas. "How Came They To?" is a beautiful story by "Pansy" herself. R. M. Alden's poem about "Christmas Morning" is one of the best things in the number. Margaret Sydney, in her Columbian Year Sketches, talks about "Golden Discoveries." All the boys and girls should read that, at least; Helen Anderson writes a sensible letter to which every sweet, sensible Pansy will surely take heed. And there are very many other good things. Read and see if there are not.

D. Lothrop Co., Boston.

The Chicago GRAPHIC for December 10 is entitled the "Sculpture Number," one of the World's Fair series, and has indeed outdone itself in the richness and beauty of its pictorial contents. It is a number that will delight every artist eye. As a matter of fact, much of the work of the decorators and sculptors at the World's Fair ground, is, thus far, incomplete, but many of the groups have been captured through the means of the camera, before being put upon the pedestals, and in this way the interested public are permitted to gain a not inadequate idea of what will greet them next year.

December brings to Our Library table a monthly visitant with a bright face, and one always sure of a welcome. It is THE SUNNY HOUR, "published by a boy"—Tello d' Apery,—"for boys and girls." This young editor has his hands full at the approach of the Christmas season, since he means to move every agency possible to start the Permanent Barefoot Mission on a solid basis. Boys and girls will enjoy the bright magazine whose proceeds go to the help of the poor children.

18 W. 14th st., New York City.

Amanda T. Jones leads off in the December issue of GOODFORM with a poem, "Christmas Day," in which, by reason of a kind deed, the mournful wail of one "Friendless and ragged and old," was turned to a song of Christmas praise:

"'He is risen! is risen!' I said.
Oh, lift your heads, ye gates!
For the King of Glory waits.'
And my soul rose up to meet
The Lord of the hungry and cold,
The Christ of the wicked and old."

"Shepherd Davie," is a rarely pathetic tale by Alexina Chamberlain. A helpful article by Mary Proctor is entitled, "How to Trace the Constellations." Amber's "String of Beads," is as unique and fair as ever. The editor has three pages of "Reflections," pathetic, humorous, practical, political. The department of "Woman's Sphere" is timely and forceful. Various other departments all attractively presented make up an unusually good number for the close of the year.

The Goodform Company, Chicago.

THE LAWS OF LIFE, for December, maintains its customary elevation of good sense, helpfulness and inspiration along the lines of healthful living. Dr. James H. Jackson, the editor, says in the leading editorial for the month: "For thirty-five years THE LAWS OF LIFE has been teaching a rational, practical philosophy, which as its title indicates, is as comprehensive as the needs of man, for these laws apply not alone to his physical well-being, but to his higher nature as well. . . . . As long as this journal has any work to do it will continue to show in the future as in the past, excellence of simplicity in all things, to warn against the superficial and artificial habits of thought and life which rob humanity of its truest pleasures and highest good, to implant a love for nature, and trust in the natural, and hence protective ways of living, and to minister to the spiritual needs of man."

The Sanatorium Pub. Co., Dansville, N. Y.

THE STRAND MAGAZINE is a periodical of many "points." Of the humorous articles in this month's issue two are worthy of special mention. "Obstacle Races" is laughably illustrated by Frank Feller. Our serious American temperament does not relax in genuine "play" as does that of our English neighbors. Races, in which there is more of frolic than earnest—a healthful predominance—are a common sport across the water, and the abovenamed article is a very lively, laugh provoking description of such an one. "Zig Zags at the Zoo" is by Arthur Morrison. This month the Zig-Zag is all "Leonine," and the artist, H. R. Millar, has drawn lions ad infinitum, lions in repose and lions rampant, lions in the agonies of toothache and lions in the bliss of being fed, lions royal and lions plebeian; the last one on the scene is Victor, "perfectly friendly with those he knows. He might almost be allowed out, were it not that the artists and the photographers and the daubers, and sketchers who are neither, would probably suffer from his natural indignation So he sits behind the bars and dreams of the golden time when all things shall be free and equal and he shall kick those people and all their works into the outer darkness." And no wonder!

George Newnes, Ltd., 8–11 South Hampton St., London, Eng.

THE CALIFORNIAN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE presents the usual feast of good things in its December number. Its initial article is not of winter snows and frosty Christmas, but of "California Wild Flowers," by Bertha F. Herrick, illustrated from photographs. The stories in this issue are of marked interest: "Payable to Bearer" by Marion Hill, and "One Christmas Dawning," by Clare Carlyle. "Navidad,—Christmas Day with the Early Californians," by Don Arturo Bandini, is a very readable reminiscence. Of ecclesiastical interest is Rev. A. C. Hirst's opening paper on "Methodism in California."

The Californian Publishing Co., San Francisco.

CURRENT LITERATURE presents on its opening pages this month an illustrated article entitled "The Books of the Season" which has doubtless proved a valuable aid to the great army of gift seekers at this busy Christmas time. The remainder of the volume is made up of the cream of articles from new books and magazines, presenting a varied and excellent bill of fare for the hungry reader.

Current Literature Publishing Co., New York City.

LIFE AND LIGHT FOR WOMAN is published by the Woman's Board of Missions, being designed to afford a means of communication between the missionaries in the field and those in the country, and between the different workers in the home churches.

Address Miss Mary T. Caldwell, secretary, 1 Congregational House, Boston.

The Young Woman's Christian Association has for its organ the EVANGEL, a bright little periodical which aims to keep in close touch with the most praiseworthy work of this organization. Aside from the items of interest to those in the field there is matter of more general interest including outlines for Bible study, practical suggestions for Christian work, and strong words of counsel to young women. A news department, embracing reports from the various states, is filled with matter for encouragement to those who hold themselves responsible for the Y. W. C. A. work.

1301–1302 Venetian Building, Chicago.

For the sake of good citizenship in this good country of ours, it is well that old as well as young have acquaintance with this magazine, CURRENT HISTORY. It supplements the daily and weekly paper and preserves that which is most interesting and valuable. It supersedes the old "annuals," for it gives the yearly volume in quarterly installments, and keeps one posted through the year. Its illustrations are all of the highest class and include maps, drawings of public buildings in all parts of the world, excellent portraits of the great men of the day who are foremost in the various spheres of life, or who have lately died, etc.

Current History Publishing Co., Detroit, Mich.

THE HOMILETIC REVIEW completes in the December number its twenty-fourth volume. Its contents, always thoughtful and practical, are markedly so this month. Bishop Warren enters a discussion on "How far should appeals to fear of future retribution enter into preaching?" Wm. Elliot Griffin, D. D., tells "The Story of the Leyden Pastor." Rev. James F. Campbell considers "Spirituality an Element in True Exegesis." Rev. H. H. Emmett contributes "The Indian Problem" as looked at from an Indian standpoint. Such are only a few of the numerous contributions, worthy, all of them, a careful consideration.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York City.

ALL AROUND THE YEAR is a dainty calendar for 1893, issued by Lee & Shepard, of Boston. The twelve months are represented by twelve pictures of little people, à la Kate Greenaway, each picture bearing a brief but pithy sentence, the whole being the quaintest, shortest, and most aptly illustrated love story of the season. The author is J. Pauline Sunter. The calendar is fastened by white silk cord and suspended by a delicate silver chain.

NEW BOOKS.

A booklet in blue and gold cover is quietly circulating about, that Loyal Temperance Legioners in every state would do well to secure and examine. It is the Convention Program of the Wisconsin L. T. L's, of whom Mrs. Annie J. Bradbury is superintendent. This wide-awake, earnest body of young people have held two state conventions. At the last one, could he have been present, and perhaps he was, King Alcohol must surely have trembled at the evidences of what is "growing up" over against his strongholds. This booklet-program contains as much of the enthusiasm and condensed sense of the convention as could well be caught in type, and will be a source of helpful suggestion and inspiration to any young people who may desire to emulate the worthy example of Wisconsin.

845 Lake Ave., Racine, Wis.

Fifty or even twenty five years ago the "people who make books" did not make their best books for children—no, indeed! Why, even the boys and girls who were "little folks" ten years ago did not have quite as lovely books to read and pictures to "make up" stories about as the children of 1892. Among the choice things that load the Christmas counters is D. Lothrop's lovely WIDE AWAKE. It is impossible to tell in a few lines a fifth part of the contents. But there is one page that cannot be passed by. The story upon it is very short, but all true. The picture is that of D. Lothrop, whom the young people must love since he was the founder of WIDE AWAKE. It was in 1875 that the beautiful magazine was born, and when in March, 1892, the life of Daniel Lothrop went out from this beautiful earth and entered into the yet more beautiful beyond, one thing gave him peace and satisfaction—the thought that his labor, his care and his desire had borne fruit in thus helping to develop the intellectual life of America's boys and girls.

Since the passing away of the gentle poet Whittier, there has been demand for his works. AT SUNDOWN, in beautiful binding of white and gold, is a little volume, a small edition of which was printed two years ago and speedily exhausted by the author's friends. The demand for it was so great that a few poems written since its first issue have been added for the new edition named as above. The genial face of the poet greets the reader on opening the volume and gives a speedy indorsement of the contents. Here is what he writes to Oliver Wendell Holmes on his eightieth birthday:

Climbing a path which leads back never more,
We heard behind his footsteps and his cheer;
Now, face to face, we greet him standing here
Upon the lonely summit of Fourscore!
Welcome to us, o'er whom the lengthened day
Is closing and the shadows colder grow.
His genial presence like an afterglow,
Following the one just vanishing away.
Long be it ere the table shall be set
For the last breakfast of the Autocrat,
And love repeat with smiles and tears thereat
His own sweet song that time shall not forget.
Waiting with us the call to come up higher.
Life is not less, the heavens are only nigher!

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

How often is heard the old query, "What's in a name?" with its implied negative answer, and the accompanying bit of wisdom, "A rose by any other name would smell as sweet." But it is a fact, that many words in the English language, have, by the strange laws of association, come to possess, as it were, a spirit life of their own, so that the very form of the syllables stands for innumerable delights or horrors. The name—Nathaniel Hawthorne—seems in itself to awaken a train of thoughts that are peopled with all sorts of weird mysticisms and beautiful imagery, and no one could doubt for a moment that Nathaniel Hawthorne's WONDER-BOOK for boys and girls is a treasure house full of rare gems with no cheap or common glitter. The heroes and heroines—a lively group of children—are named Periwinkle, Dandelion, Huckleberry, Squash Blossom, Milkweed, Sweet Fern, Cowslip, Primrose, Plantain and Buttercup, for, says the author, "I am afraid to tell you their names, or even to give them any names which other children have ever been called by; because, to my certain knowledge, authors sometimes get themselves into great trouble by accidentally giving the names of real persons to the characters in their books." And what child would not rather read about "Cowslip" than "Tom Smith"? Eustace Bright is the student who loved the little ones and told them the Tanglewood stories, these being none other than old classical myths dressed up—not down—for modern children: The Gorgon's Head, The Golden Touch, The Paradise of Children, The Chimera, etc. The book is made a "thing of beauty" and a "joy forever" in its artistic dress, the production of which is an art in which the publishers, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., excel.

THE UNION SIGNAL

Christmas Number

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII.—No. 51.] CHICAGO, December 22, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Heavy snowstorms are reported from the southwestern states.

James G. Blaine, America's great statesman, is lying at the point of death.

Fifty thousand of the Columbian souvenir half dollars arrived in Chicago December 18.

Mr. Gladstone has summoned the English Cabinet to a special meeting to discuss Home Rule for Ireland.

Steamship agents announce, as the immediate outcome of suspension of immigration, that ocean passenger rates will be increased.

The Panama canal troubles in France led to the resignation of M. Rouvier, the Minister of Finance, last week, and M. Tirard was appointed in his stead.

The National Council of Women met in triennial session at the Palmer House, Chicago, December 16. Mrs. Matilda B. Carse represented the National W. C. T. U.

Three mass-meetings were held in Chicago last week to protest against the efforts of the World's Fair Directory to keep the World's Fair open on Sunday despite their agreement to the contrary.

The presidents of a number of clubs and other organizations of Chicago have issued a call for a public mass-meeting December 22, to devise ways and means of cleansing the thoroughfares of the World's Fair city.

Senator Jones, delegate from America, made an impressive speech before the International Monetary Conference still in session in Brussels, last week, urging the monetization of silver and its acceptance as a standard of currency by all nations.

The American Federation of Labor, in session at Philadelphia, was addressed by ex-Senator Henry W. Blair, of New Hampshire, on his new school system apropos to the resolution that since strikes and boycott had failed as weapons, a campaign of education should be inaugurated by the federation.

The American Sabbath Union met in fourth annual convention at Chicago, December 13 and 14. It decided to petition Congress in favor of Sunday closing of the World's Fair; to forward a copy of its Sabbath observance resolutions to the American Federation of Labor and to raise $1,000,000 for its work the coming year.

THE creature also," says Paul, "shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." The creature includes all the appetites and desires incident to our physical nature. When these are under perfect control of the will then we shall have attained to that freedom from temptation and bondage of evil habits described by the apostle as the "liberty of the children of God." Will it not be a glorious liberty, when our flesh can tempt us no more because it is subdued by the Spirit? Through Christ each individual may attain to this liberty and by the union of many self-conquered Christians, the whole race shall at last be lifted to the same freedom.

WE would call our readers' special attention to the valuable letter on page fifteen concerning the National Prison Association meeting recently held in Baltimore. It is significant to note the prominent place that intemperance occupied as a cause of crime. Said Judge Wayland: "The saloon hobnobs at and with the magistrate whom it has placed in office, rejoices in a mayor of its own selection, fears no hostile legislation from the solons it has sent to the state capital and trusts to the executive veto. We know that no subject has been so thoroughly discussed as this, but we cannot afford to ignore it here." With such a stanch temperance man as ex-President Hayes at the head of this prison association we may expect marked attention to this subject.

A CALL has been issued for a conference of Christian Prohibitionists, to meet in Philadelphia, January 24, 1893, to consider the attitude of the church toward the liquor traffic, and if possible, to suggest a remedy for the present indifference of the followers of Christ. It is time that this important question be discussed, and it is to be hoped that brave, earnest words will be spoken in brotherly and Christ-like kindness. The church is the organized power for righteousness, but its present position of inertia on this vital problem is a source of satisfaction to the liquor fraternity.

THE secretary of the Blue Ribbon Army of Sweden, J. Byström, sends an encouraging account of the progress of temperance work in Sweden. Of the several societies, the Independent Order of Good Templars enrolls about fifty thousand members. The Blue Ribbon Army counts as many members. It has as workers many men of influence in church and state as well as many wealthy men. The National Good Templars is still another organization with twenty thousand members. In some places the Band of Hope unions are strong, but the women's societies are still very small and unsuccessful. All members of dissenting churches are considered abstainers. Taken all together, there are about three hundred thousand temperance friends in Sweden, a good showing in twenty years. At that time, twenty years ago, a prominent temperance lecturer who came to Sweden was thought to be more or less crazy when he taught total abstinence. The second son of the king has been quite active in the work.

AN American newly arrived in London called her friend to the window of her apartment at about ten o'clock in the morning, with the words, "Look up, is that the sun or the moon?" A dull, copper-looking object was dimly seen through the famous and infamous London fog. There was in this incident matter for reflection, and the observer at once likened the situation to that of the temperance movement. The sun of truth shines always clear and bright, but the perception of it depends on the medium through which its light comes to the eye. Ignorance, prejudice, tradition, personal interest and personal appetite are the fogs through which that sun feebly struggles in our day. But the brightness of its shining will increase in proportion to the dispersion of these fogs. The cuttle-fish darkens all the water round itself, and then, perhaps, thinks this absence of light is the fault of somebody else. So it is with many minds, they emit difficulties, dangers and distress, it is their natural quality, for which they are to be pitied and prescribed for, rather than ostracised and blamed.

WE took occasion recently to write the Department of the Interior, Census Office, Washington, to learn the number of females of foreign birth in the United States in comparison with the number of native birth. We had formerly stated that there were probably three natives to every one of foreign birth; when, behold, the results show that the proportion is one foreign woman to six and a fraction native born, so that the demonstration is complete as to where American ideas, education and religion are located in this country. It is in the heads and hearts of the women. We wonder if any statesman will take that into his cranium and let it work its proper course in his thinking; and, best of all, his action as a patriot and a Christian. We give the figures so that our readers can work out the results for themselves. The number of females of foreign birth, in the United States, is four millions one hundred and eighty two thousand, four hundred and seventeen. The number of females, native birth, is twenty six million three hundred and seventy-one thousand nine hundred and fifty-three; as demonstrated by the first count of the returns made under the eleventh census.

THE Chicago Free Kindergarten Association, located at 2901 Indiana avenue, began its work of establishing free kindergartens in this city some twelve years ago. There were only two or three at first, but others have been opened from year to year until now the kindergartens under the direct control of the association number twenty one. These schools, accommodating from forty to one hundred and twenty children each, are supported by churches, benevolent societies, individuals, or by private subscription. The principal of each school is a full graduate of the free Normal training class maintained by the association, and her assistants are the students in the training school. Such students receive not only thorough training in Froebel's philosophy and method of education, but special lessons in music, physical culture, natural sciences, psychology and Bible study from the most competent teachers in these departments. The great aim of the true kindergarten is to develop harmoniously the body, mind and soul of the child.

PRESIDENT HIGINBOTHAM has sent a circular letter to each representative and senator of the United States Congress pleading for a reconsideration of the condition attached to the gift to the World's Fair, which demands the closing of the gates on Sunday. President Higinbotham informs the congressmen that postal cards have been sent out indiscriminately to the men of the country and that the responses show that three out of four are in favor of the opening of the gates on Sunday. One very significant circumstance is that it is men, and men alone, whose opinion has been asked, and yet if women, as the devotees of woman's sphere assert, are the ones to whom is specially intrusted the education of children, surely the voice of the mothers of the land should be heard upon this matter. No one can doubt that if their vote were taken the result would not be three to one in favor of Sunday opening. Why this complete ignoring of women, within whose "sphere" this question certainly lies? The conundrum is not a difficult one to answer. Simply this: "You can't vote, ladies, you can't vote." Congressmen and other officials care nothing for the wishes of a disfranchised class.

THE Illinois Woman's Press Association held a memorial service for Miss West on Monday evening, December 11, at the Palmer House, Chicago. This was especially appropriate, as she had been the president of the association since its inception. The members feel that they have lost their strong arm and wise counselor. The service opened with the rendition by Mrs. Crane of Mendelssohn's "Consolation," which was followed by prayer, voiced by the Rev. Augusta J. Chapin. Preliminary remarks on Miss West as "Our President" were made by Mrs. Mary Irene Dye, and an introductory sketch was given by Mrs. Elizabeth A. Reed. Miss West's favorite and familiar hymn, "I'm the Child of a King," was sung by Mrs. Clara D. Stacey, all joining in the chorus. Her patriotic services were remembered by Mrs. Louise R. Wardner, who detailed her activity in the organizing of soldiers' aid societies. Her educational work was presented by Mrs. Mary A. Ahrens, who had known her for thirty nine years, and her editorial and temperance work were briefly touched upon by Mrs. M. F. Swarthout. Miss Emily A. Kellogg, with whom she had made her home for seven years, spoke of her home life, after which Mrs. Stacey sang a solo, "Lead, Kindly Light." Dr. Stockham gave various interesting reminiscences, and extracts from letters from Japan were then read by Miss Julia P. Leavens. "In Memoriam," in verse, was given by Mrs. Sallie M. Moses. The parting hours in California were described by Mrs. Sarah Wilder Pratt and Miss Kate Will, who was the last of her Chicago friends to see her, having bid her good by at Tacoma. Several spoke informally of various traits of Miss West's character. The hymn, "Blest be the Tie that Binds," was sung by all, and the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Augusta J. Chapin.

CHRISTMAS DAY.

BY KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON.

O, to have been with the shepherds on the far Judean plain,
When the radiant hosts came down to earth, with Heaven's own glad refrain!
Oh, to have heard that music! to have bowed 'neath the dazzling light,
Which shone from the forms that had basked for aye in God's own glory bright—
That first glad Christmas day!

Oh, to have heard the glad message which came to the shepherd's ears!
"Good tidings of great joy I bring you; give over for aye your fears;
On earth, so long rent with turmoil, on earth peace shall henceforth dwell,
Good will unto mankind ever, 'tis the reign of Immanuel"—
That first glad Christmas day.

Oh, to have knelt by the manger! to have seen the wondrous Child!
To have clasped to one's longing bosom the pure and undefiled;
To have known with a deep, soul-knowing, that life's strife should henceforth cease,
Since, to His own throne in the hearts of men, had come the Prince of Peace—
That first glad Christmas day.

. . . . . .

But the long years lie between us and that Christmas long ago,
And the wondrous song which the angels sang seems hushed to a wail of woe:
For not yet to His world wide kingdom has come the Prince of Peace,
Not yet from the woes which haunt men's lives has dawned the full release—
E'en on this Christmas day.

But the "tidings" ring out forever; for each day is the Saviour's birth
Wrought out again in the bitter throes of this sad and sin-sick earth;
Each day, on their glad evangel, the angels to men wing their flight,
And speak their "Fear not" in the deepest gloom of the darkest, saddest night—
Making a Christmas day.

Each day where the war wages fiercest, the Prince of our Peace is born;
The robe of His healing toucheth the lives which are most forlorn;
And His kingdom daily deepens in its hold on the hearts of men.
Opening up to their eyes fair visions, far beyond the shepherds' ken—
On this glad Christmas day.

For we see that the peace He bringeth is a peace born of constant strife:
That the crown of His kingdom's glory is the laying down of life;
That His chosen ones are anointed to wrestle, and not to reign,
To be one in His own great sacrifice, to joy in the cross and its pain—
This is His Christmas day.

And we know that the throne He buildeth is built on redress of wrong;
We can see His own stately steppings the world's by-ways among;
We know that whate'er opposeth the ultimate good of each man,
Has never a place in His purpose vast, a part in His perfect plan—
For the great Christmas day.

So we bow to-day by the manger, and gladly lift up each voice
With the thrill of our hearts' deep passion, in the might of His own "Rejoice";
We see what the shepherds saw not; we hear what they could not hear;
He is born to live in our hearts for aye, and we cannot doubt nor fear
On this glad Christmas day.

Aye, we see that the light is spreading, that the East is all aflame
With the swift blaze of the sun-burst; with that dawn when, at His great name,
The sons of men from all nations shall cast their crowns at His feet,
And in peace born of sin's last conquest all earth and heaven shall meet—
That coming Christmas day.

Boston, Mass.

THE CAPTURE OF COLONEL SOLON ADSIT.

A Christmas Story.

BY ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

WINTER emphasizes the year. When one can pick a rose or an orange at Christmas, time slips away on velvet feet, and this was one reason Col. Solon Adsit had given small thought to his age, until the death of his faithful old mammy, Aunt Juno, put a final end to his domestic comfort, and drove him to the democratic hospitality of the widow Jordan's boarding-house. He was not, to be sure, a regular boarder, for he retained his house. But he felt humiliated to be a "mealer." No Adsit he had ever heard of had ever been a "mealer." And in this chagrin he discovered himself no longer young, for when the years leave no other trace they cut across the mind all sorts of curious webs of prejudice, which grow with our growth, until in age they give each one of us a distinctive quality.

As the son of a wealthy planter who adored Calhoun, and a whilom wearer of the gray, his sympathies were entirely Southern, and as became a man of fifty-five he was in all things conservative. At the same time, his quiet life in quaint Palmetto had kept warm within him those youthful enthusiasms, and that sensitiveness of feeling which belong with the early twenties. Of course he had, though a bachelor, a distinct notion of what he preferred in women, and it must be admitted that his ideal was not modern. It was therefore with something very like nerve shock that he heard Mrs. Jordan announce one evening that a lady was going to speak the very next night at the Methodist church.

It was November, and two oak sticks spluttered on the andirons, while two coal-oil lamps, very corpulent in the middle, and furnished with red wicks, gave light at the table.

"I've felt like I'd enjoy to go," continued the widow in a tone which indicated she was not quite sure that her desire was above criticism. "The lecturer's some relation to the minister's wife, and my half brother's, John Parkhouse's, wife's sister told me last winter, she lives up to Ill'noy, that some women up there speak most surprisin' well. She told me she'd heard as many as three at Ipavy. I reckon that was the name of the town where she lives at, but I ain't so mighty certain. Did you ever hear a lady lecture, Colonel Adsit?"

"No, ma'am," replied the colonel loftily. "I never saw a female on the rostrum."

"You've seen 'em on the stage, I reckon," said Mr. Even Pratt, who sat at the lower end of the table with the regular boarders—Mr. Pratt was in the retail dry goods trade and cultivated a lively manner—"but," his face became grave, "I can't see why they want to leave home to talk. They have it all their own way there."

Mr. Pratt was for the fourth time a widower and was supposed to be looking about for a fifth consort. "And it strikes me," he continued, "that as women ain't in public life, they're out o' their sphere a-talking of public matters, even though they be reformers. It seems like to me there's men enough to tend to reforms," and with a comprehensive glance and smile at the twenty or more boarders and mealers, and a wide display of a double set of conspicuously false teeth, he attacked the cold bacon and cabbage with renewed vigor.

"It's a Northern lady," explained Mrs. Jackson, a plump and florid milliner whose head was ornamented with a structure holding many gray birds, dead, of course, but still suggesting suffering. "You know they go in for things we don't. I'd like to see how she dresses, for they do say she lives in Chicago."

"I know all about Chicago," said Mr. Beam, a red-nosed old man at the colonel's right hand, and who wheezed with asthma. "One o' my cousins was up there afo' th' wa' an' he said it wan't no ways fit for white folks to live in. He said it was a bog prairie, an' the winters went to your marrer bones."

"What's the lady's name?" demanded Mrs. Truefit, Mrs. Jordan's mother, who began to feel stirrings of curiosity, the only emotion she could now gratify.

"Her name's Hannahs," replied Mr. Pratt with another display of false teeth. "I've seen it some'ers; it's Mrs. Fanny Breeze Hannahs. She's a goin' to talk about temperance; it'll be total abstinence, I reckon. I don't allow to take anything stronger'n pep'mint after she's been here."

The colonel's black eyes snapped. He opened his lips, but closed them in silence. At fifty-five one has learned the futility of retort. But that evening as he sat by his own hearth, the colonel saw a strange panorama among the shadows, for the name of Fanny Breeze had power to conjure up his past. When he was a young fellow of twenty he had gone North one summer with his mother to a quaint old town that hummed with activity at one side and slept in snug comfort at the other. Never before had he seen such grass, such clover, such hollyhocks or such swinging daisies. Never had he seen them since And it was in Amsterdam that he had lost his young heart

His first sight of her was just at dusk as she came slowly up the grass pink bordered walk that led to his Aunt Fanny's front door. She wore a white sunbonnet far back on her pretty head, disclosing how distractingly her chestnut hair waved about her delicate face. Now, as the North wind blew till the tall, red cedars by the windows responded with a mournful sighing, and the sprawling figtrees rattled their crooked branches, he remembered the Fanny of his youthful acquaintance was afraid of the dark and of spiders. He knew it was the fashion for Northern women to sign their names as Mr. Pratt had given the name of the lecturer, and that public speaking to them was something to be undertaken or not with almost perfect liberty, but he could not fancy his Fanny standing up before an audience save in the security of a church choir to sing a hymn. Moreover, next to his own repugnance to civil office was his dislike of any publicity for a woman. But this was to be a temperance lecture, and the colonel had left no stone unturned to shut up the groggeries of Palmetto, and to close up the "wet" department in its groceries. He felt he could not in reason stay away.

And the war and its consequence had alone prevented his striving to make his early love his wife. "I never saw another woman who displaced her," he told the fire with a sigh. "There was a gulf between southern Georgia and the hills of New York after Lee's surrender, but it wasn't as wide as I then thought, and if I had tried harder I might have got track of her." Theback log broke into a heap of glowing coals. "After all, she was named for my mother's sister, and I used to love her, and if she is coming to Palmetto the very least I can do is to go and hear her. If a woman has cause to talk in public at all it is on the subject of temperance," with which reflection he put out his lamp.

Now if the colonel felt the obligation of his principles and that he was the only survivor of two of the best families of the county, little Mr. Wimper, the Methodist sexton, felt the deference he owed the colonel, and walked him straightway into the most conspicuous place in the meeting house, where Mr. Atkinson, the minister, espied him, and at once swept down upon him with a request to introduce the speaker.

"But I never introduced a ah-lady," objected the colonel, "and I'm not sure that I—"

"My dear brother, introduce her just as you would anybody," interrupted Mr. Atkinson, and then bobbed away toward the study door. It was plain he expected the colonel to follow him, and as most of us do what is expected of us, whether we enjoy it or not, the colonel soon found himself face to face with a slim, blonde young woman, who looked at him with serious blue eyes and who evidently considered speaking upon temperance as a duty and a privilege she was competent to meet. It was not the Fanny of his youth, but it certainly was a very charming Fanny who smiled upon him, and despite prejudice, he found the lecture so admirable he waited to express his pleasure at its close, and he made it a point to call at the parsonage the very next morning. He had thought he would make inquiries about Fanny Breeze, of Amsterdam, but when the lecturer told him her birthplace was in Michigan and that she intended to remain in Palmetto for a month or six weeks after giving a lecture at Live Oak, he asked no questions. He wanted to ask Mr. Atkinson something about the late Mr. Hannahs, for he took it for granted the lecturer was a widow. But it was against the Adsit traditions to be curious. Then the colonel had a prejudice against second marriages for women. If he wanted to know something about Mr. Hannahs he also did not want to know about him, so contradictory is human nature.

The next few weeks went by like a dream. Just how often he visited the parsonage, and just how many points of interest he discovered about Palmetto out of which to frame excuses for inviting Mrs. Hannahs to ride in his neat phaeton, he never afterwards could remember, but the final touch that transmuted admiration and liking into love, he always knew was given by his Aunt Betty Peasley.

Aunt Betty was born a judge, and she had the judge plainness of speech. When therefore she met the colonel in the postoffice, she began at him without ceremony.

"I should like to know, Solon, if it is true that you are courting a Yankee lecturing woman," she said shrilly, and fixing upon him a pair of shrewd, gray eyes; "I've told everybody that's spoken to me there's not a word of truth in the story, but I am contradicted right and left, and I don't want to make an old idiot of myself."

"Naturally not," assented the colonel gravely, and stroking his dark beard.

"Well, all I can say is, that if at your age you are going to marry a woman the very antipodes of a Southern lady, you're the idiot," retorted Aunt Betty, who was always exasperated by the colonel's coolness. "But you haven't told me what to say to people."

"You can tell them I am courting Mrs. Hannahs," said the badgered colonel, drawing up his six feet two of height very straight, "and that I shall marry her if she will accept me, and I will add in confidence, a lady is a lady, North or South."

He went directly to the parsonage where he found Mrs. Hannahs busy with some gay little work, which she explained was to be in time Christmas presents for the little Atkinsons.

"Time was when I had a Christmas gift," said the colonel gravely. "I wonder if I am too old now, Mrs. Hannahs?"

"Miss Hannahs," corrected the lady gently, and blushing. "Excuse me but I was never married. I was named for my dear Aunt Fanny. It was what I saw her suffer from her second husband that made me willing to give my time and strength to the temperance work."

"Her second husband!" echoed the colonel, his romantic old heart rent by conflicting emotions.

"You knew her then?"

"My mother's sister Fanny married Nicholas Breeze, of Amsterdam, and her husband's brother Roger had a daughter Fanny," explained the colonel. "But you haven't answered my question. Am I too old for a Christmas gift? I want you to marry me."

The wedding came off Christmas day in the morning, and there was a Christmas dinner that all Palmetto talked of for a year. Colonel Adsit's pine lands and cotton crops had been making him rich, though till now the money had given him small comfort. He even sent for all the far away Adsit cousins in the next county, and to this generosity was due the speech which after the wedding ceremony was the feature of the occasion. Uncle Barlow Adsit, who liked a glass of wine with his dinner and was often much the worse for something stronger, was the speaker.

"Ladies and gentlemen, I give you the bride," he said, holding up a glass of water which he eyed seriously. "I give you this toast in Adam's wine, which, to be sure must 'a been mighty strengthenin' an' healthy, fo' th' Scripter says he lived to be nine hundred and thirty years old, an' a monsous heap o' tribulation he must 'a seen, an' a right smart o' th' hardest kind o' wo'k to git th' world kinder o' started up like, not to mention his bein' sent out o' Paradise, which it do appear to me was in some ways excusable sinct it was a lady an' his own wife as give him the apple. But to return to our subject, the bride. We're livin' in a time in which they's a mighty heap o' new things to be learned, an' new dewin's to be done, an' to an' old-fashioned fellow like me it's comfortin' that certain old dewin's is yet kep' up, like Christmas an' weddin's." After the laughter had subsided, Uncle Barlow ambled to his climax: —"and on this joyful occasion, which is most uncommon joyful owin' to the stubbornness o' bachelors to be injuced to happier modes an' manners o' livin', I am struck first by th' fact that the bride is a Yankee, an' second by the fact that she is th' fust Yankee that ever did, though it be well know that he served with distinction endurin' th' co'se o' th' late wa', capture an' take prisoner our esteemed an' accomplished relative, the colonel. Speakin' fo' myself, it has occurred to me that now is the time to make the promise I've put off from time to time, fo' lack o' presiverance,—an'—not to put too fine a point upon it, courage, viz; to stick to this tipple." He shook the glass of water and tried to smile, but his lips quivered. "I make that promise now to you kinfolk, all, in honor of the bride, who it do seem to me has brought most handsome, our esteemed an' accomplished relative, the colonel, into th' union."

S. Evanston, Ill.

RANDOM THOUGHTS ON CURRENT THEMES.

BY B. O. FLOWER.

THE RECENT ELECTION.

The last election has been suggestive in many ways, and though the immediate results are not what reformers could wish, it is probable that they are the best under existing circumstances which could follow so recent an awakening of the public mind along various lines of reformative thought.

From the incoming party we can expect little, if any, improvement in the direction of real reform; indeed, during the past decade the battle between the two old parties has been a contest for spoils, and may it not be the very best thing possible that after the Republican party had had full sway in all branches of the government and had been enabled to translate its ideals into stern facts, to the great satisfaction of multi-millionaires, that the democracy should now for a brief season control the government and enforce its ideals? That the Democratic party will give no better satisfaction than the Republican party, aside from exhibiting less monarchical or Hamiltonian tendencies, I think goes without saying.

There are two elements almost equally strong in the Democratic party; one represents what would be called Jacksonian democracy, and is opposed to centralization and special legislation; the other represents the plutocratic power or the Wall street influence, which, while striving to retain the confidence of voters by the vague cry of reform and by denunciation of trusts and monopolies, will carefully prevent the enactment of all legislation which would strike at the root of trusts and monopolies. Thus we find in Democracy of to day a party which is divided against itself and which can no more satisfy the expectation of the industrial millions than has the Republican party during the past four years.

I think in the long run the result of the November vote will prove the best possible thing that could have happened. The whole election has swept from power with a mighty blow a great party which had proved recreant to duty, a once great party which had degenerated into the willing tool of combined wealth and which, while masquerading in the livery of heaven, was serving the ends of conscienceless plutocracy and rumocracy, and from the wreck of this party hundreds of thousands of noble men and women will emerge, unshackled by old-time prejudice and ready to attach themselves to parties which are vitalized by moral ideals.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

It is exceedingly difficult to foreshadow the future, because the reform forces lack that compact organization which counts for so much at the present time, and they have the daily press, with few exceptions, against them. Moreover, they have as yet to learn the great lesson of forbearance and toleration within their ranks. Instead of sinking all minor differences and waging persistent warfare against the common enemy, many of our reformers defeat all practical good for the majority by warring among themselves. If we can bring our forces to work together, with a broad, tolerant spirit present, and if high ideals and moral conviction rule instead of expediency, I believe in four years the industrial millions will sweep the land, carrying with them all the moral impetus which characterized the entrance into power of the Republican party when the rail splitter of Illinois rode into the White House.

THE MISTAKE OF MANY REFORMERS.

To my mind many reformers make a fatal mistake in assuming that the problems of "money, land and transportation" are merely economical expedients. At the present junction these issues enter into ethics, nay, they assume cardinal proportions, because with the circulating medium restricted and in the hands of a few, with land held for speculative purposes, and with the great railroad trusts levying unjust tariff, the millions who produce on the one hand and consumers on the other become the prey of the few. Thus the poor are necessarily growing poorer that a few may revel in fabulous wealth, and the results of these unjust conditions are becoming more and more apparent every year in the rapidly increasing number of paupers and dependents, and in the rapid accumulation of vast sums of wealth in the hands of a few individuals. This poverty, which so largely results from injustice, is as debasing as the vast accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few shrewd men is menacing to liberty and republican institutions. Hence these issues are among the prime factors entering into ethics of to day which we cannot ignore or relegate to a secondary place.

That social and economic conditions demand prompt adjustment, which this triple contention involves, will be readily seen if we consider for a moment facts as they exist. For example, let us note the following significant points: 1. In the city of New York last year according to the judicial records, there were 29,720 warrants for eviction issued. 2. The real estate mortgage indebtedness in the five states of Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska, according to Mr. Porter's census, amounts to the startling sum of $1,174,733,241. 3. The official mortgage record for Nebraska for the year ending May 31, 1892, shows a net increase of mortgage indebtedness of $18,221,221.

These are straws which reveal conditions alarming and deplorable and which demand immediate and radical economic measures. I would not, however, minify the other noble reforms upon which human progress depends. The evil of the saloon power menaces the land as does the power of plutocracy. It is a short-sighted vision which beholds evil only in one. Again, and to my mind of supreme importance is the question of woman's part in government.

WOMAN AND THE STATE.

Believing most profoundly as I do that we must look to woman for the triumph of temperance and a higher standard of morals by the elevation of the popular ideal of ethics, I regard her franchise a prime necessity, and favor every rational or practical step toward this end. It has been unfortunate, in my judgment, that friends of woman suffrage have been less practical in their efforts in the past. They have overlooked the utility of concentration of forces. Let me illustrate. It is useless to expect woman suffrage to be carried at present in the conservative eastern states where conventionalism and the liquor power are localized and have anæsthetized the popular mind.

But there are a number of western states which with concerted action might be easily won. If I were man ping out a campaign, I would select three or four states at first, make arrangements with leading suffragists and influential women throughout the United States to give a certain number of addresses for the party which would unequivocally pledge itself to unqualified suffrage for women. Having this pledge, I would next wait on the People's party, as they are in my judgment the most reformative party of the west which controls a powerful vote. If they refused the pledge, I would try one of the older parties. If a campaign be ably mapped out, I do not doubt that in a short time a cluster of states would attain constitutional amendments giving women the right of suffrage and these states would soon explode the old objections to woman suffrage which are still urged and parroted by tens of hundreds of thoughtless people.

A HIGHER ETHICAL STANDARD FOR MEN A NECESSITY.

If our civilization is to avoid the shipwreck of other intellectual civilizations, it will be by elevation of masculine morals. We must abolish the double ethical standard and demand "a white life for two." We must raise the standard of masculine morality or woman's degradation will follow. And this is one reason why it is of paramount importance for woman to enjoy the right of franchise. The extent of the terrible moral lethargy among the young men of our universities and amid conventional society was vividly impressed by the actions of hundreds of students of Yale and Princeton colleges in New York City on Thanksgiving night, after the annual foot ball game had been played between the clubs of these colleges. The newspaper reports of the disgraceful actions of these young men occupied columns of disgusting detail, but I saw no editorial protests. The concert halls where liquors were sold and variety performances were on the boards, were not only thronged by these young men, but every suggestive song or action of the ballet met with wild applause and frequently elicited low remarks. The Hoffman House bar and that of the Fifth Avenue hotel and other drinking resorts were thronged by half-intoxicated young college men who made night hideous with songs and cheap slang college cries. One incident reported by the daily press will indicate the temper of scores of these liquor-depraved young men. I will give it exactly as reported by a leading New York daily.

"On the way some of the happy avant-couriers caught up a Tenderloin lassie, and half hoisting her, half hugging her, they ran down to Twenty-third street and through Thirty third street to Sixth Avenue, whooping and guying the girl. As she passed by the Fifth Avenue Hotel portico half a dozen lusty young boys boosted her on their shoulders, and shouting for Yale in tipsy tones, turned the corner to the cross street. Somebody made a rough tug at her petticoat and tore off half a yard of edging. There was a wild scrimmage for the trophy, and in the set-to the leaders let go of the girl and she escaped."

And these are the young men which our leading universities are turning out, and who expect to marry pure, virtuous women. That public sentiment does not resent such actions indicates the prevalence of an amazingly low standard of morals among men. And yet, nothing is plainer than that masculine immorality, through subtle psychic atmosphere and through the inexorable law of heredity, will eventually lead to the degradation of womanhood, unless an upward bent is given to morals.

THE PRESENT.

The present is a wonderful age. The mind of the people was never more receptive, nor was there ever a more general soul-hunger on the part of the millions for that true religion which translates itself into life rather than dogma, and finds its highest expression in the Golden Rule, and is echoed in these sublime lines of Whittier:

"O brother man! fold to thy heart thy brother.
Where pity dwells, the love of God is there;
To worship rightly is to love each other,
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer."

Boston, Mass.

FAIR-Y TALES.

The Columbian Bazaar.

BY B. V. CUSHMAN, M. D.

The Queen of Spells reigned in Mrs. Potter Palmer's castle by the lake, for three weeks before the doors were thrown open to the happy select public honored with an "invitation" to buy tickets for the Columbian Bazaar. The gracious mistress literally turned herself "out of house and home," and for the time gave possession to the ladies of the Friday Club, whose happy thought it was to produce this charming entertainment for the benefit of the Children's Home at the World's Fair. The cynic says "Charity has become a fad." It is a good sign that charity can be a fad. The beauty of other days was proverbially selfish, and granddames with servants had nothing in common with toiling mothers, while the "great social event" was too often only the court of pride and envy. The modern woman of wealth and leisure has learned that joy flows in through the channel that carries help out to those less fortunate than herself, so it has come to pass that elegant toilets and dainty refreshments are not the end—although they may very properly be the accessories—of the social gathering, and ordinarily the "tea," "lunch" or "evening" is but a sugar-coating for some philanthropic project. It is right. Pleasure and love were made to walk together.

Such groupings, under one roof, of warlike nations and discordant races, even in mimic pageant, presages the dawn of universal peace and the restoration of all things. Entering the main hall, or great court of the house, the visitor was confronted by a Greek temple, where no less than ten bewitching money changers sat in artfully artless Greek costumes, to beguile the victim with a catalogue, which of course he must have. He was then delivered into the hand of the Turk, to be served with coffee, and for a ransom to buy the cup he drank in, and pay for being served by the Sultan himself. Afterward he was granted a peep into the Moorish throne-room with dark-eyed maidens "circling round" in dizzying grace, till he was not sure that his cup had contained only temperance coffee. There was a confusion of red flags with star and crescent, swinging tapestries and rare old Turkish rugs. Presto! He was in the dining room, presided over by Pocahontas selling trinkets. Beside there were ladies in Colonial costume, and two prim Puritan maidens.

He hurries through France—reign of Louis XVI.—in the parlor, Germany and Holland in the library, to reach the Spanish booth in the art gallery, which was the special pride of the display. It was arranged to simulate a street scene. Valisi and eight members of his mandolin orchestra contributed their rare music for three days and evenings to the success of the Spanish department. The dancing peasant girls every few minutes were rewarded with a shower of silver. Great Britain was ensconsed in Mrs. Palmer's beautiful chamber, with its ebony and gold finishings, where Mary, Queen of Scots, Queen Anne and Queen Henrietta Maria kept company with two Highland lassies and Irish peasant girls. In a side-show, tended by the Duchess of Devonshire, the Highland fling was danced every ten minutes to music furnished by a native Scotch piper. Admission twenty-five cents. Here, too, was the real Frances Hodgson Burnett, who chanced to be in the city at that time, selling her own books, writing her autograph upon the fly leaf. In one she wrote: "It is the boys of to-day who hold the progress of the future in their young hands. Who can say what any boy will do in the life which lies all before him?"

The great book of the sale was "Fame's Tribute to the Children," a collection of autographs which had been struck in fac-simile from the original collection, also here, and which, at five dollars a copy, sold so rapidly that it brought in one thousand dollars during the first six hours. Mrs. Cleveland's name follows the quaint sentiment: "Some say that ravens foster forlorn children." Her distinguished husband points to a peril not likely to befall youth of the present generation: "'Tis not good that children should not know any wickedness."

President Harrison wrote: "I feel like kneeling to children as the future sovereigns of this country. God bless them every one, and keep them in the lives they ought to live, from all that is evil, fill their little hearts with sunshine, and their mature lives with grace and usefulness."

The whole world is kin when the little people are subjects of beneficence. Orthodox pastors and theatrical stars jostled one another and bought with equal generosity. Near by, Mr. Joseph Jefferson, who has invested the poor drunkard with a charm not seen outside the drama of Rip Van Winkle, was counting out eleven dollars, the price of a doll for the little Gretchen by his side. Madame Modjeska, with her husband, Count Bozenta, were liberal buyers in all the booths. No outlay of money was deemed squandering because of the end in view, which every one knows to be a grand crèche, fitted up in most approved kindergarten style, where children of all ages can have a holiday while mamma sees the sights. Who knows but this may solve the chief objection to woman's franchise, "What shall be done with the baby while his mother votes?" Some future ballot system may provide for a nursery adjunct in every precinct.

HYGIENE AND SANITATION.

This bureau exists to prepare a collective exhibit illustrating the present condition of sanitary science, and has issued its first call to physicians, scientists, state boards of health, universities and all other institutions concerned in the subject. It urges that as "nowhere on the world's face are the enormous piles of masonry so numerous as in America, so nowhere on the world's face ought to be the care of public life and health so great." The plan is to display the best kinds of apparatus for physical culture, adapted to gymnastics at home in schools or gymnasiums for amusement. Food inspection will be on trial; all the best systems of drainage and sewerage for public buildings and homes; apparatus for heating, lighting and ventilating; disinfection and deodorizing; baths suited to all classes of buildings and dwellings; fire regulations, and public drinking fountains—these are among the vital topics which will be practically illustrated. But the bureau is careful for things less in the eyes of the world, but actually more in the life of the nation, as when it considers the kitchen and economic cookery; apparatus for keeping meals warm after being cooked, and dinner-pails for school children and workingmen. Healthful dress in all sorts of climates, conditions and occupation also will receive attention. This should prove one of the most practical departments of the Exposition.

A CREDIT CONGRESS

is in the hands of a committee, made up of leaders in the mercantile world. Daniel Webster said, "Credit has done more a thousand times to enrich nations than all the mines of all the world." Credit has its danger side, and to that the mercantile congress will give special attention. Bankruptcy for the individual, panic for the nation and universal "hard times," are among its liabilities. It is found that between the producer and the consumer—twixt the silkworm and the lady—there are four separate credit transactions. Whether we be wise virgins in finance, or foolish, every one of us is concerned in the questions: "How shall the credit system be surrounded with such safeguards as will avert its dangers," and "How guard against dishonest failures?" It is to be hoped that in the outcome may be conditions of larger prosperity and fewer failures in the business world.

Chicago, Ill.

A CHRISTMAS THOUGHT OF THE BOYS IN BLUE

Officers' Clubs.

BY KAPPA.

The United States is so large and the United States Army is so small, that many of our citizens know of the existence of the latter only by the annual report of its cost. In the past, the rule with some persons in authority seems to have been to treat the army as if, like a great corporation, it had no soul; and with others, to regard it as a dangerous if indeed not a hostile power.

To the units composing this army there is a veritable soul, though often a much cramped and discouraged one, and a veritable existence, though monotonous and often full of sacrifice. With the great increase of philanthropists in late years, philanthropies have also increased, and now an occasional inquiring telescope points toward the military posts. The canteen, lately re-christened the post exchange, has been discovered and written up, but so far the officers' club has not come within the sweep of its glass. One reason, perhaps, for this is, because no reference is made to it in army regulations, for it exists solely by the will and authority of the commandant of the post, and is carried under the provision for reading-rooms. These clubs are in all or nearly all large posts, and are not only similar to each other in details, but similar also to ordinary city clubs. Usually an unoccupied set of quarters, somewhat detached, yet centrally located, is designated as an officers' reading-room, and suitably repaired and altered by the quartermaster. The officers organize and proceed to create a fund with which a billiard table is bought, cards, and all kinds of games procured, and an abundance of the best and often most expensive literature is furnished. The sideboard and refrigerator are well filled with all kinds of drinks, from harmless lemonades and mineral waters to harmful champagnes and brandies. A chef is also in attendance to furnish light lunches. The expense to individual members, though only of secondary importance, is not inconsiderable, probably ranging from five to fifty dollars per month. Officers who wish to share any of its benefits or pleasures are expected to join the club and bear part of its financial obligations.

To reduce the temptation to gamble to its lowest terms often a rule forbids a "stake" to exceed five cents, but by far the more common practice is for officers to play or "shake" for drinks. This is sometimes done till the danger line, present from the beginning, is far passed. Thus a code of honor that forbids brother officers from preying upon each other's purses leaves them free to prey upon each other's appetites and weaknesses.

The army was organized for war, not for peace, and in these piping times these men are like workmen with their occupation gone. What can fill the great void in their daily life? How can the time be most pleasantly and quickly passed between the duty calls from reveille to retreat? If these questions are asked they are not answered, or only answered by the longing for companionship that instinctively directs the footsteps toward the club. As months lengthen into years this abnormal club-life becomes the normal condition of men, long isolated from the thrill and throb of the great rushing world, so that they crave it, are restless without it; thus by inexorable law it has changed from the petted slave, the pastime of an hour, to a tyrant, master and arbiter of all hours.

Many of the old officers are veterans of the Civil War, and have spent both seed time and harvest time of their lives in line of battle or marching on Indian trails or in frontier posts. It is the duty and privilege of this government to deal kindly and leniently with those who were willing to die in order that the nation might live, and who when the bugle sounded "forward," neither faltered nor flinched.

It is true the social habits of many of these is far from exemplary, but they are to a great extent condoned on account of their long service. Those who favor the existence of the club urge that if these long accustomed to the use of stimulants could not get them in a private, quiet place they would patronize the nearest saloon. This is little less than an insult to these valiant men, the majority of whom would scorn the idea of being seen in a common saloon. As a rule they do not and will not patronize one; and to this fact may be added the other fact, that there are some officers who now drink but little, who would scarcely drink at all if the congenial and almost sole companionship of the club did not offer continual temptations.

But even if the above cases could not be helped by abolishing clubs, there is another and very different class that ought to be protected—the young lieutenants. These come to the army from three sources: first, graduates from the academy; second, promoted from the ranks; third, appointed from civil life. Scores of these are sent to the front every year to replace officers who have died, or veterans who are worn out. Those from the academy are little more than graduated school-boys, suddenly endowed with the privileges and responsibilities of men. A bright uniform fresh from Hatfield, shoulder straps, a commission signed by his excellency, the President of the United States, all this is indeed no small success. Thus equipped they are thrust into a military post where even a little rank confers some distinction, and where the new, narrow path they tread seems to lead direct to fame—who dares to say how much? It is not strange that their young heads rest a trifle uneasy on their young shoulders, and that they are specially susceptible to temptations from persons who are their seniors in years and their superiors in rank.

The lieutenants promoted from the ranks have their own peculiar trials to meet. There is no social change elsewhere in America at all commensurate with the one that comes to an enlisted man when he receives his commission. At this time, when he is cutting loose from his past and adjusting himself to his new, strange present, the club is at once the most dangerous and delightful of places. Of all doors, this door is widest open to him. He pays his dues and henceforth it is his club. He can now smoke, drink and play cards with officers in whose presence he was formerly required to stand at attention. He has stepped upon the plane—only the edge, it is true—that makes him in one sense an equal with every officer anywhere, in the whole army. On this auspicious occasion it requires a real nineteenth century hero to refuse to drink to his own health with, perhaps, his own captain or his own colonel.

Then there are the boys from civil life. They come from American homes and, as a rule, know as little of army ways as they do of English court life. They have not crossed the ocean, it is true—but they have crossed a line that, though invisible, divides them from civil life as completely as the ocean divides the continents. It is another and different world from the one just left—has its own customs and almost its own standards of etiquette and behavior. There are surprises everywhere—and often embarrassments. Even the closely fitting uniform seems a hindrance and not a help. But at the club there is unstudied informality and all do their best to make the new member feel at home—often regardless of his past—thoughtless of his future.

When some prominent member of the club is ordered away it is quite the thing for the club to tender him a banquet in the club rooms where wines are drank often and long. On these occasions rank high and rank low melt away and, for the time, all become free and equal—very free and very equal. The influence on the latest comers is obvious. And this goes on from year to year.

This ought not so to be. America cannot afford thus to imperil the youth of her land, the hope of her army. By an article of war, an officer who is drunk on duty may be court-martialed and dismissed from the service, and there is a growing tendency among the powers that be, not to tolerate drunkenness either in the line or ranks. There are two bits of bright lining to even this dark cloud, for some officers pass through this furnace and come forth with not even the smell of fire on their garments, and others, though they have served in the army many years, drink comparatively little. Yet these are so few as to scarcely create a ripple against the current that so strongly sets in from an opposite direction, till the wonder is, not that some fall, but that any escape.

This is the situation. The remedy is not so easy to point out. One thing, however, may be regarded as certain, until commandants of posts are forbidden to permit wines or liquors to be dispensed in government buildings these clubs are likely to continue.

Frot ——, Texas.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

WORK IN JAPAN.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—My last letter closed with the Hakadate meetings, the last in Hakkaido. In returning to the capital I stopped at the principal places on the line of the railroad, holding from one to four meetings in each, always with good audiences; in every place but two the only limit to their size was the capacity of the audience room. The entire trip consumed nearly three weeks, covered 1,600 miles' travel during which, according to Mr. Tsuda's estimate, I addressed 10,000 people; many of these were non-Christians and the most precious fruit of these labors which has come to me is the testimony that some have decided to give themselves to Christ because of the appeals made to them there.

Next to this is the knowledge that many Christians have been converted to the belief that temperance work is Christian work. In many places I found the greatest obstacle to be the indifference of ministers and church members—they said the church was a temperance society, therefore there was no need of special temperance work. So you see that human nature equals itself in all cases, that Japan does not differ very much from America. Wherever I spoke, in churches or to Christians, I tried to press home to their consciences the fact that temperance is one of the fruits of the Spirit, and work for temperance an important part of Christian work; that if it is confined to the church, those who need it most will not be reached, therefore they should do specific temperance work outside the church as well as inside; and that unless Christians are leaders in all moral reforms they give occasion to all non-Christians to scoff at the religion of Christ and so bring reproach on our blessed Saviour.

An amusing incident occurred in this connection. At Sendai I found more occasion to press this point than usual and so did put it strongly. My interpreter was Mr. Tanaka, an earnest Christian, and a very intelligent man, being an evangelist, a graduate of the Doshisa. He accompanied me the most of the next week as interpreter. At Fukushima, where I could stay but one night, they insisted I must give the lectures, saying I could rest between, while one of their men spoke ten or fifteen minutes. I reached the town at three o'clock in the afternoon, and had held a workers' meeting from then until five, and the evening meeting was to begin at six, but as they seemed so hungry for speeches I consented to speak twice. The man who was to speak between my two talks spoke an hour instead of ten minutes, and at its close it seemed to me time to go home, especially as we had to be up at five the next morning to take an early train. So when my second turn came, I spoke just four minutes; this should have taken Mr. Tanaka six or eight minutes to interpret, bnt he kept going on and on till I thought that like Tennyson's brook, he would "go on forever." But he did finally stop at the end of thirty-seven minutes, undoubtedly impressing his audience, the most of whom had never heard English before, with the comprehensiveness of our mother-tongue, if four minutes of it took thirty-seven of Japanese. I caught a few words which I remembered in Sunday evening's lecture and when we were out I said to him: "What in the world were you saying all that time? I believe you were giving Sunday night's lecture." "Yes," he replied, "I gave all of it that I could remember, and I think I remembered most all." Afterwards he told me it had converted him and he wanted everybody to hear it. While I laughed heartily over this episode, the proof it gave of Mr. Tanaka's interest rejoiced me greatly, as he will be a power for good in temperance work. He writes me that as soon as he returned he joined the temperance society and will work with his might for God and Home and Native Land.

I stopped at Takasaki on my way to Tokio, to attend a conference of the Christian Japanese women of that province, the home of Mr. Neesima, founder of the Doshisa. The women of the province are said to be the most intelligent and progressive in Japan. Silk is the great industry here and is managed largely by women who thus do more business and handle more money than any others in the Empire. The effect of this is seen in their development and in the respect with which they are treated by their husbands. I have seen nothing like it outside of Christian homes in Japan.

This conference and a similar one in Tokio, impressed me greatly with the devotion and intelligent apprehension of Christian truth by these Japanese women. The meetings were entirely conducted by themselves, in Japanese (of which one of the missionaries sitting by my side, whispered a running interpretation). Their readiness and earnestness in prayer and especially the aptness and appropriateness of their Scripture quotations, impressed me greatly. It was a joy to me to join in their devotions and afterwards to speak to them of our beloved work of which the most of them knew little. I gave them my own state's motto, transformed into Japanese: "All Japan for God and temperance"; told them of our noon tide tryst of prayer, which they promised to observe, and also to circulate our World's Petition which we have had translated into Japanese. I told them also of other lines of work which they can do, juvenile work, mothers' meetings, purity, literature, etc., and trust good will come from thus meeting the leading Christian women of two important provinces.

Of all the wonderful things in Japan, nothing has more impressed me than the lighting up of the women's faces when Christ comes into their hearts. Passing along the streets it seems to me I can pick out the Christian women by the sunshine of their faces. Oh! that there were more of them! Hearing at home, as we do, of the work going on here—and it is wonderful—we overestimate the number and power of Christians here. There are many thousands and for this we thank God, "but what are they among so many?"—forty million people. So few, so few yet as the five loaves and two small fishes were multiplied in the hands of the Master till they sufficed to supply the need of the multitude, so the work of these few, blessed by Him, will affect this whole Empire. Yet I long for more workers, realizing as I do so intensely the crisis which is upon Japan, from which she must emerge either Christian or infidel. I almost feel as if the efforts of all Christendom should be concentrated upon her for the next ten years. Doubtless, if I were to visit other mission fields I should feel their needs as intensely; but I have not visited them and I am here. Then, no other nation is being born in a day as Japan.

It is much the fashion for travelers and writers of the Edwin Arnold type to speak of the Japanese as quite good enough without the religion of Christ, and therefore of all missionary labor among them as useless, or worse, an impertinence. But Japan without the gospel is just what all lands are without it; the beautiful traits of character we find indigenous here, only make darker by contrast the fearful immorality lurking beneath the æsthetic surface. How such gross, materialistic sin can be practiced by such a beauty-loving race is a mystery unsolvable on the theory that the good and the beautiful are generically the same. Licentiousness is the besetting sin of the nation, casting a dark shadow on the picture otherwise so bright. The light of Asia can never dispel this darkness, nor a theoretic belief in the "Light of the World"; Christ in the heart, shining out in the life, can alone lift this shadow from Japan.

Stopping at Takasaki brought me to Tokio at 12:35 p. m. allowing only time for lunch before hurrying to the Tabernacle, Dr. Ely's church, the largest in the city, to commence the Tokio campaign. I should have liked an hour's rest after completing that long trip before entering upon this work, to gather my scattered thoughts together, but it was not to be. Mr. Nemoto, who is my good genius in all this Japan work, planning everything, arranging everything in a wonderful way, met me an hour out, while General Ando, president of the Tokio Temperance Society, and others of the committee, awaited us at the depot, went with us to a restaurant in a beautiful garden, where we lunched and hurried off in jinrikishas, several miles to the Tabernacle.

General Ando, Taro Ando, as readers of THE UNION SIGNAL know him from his letters to it, was for many years Consul General at Honolulu; while there was converted, largely through the influence of his wife, one of the loveliest women I have met in Japan, gave up the use of wine and saké, deemed almost indispensable in official circles here, and entered heart and soul into the temperance work. He is a man of fine presence and magnetic power; eloquent with an almost irresistible persuasiveness. Of his great work in the Sandwich Islands you heard at the time through THE UNION SIGNAL.

On his return from Honolulu he entered just as heartily into work here, and was soon elected president of the Tokio society, whose prosperity is due largely to his efforts. However, he ascribes much credit, and justly, to Mr. Sho Nemoto, the vice president. He is the Helen Hood of Japan, possessing much of her executive ability, genius for detail, self sacrifice and willingness to do hard, unseen, but necessary work. Mr. Ando and Mr. Nemoto work together beautifully, each excelling in what the other lacks, thus proving his complement.

With Mr. and Mrs. Ando in Honolulu were Mr. and Mrs. Myama, and they are now in Tokio, he as pastor of one of the Methodist Episcopal churches. Both have been in America and speak English well, and are thoroughly versed in Gospel and temperance work. Mrs. Myama spent two years in Boston Conservatory of Music, and is considered the finest singer in Japan. In one division of work the musical department was put in charge of Mr. Ando and Mrs. Myama, with strict injunctions to remember the needs of the children.

Mrs. Whitney writes me that Mr. Ando was of great

(Continued on page 15.)

CHRISTMAS.

BY JULIA MILLS DUNN.

OVER the wild Judean hills
There rang a song of ecstasy;
The shepherds felt its wondrous thrill
And gazing starward bent the knee;
The winds and stars took up the cry
And filled all space with that refrain,
"Glory to God in heaven most high,
Peace, peace on earth, good will to men."

Sweet prophecy of love and hope,
Thy tender spirit shed abroad
Till all the heavens shall wider ope,
Revealing broader thoughts of God.
Break all the chains of fear and doubt,
Unseal blind eyes and let them see
The angel visitants about
That serve in silent ministry.

Give us the inward vision, Lord,
To know the prophet and the star;
Attune our hearts to love's accord
And far above earth's fret and jar,
Give us to feel the old-time faith
That heard, on Bethlehem's windy plain,
The voice of wind and star and sea
Sing, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Glad prophets of that far-off time
Ye hear the carol, ye discern
In every face the light sublime
For whose full dawning yet we yearn;
Even now for your prophetic souls
The stars that sang o'er Bethlehem's plain
Are singing as they onward roll,
"Peace, peace on earth, good will to men."

Moline, Ill.

HOLIDAYS AND HOLY DAYS.

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

"I do not believe in times and seasons. One day is just as good as another, and so far as my experience goes, all days are bad. Thanksgiving day only serves to sharpen my sense of the loss of everything I ever had to be thankful for, and as for Christmas day, I was brought up to think that its celebration was a concession to Popery. Fourth of July don't count for women who talk about independence, but never get it, and as for birthdays, what woman ever wants to keep them after her youth is gone? My birthdays have only been times of emphasizing my wish that I had never been born."

The speaker was a New England woman, thin lipped, white-haired, with solemn, pale blue eyes. All this outburst had come because I had reminded her of the joy of the coming Christmas, and had asked her if she was not glad that the blessed day was drawing near.

There are two chairs in the editorial office consecrated to the people, who, notwithstanding all the barriers, succeed in getting in, and notwithstanding all professional suggestiveness, find it hard to get away. One chair faces the light, and into that, if invited to sit down at all, drop the masculine book agent, the seller of fancy soaps and perfumes, the promoter of real estate schemes, which, if only you open your subscription list, is coming to lift your journal above the need of sublunary things. Here, too, rest "cranks" of various kinds, each one of whom is sure it "makes the world go round," and the representatives of causes with a capital "C," who pour words out by the bucketful, and talk a double columned, pica-typed volume in the course of three-quarters of an hour. This chair is hard-bottomed and straight backed, which facts have no especial effect upon its occupants.

The other chair is low and easy, has its back to the light, sits near enough to the register so that broken-soled shoes can be dried and warmed while nobody sees the rent. This chair is for the timid woman who is afraid to come in, and would gladly get out if she knew how to start—for the woman who needs pitifully to sell something and does not know how to make anybody buy.

Though the occupant of the first chair may begin with the offer of something you cannot possibly live without, she will surely end, if she ends at all, by opening before you her own personal needs and the history of her united or generally dis-united family. Even with the light strong on her face she will not blush or falter. She means that you shall buy the things she has to sell or that you shall give her the amount of her commission upon it, and he is going to stay there until she gets one thing or the other. The woman in the other chair would not tell you, if she died, of the sore need that makes the want and scourge by which she is driven into the world.

The office girl calls these the "light chair" and the "dark chair," and it was in the dark chair that the owner of the thin lips and the pale blue eyes sat one morning about ten days before Christmas, 189–. She had sat there many times before for she was one of the editor's friends. Way back, a good many Christmases ago, their respective great grandmothers had nibbled pennyroyal and caraway seed in adjoining pews of the same orthodox church in a dead and-alive New England town. These two of said great grandmothers' descendants were both working women, only by what the editor would have called the Providence of God and the other would have called the cruelty of fate; the one had had to deal with brains and souls and the other with the bodies of men.

The pale-eyed, thin-lipped dressmaker had learned how to cut and fit by the most approved system from a female traveling agent, who went about the country introducing the patterns of a fashion house and teaching people how to use them; and she had gone on cutting and fitting until the three quarters of her life had been spent in handling scissors and pins. She had her own rooms now where a great many women came to her, and, while she stuck pins and needles in their clothes her exhausted soul had grown to be like a great soft pincushion, pierced through and through with her patrons' points which she spoke of as "their ways." A good many of these ways had gone in and buried themselves as needles will in a pincushion, where they were out of sight, but where they kept on pricking and festering all the same. She had spent her whole life kicking against the pricks for she had thought to find women gentle, tender and sympathetic and she did find them indifferent and selfish and hard. She had thought to find them delicate in their touch upon other people's misfortunes and hurts, and she did find them almost cruel in their handling of anybody's misfortunes but their own. She fancied every woman spared another woman; the women she came in contact with spared themselves.

But she went on sewing for them all the same and took their money to support the old folks in the New England homestead. The homestead which held not only the parents who were her life's chief blessing but the mortgage which was her curse. For years she toiled to lift the mortgage, but stricken down by a ruthless fever that held her delirious for many days, during which passed the time when the last payment should have been made, she came back to life to find the mortgage had been foreclosed, and the home and all the hard earnings of her years were gone. She put the old folks in a bit of a country tenement and set to work to buy the homestead back, and before she was able to do it both father and mother died. Even then, with the curious tenacity of purpose that was characteristic of her nature, she resolved to have the place for her own, a place where, at least, the memory of her mother might be kept, and where, when too old to work, she could make for herself a rest.

It was near the Christmas time when this was accomplished, and the money paid, and the few things her parents had left were transferred to the old house. She planned a holiday and resolved to go up and spend her solitary Christmas in the old home that was now her very own. There was no father and no mother, but the roof tree could never be taken from her again, and perhaps that morning she came as near as ever in her life to knowing a Christmas joy. She would never forget that journey. She told the editor about it once. The train on the slow old railroad, which never had custom enough to wake it out of its sleepiness, dragged so that morning that it seemed to her that she must get out and walk. She had left Boston by an early train and was far in the country when the morning broke in its wintry glory, that showed her trees and fences and hillsides fair and white under the feathery snow. There were icy pendents from countless little twigs and the air was so still that every country sound came to her from the neighboring farms as the train paused at the little stations along the way. She heard the sound of the axe in the wood lots and the call of the men to their oxen as they dragged the wood, piled high on their creaking sleds, through the country roads.

She never forgot this ride. The sounds and sights could never be effaced from her heart. She never forgot just the attitude of the roguish school boys, with red mufflers about their necks and woolen mittens upon their hands, who playfully threatened to pelt the passing train with their uplifted balls of snow.

Home at last. The old covered wagon that carried the summer boarders up in the hill country had been placed on runners and was waiting at the station. The driver was a new man, a sturdy young fellow, with his cap tied down over his ears. He did not know her, and she was glad. It was just like her not to tell anybody she was coming. She did not care to see heads thrust out of the windows as the stage went by. By and by, after she should have set the old house to rights and felt at home herself in it and after she had grown a little accustomed to being in it without the mother there, she would see the old neighbors and invite them to come in, but just for a little, just at first, she wanted to be left alone. So, beyond asking old John Stone, her father's former hired man, to go to the house and build the fires for a day or two before she came, and to say absolutely nothing about her coming, she had written no word to any one.

She was the only passenger, and after her box was fastened on behind and she was tucked in under the buffalo robes with that silent man, with his head out of sight, so that he did not seem like a personality to her at all, she felt alone with her hills and the familiar road and her memories.

Looking back through the years it had been all repression and hard work. All those she had worked for had gone beyond her need. Before her was still the hard work, but further on this dear haven of rest, and, sad as she was, there crept into her heart, almost for the first time in her life, a throb of Christmas joy. She had never had Christmas in all her lonely life, but she was to have it now, and full of that thought she came to the village.

From the top of the street she could see the chimneys on the old house, and she strained her eyes to catch the sight. It stood back from the road with grand old elms stretching their arms on the one side over the roof, on the other making grateful shade over the traveler's way. Her heart gave a great bound as she saw the smoke rising from among the naked boughs of trees. John had obeyed her faithfully. He must have a grand fire in the sitting room and another in the kitchen. She looked again. The column of smoke shot up thicker and higher, and again she looked with startled, straining eyes. In another moment the curling column was a great, dense mass of smoke through which leaped fiery tongues of flame. The boy lashed his horse. They came nearer—not a word was said. As they approached the house many straggling villagers were slouching slowly away. The excitement was over. The old house was like tinder. The fire had been burning since early morning. There were only the blackened walls, and the old chimneys and a smouldering mass of smoke left to greet her on this blessed Christmas morn.

Without a word from her the driver had stopped on the brow on the little hill, from which point the desolation lay before them. She sat and watched, uttering never one word. The stolid boy waited and watched also, reminding her of the passing time by the beating of his heavy boots upon the wagon bottom, his way of showing that he had driven far and that the day was cold. The sound awakened her as from a dream.

"Where be you goin' to stop?" came from behind the muffler as the boy gathered up the reins.

"Nowhere."

The word like frost came from between her white, closed lips. Another pause. A more vigorous thump of the feet. An impatient pulling of the reins, a fitful,

"Don't see how we can set here all day; horse ought to be fed. Where be you goin' to stop?"

"Nowhere, take me back to the station. I must get the next train to Boston."

New York City.

(To be continued.)

TENEMENT HOUSE REFORMS.

BY CHAS. F. WINGATE.

The tenement house problem is one of the great, pressing problems of the hour. It touches society on all sides, and it specially concerns women. If it is true that "as the homes so are the people" then it is vitally important that the homes of the masses should be clean, comfortable and healthful. In all our great cities and in many small towns there are "slums" and "fever nests," centers of moral and physical contagion, which need constant watching. This work belongs to the public officials, but it can be largely aided by volunteer visitors, who will report nuisances to the authorities and see that the laws are enforced.

The noble example of the Ladies' Health Protective Association of New York shows what incalculable benefits can be accomplished by a few earnest and brave women, and their work should be copied in every community.

Sanitary reform in its essence means good housekeeping. Women are specially fitted to spy out sanitary dangers and defects and to educate careless, ignorant tenants in hygiene. In this field personal effort and sympathy can accomplish wonders, and there is room for thousands of workers.

Much has been written of late upon the work performed in Berlin, Glasgow, Paris, Birmingham and other European cities in the shape of municipal improvements, yet how little we have profited by such example. How little disposition is shown even to formulate plans for following in their footsteps, which we must inevitably do, and clearing away upon some wholesale plan the congested centers of our great cities, as has been done abroad, no matter at what cost.

The recent cholera "scare" has created national alarm, and it should be utilized to persuade careless tenants and indifferent landlords to "clean up" and put their houses in order before next spring, in case of a recurrence of the plague.

New York City.

CHRISTMAS EVE IN A DANISH FARM-HOUSE.

BY NICO BECH MEYER.

"Clip, clap," it struck against the ice-covered ground with every step the small wooden shoes took along the road. The crows cried as if they were crazy as they lifted their wings from the slanting hills.

The little girl in the wooden shoes took the wet woolen mittens out of her mouth for a moment and looked dreamily after the crows; now they were at the point of her destination—if she only were there herself! She looked sideways towards the bent form by her side, that painfully tottered over the uneven, frozen ground. The short skirts dangled around a pair of blue yarn stockings in clumsy, white wooden shoes, bedecked with yellow brass clamps; the rest of the body looked like one bundle of shawls. Around the head they were placed in such a way that one might as well give up trying to find out which was which; but out of them, as from a funnel, peered a crooked nose. The sunken, colorless eyes looked crossly at the child, who again put the mittens before her mouth.

"What are you bawling about?"

"I feel so cold."

"Of course you do; but it won't help it any to bawl. Shut up now! Do you want me to come dragging you bawling to the place?"

The little one pushed back the red hair that was streaming before the wind, drew the handkerchief closer around her head, put the hands with the mittens under the knit shawl (the only kind of a wrap which covered her unshaped, childish frame) and tried to straighten herself up. But the tears kept on running.

. . . . . .

In Jeno Anderson's kitchen there was plenty of heat. Maren, kitchen girl, ran through the opened bakery door, from which a mingled smell of burning heather and baked bread came into the kitchen. She carried one steaming loaf of bread after the other, and her face glowed from the fire. By the stove stood the house-mother herself and cooked doughnuts. She was fleshy, was Grethe, with a good-natured face and two soft, white hands, which always rubbed themselves up and down towards her apron. She was not stout, even if she was fleshy; and to this her weak health, as well as to the unusual care of her husband, did she owe both her soft hands and a certain slight slowness in manners and appearance.

But in those days she was at work too. "God help you!" it was mumbled in the bakery after the door-latch had been let heavily down, and two pair of wooden shoes clappered over the stone floor. Grethe turned around with a doughnut on a fork and saw the old, bent woman standing leaned against the doorcase with the ten years old child by her side.

"Is it you, little Trine! Good-day and welcome!"

About an hour later the old woman wandered along the road with a heavy bundle under her arm, all filled up with thoughts about the pork and bologna she had captured. Maren's voice was heard from the bakery calling the house-mother who was to state her opinion as to whether the Christmas cake was done. While that was going on, little Trine was standing on the doorsill between the kitchen and the room, her hungry eyes running back and forth. She looked with surprise at the shining copper and brass utensils on the wall, the spacious coffeepot on the shelf and the white scoured kitchen floor. It surely was impossible that this could be called a kitchen.

Trine was an orphan, who was sent by the county from one family to another. It was her fortune that Jeno Anderson had lately been elected a member of the county board. When the question was raised at the meeting, what to do with Trine, as the old woman, who at present had charge of her, no longer would keep her for the small amount which the county had considered it proper to sacrifice to her, then Jeno Anderson rose up with the sense of his new dignity and responsibility and declared that he would take the child, and that immediately, instead of at New Year.

Now she stood there, perplexed over all the new things. Her coarse hair was smoothed down by Grethe's soft hands (she heretofore had believed it only was destined for pulling), her cold hands had been warmed, and a big bowl full of coffee, with a piece of bread and butter, had quickly been consumed. Yes, she had got all her spirits wide awake, and every sense in her was roused in watching.

There was a plate with doughnuts on the table! She took a few steps toward them with distended nostrils. A slice of light bread does not help much if one has had no dinner and it is four o'clock in the afternoon; it will only make one more hungry. She looked through the half-opened bakery door; there the two women stood, with their backs turned, putting a straw up and down in the Christmas cake to see if it was done. A quick decision passed over the sly little face. With an adroitness like a cat's she grasped two doughnuts, put them under the knit shawl, and was awhile after sitting on the bench in the room eating them in the dusk of the evening.

. . . . . .

Two candles were burning in the front room, so that the long, white-scoured table, the Virgin Mary in blue and red on the wall by the end of the table, the benches along the sides, the low stove and the floor strewn with white sand, all of it was more than usually lighted, and yet the room was empty, but in the bedroom, the door of which was opened toward the front room, they all were gathered.

Under ordinary circumstances that room was only for husband-man and house mother and for those strangers, especially women, who were to be paid more than common attention; but everybody, upon being invited in there, had to leave their wooden shoes by the door. Against the wall between the windows there stood a square table covered with a red oilcloth. On the wall over it was an old picture, the ascension of Christ; figures in the blue and red garments commonly seen on paintings from the middle ages, the Lord's Supper with white figures on a gilt background, and a picture from an illustrated weekly.

In the broad armed chair by the end of the table was the house-father sitting. A wealth of black hair, which wet and smooth was combed to one side, encircled a large, well-shaped head. The features looked as if they were worked deep in brownly-burned clay. The determined line from the mouth down towards the chin, the searching, earnest gaze, that mouth, always knowing why it was opened and then shut again just as determinedly—the whole told that he was a west Jutlander, one of that race which gets its stamp not only from the dreary, timberless plains, the impassable roads, and the hard work, but also from the silence reigning in those regions. And because they are so silent, one can in earnest get to speak to them, when they first have turned their ear towards listening.

He was, in a manner, showing that his whole being was thrown into it, reading a Christmas sermon. By the side of the table in as broad-armed a chair Grethe was sitting, in a heavy, home-made dress, with her hands clasped over the clean gingham apron. By the other end of the table was Maren, with glowing red around her neck, and a handkerchief with red roses around her head, her hands washed till they shone red as all the rest. Up against the large cupboard, closer to the door, stood a broad-shouldered young man, clad in vest and pants of blue, home made stuff, and new, dark-striped gingham sleeves coming out of the vest. From the watch-pocket dangled a watch-key attached to a piece of black woolen braid. He stood with one gray-stockinged foot across the other, and looked earnestly at the reading husbandman.

But on the stool beneath the broad bedstead with the blue-striped curtains, was little Trine sitting. She did not understand much of what was read, but was feeling intensely solemn, looking at the solemnity around her. Her red hair was combed smoothly back; the little freckled face literally shone down upon a new, gray dress. She had to caress it once in a while to remember how it felt. She knew that smell peculiar to home made goods; many a time had she smelled it in one, whenever some woman had opened her trunks and made an exhibit of her treasures to friends. But this was the first dress made of new goods which little Trine ever owned. She began to understand why they called Christmas a happy time.

They were singing around her, "The rose of the world is now found." She looked at the red roses in Maren's handkerchief and could not get her eyes away from them again. Now they commenced: "My mind is always wandering in the place where Christ is born."

The hired hand, who from his corner had been singing without any book, stopped a little. Maren motioned at him with her hymn book and he came towards her chair, where he stood and looked in the book.

"When the memories from Thy manger
In my heart are treasured right."

If they had had that manger from Bethlehem so close that they could have seen it, they could not have been more in earnest than they were.

. . . . . .

At last bed-time came and that Christmas eve came to an end, as everything else in this world. On a shelf over the low stove in the front room stood a big stone jar by the side of a great many bright colored cups and saucers.

Grethe reached up to it, put down her hand, took a saucer from the shelf and filled it with cookies and doughnuts. She bent down over the child, who stood there watching her with big eyes.

"Here, little Trine! You take this to bed with you. If you cannot eat it all to-night, you can keep the rest for to morrow."

. . . . . .

The moon shone through the uncurtained windows of the farm-house, where everybody was sound asleep. But in Maren's room, that was close to the kitchen, the moonlight fell over a head with tangled hair, that pale in the dim light, sat and looked out into the room. Now it was bent towards the sleeping Maren; then a little, white figure rose up, two feet were moved carefully across the sleeper, and with a noiseless jump their owner alighted on the floor.

Quietly the door to the front room was opened, and Trine stood, all in the glory of the full moon in the center of the room, with naked feet, in a little night gown, and with two doughnuts in her hands. She peered towards the door of the bed-room. It was shut. She climbed the chair by the stove, put the two doughnuts back in the jar, looked once more carefully towards the door, and disappeared as noiselessly as she had come.

That was the way in which she celebrated Christmas eve in her first "home."

Copenhagen, Denmark.

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

And when he was come into the house, the blind men came to him; and Jesus said unto them: Believe ye that I am able to do this? They said unto him, Yea, Lord. Then touched he their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it unto you. And their eyes were opened.—Matt. 9:28, 29, 30.

How sweet it is to live in this blessed Christmas time, when every one is taking on so much of the spirit of Christ. Forgetting self, thinking of what will bring joy and gladness to others. Faces are beaming with the thought of the sweet surprises they are going to give beloved ones, and the more self denial the gift represents the sweeter the pleasure of giving. In the "Temperance Temple Items" column the spirit of Christmas constantly abounds, as is shown by deeds of loving self-sacrifice daily manifested, and oftenest by those who have little to give. W. Copp, Jackson, Minn., sends $1 and writes: "I wish I could make it a hundred, but I never wait in these matters, but do what I can at once. I received less than three hundred dollars salary last year but managed to help a good cause, even though I do without some things I would like to have." Mrs. Julius Hanback, St. Paul, Minn., writes: "Ever since I first heard of the Temple I have been anxious to earn some money to give to the building fund. I have at last succeeded. Inclosed please find draft for the first dollar my hands have ever earned."

***

Mrs. Martha Poorman, Dallas, Oregon, seventy-three years old, sick, alone in the world, and without any income, sends $10.80 which she collected in her mite box with the aid of her friend, Mrs. Fisher. Mrs. E. A. Lamoing, Penn Yan, N. Y., writes: "I am an old lady and in poor health, but I want a finger in the work, so I send a dollar." Mrs. Emily Williams, Weatherford, Texas, eighty eight years old, sends $1, as she says, "to help a little." Mrs. H. R. Stockbridge, East Morris, Conn., writes: "I observe in THE UNION SIGNAL if each one of our white ribboners would give a dollar the Temple would soon be ours. I send $1; God grant all may do that much and more." Mrs. M. M. Bunn, Fall River Mills, Cal., says: "Enclosed find $1 for the Temple fund. In the Pacific Ensign I read Miss Willard's appeal for us white ribboners to send one dollar for the Temple fund. I send this in the name of my darling little Earl, who used to say, 'Mamma, how I wish we had something to give.' He cherished the thought that some day he should go back to Illinois and see his grandparents, also the Temple, but God saw differently and called him home to heaven last December."

***

Mrs. W. G. Bickelhaupt, Roscoe, South Dak., sends $3; she writes: "Last Christmas my husband presented me with a $100 Temple Trust Bond by which I find I am enabled to help on the Temple. Enclosed find coupon number two, which is the first interest I have drawn on it. Please accept it as a small contribution from one whose heart is in the grand work." Why would it not be a nice Christmas or New Year's present for all husbands who can afford it, to present their wives with a Temple Trust Bond? It would be a gift that would not wear out but would make constant and steady returns. Our Bonds are selling rapidly, soon the entire issue will be disposed of. Yesterday we sent $2,000 worth to a gentleman in West Virginia. All who desire to invest in the Bonds should address Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 La Salle St., Chicago. We have paid Mr. Marshall Field another $10,000 on stock beside interest and we purchased a few days ago from out side parties, $10,000 worth more stock—so steadily and surely we are getting possession of the Temple stock.

***

A communication has been received from Mrs. Sada S. Harrington, Rock Valley, Iowa, the very efficient superintendent of Temple work in that state. She writes: "We have started a tablet fund for our dear state president, Mrs. Dunham, who is bringing order out of chaos, strength out of weakness. I have sent out quantities of mite-boxes and circulars, have painted and sold three dozen Temple book-marks and have placed pictures of the Temple where I thought they might speak silently for a remembrance 'in His name.' I am working a handsome white satin banner, so hereafter the Temple shall float amid our state array of beautiful banners. I plan to raise $100 a month for Iowa this year." We would be glad to hear from other state superintendents of Temple work the progress they are making in their respective states. Romeo, Michigan, W. C. T. U. is now raising $100, upon which, generously assisted by friends outside of the union, it has paid $21.90. The Y's of Moorestown, N. J., send $12 on their pledge. Dr. N. H. Blosser, Logan, O., sends $10, first payment on a memorial tablet for his wife. Three dollars come from Mrs. E. J. Herendeen, Farmington, N. Y., for the Mrs. E. M. J. Decker tablet. The South Hanson, Mass., union sends $3 for the Elizabeth Tobey tablet, and $1 from the Adams, Mass., W. C. T. U., has been received for the same tablet. Mrs. B. W. Warren, Charlotte, Mich., writes: "My mother, in her last moments, wished me to send this little ring to you for the Temple, as her little mite. She was ninety-one years old." A pretty little band of gold that would fit a slender finger was inclosed in the letter. Won't some one send $2 for its purchase (it is worth $3 at least) so that the name of the aged saint may find a place in our record books?

***

A two-cent stamp sent to Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, the Temple, Chicago, will secure a mite box, descriptive card and bulletin; remember, all who fill a mite-box ($3.65) before next April will receive a photographic group consisting of Lady Henry Somerset, Miss Willard and the founder of the Temple. All drafts should be made out in the name of Miss Esther Pugh. All matters pertaining to the Temple should be addressed to Mrs. Carse.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, MARY ALLEN WEST, } Editors-in-Chief.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, Contributing Editor.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, Managing Editor.
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, Office Editor.
Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

"Thou who wast born and cradled in a manger,
Hast gladdened our poor earth with hope and rest,
O blest Beloved, come not as a stranger,
But tarry, Lord, our Friend and Christmas guest."

Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.—Luke 2:11.

OUR BILL OF FARE.

This is our Christmas number, and we have issued it a few days ahead of the usual time in hopes that it may reach our distant subscribers by Christmas day. Well-known names contribute to its pages—Katharine Lente Stevenson, Massachusetts' corresponding secretary, Elizabeth Cumings, a well-known story writer, B. O. Flower, editor of the Arena, Dr. B. V. Cushman, our old-time friend, Mary Allen West, our deeply lamented editor, whose words thus "live after her," Julia Mills Dunn, one of our poet laureates, Mary Lowe Dickinson, the gifted King's Daughters' leader, Nico Bech-Meyer, a talented Danish writer who has recently come to this country and is a devoted white-ribboner, Harriet Francene Crocker, in the choice Queen's Gardens, Margaret A. Lake, a stanch friend from Baltimore, and Margaret B. Platt, who frequently sends valuable news from Washington. The children are handsomely entertained by a finely illustrated poem, written by a regular contributor, Emma P. Seabury. The editorial pages voice the season's special blessings and opportunities, and the entire paper goes out with Christmas greetings to our thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands, of readers.

THE CHRISTMAS DAY, AND MORE CHRIST-DAYS DEMANDED.

The poetry of the gospel is in the Christmas tide.

"Ring, happy bells, across the snow," is the music of millions of hearts at this time, emancipated by—they know not what. And yet they are emancipated.

'Tis a barren heart indeed that does not bud with some little blossom of tenderness, good will and congenial feeling at this season. Seldom is Christendom stirred by so universal and potent an impulse as now. The season is brimful of quivering expectations, earnest longings to give, and a nameless delight in the world wide fraternity that is felt.

'Tis a season of wonderful ideality. It becomes legitimate to talk of angel songs, spiritual visitants, fairies, fancies and fantastics. Agnosticism yields its doubt, rationalism its arguments, and criticism its facts, while the airy messengers troop by, the bells ring merrily, little children dance, the stars glitter, the people shop, and the old story of Santa Claus is repeated in millions of homes.

Something has happened. No day of all the great or gala can approximate to this. Humanity is built up and built over, the whole world is kin once more, and owns it. "'Tis the birthday of the King"; childhood ascends the throne and holds first place. Churches are festooned, altars wreathed, homes decorated and lighted, business suspended, general vacation declared; good wishes, congratulations and substantial tokens pass from hand to hand, and a million voices sing the prayer—

"Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be."

The season makes us ideally young again. The man or woman heart renews itself, and time's gleaming shuttle lies through the warp and woof of memories half held, illuminating all the retrospect until eyes are dim with the mist which, to hide away, we turn again to the hard facts of the present. John, the beloved disciple, tells us, "and we know that the Son of God is come." We know it at Christmas tide, or are more sensible of it then, than ever.

Allowing all, for what of pagan rite or mystery, German love of festival, or English love of home, may naturally blend in the event, there is a large something to be accounted for—this universal surrender of the world's heart to the day is not all explained.

We think out from the center of the one Christ-day, and are led to ask of others—it is the transcendent and paramount fact in the history of the gospel that, to a great many hearts on this sad earth, every day is veritably a Christ day. Because of these hearts, loving stronger than death, firm, steadfast and aggressive in their loyalty to the King, the gospel has been moving, like an evangel of light around this world. They who have borne His spirit of joy and peace, suffering, sorrow, and yet good will, have gone tenderly forth, and have sowed by the side of all waters. For His dear sake, they have been erecting hospitals, asylums and schools; enlarging charities, building temples and churches, and scattering the seed of truth everywhither. Even now, they project the life and hope of a better civilization into the darkest corners of the earth.

Only of late, some of them have fainted, and yielded their last breath beneath the Himalayas, where, in the sweet passion of His love they had gone to offer the bread of two worlds, to teach salvation, instruct the ignorant, and gather the dark faces of heathen women within "bands of ribbon white."

Throughout the world, the followers of Christ are laboring in sorrow and tears to imitate the Saviour's miracle of love, in feeding the multitude, which is very great. In the Dark Continent are men and women entering into the labors of the first explorer, who have given themselves to Africa for the sake of the Christ who gave himself for all the world.

If the world could hold close to its heart the love of this kingly Christ through all the days, as upon this Christmas day, it would be next to impossible for us to be mean, selfish, or to feel the "narrowing lust of gold" as now. The great truth of this incarnate love to us would become an expanding force in our lives, forcing us to larger and loftier views of the world's brotherhood continually.

If Christ "so loved us," then indeed we become "debtors to all men" in turn, and would naturally desire each day to be a Christmas day for the payment of our debt. It is the marvel of all thought that we who believe and rejoice in our King, cannot afford Him more days; nay, indeed, all the days, since He thus humbled himself to be our Saviour.

And alas! that Christmas will go by, and men will again hug their narrow views, battle to take bread from other mouths, sell or give their brothers poisonous drinks, or license others so to do; strange, that the old lying, cruelty, selfishness, slander, reproaches and tears must go on, and that the Christmas day must wait the long succession of license days, murder days, sombre days, days bleak and black like the death days of criminals; prize fights, mad days, of frenzies upon race tracks, in gambling dens and upon exchange where men almost tap their veins and spill their blood for gold; days of broken homes, stunned hearts and paralyzed, divorce, quarrels, suicide, desolation, poverty and disgrace.

The King would not have it so. He points to this Christmas day of holier moods, tenderer purposes, sweeter aims and loving deeds, saying, "This is something like the life I would have you live."

And the Christmas tide, lifting us to such ideals, cures much of the pains of the past, heals the scarred disgrace of our forgetfulness, enlarges our thought of what may be, and becomes prophetic of the peace, the righteousness, the sweet good will, which are promised to crown all at last.

HOLIDAYS.

Nothing equals living experience to take a topic out of the realm of speculation, give it standing room upon the earth and plant it squarely in front of the observer where it is possible to get a correct view of its proportions and relations. Thus soliloquized the editor in the inner sanctum of THE UNION SIGNAL, while a trio of ladies in the ante-room discussed the season.

We had long felt that holidays might be turned to better and happier account, but with that, as with many other things we would gladly see mended, we "have been too busy to do anything about it," when here was the subject all analyzed, difficulty and remedy pointed out by a quarter of a dozen bright women coming in conjunction here to buy some of our beauty-famed Christmas cards and booklets.

Said Mrs. A., "I am quite ready to abandon the temperance reform and start a movement for the abolition of holiday week in general and holiday presents in particular."

"I am quite ready to join you," responded Mrs. B. heartily. "Maud and Ella began their preparations in October and I don't think either of them have had a complete night's rest in six weeks. Kate has caught the infection and is really very deft for a young girl. She has done some beautiful fancy work but has done it when she should have been asleep or about her lessons."

Mrs. A.—"We make very few things at home, yet the burden is great. When Mr. A. gives me money to settle housekeeping bills the first of December there is always an extra sum to cover Christmas presents for my 'dear four hundred friends,' as he phrases it, and with it he as regularly says, 'When you want to get things for the children I'll go along and pay for them.' He wouldn't for anything miss that, and the only Christmas buying I actually enjoy is what we do together for our own family."

Mrs. B.—"Upon what basis do you make presents outside your own family?"

Mrs. A.—"Ruth and I make out a list. We take the names of those to whom we sent last year and of those from whom we received gifts—I always keep account. Then we decide upon those with whom, for any purpose, it is desirable to exchange. We are preparing for over a hundred this year and I am utterly worn out with shopping. So many ladies complain of the same weariness that I believe a change of custom must take place before many years. What do you think, Mrs. C.?"

The lady questioned had been ominously silent. Her "social position" was perhaps more secure, though less conspicuous than that of her friends, whose names often appeared in the "Society News." She leads a busy life without ever seeming "tired." "Yes, I think there should be a change, but I would rather see more holidays than fewer, for I think more are needed and might make us both happier and healthier."

"Do tell us how!"

"Well, in the first place I determined long ago to be honest in my love tokens. I never make a present solely because I think one is expected, nor to win favor anywhere. I should deeply resent a gift prompted by either motive and my acquaintances would probably do the same. Among my friends I give only to those I love so well that I delight to remember them, and not even to them when for any reason the inconvenience of giving outweighs the pleasure. All the value a gift has for me is in the love it represents and the joy my friend had in giving it. In the home circle where we are all happy and sure of our mutual love-offerings, and in brightening the season for needy ones, I find the holiday burdens light and holiday joys sweet."

"Mrs. C., what do you do for your 'poor people' at such times?"

"One of my plans this year is a dinner party, where the young men of my class will meet the girls of Mrs. D's class. I have just bought these little books for favors, and in each one I put a pledge card. Every one of my class is already pledged, but I want him to get some one else to sign this and bring me the name. In that way I will come into touch with some others who can be helped. These large cards for family enrollment I shall give where I accompany them with flannel dresses and little shoes. This is the season for 'swearing off.' Drinking men are more approachable than at other times. The gifts to their children touch their hearts, and by following the impression up with temperance and Christian influence their purposes may be strengthened till they are thoroughly restored. I have several friends who work steadily and support their families like men, who, one, two or four years ago were besotted. My most difficult case has been a drinking woman, but she has not 'broke over' now for six months. This is a trying time for her, because her friends know of no way to 'keep Christmas' without liquor. I have invented work for her in my house all this week, to have her where I can take care of her."

The packages were put up and the voices floated away, but a presence lingered as of a word made flesh and dwelling among men who need it.

Here is the true holiday, which aforetime was written holyday, and the world has gone far astray for lack of such. Words sometimes grow so tall and bear such varied meanings that the root from which they sprang is lost to sight. It is good then to dig underground for the original stock and to trace its connection with other words and meanings that in the course of years and the vicissitudes of speech have ceased to have apparent relation. Our holiday at first was holyday, and in the Saxon, holy and heal were noun and verb. The old words carried ideas of bringing together and of holding as well as of restoring to soundness. All these entered into the gentle lady's "holidays," and she may well regret that they are so few There is room for much merriment in them, too. The preacher who gave his heart to wisdom and swept the scale of human feeling up and down, declared: "There is a time to every purpose under the heavens." We can least of all afford to cut off the "time to laugh." Times to weep come unbidden.

The impression is very general, and much of the temper of Christians gives it color, that people who "serve God" work hard and continuously, and have a melancholy life of it. The fact is that no people ever had so many legal holidays as had the Hebrews when God was their King. There were feast days and rest days at frequent intervals all the year, and then the great seven days' feast of the tabernacles in the seventh month, when the houses were closed, cares of housekeeping left behind and throughout the land every one went to a sort of hybrid between picnic and camp meeting. What a free-and easy cime it must have been! The men had a chance to talk about everything, the women exchanged receipts and patterns, and ideas of bringing up children; the young folks had subjects in mind more poetic than pickles and stocks, of higher and deeper import too, though without doubt they were called "giddy" by persons not so much wiser as older than themselves. The historian does not say, but we know gallant youth and winsome maid well enough to say, that a long list of engagements was made public just after that tabernacling every year and the months immediately following were "best for weddings." The blessing of the Lord, that sweetens and enriches, was upon it all.

No one knows how long ago man found out the joy-bearing features of "making presents," but big hearted, jovial Nehemiah understood it and when he made out his program for the feast of tabernacles an important part was "sending portions to them for whom nothing is prepared." In sweet Queen Esther's reign we read of "days of feasting and joy, and of sending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor." If any one doubts that here is a spring of joy let him make up a basket for some family who are "trying to get along, but for some reason are unlucky." No neighborhood is so small but it has families of this kind. The lowly have a peculiar claim at Christmas tide, considering that the first Christmas gifts were bestowed in a manger.

Pride, rivalry, self-seeking or self-interest of any sort have no place in the feast of Him who bade us give not hoping to receive again.

CHRIST IN US.

It has been truly said that in the celebration with which the world honors its heroes may be seen the character and work of those heroes. The warrior, the statesman, the inventor, the explorer, the reformer, the philanthropist each will be revealed in the ceremonies which commemorate his work. Though the world is far indeed from fully comprehending them, it has not failed in its Christmas rejoicing to embody some of the leading traits of the life and work of the founder of Christianity. Nothing suggests the ambitious seeker for power and worldly distinction.

Whatever of extravagance or even of frivolity may sometimes attend them, our Christmas festivities are set to the keynote of the wondrous life of Him who "emptied himself and made himself of no reputation," "who, though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we, through his poverty, might become rich." "His joy," the joy of doing for others, is the inspiration of this glad season. Everywhere the thought is not of self, but of others, not of the gifts which we are to receive, but of those we are to give. From the little prattler nearly bursting with Christmas secrets, to the gray haired grandfather, the joyful anticipation is of delightful surprises prepared for some one else.

There is no more unique feature of our Christmas holiday than that which makes it preëminently the children's time. It should be so, for Jesus Christ was the children's friend. And there is no more striking evidence of His lasting influence upon the thought of the world than the recognition of children in Christian lands. "His blessing is upon them yet."

The world wide celebration of His birth rightly represents the one who came to teach the universal fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man. Each nation honors its national heroes as once each worshiped its peculiar gods. To One alone is the gathering of the peoples. As yet it is but a dim prophecy of what Christ shall accomplish for the whole world. Our faithless vision catches only shadowy outlines of the glory of His kingdom on the earth. We question less His power to cause the wolf to dwell with the lamb and the leopard to lie down with the kid than His ability to make men live together in love. But, believe it or not, the foundation principle of our present social system is destined to be replaced by another and very different one. Selfish competition which makes life a fierce struggle for existence can never be the corner-stone of Christ's kingdom on earth any more than it is of His kingdom in heaven. The time shall come when our social system itself, by its very constitution, shall render impossible the forms of oppression which now exist as it already renders impossible forms which existed in the past. In the Christian social system, the grinding of labor beneath the heel of capital shall be relegated to the past with slavery and other evils, for He has said, "I will make a man more rare than fine gold, even a man than the pure gold of Ophir."

But the personal element peculiarly distinguishes the Christmas festivals. We gather at the tomb of a great world hero and laud what he did for a nation or a race. Far more may we tell of what Jesus Christ did, not for one race, but for all; yet we mistake if we do not place first what He did for me. Not in His work for humanity but in His work for humanity through the individual lies the distinctive power of Christ's life. He constantly taught this, the kingdom of heaven was the little leaven which leaveneth the whole lump. Regardless of individuals, the great world conqueror sweeps like a besom of destruction over prostrate nations and builds his unstable throne upon the necks of rebellious subjects. We crown him with laurels and call him great. But not thus does He who filled the tiny water drop with multitudinous life, who bound the floating speck by the same law that holds planets in their places, set up His kingdom. As the material universe is held in its place by the obedience of its minutest particle to the supreme law, so in the moral universe of God harmony is preserved, not by the brute force with which man vainly seeks to maintain his world kingdoms, but by the spontaneous obedience of the individual. The King of kings will have no unwilling subject. The only chains which bind men to him are the chains of love. His kingdom is indeed not of this world. The world never saw its like, for its fortress walls are built of the rock of human character, its homage is the spontaneous outburst of loving hearts, its service the free-will offering of redeemed souls. Such a kingdom requires the all-pervading presence of the King, and so His promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." We rightly praise the work which Christ has done for the world, and anticipate with longing what He is yet to do, but not until we set it up in our own hearts do we hasten the march of His kingdom. We hail the progress of social reforms, but we miss their true meaning if we fail to see that their purpose as their inspiration is the erection of the kingdom of God in the hearts of men. We join in the great forward movements of society in answer to the voice that crieth, "Prepare ye in the wilderness the way of the Lord." We may join in the merriment and gladness of the Christmas tide, but we shall utterly fail to catch its fullest, sweetest meaning, if we do not each realize in our deepest consciousness, that wondrous life was lived for me, and the life I now live Christ lives in me.

TAKE NOTICE.

The following information from our business manager is so important that we give it position on our editorial pages:

The readers of THE UNION SIGNAL are urged to carefully examine into the merits of enterprises advertised by circulars which reach them by mail, and satisfy themselves of their reliability before answering the same. Through the treachery of a former employé of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, a copy of the mailing list of THE UNION SIGNAL was put upon the market last summer and although prompt legal steps were taken at once and the list was recovered, we learn that a number of the names had been copied before it again came into our possession. As these copies never belonged to the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, they cannot be recovered except by tedious legal process, and then there would be no assurance that other copies were not somewhere concealed. It has therefore been decided to make no further attempt in this direction, but instead to state in these columns that some of our readers' names and addresses were in the hands of parties who might sell them to persons whose advertisements are rejected by us, and ask that they exercise especial care regarding documents from unrecognized sources, and hold this association blameless regarding the same.

F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.

ONE of our most capable treasurers writes as follows concerning the work of the official position which she has long held: "I think in our W. C. T. U. we want to be as simple in our methods as we can. This is especially true of our finances, for the more we complicate them, the more likely we are to be criticised, and justly, for having them in such shape that the rank and file cannot make much out of our reports. Very few of our women understand double entry book keeping, or indeed any book-keeping at all. Nevertheless it is their money we are handling, and they want to know, and ought to know, all about our management. So it has seemed to me that the plainest way is to have a separate book for each fund handled, so that one can tell at a glance how much there is on hand, and what has been done with the amount not on hand. I have kept my books in various ways, but I like this last one best because I can make our women understand it quickest, and so I have urged this method among our county and local treasurers. I think our various constituencies should know oftener than once a year how the finances stand, hence it is my custom to publish each month all the receipts and expenditures in our state paper. I find the plan to be a good one, and that our local unions like to know each month what amount we have on hand, what we have expended, and what for. It seems to me this is their due, and I am confident they will work all the better when thus taken into the confidence of the treasurer. To repeat, my method is very simple: I have a separate bank book and account for each special fund. It is a little more trouble, but it makes everything plainer to the women who either give or collect the money."

The hour draws near, howe'er delayed and late,
When at the eternal gate
We leave the words and works we call our own,
And lift void hands alone
For love to fill. Our nakedness of soul
Brings to that gate no toll;
Giftless we come to Him who all things gives,
And live because He lives.

—Whittier.

***

Enthusiasm is the genius of sincerity, and truth accomplishes no victories without it.—Bulwer Lytton.

***

A new case of child stealing has occurred. This time in Atlanta, Ga. A beautiful little three-year old girl was enticed from her father's yard and was found two days later, almost by accident, in a negro cabin on the outskirts of the city. The child had been cruelly whipped and chloroformed because she cried for mamma. The instigators of the crime are not certainly known, nor their motives, though, as the child's family are wealthy, there is little doubt that she was to be held for ransom. Is it not time that these terrible crimes were dealt with in accordance with their enormity? The prospect of gain from child stealing is so great that no ordinary punishment will deter the human fiend. Mothers should fix the penalty for this crime which tears a mother's heart as it does no other. There is not a mother in the land who would not rather that the villain kill her child than steal it, and we believe that death is not too severe a penalty.

***

Everybody has moods and tenses, so everybody will be interested in the following prescriptions:

If you are impatient, sit down quietly and have a talk with Job.

If you are just a little strong-headed, go to see Moses.

If you are getting weak kneed, take a look at Elijah.

If there is no song in your heart, listen to David.

If you are a policy man, read Daniel.

If you are getting sordid, spend a while with Isaiah.

If you feel chilly, get the beloved disciple to put his arms around you.

If your faith is below par, read Paul.

If you are getting lazy, watch James.

If you are losing sight of the future, climb up to Revelation and get a glimpse of the promised land.

***

While waiting in a restaurant last week a gentleman came in with his little nephew, a boy about four years old and remarked to the lady waiting on customers, "This little fellow wants some candy, and I believe he prefers chocolate, don't you, Ralph?" The boy assenting, the woman handed out some in the form of cigars, remarking, "Little boys like this style pretty well." Just like any other W. C. T. U'er I saw in an instant the application of "Avoid even the appearance of evil," and could not resist the occasion to say, "I would prefer some other style." The gentleman was a stranger, but I knew by his clean look, clear eye and general appearance, that he did not use the "filthy weed" and so seized my opportunity. "Yes," he said, "give me some square ones or drops." Let us call on the confectioners, and expostulate with them on this style of candy or any doctored device for the innocent. Watch and work.

***

The test of moral character is not infallibility but recuperative power.—Edward Eggleston.

***

The following is a "true story" that actually happened: A man from the new house near by came in at the alley gate and to the kitchen where a mother was working for the comfort of her family. He asked for a bucket. The men working on the brick wall were thirsty and he would take them a drink. The bucket was brought. The lady remarking on the discomfort of working in the hot sun that midsummer day, offered to fill the bucket at her well; the water was so cool men from offices and stores near by often came or sent for water from that well. Reaching out for the bucket the man declined the water, saying in a friendly tone that the men would like beer better than water, he only wanted a bucket to carry it in. Steadily the bucket was held back, as the lady said: "I am sorry. I cannot loan a bucket of mine for beer. Why, I dare not. I have three boys, and what would they think if I let beer be carried in anything from my kitchen. I am sorry you wanted it for that. Should my boys drink liquor when they are grown they must not say they ever saw beer in anything belonging to their mother, not with her consent. Good day." "Good day."

ON DUTY.

A CHRISTMAS SERMONETTE.

BY HARRIET FRANCENE CROCKER.

"Peace on earth, good will to men."

I wonder if this short, sweet text is ringing its changes in your hearts to-night, this starry Christmas eve, when the skies seem filled with holy silence and earth lies hushed beneath the calm and blessed benediction of the mystery above.

I wonder if the spell of nature is upon your spirit now while day dies into night and the sweet hush of twilight pervades the tired earth; if the very air seems throbbing with the sweet old story of that little Child who lay in purest innocence within the rude, hay filled manger, the adoring mother near, and the great star pulsing and glowing overhead.

Does not something of the strange charm of that most wonderful event come to your heart to night? Is there not that in your being which makes you long for quietude and thought beneath the star-shine? Do you not wish just for a little to get away from the merry, laughing crowd about the Christmas tree, and let the holy calm of Christmas eve steal into the inner chambers of your soul?

Ah, who has not felt this sacred power! this dearly bought ecstasy of Christmas eve!

"Peace on earth, good will to men." Is it shining from your eyes this Christmas tide? Is it smiling from your lips, and thrilling in your voice as you sing the Christmas anthem, or recite the Christmas poem, or speak a Christmas greeting? If it is in your heart—this peace and good will—it will well out from eyes, lips and voice. It will encircle you as with a halo—this beautiful, wonderful "Peace on earth, good will to men!"

Oh, fill your girlish hearts with the radiance that streams from the star in the East; with the soft, sweet song the mother sang that night beside the manger—the song of love and rapture and thanksgiving.

Let all your nature fill to the brim and overflow with the cheer of Christmas time, and pour it out lavishly into lives less bright, less conscious of the beauty of the time than yours.

Girls can do so much!

It is not the dainty gift which bears the sweetest thoughts of the season; it is the loving glance, the tender word, the warm hand-clasp. It is the putting away of self and the substitution of all the world in its stead. It is the genuine and sincere love for the time and for Him in whose honor we celebrate, that goes straight into the hearts of others.

Have you an enemy? Forgive! Is there a girl, envious perhaps, who has bruised your heart with cruel words or cold looks? Forgive!

Is it hard to do this? Is it difficult to conquer pride and speak first? I know it is, but do it!

Christmas cannot be Christmas to you if there is resentment in your heart to-night. Think how He would do were He in your position! Do as you know that He would do!

It is easier to preach this gospel than to practice it, I will admit, but oh, it is not the easy things we do which give us strength. It is sacrifice that strengthens and purifies. It is unstinted love, unmeasured charity, uncounted kindnesses that make the richness of those lives that are the best and purest.

Self forgetfulness! It is possible to attain to it. Try it, girls of the white ribbon and of the silver cross! In His Name, for His sake, stop and smile kindly upon the ragged, ill-kept little waif who drifts across your path, and lifts a wistful face to yours as he offers you the evening paper. Wish him a Merry Christmas and slip into the little cold hand from your own well-gloved one, something that will help that merry Christmas to become a fact.

Let every impulse of pity that stirs your heart be recognized to-night of all the year. Be reckless with your smiles—the more you give the more you'll have to give—be lavish with your little messages of cheer and comfort, and spendthrift with your heartiness of voice and manner.

Give freely, freely! Think of the ragged child you meet to-night upon the street as you go warmly clad to the great, lighted Christmas-scented church to play perhaps a sweet voluntary, or to sing a Christmas solo, or to recite a pathetic poem; think of every little wandering child. If He were living now, a little child, as He did live, if He were wandering homeless, ill-clad, friendless, about the streets like this poor waif, what would you do?

Then do it! Bless with voice and eyes and purse that little fragment of humanity—all In His Name—lead him into the warmth and brightness of the green-lined church and play your best, or sing your sweetest, or recite your truest for your little guest back in the crowd. Make that little life, led in from the noise and darkness of the night outside, happy for one hour. Make him feel that peace and joy in his ignorant little heart, which if it knew how, might find expression in words like these:

"The rich can give a diamond,
A wedge of gold,
Silken robes and spices,
Flocks from the fold.

"I, coming to the Christ-child,
Would bring a part—
For lack of any treasure
I give my heart."

Then Christmas cheer be with you, dear girls, and Christmas love and Christmas happiness fill all your souls to-night!

MASSACHUSETTS.

STATE CONVENTION AND OTHER HAPPENINGS.

The nineteenth annual convention of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. was held in the thriving young city of Brockton, October 18, 19 and 20. It was an unusually large convention, 287 members having been reported by the committee on credentials, while the audiences were large at each session. From the first moment till the last the interest was sustained, and the universal verdict reports it as the "best convention ever held in Massachusetts, almost equal to a National."

Mrs. Fessenden's ability as a presiding officer is of a very unusual order, and was never more marked than on this occasion. She had the convention under most absolute control; she swayed by love, and the perfect order of the convention from first to last spoke well, not only of Massachusetts women, but of the executive force of their state president.

The Brockton union was most lavish in hospitality. The Porter Congregational church, which entertained the convention, was not content with placing the entire building, vestries, lecture-room, etc., at our disposal, but it also rented, at its own expense, a large hall, two or three doors away, where our collations, both dinner and supper, were served. The best homes in the city were opened to us, and the whole atmosphere of the place breathed hospitality.

In routine work this convention differed very little from the eighteen which have preceded it, save that each year our work is growing in breadth and scope. There were on the first morning the usual reports of corresponding secretary and treasurer. The former reported thirty nine new unions and many other very hopeful features in the year's work.

The report of the treasurer was most encouraging since it showed that the work of the year had been admirably sustained in all its departments; that two thousand dollars have been set aside for permanent headquarters; one thousand paid into the National treasury as auxiliary dues, with a balance of about nineteen hundred dollars still in the state treasury.

The reports of the superintendents were as full as could possibly be condensed into the five minutes' space allowed to each. Massachusetts has a magnificent corps of superintendents of which she is justly proud. All are doing good work, while some are rapidly becoming specialists in their respective departments. Those who reported for the first time this year were Mrs. Mary C. Blakemore, for the department of scientific temperance instruction; Mrs. F. C. Carrington, for purity; Mrs. E. Trask Hill, penal institutions, and Mrs. M. S. Hurss, work among foreigners. The new departments adopted by the executive and confirmed by the convention were, mothers' meetings, Mrs. A. F. Rolfe, superintendent, and hygienic cooking, to whose superintendency Miss Anna Barrows was appointed. Miss Barrows is a teacher in the noted Boston Cooking School. She gave two lectures at Brockton, on Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday morning which were received with marked favor, as her appointment to the superintendency proves.

The hour from 11 to 12 was observed as a devotional hour each day. On Tuesday it was in charge of Miss Tobey, who gave a Bible reading on Ezekiel's vision of the waters flowing out from beneath the Tabernacle; making the application that, as the source of power of the W. C. T. U. in the beginning was God, so the source of each individual's power in the furtherance of the work must be Himself alone.

On Wednesday Mrs. A. J. Gordon was announced as leader, but she introduced in her place, Miss Grace Richardson, of India, who gave a deep, soul-searching talk on spiritual power. Miss Richardson is an English woman who has been for years a missionary in Bombay. She feels herself called to special rescue work for the poor outcast women of that land where so little has ever been done for woman, and is here on a mission of faith and love, trusting God that hearts may be opened to aid her in her work. She has already addressed many of the local unions of Massachusetts, and is continually receiving calls.

On Thursday Rev. Mary T. Whitney led the devotional hour, taking as a subject the mutual help we may be to each other in the fellowship and comradeship of our great cause. Mrs. Whitney has been a successful pastor of the Unitarian church for a number of years, and is a most enthusiastic white-ribboner. She has recently removed to Cambridge and the unions are rejoicing in the prospect of so able an ally in their work.

Mrs. Livermore was present on the afternoon of Tuesday to speak on "Systematic Giving." Her address took the most practical possible form, being nothing less than a repetition of the exercises of the previous year, in which the unions pledged themselves each to pay a certain sum towards the rent of headquarters. Never was a state union so magnificently upheld by its constituency as is Massachusetts, and if there had been doubts in any minds as to the absolute certainty of this statement, it needed only a glimpse into the convention at the time of this annual rent pledging. Mrs. Livermore's electric presence was, doubtless, a potent factor in the success of the hour, but even that could not account wholly for the glad spontaneity with which the sums were pledged. If it be true that the word in the New Testament translated "cheerful" would more correctly be rendered "hilarious," then we are sure that the givers at Brockton brought themselves within the category of those whom the "Lord loves," for it was certainly hilarious giving.

The opening evening might almost have been the opening evening of the National, so intense were its interest and enthusiasm. There were addresses of welcome by Mayor Z. C. Keith, for the city of Brockton; Rev. F. A. Warfield, for the Porter church; Mrs. M. G. Weston, for the local union; Mr. G. W. Garland, for the Y. M. C. A., and Mr. Lloyd Chamberlain, for the Good Templars. The responses were by Mrs. Livermore, in her happiest vein, and Miss Bumstead, who spoke a few words in behalf of the Y's. Never was an organization more cordially welcomed, and never did a local union receive more enthusiastic praise.

Brockton is one of the rapidly increasing number of Massachusetts cities which has resolved to do away with the saloon in its midst. It has succeeded in making a no-license law popular, and it generously attributes much of its success in this direction to the efforts of the local W. C. T. U. It was good to look into the pure, clean cut face of its Mayor, and to know that he was not dependent for his election upon a single rum vote. One of the resident clergymen, in his remarks, uttered a pregnant sentence which other no-license cities might do well to heed: "We have discovered that the way to make a no-license law popular is to enforce it." There was only one disappointment in the delight of that evening, and that arose from the fact that, owing to the lateness of the hour, our state president deemed it best to defer her address until the following day. It is not often that she errs in judgment, therefore it is the easier to forgive; but it did seem too bad that the magnificent address to which the convention listened with such enthusiasm the next morning should not have been heard by the crowded audience of the preceding evening. The address was ordered published by the convention, and appears in this month's issue of Our Message, as well as in the annual report soon to be issued.

The afternoon and evening of Wednesday were given up to the Y's and were as bright and sparkling as our girls know how to make things. The program for the afternoon embraced "Words from the general secretaries of the young woman's branches" of Bristol, Middlesex and Plymouth counties; "Y meetings," including "The Devotional Service," "The Business," "The Literary Program," "The Entertainment," and "The Social Hour;" "A Sufficient Word," in which space Mrs. Rolfe, Mrs. Purington, Mrs. Rice, Miss Richardson and Mrs. Stevenson endeavored to give each her best "word to the wise" and the "Franchise Round Table," conducted by Mrs. C. A. Ryder, where the girls answered according to their best light, "Why do I believe in Woman Suffrage," and "Why do I not believe in Woman Suffrage." There were "Vacation Echoes," in which a bright record of work done by the girls during the summer months was unfolded. Especially to be noted in this exercise was the work of the Worcester Y, which raised by subscription and expended over $400 in the fresh air work of that city, the Y itself taking the entire supervision of the matter.

In the evening the perennially fresh vesper service by Mrs. Alice Harris, of Boston, was again the order of exercise, with Mrs. Fessenden to preside, Mrs. Harris to direct the music, and brief addresses from several speakers, among whom was our own Miss Gordon, who brought greetings from Lady Henry Somerset and Miss Willard. The last evening was filled by Mrs. J. K. Barney, of Rhode Island, who gave an address, both wise and witty, on "The World's Bondage." She took Samson as her text and drew many startling lessons from the events of his day as applied to our own. The flashes of wit and satire with which the address abounded were fully appreciated by the audience and called forth continual laughter and applause.

The resolutions passed were unusually terse and strong and embraced almost every vital question of the day. The memorial service was sweet and tender in its solemn hush, uplifting our hearts from earth to heaven and making us in very truth, at one with the "choir invisible." Altogether, Massachusetts feels that it has abundant reason for pride in its last convention and looks forward to a year of new and greater prosperity.

Since convention there have been several advance steps already taken. One is the inauguration of a regular Sabbath afternoon service in the People's church, which is to be in charge of the state union. At this writing two have already been held; the first being Mrs. Harris' vesper service, Mrs. Fessenden presiding; the second, an address by Rev. Mr. Kneeland, of Boston. Next Sunday there is to be a Thanksgiving service, and the week following Miss Arnold, a teacher of physical and vocal culture, is to recite Mrs. Zerelda G. Wallace's magnificent address, "A Whole Humanity," with brief addresses from others upon woman's ballot, especially in the interests of the coming school election. Other services are already planned for, and it is hoped that these meetings may be a source of power in our work. Mrs. Harris has entire charge of the music.

Mr. Faxon's munificent gift of $1,000 for no license work is the theme of much congratulation. His restricting clause, which prevents any of it from being used in Boston, has been the theme of some unpleasant strictures by many professed friends of temperance, who have never done for the cause a millionth part of what Mr. Faxon constantly does. It is the easiest thing in the world to criticise, but any one knowing the situation in Boston cannot fail to see the force of Mr. Faxon's strictures. The unions of the cities are already entering vigorously into the no-license campaign. Chelsea is holding meetings for the women of the city; at least one in each ward.

Waltham, Cambridge, Somerville and others are falling into line. Large quantities of literature are on hand at headquarters, three original leaflets being now in press. Speakers are being sent out, and a greater victory than that of last year is expected. Meantime, by Mr. Faxon's consent, a part of the money is to be put into our legislative work for woman's ballot, he agreeing with the W. C. T. U. that the only really effective no-license work is absolute prohibition, and absolute prohibition can only be secured and enforced through woman's vote.

Mrs. Fessenden organized the counties of Dukes and Nantucket into a separate organization on Friday, November 25. On the 30th she starts for a trip into the western part of the state, where it is hoped that several new organizations may be effected.

The temperance committee of Wellesley College is planning largely and wisely for this year's work. This is the program as given us by Prof. Sarah T. Whiting: "To prepare for an address; for a public debate; for two of the Thursday evening prayer-meetings; to hold monthly temperance meetings for the servants; to canvass the college with the pledge, and for members at large of the Massachusetts Y, and to see that items of news in reference to temperance work are pasted with the other items from the daily papers on the bulletin board." We wish each college in our land were as wide awake upon temperance matters as is Wellesley.

Vermont is the poorer and Massachusetts the richer be cause of the removal to our city of Mrs. Esther T. Housh, so well known as the president of Vermont W. C. T. U. and the author of some of our most popular leaflets. She has a hearty welcome in the Old Bay state.

The fact that Miss Fessenden, the brilliant state secretary of the young woman's branch, has been obliged, through ill health, to give up all work is one of our saddest recent happenings. The Y's in state convention felt keenly her loss, as was made manifest by the loving letter which accompanied their gift of books. It is rarely indeed that one finds so young a woman with such gifts as she brought to the work. We do not wonder the hearts of the Y's were saddened, since the W's also shared the grief. It is hoped that a year of rest will fit her again for active toil; meantime the vacant place has been filled by Mrs. Myra L. Higgins, a Y of long standing, who has had signal success as president of the North Attleboro Y and was already secretary of Bristol county. It was in Mrs. Higgins' home that Miss Clothier passed through her severe illness a year ago. In such tender, wise hands we are sure our Y work is safe.

One glad event I must not fail to chronicle, and that is that the state paper, Our Message, reached the goal of its ambition for the year, and instead of a deficit, reported a net gain of $37 to the treasury. It seeks greater victories in the year to come.

KATHARINE LENTE STEVENSON,
State Reporter, Boston.

TEXAS.

WORK AND WORKERS.

When all San Antonio was stirred to its muddy depths by the preaching of evangelists, Sam Jones and George Stuart, last fall your reporter requested them to make an appeal to the women to enter the W. C. T. U. work. Rev. George Stuart preached a sermon that thrilled our hearts; then came the appeal. As the women crowded up by the hundred to shake his hand and receive a card on which to leave their addresses, a group of white-ribboners at one side rejoiced greatly.

Our president was telegraphed to come and organize, but owing to a strike of train dispatchers could not get here. She has organized unions and L. T. L's in different parts of the city. From two small unions and two L. T. L's we now have five large unions and six L. T. L's.

We have a monthly parlor meeting of the executive officers of all the unions that we may work in harmony. The president and secretary of each union serve in rotation.

We are vigorously at work trying to get Sunday closing in San Antonio.

West End union is preparing to have a medal contest. Its L. T. L. has secured forty subscribers to the Texas White Ribbon.

Mrs. Stoddard is bending every energy to secure a scientific temperance instruction law. We are earnestly praying that the approaching legislature may give us such a law that Texas may no longer be among the mourning states.

Before convention Mrs. Stoddard organized unions in San Marcos, Luling, Lufkin and Taylor.

In Taylor Miss Angus has had a temperance society of 150 pledged members among the children and young people. She agreed to join forces with the L. T. L.

In Tyler a fine company of L. T. L's was organized. Large and enthusiastic meetings were held in Mexia, the home town of Judge and Mrs. Prendergast, whom we Prohibitionists feel should now be getting ready to occupy the gubernatorial mansion.

Waco union has a day nursery. This union has also sent in a petition to the city council protesting against the legalization of prostitution in that city.

During Mrs. Stoddard's visit twenty-nine were added to the W. C. T. U.

Corsicana union has given "The Interstate Milkmaids' Convention" with "The Old Cow of Chicago of 1871." New members and honoraries were added during the visit of the president.

Brownwood union has held its first annual meeting. They gained several new members and honoraries and public sentiment in regard to our work has improved.

Baird W. C. T. U. has held a successful medal contest.

Ft. Worth Y contemplates giving "The Interstate Milkmaids' Convention," within a few weeks. Central union has gained several new members of late. Mrs. Shimmons and daughter, from Missouri, are in the city for the winter and promise to be of much help to white ribbon work as they are both experienced and enthusiastic. They are heartily welcomed. Press work is the strongest department in Ft. Worth unions. The W has a column in The Evening News, and the Y's space in The Evening Mail. Miss Kearney was expected to be with them early in December.

A medal contest is being planned with Miss Nilke, of Ft. Worth University, in charge. She is considered the finest elocutionist in the city.

As our indefatigable president returned from Denver she organized a W. C. T. U. in Iowa Park, the first in the Pan Handle. She also attended a delightful parlor meeting in Waco. Mrs. Brelsford, a missionary to Brazil, was present and added much to the pleasure of the occasion. She was president of the first W. C. T. U. in Brazil, organized by Mrs. Leavitt while visiting South America.

While in San Antonio, Mrs. Stoddard was called to the country near Davenport to organize a union. Some literature had been sent out by the West End union and resulted in the formation of a W. C. T. U.

How proud we are of the banner! We are determined to keep it another year.

Our president has built up the work wonderfully; she has "a genius for hard work," but we fear she will forget that her body can wear out.

A letter just received tells of a tragedy in the town of Runge, while she was speaking. A youth of seventeen was on his way to hear her speak; he stopped at a saloon to beg his cousin who was drinking heavily to go with him. "Shut your mouth or I'll shoot you," exclaimed the crazed man. The boy continued to beg him to go when the drunken man shot him through the heart. The widowed mother mourns her only son and support. Surely temperance work ought to flourish in Runge, where in its infancy it is baptized in blood. Mrs. Stoddard organized, the next morning after the murder, a W. C. T. U. and an L. T. L.

CORNELIA KEITH CARTER,
State Reporter, San Antonio.

OHIO.

SOME DOINGS.

"There is an energetic health in diligence and action,
An impulse ever spurring on the soul to do and dare."

Meeting an old friend, Mrs. Mary B. Reese, at Denver, almost her first question was: "Does Medina county still hold its four county meetings every year?" The answer was, "Yes! Never since Crusade days has the Medina County Woman's Christian Temperance Union failed to hold its quarterly conventions. True, adverse circumstances have sometimes affected the attendance, but they have always been held!" How many counties in Ohio have a like record?

The last reported was held in the beautiful new Methodist church at LeRoy. The fine program was presented with hardly a variation. The public schools were dismissed at three o'clock and teachers and pupils filed in, filling every available seat. Mesdames Barrows and Bishop so ably discussed health, hygiene and narcotics that they held the closest attention of the bright-eyed little people who were also much interested in the reports of the Denver Convention, by Miss Wilcox and Mrs. Gray who attended the "big meeting." Recitations by Misses Nye and Daniels and singing by the L. T. L. delighted all.

Rev. Mrs. Danforth, of Penn, Huron county, spoke in the evening. No one could listen to this elect lady and look into her sweet face without being impressed with her love to God and to humanity, and thinking of her as one "Who seeing the need

Of a kindly deed
Goes out of her way to do it."

York will entertain the next quarterly convention in February.

Weather and roads were peculiarly favorable to the Huron county W. C. T. U. which convened at Fairfield with a good attendance. A full program was presented, and one paper besides, ten in all, not counting the address of welcome and response. Eleven unions brought grand reports.

One union of thirty-two members held a grand gold medal contest in July, Miss Ethel Henderson, Canton, the winner, and a picnic three miles from town, in August. Miss Ensign organized a Y the same month. A social was held at the home of a member ten miles from town which proved a grand success in September. Two delegates were sent to the state convention—one from the Y's.

Mrs. Belle Bliss, of Fairfield, a blind lady, gave an interesting recitation.

Mrs. Hammond presented the claims of the Ohio W. C. T. U. Messenger and made the evening address.

The superintendent of press work is a woman who sews for her daily bread, but she reported the meeting to thirteen papers in reports averaging nine hundred words. That means not only work and sacrifice, but a growing interest in our cause.

At an excellent convention of Columbiana county W. C. T. U. recently held at Wellsville, Mrs. M. F. Dorr was again reëlected president.

This county has done, and is still doing solid work. Mothers' meetings are being held in the unions with blessed results. Eleven hundred and fifty signatures were obtained to the school petitions; forty-five public lectures were given in the county, and six weeks of gospel temperance meetings held, during which more than one hundred and fifty families were visited. A "free will offering" to the state of $3.70 was given. Mrs. Trego, loved for her "works' sake," gave two inspiring lectures.

Mrs. Emma C. Stout, mother of the Midget editor, sends to the Delaware White-Ribboner from her Florida home this cheering item: "Rejoice with us, for the saloon element was defeated at Cocoa and with the exception of one town, Indian River is free from the national curse. I feel the assurance that the noontide prayers of the world's white ribbon host had something to do with this triumph for the right."

Cuyahoga county W. C. T. U. convention at Collinwood was well attended. The president, Mrs. D. W. Gage, on account of pressing duties and poor health was obliged to resign her position, and Mrs. H. B. Wisner was chosen to fill out the unexpired term.

Mrs. Doty spoke earnestly on the police matron, urging her sisters to work for the securing of a law compelling the employing of a matron in all cities in the state containing a population of twenty-five thousand and over. Mrs. Perkins spoke for suffrage; she is one of its ablest champions in Ohio.

Influences that make drinking and drunkenness possible was the theme of an evening address by Miss Florence Savage, Akron.

Mrs. Foote called attention to the Encracy Cure established in Cleveland, and the reformations brought about through this remedy for drunkenness. This county has twenty-four unions, besides several flourishing Y's.

The tenth semi-annual meeting of Geauga county W. C. T. U. convened at South Newbury. The day was perfect. Subjects treated were, "Woman's Bible Position," "Successful Life," "Juvenile Work," "Life Building," "Dress Reform" and "District Organizations." Mrs. H. E. Hammond was present, filling an important place on th program. Fine recitations and music added much to the interesting occasion.

In my last letter I made brief mention of the ordination to the ministry of the Congregational church, Gustavus, Ohio, of Miss Jeanette L. Olmstead, our state superintendent of social purity. I would like to add a little to it. After a vigorous examination, conducted by Rev. G. B. Hershy, in which the candidate did herself great credit, a council of twenty-seven, representing fourteen churches, voted unanimously for her ordination. Six women were in the council. The charge to the new pastor was given by a Methodist preacher, brother of Miss Olmstead. Rev. Anna Shaw preached the ordination sermon.

Marietta, that historic, scholastic town in Southern Ohio, has a noble band of Christian temperance women, who believe in the enlightened conscience. They distributed a great amount of temperance literature during the fair, also previous to election.

Flower mission work is systematically carried forward, and nowhere are found white ribboners with clearer heads, warmer hearts or more willing hands. This union has suffered loss in the recent removal from earth of Mrs. Mary Payne, a sweet Christian woman whom every one loved.

Here yesterday,
Now there—anear the throne.

Heartfelt resolutions were adopted by the bereaved sisterhood, in which the stricken family, husband, daughter and son were tenderly remembered.

SOME SPEAKERS.

Rev. Anna Shaw delivered the first lecture of the senior course in Hulet Hall, Baldwin University, Berea, December 6, subject, "The Fate of Republics."

Akron W. C. T. U. has not lost the impetus gained by the address of Col. Bain last October. Liberal advertising brought out crowds to hear him. The following evening he spoke for the Prohibitionists with telling effect.

Miss Florence Savage, of Akron W. C. T. U., evangelist of twenty-fifth district, began a series of gospel temperance meetings in Berea, December 4, which are being continued. We are hoping and praying for a rich ingathering.

Of the twenty-four unions in the twenty-first district, comprising Franklin, Madison and Pickaway counties, several, through the efforts of live superintendents, are pushing press work, utilizing home papers and their own organ, the bright little County Union.

Dr. Mary Allen was called to Akron, November 14, where she gave her forceful lecture, "The Bequests We Leave Our Children," to an interested audience in the First Congregational church. The next afternoon in the fine parlors of the Methodist parsonage she spoke to women on the ideal woman, following these with a public evening address to young women from the theme, "The Needs of Girls." Dr. Allen has the endowment of rare purity in thought and diction, richness of mental resources combined with true motherliness in every element of her triple nature. Packed houses greeted the speaker who made an enviable place for herself in the hearts of her hearers.

HANNA A. FOSTER,
State Reporter, Berea.

NEBRASKA NOTES.

In my last letter I gave you an account of a "cold-water convention," held on the two banks of a river. Now, we have a convention held in a shed, where machinery had been stored. It was the Dixon county convention, held at Waterbury, in the extreme northeast of the state. Mrs. Rachel Lamm is president. Waterbury is a new town with no church or schoolhouse yet.

A good convention was held, the state president, Mrs. Hitchcock, being president. Several good singers left their harvesting and came, singing at day and evening sessions. Many came from the country around to whom our work was new. They expressed themselves as highly pleased and invited the ladies to come again. New unions have been organized in this region, at Emerson, Laurel, and one in the country called Beacon union.

The fourth district held its convention in September at Central City, with thirty-two delegates, Mrs. Walker, the president, presiding. The corresponding secretary reported for nineteen unions, 172 UNION SIGNALS taken, 154 Workers, 453 members, 116 honoraries. Amount raised by dues, $654; in other ways, $2,029.86. Eight old unions and several new ones are not included in this report. Mrs. H. S. Doan gave a parliamentary drill. Mrs. Louise M. Merrill, president of twelfth district, was introduced and spoke upon the wrong of educating our children with license money.

Miss Mary Watson gave a report of the National Convention at Boston, and a paper on scientific temperance instruction by Mrs. W. A. Moore was read. Thursday evening a grand gold medal contest was held under direction of Mrs. S. M. Lee, district superintendent, with a class of seven girls and one boy. Emma Crooks, of Mapleville, won the medal. Mrs. J. T. Smith conducted a parlor meeting at which a paper by Mrs. Moe on "Woman's place in the church," and one by Mrs. Clemmons on "Women of our state," were presented. Mrs. Walker closed the meeting with a beautiful solo. Mrs. Hitchcock conducted a mothers' meeting, and on Friday evening Miss Ripley lectured on scientific temperance instruction. It was a very full and very satisfactory convention. Mrs. Walker was re-elected president, and Mrs. Luce was made delegate to the National Convention, the fourth district having over five hundred members, and thus being able to name their own delegate.

The seventh annual convention of Clay county was held in Clay Center, Mrs. J. M. Gill presiding, and all the unions but one represented. Good reports were given and discussions held upon the subjects of parlor and mothers' meetings in which Mrs. Hitchcock was of great assistance.

Mrs. C. E. Howe, president of the fourth district of Missouri, addressed the convention the first evening. Mrs. Hitchcock spoke the second evening, and greatly cheered the workers. The following touching incident was related by Mrs. Carr, of Edgar, and will perhaps encourage others to cast the gospel bread on the waters of life, for those who wander without hope. "There came to my door a man who asked for something to eat; I fed him, and as he sat eating I was reading to my little boy from the Bible. I noticed he watched me, and when he left, I gave him a Testament. This spring the same man came again, but how changed! He said, 'Lady, I believe that God sent me to your house. I had asked for food at seven other places and been refused. You not only fed my body, but gave me that which was far better. The book you gave me led me to Christ, and not only me, but seven others!'" A strong plea was made for kindness to the tramp, and many resolved to keep temperance literature and Testaments to give to the wanderer who knows not the comforts of home and the hope of eternal life.

A memorial service, conducted the second day of the convention, revealed the fact that five sisters, tried and true, had gone from labor to reward. An excellent paper was read by Mrs. Noyes, of Clay Center; Miss Carr, of Edgar, and Carrie Troxel, of Clay Center, delighted the audience with their recitations. Mrs. Perkins, of Adams county, rendered valuable assistance. A feature of the work peculiar to Clay county, I believe, is the W. C. T. U. Institute, held yearly, the object being the "education of the workers, training them to think and speak on all sides of this great question, intemperance, and upon all phases of our work." Besides the ordinary department work there were papers and discussions upon "Government License and the Saloon," "The Liquor Traffic's Drummer," "Chloride of Gold, or Best Cure for Drunkenness." As there is little business connected with it the time can be given to discussion of plans and modes of work. Mrs. Schell, of Clay Center, writes: "I would recommend to every county the yearly institute as a very great help in the general work of the W. C. T. U."

Kearney union has been waging a tobacco warfare, Mrs. J. H. Squires circulated a petition to dealers to observe the state law relative to selling or giving tobacco to boys under fifteen. By the advice of the mayor and chief of police, a second petition was circulated asking that the state law be made a city ordinance. Seventy-two names were obtained, among them being four cigar factories, six saloon keepers, all proprietors of billiard halls and many business men. The ordinance was passed and now all fines for disobeying the law go into the city treasury; the police are in duty bound to arrest and the city attorney to prosecute. A good example for other towns to follow.

The Wymore union, though small in numbers, and having hard work to keep alive, does some good work, notably in the L. T. L. They held a memorial service for our beloved Madam Willard. All churches united in the service at the M. E. church, Sunday evening, August 21. Mrs. Henry's leaflet was used, a sermon preached by Rev. Dudley, of the M. E. church, and Madam Willard's favorite hymns were sung. The union read the responsive service before the sermon. A large congregation was present. For the encouragement of this union we refer them to Matt. 18:20.

DORA V. WHEELOCK,
State Reporter, Beatrice.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

THE Dallas, Texas, W. C. T. U. has lately organized a newsboys, department which promises well for the future.

A FAVORITE with a host of white ribboners is Mrs. M. W. Richardson, of Amherst, N. H., who, a correspondent writes, has lately been given the name of "St. Sunshine," indicating her bright and cheery disposition.

THROUGH an inadvertence, several copies of the Oak and Ivy Leaf are missing from our files. They are February, June, July, August, September, October and November of the year 1891. Any one forwarding any of the above named copies to this office will receive a pretty holiday card.

MRS. MARY MCGEE SNELL has been speaking in North Mississippi recently and attended the North Mississippi conference at Corinth. She was permitted to speak to the conference giving a regular gospel sermon, and received the heartiest sympathy and encouragement. This marks quite an epoch for woman in the church in Mississippi.

A W. C. T. U. coffee house and mission room were established ten months ago at Youngstown, O. Rooms were rented in a disreputable portion of the city, thus closing out two saloons and two houses of ill repute. The churches take charge of the temperance meetings each evening in turn. Several have signed the pledge and united with some one of the churches. The county superintendent of jail and prison work, who is also the city missionary, has been active in this blessed work.

THE third elocutionary contest for the grand gold medal was held in Philadelphia recently. The contestants were Y's and L. T. L's from adjacent counties. The Silver Lake quartette furnished delightful music and Rev. C. H. Mead, D. D., gave an excellent address. Miss Mary E. Barr, a Lancaster county Y, who recited "The Nation's Curse," won the medal. Miss H. Frances Jones, state superintendent of Demorest medal contests, presented each of the participants with a handsome volume, "Beautiful Gems."

AMONG the good resolutions made by the young women at one of their conferences in Denver, was that they would all try and begin each day by reading the same text of Scripture. To enable this resolution to be carried out the general secretary of the Y Branch, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, has had arranged a neat little almanac tied with white ribbon, which can be placed in the Bible, or be hung up on a convenient hook. These can be had of Mrs. F. S. Evans, 161 West Eighty-fourth St., New York, N. Y., for five cents.

NILES, O., was the scene, December 1, of the fourth convention of the twenty first district Ohio W. C. T. U. Three county presidents, Mrs. Esther Haldeman, Mahoning, Mrs. Anna Woodward, Trumbull, Mrs. C. F. Camp, Portage, were present. The genial countenance of the district president, Mrs. Lucinda Davis, beamed with pleasure at the gathering of so many interested workers. Devotional exercises, reports and business filled the hours. A new union was reported at Garfield, another at Mantua Station of forty members, and an L. T. L., numbering seventy five. Trumbull county rejoices in seventeen unions with a membership of two hundred and sixty-four. Dr. Anna Shaw and Miss Henrietta Moore were both present and gave stirring discourses.

A CORRESPONDENT, A. J. Brownlow, of San Saba, Texas, writes: "As we never see a communication from this part of Dixie, I venture to report a few things for this locality that are doubtless of much interest to your readers. I have to report the admission to the practice of law of the first woman ever admitted in Texas, Mrs. Nellie Jamison, who was examined in open court on the second day of December of this year and upon the unanimous report of the committee, was granted an attorney's license. Those who heard the examination say that Mrs. Jamison sustained an unusually fine one, and that no male applicant who has recently been examined in this state ever did better. Mr. Jamison, under whose direction Mrs. Jamison pursued her law studies, ranks high as an attorney, and the people of this congressional district have conferred on him the chairmanship. They are both readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. The fight against immorality and vice is growing stronger in Texas. The grand jury recently indicted thirteen of the most prominent society people in San Saba who had been playing 'progressive euchre' for prizes. They stand a fair chance to be convicted."

Official Communications.

THE SABBATH WORK.

In view of the prodigious efforts being made to influence Congress to reverse its Sunday closing action, many are asking: "Shall we not petition Congress to maintain its position and keep the Exposition gates closed?" We do not think it wise.

In the nature of the case the country cannot repeat its forty million petition, certainly not before Congress will have settled the question of repeal, and any small showing would be used against us as evidence of a change of views.

The writer has faith in a Congress that in passing out of power wishes to be known as the party of morality, has faith in the President's veto, has faith in God and faith in the praying white ribboners, whom she earnestly entreats to join her in constant prayer till the crisis is past. Letters, telegrams and resolutions urging steadfastness should be resorted to as widely as possible.

Your superintendent regrets her unavoidable detention from the Denver convention and that the report she sent did not appear. Any who wish to know the work of the past year and plans for the new can send a stamp for annual report.

The new Manual of Sabbath Observance, eighty-three pages, is now out, twenty five cents singly, less when several are ordered. It gives directions for fifteen lines of local Sabbath work, full instructions to all superintendents, gives also a history of our department work for eight years, a general view of the world's Sabbath work, and for home study, several chapters of the scientific and religious reasons for the Sabbath, for the first day instead of seventh and how to keep it; also a table of the state Sabbath laws, chant, showing need of Sabbath rest, etc. Every white ribboner should have the booklet; every union is invited to get up a club and secure it at cost.

Ten new leaflets by well-known writers and a catalogue are to be ready January 1. Send four cents for them or ten cents for forty different samples, and let us do such a work of seed-sowing as we have never done before.

Address MRS. J. C. BATEHAM,
Williamsburg, Ky. National Superintendent.

SCHOOL SAVINGS BANKS.

This season of the year when public and private schools are in fullest operation is the best time to mention to the promoters and patrons the subject of teaching thrift and business methods; therefore, I would ask, with the approval of the World's and National W. C. T. U., that each local union and any individual philanthropist "so minded" send for twenty-five cents' worth of school savings' banks literature, and cards to circulate in the interest of the school nearest them.

The good this systematic promulgation of the simple fact that every inhabitant of the earth can by a little practical training in thrift become a self-responsible, self-supporting force is incalculable. Children taught by this easy method to save their pennies, to understand that money and deeds are alike interest-bearing; children who are thus early allowed the possession, under proper restraint, of whatever they earn or are given, and are property-owners will not, cannot, save in isolated instances of unbalanced minds, become drunkards, anarchists, criminals or paupers. The great note of the equalization of wealth and power is struck here. The girl has just the same opportunity as the boy to learn business habits and to have alike her proper inherited natural rights. The children of the poor as the trained custodians of what they earn have even chance in life's success with the children of the rich. Life's riches is life's knowledge, and the best use of its best gifts.

Ex-Governor Adams, of Colorado, whom I chanced to meet en route to the Denver Convention, expressed his approval of this practical inculcation of thrift and said if I would send him needful information and blanks he would establish the system in Pueblo. He has kept his word, and on the 2d of January, school savings banks go into use in the public schools of Pueblo, Colo. Ex-Governor Adams is president of a savings bank in Pueblo. He is philanthropic and earnest in his advocacy of this movement. He spoke forcibly on the subject to the Pueblo school board and offers the pupils five per cent for their deposits, this being two per cent higher than the rate we use in the east. He is having his school savings banks supplies, including fifty teachers' roll books, two thousand school deposit books, and other required forms printed here. I will forward them by express in a few days.

The thought is pretty well stirred up in Denver. Superintendent Gove of the Denver schools and Superintendent Vansickle, of North Denver schools, are both heartily in favor of the system, and a banker there has offered to furnish free all the supplies. A. H. Fetterolf, LL.D., president of Girard College, Philadelphia, has adopted the system and writes me he has a goodly number of depositors and indorses the teaching cordially. Several other localities in the United States are taking up the school savings banks with the new year.

Last Sunday, at the invitation of Rev. H. L. Philips, of the island of Jamaica, rector of the P. E. Church of the Crucifixion, Phila., I spoke at his church on the school savings bank as an uplifting force for the wage worker and woman. He expresses great desire that the benefits should be known and the system utilized by the colored people. I have distributed much literature free and will do so to the fullest extent of my ability, but as we have yet few state and local superintendents and rather delicate appropriation, I cordially ask the unions and the friends of philanthropy to send me twenty-five cents for a package of literature explaining and illustrating the school savings bank which I hope they will present as a New Year's gift to influential friends of education nearest them.

Glad and happy New Year to all members of the World's and National W. C. T. U. We go on with God's blessing hand in hand, striving to make each year gladder and happier for humanity than the last. Faithfully,

SARA LOUISA OBERHOLTZER.
World's and National Supt., Norristown, Pa.

TEMPLE RECEIPTS.

TO OCTOBER 1.

California—Santa Barbara: W. C. T. U., $15; Santa Ynez: Mrs. F. H. Smith, $1.05.

California, South—Pasadena: Mrs. M. F. Dumass, $1.

Carolina, North—State W. C. T. U.: $43.75.

Connecticut—Hartford: W. C. T. U., $25; Clinton: W. C. T. U., $1.33.

Dakota, North—Hamilton: Baby Band, $2.10.

Dakota, South—Aurora: Sabbath school, $1.50.

Dist. of Columbia—Washington: North Capitol W. C. T. U., $1.

Illinois—Humboldt Park: Baby Band, 70 cents; Fennwood: W. C. T. U., $5; New Windsor: W. C. T. U., $10; Baby Band: $3.40; Chicago: Rev. H. Willard, $10; Glen Ellyn: W. C. T. U., $8.20; Mrs. P. W. Stacy, $5; Morrison: Julia E. Rood, $3.65; Jacksonville: W. C. T. U., $5; Springfield: Second M. E. Sabbath-school, $2; Second Presbyterian Sabbath-school, $2.55; W. C. T. U., North Springfield, $2; Morrisonville: Y. W. C. T. U., $2; Sixteenth District W. C. T. U., $12.90; Joliet: W. C. T. U., $25; Macomb: L. T. L., 45 cents; Mason City: M. E. Sabbath-school, $2; Presbyterian, $2; Baptist, 74 cents.

Indiana—Red Key: W. C. T. U., $5; Baby Band, $5.60.

Iowa—Eighth District W. C. T. U., $10.50; Cedar Rapids: Mrs. Rosa Pollock, 50c.; Hopkinton: W. C. T. U., $1; Wilton Junction: Y. W. C. T. U. $6; Monticello: L. T. L., $2.56.

Kansas—Greensburg: Baby Band, 40cts.; Douglas: Grandma Pearce, $3; Eskridge; W. C. T. U., $31.20; Snokomo: Mrs. B. A. Kasson, $1; Garnett: Mrs. T. M. Hamilton, $1; Sabetha: W. B. Lawrence, $1.

Maine—A white ribboner, $3: So. Bridgeton: Mrs. F. F. Johnson, $1.

Maryland—Ridgely: Mary, Mattie and Alice Wilson, $1 each; Kent Island: W. C. T. U., $14.75; Baltimore: Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Eichelberger, $2.

Massachusetts—Northampton: Mrs. A. I. Mather, $1.25; Conway: Miss M. Clary, $1; Dighton: Mrs. Sarah Dean and Mrs. Grace Simmons, $7.30; Central Village: Hannah and Mary Macomber, $7.30; Boston: Annie Westgate, $1; Gloucester: Rev. Ada C. Bowles, $1; Brookline: Mrs. A. H. Christianssen, $5; Springfield: Armory Hill W. C. T. U., $62.65.

Michigan—Sault St. Marie: L. T. L., $1.60; Bethel Baby Band, $1: Ridgeway: B. of H., $2.50; South Haven: W. C. T. U., $5; Holly: W. C. T. U., $10.

Minnesota—Waseca: Amelia Hull, $1; Excelsior: L. T. L., $22.19.

Missouri—Bolivar: W. C. T. U., $10; Harrisonville: W. C. T. U., $68; Holden: W. C. T. U., $12.27; El Dorado: Mrs. M. J. Phipps, $3.68.

ESTHER PUGH, Treas. Gift Fund.

Royal Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.,
106 Wall St., N. Y.

Easily Taken Up

Cod Liver Oil as it appears in Scott's Emulsion is easily taken up by the system. In no other form can so much fat-food be assimilated without injury to the organs of digestion.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites has come to be an article of every-day use, a prompt and infallible cure for Colds, Coughs, Throat troubles, and a positive builder of flesh.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

A VERY POPULAR TRAIN

on the CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY leaves Chicago, daily, at 10 P. M. It is called

"THE BIG FIVE"

is only one day out, and passengers arrive at Denver, Pueblo or Colorado Springs early the second morning.

The "ROCK ISLAND" has become a popular Colorado Line, and the train above referred to is Vestibuled, and carries the "ROCK ISLAND'S" excellent Dining Car Service.

JNO. SEBASTIAN, G. T. & P. A., CHICAGO, ILL.

CORNISH IN CONGRESS.

Our readers will be interested to know that State Senator Johnston Cornish, of the world famed firm of Cornish & Co., Piano and Organ manufacturers of Washington, New Jersey, has been triumphantly elected to represent the large and important Fourth District of New Jersey in Congress. From Mayor of Washington to State Senator and thence to Congress is a remarkable record for so young a man as Johnston Cornish, but his personal magnetism, his unstained record and his undoubted abilities both as a business man and a politician make it apparent that his success is deserved. The excellence of the Cornish Pianos and Organs is well known, and the remarkable plan of business by which Messrs. Cornish sell their instruments at factory cost direct to the general public has been so wonderfully popular, saving to the people the enormous profits made by agents and middlemen, that we should not wonder if we have to chronicle in a short time yet another addition to their extensive range of factories at Washington, New Jersey. Their beautiful catalogue, the finest ever issued, and containing photographs of the members of the firm and full particulars and prices of all instruments manufactured by them, is sent to any one free on application.

NATIONAL SUFFRAGE CONVENTION

For the Woman's National Suffrage Convention at Washington, beginning Jan. 15th, the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. will sell tickets at the rate of a fare and a third for the round trip on the certificate plan. Delegates and others attending the convention should not forget to accept from ticket agent from whom they purchase their tickets a certificate certifying the route traveled and the amount paid; nor should they forget to have this certificate properly indorsed at Washington, so that the B. & O. ticket agents in that city will be in position to accept it, and sell the holder a return ticket at one-third the usual fare. As all Baltimore and Ohio trains between the East and West pass through Washington, the B & O ("The Picturesque Route") should be the most convenient to those attending the convention. Those traveling via the B. & O. will see the most picturesque scenery in America while crossing the Alleghany Mountains, and will learn more of the Nation's history in traversing the Potomac Valley, which was the pathway of civilization to the West, and which later was the theater of the bloody struggle between the North and the South.

For detailed information as to rates, time of train, and Pullman sleeping car accommodations, apply to L. S. Allen, the Rookery, Chicago, Ill.; C. P. Craig, 415 Broadway, N. Y.; A. J. Simmons, 211 Washington St., Boston, Mass.; James Potter, 833 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa., or to Chas. O. Scull, General Passenger Agent, Baltimore, Md.

FREE TICKET TO CALIFORNIA.

For conditions and full information about California, address A. Phillips & Co., Excursion Agents, 104 S. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " 3 months	.25
" " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

THE YOUNG CRUSADER.

Listen to some of the many good things it has in store for you:

Music—Round-the-World Songs.

A collection of the national airs of the different countries of the world, with children's temperance words. When your Scotch cousins come to the World's Fair you can greet them with "The Campbells are Comin'," but with bright, new words:

"The laddies are marchin', sae true, sae true,
The laddies are marchin', sae true, sae true,
The laddies are marchin', wi' bonny, bright faces,
The laddies are marchin', sae true, sae true."

Or if it is Pierre and Margarita, from sunny Italy, they will join you in the tune, if not the words, as you sing to the "Garibaldi Hymn."

"All forward! all forward!
Now shoulder to shoulder, from hill and from valley,
Now shoulder to shoulder, we rally, we rally!"

Several of these songs will be given in The Young Crusader this all-the world-year. Then we shall be

Off for the World's Fair, until next May, when—not to be behindhand—we shall change to

At the World's Fair, and spend a whole six months at the wonderful "White City." The Willard Fountain, Autograph Chain, L. T. L. exhibit, Children's Home—The Young Crusader will tell all about them.

Five-Minute Talks,

by the editor:

"Boys and Girls as American Citizens."
"Saloons Must Go."
"In Fighting Trim."
"The Child-Helpers of the Bible."

A Story for '83.

"Baby Christopher,"* by Lu S. Hadley.

The grown-ups are learning all about Columbus in these days, and the wee folks in the kindergarten want to know about him, too. They will like to do it here, for it is charmingly told in talk and song.

Some of Our Friends.

More pictures and talks about the writers who help to make The Young Crusader interesting, will be given.

We shall continue
Editorial Notes,
Roll Call,
L. T. L. Graduates' Record,

and other departments that have helped to make up your "very own" paper. The Quarterly Temperance Lessons for Sunday-schools will be written, as before, by Mrs. Helen G. Rice, and will still be issued as supplements to The Young Crusader. The stories, poems and pictures will be the best we can secure.

Will You do Your Best to Help Us?

How? By sending us a good club of subscribers from your L. T. L., your Sunday-school, or your friends.

Price of The Young Crusader,
Single copies, per year $ .15.
For clubs of ten, at $ .15 each,
an extra copy will be sent free.

In packages of 25 or over, to one address, each subscription per year, $ .12.

Special offers in connection with our Library List. New plan for securing The Young Crusader by working for THE UNION SIGNAL. Send for circulars, sample copies, etc., to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

*Copyrighted.

Publisher's Notes.

EVERYBODY WILL WANT

A copy of "CHILDHOOD; ITS CARE AND CULTURE," by Mary Allen West, as a memento of the great hearted editor who has been so helpful in the past, and who will still speak the words of helpfulness to multitudes of mothers and teachers through the pages of this popular book. Wherever Miss West was known the book will be in great demand.

Do you not want to help place it in the homes where it is needed? By so doing you will help others and in so doing help yourself. If you do, send for circulars giving terms to agents.

"CHILDHOOD, ITS CARE AND CULTURE," is sold only by agents or by the

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

USE "BRIGHT EYES."

"What shall I do, mamma? I've read my Sunday-school book all through, and it isn't near time for supper, and I'm so tired."

"So'm I," and Eda, always Rob's echo, climbed upon mamma's knee, while the church paper mamma was reading fell, as a matter of course, upon the floor.

"Tired, are you? Tired of doing nothing? Well, let's try doing something, then," and Mrs. Gray opened a drawer in the table at her side, taking from it a square, flat package.

"Oh, that's the one you brought home the other day. Yes, and you said 'sometime' when we wanted you to tell us what it was. I was afraid we'd have to wait till Christmas."

Soon mother-eyes, brown eyes and blue were bending over a new picture-book. "The cover tells about it," said Mrs. Gray. "See this picture—under it is the word 'basket,' and under that the name 'Deuteronomy.' Now, if you were to look in Deuteronomy you would find a verse containing the word 'basket.' Here it is: 'Blessed shall be thy basket and thy store.' Now open the book. Every one of these pretty blue pictures has place for a Bible verse beside it. Do you think you can find the verses and write them neatly beside the pictures?"

"Of course we can; come on, Eda, let's go to work." And mamma picked up her paper and went to reading again, for there would be no more "tired" children in the Gray household that afternoon.

All this help can be had if you send for "Bright-Eyes, or Pleasure and Profit for Sunday Afternoon." Arranged by Alice M. Guernsey. Price 50c.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TEMPERANCE MUSIC.

The value and utility of singing in religious work is very generally recognized. Temperance workers might also add much to the efficiency of their labors by the use of rousing songs at their meetings. A few solos, quartettes or choruses well rendered will have a good effect in attracting attention, arousing interest and generating enthusiasm. Of course arrangements are made at all your meetings with these facts in mind. In doing so remember that the second edition of the White Ribbon Hymnal is now ready. It is needless to remind you that it was compiled by Miss Anna Gordon, which is a guarantee of its fine quality. Price 35 cents.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

COLUMBUS

Will be ready to entertain you and show you "what he found" by December 20th. Send $1 with your invitation to call. He will be a charming visitor.

WINTER RESORTS OF THE SOUTH.

Jacksonville and Tampa, Fla., and other South Atlantic and gulf coast resorts can be reached with but one change of cars from Chicago, and that at Louisville or Cincinnati, where the Monon makes close connection with the L. & N. and Q. & C. Vestibule trains, running through to Florida.

The Monon's day trains are now all equipped with beautiful new parlor and dining cars, while its night trains are made up of day coaches, and Pullman and compartment sleepers, lighted by electricity from headlight to hindermost sleeper.

The Monon has gradually fought its way to the front, making extensive improvements in its road-bed and service, until today it is the best equipped line from Chicago to the South, offering its patrons facilities and accommodations second to none in the world, and at rates lower than ever before.

THE WONDER OF THE AGE.

"ACTINA" The Great EYE RESTORER.

Thousands are Using it with Unbounded Satisfaction. Actina cures without cutting or drugging. The Blind See. The Deaf Hear. Cures Cataract, Alancoma, Ptyrigium or abnormal growth over pupil of eye. Asthma. Catarrh and all head and throat troubles. Our insoles warm cold feet.

NEW YORK AND LONDON ELECTRIC ASS'N.
Prof. J. H. GILBERT, Mgr., Rooms 5 and 5½ Lakeside Bldg., Cor. Adams and Clark-sts., Chicago, Ill.

$25 to $50 per week, to Agents, Ladies or Gentlemen, using or selling "Old Reliable Plater." Only practical way to replate rusty and worn knives, forks, spoons, etc.; quickly done by dipping in melted metal. No experience, polishing, or machinery. Thick plate at one operation; lasts 5 to 10 years; fine finish when taken from the plater. Every family has plating to do. Plater sells readily. Profits large. W. P. Harrison & Co. Columbus, O.

CATARRH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering, from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren st., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge

IMPROVED HALL TYPEWRITER.

The best and most simple machine made. Interchangeable Type into all languages. Durable, easiest running, rapid as any. Endorsed by the Clergy and literary people. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Agents wanted. Address N. Typewriter Co., 611 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

THIS $11 to $17 SEWING MACHINE FREE to examine in any home. Sent anywhere without one cent in advance. Warranted the best sewing machine ever made. Our terms, conditions and everything far more liberal than any other house ever offered. For full particulars, etc., cut this advertisement out and send to us to-day. Address Alvah Mfg. Co., Dpt. C76 Chicago, Ill.

SENSIBLE MOTHERS } BUY { GOOD SENSE

CORSET WAISTS for themselves and daughters

BICYCLES ON EASY PAYMENTS

No extra charge. All makes new or 2d hd. Lowest price guaranteed. Largest stock & oldest dealers in U. S. Cata. free. Agts. wanted. Rouse, Hazard & Co. 77 G St., Peoria, Ill

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE DULUTH AND SUPERIOR SPECIAL.

In full keeping with its well-known progressive policy the North Western Line (Chicago & North-Western Railway), has recently inaugurated through train service between Chicago and the Lake Superior region. This new train is known as the "Duluth and Superior Special," and it leaves Chicago daily at 5:50 p. m., arriving at Superior at 8:20 a. m. and Duluth at 8:52 a. m. the next day, making the journey in the remarkably quick time of fifteen hours. The train is made up of baggage cars, standard day coaches and palace buffet sleeping cars of the most modern and approved design, and all classes of passengers are carried through without change of cars. Supper is served in dining car after departure from Chicago, and breakfast is served from a well-stocked buffet before arrival at Duluth. To insure yourself a quick and comfortable journey be sure to ask for tickets via the North-Western Line. Any ticket agent can furnish full information regarding this railway, or it will be promptly furnished upon application to W. A. Thrall, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago.

Schiffmann's Asthma Cure

Is used by inhalation, thus reaching the seat of the disease direct. Its action is immediate and certain No waiting for results. Ask any druggist or address Dr. R. Schiffmann, St. Paul, Minn., for a free trial package.

Chautauqua in the Home.

The influence of the Chautauqua Circle in the homes of America is very helpful. Parents are enabled to keep pace with the progress of their children; separation in mental tastes and sympathies is prevented; good conversation is promoted; taste is educated; the home is made a brighter, better, more inspiring place. Thousands of mothers and fathers are reading the course. Do not waste the winter in desultory reading. Address for details THE CHAUTAUQUA OFFICE Drawer 194, Buffalo, N. Y.

FINELY ILLUSTRATED BOOK

descriptive of Florida and the Southern country, mailed free to any address upon receipt of ten cents in stamps. Charles L. Stone, General Passenger and Ticket Agent Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad, room 415 First National Bank Building, Chicago

CHRISTMAS EVE.

BY EMMA PLAYTER SEABURY.

It was Christmas Eve, and the stockings were all hung in a row—
As in every household over the land, they always are, you know—
Three pairs of little black stockings, where the print of six little feet,
Had danced, and dimpled, and twinkled,
chubby, and rosy and sweet;
Hanging and swinging and swaying over the nursery grate;
Fastened up by dictionaries and the big paper-weight:
Because they would be so loaded, in the fire
they all might fall,
When Santa Claus whipped his reindeer over the garden wall.
The children had capered and frolicked all over the parlor and hall,
And laughed and merrily chattered till one could hear nothing at all:
'Twas time they were tucked in their tiny beds, sisters, happy and sweet,
Rose, and the frisky Mabel, and the blue-eyed Marguerite.
The Babel of youthful voices had put mamma in utter despair,
But at last they were cozy and quiet; when Mabel whispered her prayer
To the kind and the gentle Shepherd who blesses His lambs each night,
And added, "Please hurry up, Santa Claus, and fill the stockin's up tight."
Mamma had gone from the chamber, when Mabel low whispered, "I think
It is not true that he will not come if children don't sleep
a wink;
Let us watch, dear Rose, for his coming, of course Marguerite is too small;
First you will sleep till the clock strikes ten, I'll wake you then with a call;
You watch till it strikes eleven, then be sure you wake me quite,
And every hour we'll keep the watch, all through the whole
long night,
And whenever we hear him coming, whoever is wide awake,
Will call to the other softly. You needn't shiver and shake;
Why, Rose, you poor little blossom, you dear little frightened maid,
If he looks like his jolly pictures, I'm not a mite afraid;
And think, how nice, when the other girls talk of fairies and elves,
To tell how we watched for Santa Claus, and saw him our very selves;
It's light enough from the mast outside, his first appearance to see,
But our beds are so in the shadow that he cannot see you and me."
So Rose cuddled down in the pillows, right under the covers she crept,
And Mabel watched in the chamber, while the other sisters slept;
Mamma looked in at the doorway to see if all was right,
But Mabel pretended to be asleep, and shut her eyes up tight;
Yet she felt so frisky and wakeful, that eleven was strik-
When she heard a noise, and felt a thrill, and strained her ears to hear.
She was looking straight at the chimney, but nought could see in the gloom,
When all of a sudden a figure stood in the center of the room.
It hadn't any gray whiskers, or fur coat buttoned tight.
But it was a woman, with flowing hair, all dressed in purest white,
And she carried a basket in her hand; secretly, quietly, still,
She took the packages one by one, to the nursery grate to fill
The row of six little stockings; so softly she moved about,
That Mabel looked for the rustling wings—an angel she was, no doubt.
Faster and faster, her little heart beat, wider opened her eyes;
She could not speak, or call to Rose, in her terror and surprise;
And the figure noiselessly glided out of the chamber then,
She was sure she did not open the door, or close it up again.
Then Mabel sprang from her little bed and rushed out in the gloom,
Out of the nursery down the hall, and into her mother's room.
"Oh, mamma! I've seen old Santa Claus," she sobbed, as she stood by the bed,

"And he isn't a gray-haired, bearded man, but an angel
white, instead;
And oh! I am frightened almost to death; I was never so scared in my life,
Do you think that Santa Claus is sick, and that he sent his wife?

Or is it a real white angel come down from heaven to-do fill up the children's stockings, for she went throug the roof away."
"My poor little frightened darling," mamma said, "do weep,
You know the children on Christmas eve should always asleep;
But I will tell you, my treasure, since you saw the dear old
elf,
That Santa Claus is so busy, that he can't fill them all himself,
So he places in every household, in the shadows, pale and grim,
An angel of love on Christmas eve to do his work for him.
Now cuddle down in my loving arms, to night you'll sleep with me.
And what he has put in the stockings to-morrow you shall see."
So Mabel slept till the morning, when Marguerite and Rose
Burst gleefully into mamma's room their treasures to disclose;
Then Mabel cried, "Oh, forgive me, Rose! I really could not call;
He didn't come down the chimney, and it wasn't a man at all,
But a beautiful, white robed angel, I saw her fair and square,
I couldn't see any wings at all, they were hidden under her hair,
But I don't believe any longer that the pictures we see are true;
I'd rather an angel came to us on Christmas,
wouldn't you?
If the reindeers prance on the roof next year, I'll under the covers creep,
I think I would rather when angels come, be really fast asleep."

CHRISTMAS STOCKINGS.

God bless the little stockings all over the land to night,
Hung in the choicest corners in a glow of crimson light!
The tiny scarlet stocking with a hole in the heel and toe,
Worn by wonderful journeys the darlings have had to go.

And heaven pity the children, wherever their homes may be,
Who wake at the first gray dawning an empty
stocking to see!
Left in the faith of childhood hanging against the wall,
Just where the dazzling glory of Santa's ligh
will fall!

—May Reiley Smith.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS FOR CHRISTMAS.

133.

GOOD GIFTS.

(A letter from each of the blanks in the second and third verses will form the word omitted in the last verse.)

When the Christ-child came so long ago
Rare gifts He brought to men;
And, children dear, you all must know
He brings them now as then.

Greatest of these is C————
While H——— is ever near,
And T———— most certainly
With F——— we can uprear.

J——— and T——— we'll surely take
And M——— in great store;
G——— will our trials lighter make,
And W——— bring us power.

These happy gifts we all may choose
With joy each ————day;
Then all through life whate'er we lose
These will abide alway.

134.

ACROSTICAL DECAPITATIONS.

Behead to call as a hen, and leave chance; to injure, and leave a part of the body; to rave, and leave an insect; covered with ivy, and leave attempted to equal; part of a wheel, and leave to punch; plural of that, and leave a covering for the feet; a ditch around a castle, and leave a grain: a minute particle, and leave a boy's name; the act of selling, and leave a kind of liquor. The letters removed in the order given form a notable event celebrated in December. ALICE GREEN.

Send all replies and original puzzles to Puzzle Editor, THE UNION SIGNAL, the Temple, La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED NOVEMBER 17.

123. oPen, acRe, hOme, acHe, wIne, baBy, lIne, miTe, sIde, shOp, oNly.—PROHIBITION.
124. Columbus.
125. Adam, Eve, Cain, Abel, Seth, Shem, Ham, Ruth, Asa.

Correct answers: Mabel Eldred; Minnie Sinclair; Hattie assistance to Miss Ackermann while in Honolulu. On his side he appreciates Miss Ackermann and her work very highly, and was disappointed in me, at first, because I was not more like her. The only thing I have heard him boast of is that he is as tall as Miss Ackermann.

(Continued from page 5.)

MARY ALLEN WEST.

En route in Japan.

(To be continued.)

[The above letter was received after the afflicting news of Miss West's going to the "Better Land." It was written on a strip of Japanese paper nearly seven yards in length—sent with a smile, we know, at the amusement such a long, drawn out communication would occasion in her old editorial sanctum. And it was handed around and wondered over, and laid away in the archives of THE UNION SIGNAL, as the treasured parting word of one who had served it long and ably and faithfully. The editorial corps is indeed bereaved, but such a loss reaches to the end of the rank and file.—EDS.]

ANNUAL CONGRESS OF THE NATIONAL PRISON ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—An "embarrassment of riches" attends the pen that would chronicle briefly the wise and inspiring thoughts, the practical suggestions, valuable points, and profitable experiences brought out in the twenty-first annual congress of the National Prison Association of the United States, held in Baltimore, Md., December 5–7 inclusive. About two hundred delegates, representatives from almost every state in the United States, and including some of the best known men and humanitarians in the country, were in attendance. There is no fixed basis of representation, but the Governor of every state is requested to send representatives, and every penal, corrective and reform and charitable institution may be represented, if it desires.

The prime object of the Association, as set forth by General Rutherford B. Hayes, ex-president of the United States, president of the Association for a number of years, and re-elected president at this session, is "the protection of society and individuals by the prevention of crime." The means by which the society seeks to attain this end are:

1 The speedy and certain arrest, conviction and imprisonment of the guilty.

2. The reformation of convicts by the valid reclaiming forces: religion, education and productive labor.

3. The permanent incarceration of all prisoners not reformed.

4. An unceasing, conscientious and wise care in the training of the young—the most effectual means of prevention.

Dr. Jacobi, of New York, said in this line: "The worthiest practical aim is the perfection of mankind. I take it that this association was founded with a view of contributing its share to attain that end." Dr. Wayland, of Philadelphia said: "We use the word prison in the largest sense, as embracing the whole of our penal machinery, prisons, officials, legislatures, governors, boards, cells and workshops. The purpose of the prison is not to punish, but to promote the safety and welfare of the community. This safety and welfare can be subserved in the most economical and effective manner by the reformation of the imprisoned. Prison reform consists in removing from the prisons everything which conflicts with this design, and in making the whole prison system an instrument for the permanent reformation of the criminal."

As to the results of the work of the association according to President Hayes: "Prison reformers have never been gladdened by any sudden, rapid, sweeping success of any part of their work in any country. If we limit our view to any one place and to any single point of time, we shall not be greatly encouraged by what we see before us. But with a juster and broader prospect we shall be stirred and cheered as we discover the beneficent changes which a few decades have wrought.

"According to carefully gathered statistics for the past generation, crime has largely diminished, and is still decreasing, among the people of American birth and parentage. Strike from the appalling catalogue of crime in our country all of the law breaking due to the immigration of recent years, and the claims of prison reform in the United States will be amply vindicated. The crimes of Europe are laid at our doors."

Unrestricted immigration was ably and earnestly denounced by various speakers, the president included, although the latter had "heretofore stoutly maintained that our country, without anything more than a temporary inconvenience, could assimilate and enroll as citizens any number of aliens likely to seek our shores." Judge Francis Wayland, of Connecticut, "put unrestricted immigration as first among the causes that tend to the promotion of crime here. We have strained out the Chinese gnat at the Golden Gate and swallowed the European camel at the Narrows." Judge Wayland stated that while the decrease in immigrants from the British Isles, from Germany, Sweden and Norway had been large during the last decade, the increase from Italy, Poland, Russia, Austria and Hungary during that period was startling, 416 per cent from Russia alone, 697 per cent from Poland.

The second prolific cause of crime, treated by Judge Wayland, was the saloon. A large preponderating percentage of our distillers and brewers and the proprietors and customers of our saloons are of foreign birth or parentage. In the saloons criminals are made and screened. Here the good become bad, the bad worse, the worse infamous. But does the law afford no relief? There is a grim irony in the very question. The saloon hobnobs with the police whom the agents have appointed, smiles at, and with the magistrate whom it has placed in office, rejoices in a mayor of its own selection, fears no hostile legislation from the solons whom it has sent to the state capital, and trusts to the executive veto. We know that no subject has been so thoroughly discussed as this, but we cannot afford to ignore it here." Several other speakers touched upon the important part the saloon plays in crime.

Other causes of crime noted or discussed, are heredity; environment; ignorance; necessity, as in times of industrial depression; lack of employment; the neglect of trade-teaching; absence of labor; social and economic conditions—strikes, lock outs, etc., and the undue subjection of the laboring man; pernicious literature, the publicity given to crime by the secular press, and by open courts of law, where all the vice of the world is ventilated for the benefit (?) of the public; secrecy, as in corporations, trusts and labor unions; the omission of careful, constant and thorough inspection of the work and accounts of subordinates by the managers of banks, railroads, insurance and other companies; the tendency of power to the hands of the few, as in organization, which is going to extremes, and in actual practice is stamping out personal independence, individual judgment and conscience; the neglect of intelligent and prosperous citizens, absorbed in business, pleasure, or the pursuit of comfort, whereby public interests are given over to the less occupied and less capable, a neglect which has greatly increased of late years; and the failure to teach the gospel as saving truth, the truth that makes men free, and which is part of the common law.

The Honorable Carroll D. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor, was the speaker on the "Relation of Economic Conditions to the Causes of Crime." A statement by Judge Follet in this connection, that "there are countless, honest, industrious men, who cannot get work and are forced into crime," encountered both allies and doubters. The more subtile causes of crime were noted mainly in the annual address of the president and the responsibility of the press and of open courts of law, by Mrs. E. C. Johnson, superintendent of the Woman's Reformatory at Sherborn, Massachusetts, who spoke on two or three occasions at outside gatherings.

Among the remedies proposed by legislation, are the restriction of emigration; reform in the naturalization laws; child-saving laws, or laws requiring the removal of children from criminal surroundings; state laws prohibiting the marriage of criminals, vagabonds, prostitutes and imbeciles, and prescribing the confinement for life of these classes, and habitual drunkards and paupers, the sexes apart, a remedy "to which fortunately all criminal legislation is now tending," said Judge Wayland, the staunch advocate of these measures; and the freeing of police and penal systems from the "political octopus."

Remedies suggested in other lines are the moving of the respectable part of the community in a solid column against the saloon; the confinement of the drunkard and the support of his family by the saloons; the demand by employers of absolute temperance in employés; the establishment of kindergartens as part of the public school system, the wonderful results of the kindergarten work of Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper, of San Francisco, being stated by General Brinkerhoff to emphasize this; industrial teaching in the common schools and less time given to letter studies; the grading of prisons, whereby criminals of different classes may be kept apart; the separation of these classes wherever possible; the substitution of district work houses for county jails, these monstrous evils—jails—or compulsory schools of crime at the public expense, still existing, though the war upon them is plainly telling; and the adoption of the "Bertillon system" for the registration and identification of prisoners, "a powerful factor in checking the growth of crime and an aid in all reformatory efforts."

Criminal statistics from the census of 1890 showed that the prison population is much younger than is generally supposed, the bulk of all prisoners being between twenty and thirty years old, also that the largest proportion of young criminals is among the negroes, and that women form a comparatively insignificant proportion of the prison population. The sum of $400,000,000 was given as the expense of the penal system of the country.

Terse and pithy expressions abounded in a number of the papers read, notably that by Dr. Wayland, of Philadelphia, on "The obstacles to prison reform."

Among them were: "The best prison reform would be a reform that should make prisons needless." "The best method of reforming criminals would be to reform them before they became criminals, and as prison reform should deal with the prisoner before he became a criminal so it should deal with him after he has been a criminal in the eye of the law." "We punish the man who steals a loaf; we hail the man who by monopolies and corners in wheat makes the loaf smaller and coarser in a hundred thousand homes." The "greater criminals who steal whole principalities of land, whole railroad systems, whole states, and who move in the first society" were also included in Dr. Wayland's paper. "Ruts are the enemy of the human race," he continued. "Many of these obstacles I might have summed up in the one word, conservatism, by which I mean a compound of ignorance, timidity, conceit and selfishness. Its tendency is downward."

MARGARET A. LAKE.

Mt. Washington, Md.

THE HOUR FOR ACTION.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—It was said recently by a friend speaking of the work and workers of the W. C. T. U.: "They seem to have drifted somehow away from their main purpose, the object for which they were first organized, and are doing more distinctly the work which the church should do, and thus have not the power and success as an opponent of the liquor traffic which they otherwise might have. They use time and energy and means in mission and reformatory work which is especially the duty of the church and so do not concentrate their forces upon the one objective point. There is too much division of effort."

It may be said in reply that our whole object and all our labors lie strictly within the province of Christian endeavor and church work, and if the church had been alive to her responsibility, had faithfully performed her whole duty, the causes which led to the woman's crusade would not have existed and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union need never have been organized.

Granted, for the sake of the argument, but the fact remains incontrovertible that the church has not done her whole duty, else had the liquor traffic never attained the magnitude of to-day or laid a defiling and controlling hand upon the social and political life of the nation. Consequently the W. C. T. U. is here; she is here to stay, and her chief purpose, the object of her life, the mission for which she was born, is the annihilation of the liquor traffic.

To this end, therefore, ought she to bend all her energies; around this central point must she mass all her forces; she must not allow herself to be distracted or intimidated by flank movements or false alarms, nor by an avalanche of hostile criticism, concerning the unwisdom or unavailability of her plan of attack. She must not be badgered into falling back, nor halting, nor weakening her onslaught upon the center because of the cry from certain quarters that she has "given up gospel work and gone into politics."

It is the liquor traffic she is fighting, and wherever she finds her enemy there she must strike; she cannot pick and choose her ground; if she find her enemy entrenched in politics, defended by the strong arm of government hiding behind social customs or lurking in the church there she must strike, and strike to kill, regardless of the outcry and confusion which will follow the blow; follow closely and expose whatever protection shields him. Divorce the liquor traffic from the government, and let it stand concentrated and alone against the forces of W. C. T. U. reform.

We do not decry multiplications of department work all are needed, but the greatest need is a mighty massing of forces at the central point. Let the word go all along our lines that we are to make a determined assault upon the enemy's center; leave all impediments at the rear, close all ears to the cries of the fearful or the grumbling of the disaffected, and drown the scoffs and jeers of our adversaries with a mighty shout, "Forward"; let every hilltop blaze with the signal fires; let the watchword fly from mouth to mouth, "the W. C. T. U. expects every woman to do her duty."

You may say, "Good enough perhaps in theory, but how do you propose to carry it out, and when?"

The time is now. The method, substantially and very briefly this: Let every individual white-ribboner declare herself to be uncompromisingly, unrelentingly, committed to the utter extermination of the liquor traffic. To that end let her refuse to countenance the traffic in any way; let her withdraw her custom from any grocer or other merchant who deals in the vile stuff, and let him understand plainly her reason for doing so; let her assure herself that the church at whose altar she bows in loving memory of Christ, furnishes only the pure juice of the grape to her communicants. If she be an employer let her engage only total abstinence employés; let her carry out a methodical plan of outlawry against the sale and use of intoxicants and a complete system of no-commerce with the unclean thing as far reaching and controlling as her own influence and personality can extend. Let her waste no time in discussing plans for "suppression" or "regulation" or in listening to elaborate arguments as to who or what has done the most for our cause in the past. However that fact may be the liquor traffic is still here, practically unsuppressed, and apparently irrepressible, more aggressive, more blatant, more defiant than ever; determined to override law, subvert order, outrage decency, invade the home, crush woman, debauch childhood, degrade manhood, in short, determined to conquer at any price, even though the price be the very life of the nation.

White ribboners, work as though this were the last opportunity and this the day for the final decision. Don't dawdle, don't trifle, don't whine, don't shirk, don't dodge, don't fret, don't show the white feather, but put on your white ribbon to stay, and if you must be a martyr to the cause die in the front ranks, with your face to the foe triumphant in the thought that

"'Tis the martyrdom to-day Brings victory to-morrow."

Let every woman give now of her time, her influence, her means, for the accomplishment of the great purpose for which we are enlisted. Let her make her home an arsenal where can be found all weapons needed for the warfare and let her make a soldier of each one who enters there; let her be herself a walking magazine of facts and information, of enthusiasm and inspiration, of "grace and grit and gumption."

The shelves of our publishing houses are full to overflowing with ammunition: it is time for every one to draw upon these stores that she may do most effective service. Let her go fully equipped to church, to prayer-meeting, to Sunday school, to social meetings.

Make good use of the United States mails. Select some square, or village, or definite locality, and bombard every voter there with a choice selection of prohibition, Home-protection shot and shell. Inaugurate a series of meetings and picnics and socials, and make them so attractive and inviting that voters will be sure to be there, then fill their minds with the fact and leave it there to do its work. Have a campaign of education and enthusiasm and inspiration. Use tact and discretion. Let every white-ribboner feel that she is personally responsible for victory or defeat. Let her realize that it is her duty to bring in recruits, to stock the magazines, to be ever on the alert, and to keep the battle raging. The hotter the conflict, the more decisive the result; then see that it never flags; keep up courage; renew faith, sure that

"Where the vanguard fights to-day
The rear shall camp to-morrow."

Remember, dear white ribboners, "the battle is not to the strong alone, it is to the vigilant, the active, the brave."

"Thou, therefore, gird up thy loins and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee; be not dismayed at their faces lest I confound thee before them. For behold, I have made thee this day a defenced city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land, against the kings, . . . against the princes, and against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land. And they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee."

MARGARET B. PLATT.

Washington, D. C.

Mme. M. YALE'S

LA FRECKLA
ELECTRIFIES THE WORLD.

BEAUTY IN A BATH.

La Freckla, the Great Mineral Water discovered by Mme. M. Yale, that Celebrated Woman Chemist. It is the only known natural water that has the power of Purifying the Skin and making a Complexion Beautiful.

LA FRECKLA

was named La Freckla because it is a sure cure for Freckles—all one has to do is to bathe the face in it a few times, when the Complexion becomes radiantly beautiful and Every Freckle disappears as if by magic. It removes any spot or stain from the Skin in the same way, only it seems to favor Freckled Faces.

Mme. Yale's own complexion is the most perfect ever seen. Her lovely neck and arms are so perfect one has to look closely to make sure they are not marble, and her face is as fair as the lily and as pink as the rose.

LA FRECKLA

will make any woman who uses it as fair as she. Price $1.00. For sale by all Druggists, or shipped by Mme. Yale. Address all letters to

MME. M. YALE,
COMPLEXION SPECIALIST,
37 W. 14th St., New York.
146 State St., Chicago, Ill. Mme. M. Yale Co.
Send 6 cents postage for Beauty Book just out.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals
are used in the preparation of
W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa
which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

MENDING TISSUE

Repairs clothing better than needle and thread; Silk, Satin, Cotton and Woolen, Kid Gloves, Macintoshes, Umbrellas, etc., all colors. Sample yard, 10c. Three yards, 25c. Twelve yards, 65c. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. Address STAYNER & CO., Providence, R. I.

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

☞ See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to
H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

103 E. ADAMS ST. BORSCH-OPTICIAN CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT SATISFACTION GAURANTEED

PRINTING OUTFIT 15c
COMPLETE, 4 alphabets rubber type, type holder, bottle Indelible Ink, Ink Pad and Tweezers. Put up in neat box with directions for use. Satisfaction guaranteed. Worth 50c. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Sets names in 1 minute, prints 500 cards an hour. Sent postpaid 15c; 2 for 25c, Cat. free.
R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y. City.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address
Dr. C. L. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.
Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets, Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 VanBuren St. Chicago

WALL PAPER. Good Paper, 3c. Gold Paper, 5c. Large package of beautiful samples and guide, "How to Paper," sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant, 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO, ILL.

HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES. Agents Wanted. Catalogue free Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago

BEATTY Piano, Organ, $33 up. Want agents Cat. free. Dan'l F Beatty, Washton, N.J

Publisher's Notes.

WHAT WILL I BUY FOR CHRISTMAS?

Hints for Guidance in Making Your Holiday Presents.

If you are a father or a mother wishing to make your child happy in this season of good cheer and general gladness, do not fritter away your money on knick-knacks which are broken or discarded in a week, but bring into your home something like the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA, this greatest of works, this mine of knowledge, which will be an inspiration in your home now and a practical help hereafter.

If you are a son or a daughter there is nothing that would give your parents greater satisfaction and you all greater benefit than this storehouse of knowledge, where the brightest men who ever lived have laid their mental treasures.

If you are to give a present outside of your own household you will, in making such a present, prove not only your own good judgment and good feeling, but you will confer a personal compliment on your friend, for unless he has brains and ambition you would not have thought of such a gift.

Isn't this worth thinking about? Would not you like to make such a present? Then don't put the desire aside with the hasty reflection, "I can't afford it," but send a dollar to this office and the full set of books, 20 volumes, bound in heavy manilla paper covers, will be sent to you at once. You may never have such an opportunity as this again to make a present to a friend at such a nominal cost and yet secure so much value in return. The remaining $9 you have three months in which to pay. A Christmas present for an initial payment of $1. Think of it! Our offer closes with the year.

Send all orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE JUNIOR PARTNERS.

The following are some of the many testimonials to the merits of the new book recently issued from our presses:

"The Junior Partners" is a transcript of real life, and full of interest.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"The Junior Partners" is a story of high moral tone, and should be read by every youth and maiden, as well as by the fathers and mothers and all who have a heart to feel and a brain to plan a remedy for the blighting curse of intemperance that is hanging over this otherwise fair land. Physicians who are making a study of "The causes of emotional insanity" will find much food for thought in the chapters devoted to insanity and insane asylums. —Home Alliance, Woodland, Cal.

This story contains a powerful temperance argument. The author takes the ground, now so general among leading physicians, that intemperance is a disease, and curable. His arguments are based upon personal knowledge and close study of his subject. The book is one which should be in every home in the land.—The Oregonian, Portland, Oregon.

A WOMAN'S EVANGEL,

By Eva Kinney Griffith,

Is a temperance story of unusual interest. The general reader will recognize its lifelikeness and the evident familiarity of the author with the scenes she depicts, while his interest in the story, with its golden thread of love and devotion, will hold him steadily to its perusal. The W. C. T. U. reader will say: "That's the way our business men talk"; "Young L— went right down from 'moderate drinking,' just like Nelson Parker"; "Those gospel temperance meetings! exactly like ours—the same difficulties, the same disappointments; yes, and the same successes."

The student of reforms in general, and drink cures in particular, will read the story of Dr. McCullough with thoughtful interest, and all who know the ways of politicians will understand the fight made by the "old parties" for the votes of the little band of reformed men.

The closing words have the ring of prophecy: "There is harmony in Pannona, for society, the poor people, and the virtuous and industrious citizens are all united in one grand effort to drive the liquor traffic forever away from their beautiful little city. And some day they will succeed."

It is a good book for the home, or Sunday-school, or young people's library. Price $1.25.

Send orders to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

Shawknit
TRADE MARK.

HALF-HOSE for MEN and YOUTHS.

BEST-FITTING. MOST DURABLE.

☞ Look for the trade-mark on the toe. ☜

DESCRIPTIVE PRICE-LIST TO ANY APPLICANT.

SHAW STOCKING CO., LOWELL, MASS.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA.

WOULD YOU LIKE

To attend the World's Fair at our expense, and to read, free of charge, for one year, our paper, the "TOTAL ABSTAINER"? If so, please send your name and address to this office for further particulars.

902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg.,
165-173 Jackson Street,
CHICAGO, ILL.

GEN. W. F. SINGLETON,	President.
REV. A. J. JUTKINS,	Vice-President.
A. BONNELL,	Secretary.
S. M. SINGLETON,	Treasurer.
E. S. ATWOOD,	Medical Director
J. D. KNAPP,	Supt. Agencies

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Every policy holder is positively a total abstainer from alcoholic beverages.
This is the ONLY Company that does not insure the drinker.
And is, therefore, the only Company in which teetotalers should be insured.
Its risks are unquestionably the best.
Its death-rate for 1891 was over 50 per cent below the average mortality of all other companies.

It has the lowest expenses—only $2.20 per $1,000 insurance for 1891.
It has the lowest average premium charge.
No premiums are required in old age.
Policy contract simple, definite, equitable and limited as to cost.
Its life policies have cash and paid-up values after probable life.
It has an adequate reserve fund.
Expenses of management limited to $3.00 per $1,000 insurance per annum.

FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

Number of policy holders,	5,500
Guarantee Fund,	$ 92,000.00
Amount paid to beneficiaries,	210,000.00
Insurance in force,	11,000,000.00

COMPARISON FOR 1891.

All old Line Companies averaged per $1,000 insurance,	Death Claims $14.55	Expenses $15.07
Total Abstinence Life Ass'n averaged per $1,000 insurance,	5.65	2.20

AGENTS WANTED

Address A. BONNELL, Secretary.

DO YOU CROCHET ?

If so, have you heard of the magnificent offer of the Glasgo Lace Thread Co. $2,000 Gold Coin premiums for best work made from the GLASGO TWILLED LACE THREAD, to be exhibited by them at the World's Fair. Every Penny of it will be promptly paid to those whose work the Committee of Experts may deem most worthy of the awards.

$2000.00 GOLD COIN in Premiums

Open to all residents of the U. S. Send 10 cents for sample spool of twilled thread, 500 yards. Illustrated crochet books, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, 10c. each. 12 nice tidy patterns, 5c. each. 12 bed spread patterns, 5c. each, all post paid. Either of above books sent free with an order for 12 patterns. GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., GLASGO, CONN.

You have plenty of time to enter the contest for

Send for circular containing all necessary information.

MENDING MADE EASY BY THE USE OF GUM TISSUE

Used for repairing all kinds of clothing, from the very finest silk or satin to a buckskin mitten. Kid gloves and umbrellas mended without sewing, quicker, neater, and stronger than ever before. SAMPLE 10 cts. to intending agents. F. Cassgreen Mfg. Co. 134 Van Buren St. Chicago, Ill.

TOBACCO HABIT

HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.

For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others.

Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.

EASILY CURED

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S
PILE COMPOUND
Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.

CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.

References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M.D., Helena, Mont.

Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard. Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.

FAT PEOPLE

YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of

DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.

Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.

DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

CARDS FOR 1893. 50 SAMPLE STYLES AND LIST OF 500 PREMIUM ARTICLES FREE. HAVERFIELD PUB. CO, CADIZ, OHIO.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.

New Cantatas, Concert Exercises and Anthems.

EMANUEL, a sacred cantata, in the form of oratorio, by W. A. Ogden. The story of Emanuel told in song. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

SANTA CLAUS' DELIGHT, a merry Christmas Cantata for Sunday schools, by Chas. H. Gabriel. Beautiful music, pretty scenes and a jolly entertainment for the children. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

JOY-BELLS, a new Christmas Concert Exercise for Sunday schools, by J. H. Fillmore. Pretty music, recitations, and readings. Price, 5c.; 55c. per dozen, post-paid; $4.00 per 100, not prepaid.

HARK! WHAT CELESTIAL SOUNDS, a chorus anthem for choirs, by J. B. Herbert. An anthem of unusual beauty. Price, 10c.

☞A full descriptive list of all our Christmas Cantatas, Concert Exercises, and Anthems mailed free.

FILLMORE BROS., 141 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR

DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction

By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 41st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published. Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. ☞ We Give Credit, Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for

WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE

a New, Choice, splendidly Illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all,—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest, Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.

INDIA AND MALAYSIA!

By BISHOP J. M. THOBURN, D. D.,

Thirty-three Years a Missionary in India.

One Royal Octavo Volume. 562 Pages. Beautifully Illustrated. Superbly bound. Half Russia, $2.50. Full Russia, $3.00.

AGENTS WANTED!

LIBERAL TERMS. TERRITORY FREE.

For Descriptive and Confidential Circulars, address CRANSTON & CURTS, Cincinnati, Ohio.

SAFEST OF ALL INVESTMENTS

CITY AND COUNTY BONDS Secured by tax lien on all property within their limits.

Descriptive Bond Lists furnished on application.

N. W. HARRIS & CO., BANKERS,

163-165 DEARBORN ST. - CHICAGO, ILL.

New York. Boston.

GOING TO BUILD

SEE THESE NEW 1892 DESIGNS IN BOOKS 4 and 5, "HOUSES and COTTAGES."

Size, 8 x 10 inches. Contains new designs, new styles. No. 4 has 35 designs, classified from $150 up to $1500, about half under $1000. No. 5 contains 59 designs of dwellings costing over $1 500, many $1800 to $3000 $1 each, or the two $1.50. D. S. HOPKINS, Architect 72 Ottawa Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Pinless Clothes Line

WANTED—Salesmen to whom we will give EXCLUSIVE TERRITORY to sell our celebrated PINLESS CLOTHES LINE, the only line ever invented that holds clothes WITHOUT PINS—a wonderful success; or our famous FOUNTAIN INK ERASER which willerase ink instantly, and has NO EQUAL. The success of our salesmen shows the great demand for these articles, many making $20 to $50 per day. On receipt of 50c. will mail sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with price-lists and terms. PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 18½ Hermon Street, Worcester, Mass.

Fountain Ink Eraser

DON'T CHEW TOBACCO

Beeman's Pepsin Gum

Helps to overcome the Habit.

CAUTION—See that the name Beeman is on each wrapper.

Each tablet contains one grain pure pepsin, sufficient to digest 1,000 grains of food. If it cannot be obtained from dealers, send five cents in stamps for sample package to

BEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 64 Lake St., Cleveland, O

ORIGINATORS OF PEPSIN CHEWING GUM.

DEAFNESS CURED

. . BY ELECTRICITY. .

Send 10 cents for our 100 page "Electro-Medical Theory and Practice."

B. B. BLISS, Iowa Falls, Iowa.

AGENTS

Coin Money selling Beveridge's Automatic Cooker. Every woman buys. Best and cheapest cooker sold. Big Profits to good workers, male or female. Sample's weight 12 oz. Adv'g matter furnished

For circulars address W. E. BEVERIDGE, Baltimore, Md.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

Publisher's Notes.

OUR DAY,

A Record and Review of Current Reform.

JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

ASSOCIATE EDITORS.

Frances E. Willard. Prof. J. E. Rankin, D.D.
Mrs. Mary H. Hunt. Anthony Comstock.
John H. Barrows, D. D. Ex-Pres. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D.
Rev. Jas. B. Dunn, D. D.
Ex-Pres. G. F. Magoun, D. D. Rev. R. G. McNiece, D. D.
Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.

PRICE: Single numbers, ... $ .25
Yearly subscription, ... 2.50

Published by
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

A SPLENDID OFFER.

After careful deliberation it has been decided to make the following very liberal offer to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL:

Fully believing that it would be one of the greatest aids to our cause, as has been said again and again in these columns, if THE UNION SIGNAL were more generally read, and being unable to personally canvass all the territory of all the local unions, nearly 10,000 of which are scattered over this country, and desiring your help in this direction, the proposition here outlined is made to all ages and sexes. It is a very fine opportunity for you to secure a valuable and beautiful New Year's gift, if you do not secure it before Christmas.

NOTE.—To any one, young or old, readers of "Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner" included, who will send us a club of eight new subscribers at one dollar each, we will forward promptly one of our beautiful W. C. T. U. solid silver after-dinner coffee souvenir spoons. These spoons have the die of the Crusade Church at Hillsboro, Ohio, imprinted in the bowl; Miss Willard's picture embowered in the National floral emblem, the trailing arbutus, on the handle, while the top of the handle is surmounted by the world belted with the white ribbon. The back of the handle has the World's floral emblem, the water lily, and the initials of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. It is both beautiful and valuable, being of solid sterling silver.

REMEMBER, we will send an after dinner coffee spoon, polished or oxidized, for eight subscribers at one dollar a year.

FOR TEN subscribers at one dollar each, we will send a similar spoon with gilded bowl.

FOR TWELVE subscribers we will send a tea spoon of the same design, or with the Temple in the bowl, instead of the Crusade Church.

FOR FIFTEEN subscribers at one dollar each, we will send a teaspoon with gilded bowl.

FOR EIGHTEEN subscribers at one dollar each we will send an orange spoon, polished or oxidized, with the Temple or the Crusade Church in the bowl.

FOR TWENTY subscribers at one dollar each. we will send an orange spoon with gilded bowl.

This offer is open until January 1st, 1893.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The "Junior Partners" is finding favor everywhere. Remember it is a book for business men and when they have read it they want their wives and children to read it. It is sold by subscription only or sent from this office on mail orders. Agents wanted. Splendid terms. Apply to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE HANDY MANUAL.

This little book of 440 pages is a perfect encyclopedia of information. It answers almost every question that you might ask, whether of law, history or concerning mercantile business or farm interests. Social matters have due attention. It also contains fifty maps. The price of this manual has been 50c. We will send it to any address for 25c.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers,

CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE

Fairbank's Gold Dust Washing Powder.

From $35

WE DO IT EVERY TIME! Save you from $50 to $200

HOW DO WE DO IT?

We sell from our factory at wholesale prices direct to the public, saving them all agents' and dealers' exorbitant profits. We are doing a marvellous business. One thousand Pianos and Organs per month. WONDERFUL, but true! To prove it, send for our new catalogue, illustrated in colors. It is FREE to any address. Examine it, and you will see that we are selling

ORGANS and PIANOS For CASH and on EASY PAYMENTS

at prices that are simply WONDERFULLY LOW. We have now some of the finest styles of Organs and Pianos ever manufactured. Our new catalogue shows all the latest. Our twenty-sixth annual special offers are now ready. We have bargains in all styles and at all prices. Organs from $35. Pianos from $175, for cash or on easy payment. We have the largest direct trade in the world. We have a larger factory and employ more men than any firm doing a direct business. You can visit our factory FREE if you live within 200 miles of us.

. . . NOTE . . . We are absolutely responsible for all our contracts.

REFERENCES: First National Bank, and all the great Commercial Agencies.

NO SATISFACTION, NO PAY! All instruments shipped on free trial warranted for ten years.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE AT ONCE TO

CORNISH & CO. Old Established & Reliable Washington, NEW JERSEY.

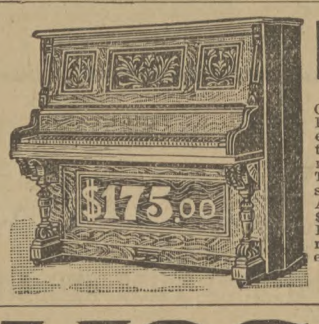
From $175



FREE! FREE!

You cannot afford to buy any piano until you have examined our new Catalogue. Containing not only illustrations and descriptions of our Pianos, but full information of their construction and all that is required to constitute an A1 instrument. Of immense value to any one about to invest in a musical instrument, and whether you purchase of us or not it will be to your interest to send for our Catalogue, which is FREE TO ALL. We ship on test trial, ask no cash in advance, and sell on instalment plan. PIANO SHIPPED THE DAY ORDER IS RECEIVED. No Agents, sold direct from factory. You save all middlemen's profits. $175.00 will obtain a Superb Upright Piano, 7 1-3 Octaves, Overstrung Bass, full French Action, Capped Hammers and Ivory Keys. Warranted for twenty years. Shipped on test trial. Greatest bargain on earth. We refer to four banks for our responsibility.

BEETHOVEN CO., P. O. Box, 701, Washington, N. J.

YOSE & SONS PIANOS. ESTABLISHED IN 1851.

Celebrated for their Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability. Old instruments taken in exchange Write for catalogue.

170 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.,
OR
LYON, POTTER & CO.,
176 WABASH AVE., CHICAGO, ILL.

A CENT SENT BENT.

Manufacturer of "CROWN" PIANOS AND ORGANS.

WELL SPENT, is a cent sent to Bent, (your address, on postal) if you wish a Piano or Organ I want verses about the "Crown" goods, and give Pianos, Organs, etc., for the best ones. Ask and learn how it's done. Catalogue free. GEO. P. BENT, (Clerk No. 52), Chicago, Ill. (Estab. 1870).

IF YOU WANT

Work that is pleasant and profitable send us your address immediately. We teach men and women how to earn from $5 per day to $3,000 per year without having had previous experience, and furnish the employment at which they can make that amount. Capital unnecessary. A trial will cost you nothing. Write to-day and address

E. C. ALLEN & CO.,
Box 1150. AUGUSTA, ME.

Barry's Tricopherous for the hair and skin. Druggists or by mail 50 cents. 44 Stone St., N. Y.

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

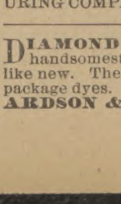
Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, post-paid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis

HEADQUARTERS FOR LOW PRICES!

SCALES OF EVERY VARIETY.

A 1,000 Articles Less than Wholesale Prices. Carriages, Buggies, Wagons, Carts, Sleighs, Harness, Safes, Sewing Machines, Blacksmiths' Tools, Bone Mills, Feed Mills, Cider Mills, Corn Shellers, Feed Cutters, Lawn Mowers, Land Rollers, Road Plows, Dump Carts, Steel Scrapers, Sinks, Fanning Mills, Stoves, Kettles, Jack Screws, Hand Carts, Wire Fence, Letter Presses, Coffee and Spice Mills, Guns, Pistols, Bicycles, Tricycles, Cash Drawers, Clothes Wringers, Meat Choppers, Trucks, Lathes, Engines, Watches, Organs, Pianos, Etc. Send for free Catalogue and see how to save Money.

151 S. Jefferson St., CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.



MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.

OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEPT 20, CHICAGO, Ill.

MAGIC HEATER—Ingersoll Heat Battery Metal Table. Elegant Mammoth Lamp Heat Light, Comfort, Convenience and Economy. All for $10. Send for facts. INGERSOLL MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Lansing, Mich.

DIAMOND DYES give the fastest, brightest handsomest colors, and make the old clothes look like new. They are the original and only reliable package dyes. Sample card free. WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

Signal Notes.

"Fanatics are earnest men in a minority."—Sir Wilfrid Lawson.

It is said that there are forty thousand families starving in the East End of London.

Over nineteen millions of persons have been killed in wars during the last one hundred years.

The revenues of the Monte Carlo gambling tables amount to some four million dollars a year.

In Sebastopol, Russia, a monument has been erected to the women who participated in the defense of that town in 1854.

The Finnish society, called The Temperance Friends, has a membership of ten thousand two hundred and seventeen persons.

The chief art decorator for a well known carriage manufacturer in New York is a woman who has twenty women assistants

The Chinese Christian churches of Hong Kong sent two delegates to England to protest against the Anglo Asiatic opium trade

A minister at The Hague stated in a recent sermon that two thousand five hundred dollars a day was spent in strong drink in that city.

In the recent Glasgow municipal elections the number of women voters was very large; one old lady, ninety-two years old, braved the crowds.

"The saloon is just as good and as 'respectable' as the men who patronize it or vote for it to exist, if it pays money."—Griffin's (Catholic) Journal.

Two young ladies, natives, were among the students who passed the examination for the medical and surgical degree at the Bombay University this year.

The Congress of the Church of England gave much attention to the subject of vivisection and the prevailing sentiment seemed strongly against the cruel practice.

The London police court mission of the Church of England Temperance Society assisted over fifteen hundred men, women and children to secure situations or to find homes.

The growth of Protestantism in France, through the McCall missions, is one of the most hopeful signs of the times. From every part of France come the most urgent calls for help.

A political vote was taken by the students of a Lexington, Ky., college. It stood three for Weaver, twelve for Harrison, twenty-four for Cleveland and fifty-nine for Bidwell.

If a Sunday closing bill could be passed in England it would set free from Sunday toil between two and three hundred thousand bar-maids and bar men who now work about fifteen hours a day for seven days.

A city missionary in Boston, speaking from twenty years' experience, says that he has been called but once to Charles street jail to visit a scholar from the mission schools under his charge and then the boy was proved innocent.

Students of the University of Pennsylvania are about to form a club, modeled on the clubs at Oxford and Paris, the latter of which has a membership of five thousand. A house has been rented, which will be fitted up with reading and billiard rooms and also the inevitable smoking room.

Investigation by the Swiss Federal Council proved that the Swiss consumed twenty-seven million litres of brandy yearly, and that in consequence the number of men fit for military service is decreasing. Forty-four per cent of their lunatics lost their reason by the abuse of spirits and the great majority of suicides, six hundred a year, are attributed to the same vice.

The Mission Home for English women in Paris is doing a good work, admitting over four hundred last year, providing medical care for those who fall sick, and a kindergarten and day school for the children of those who must work for their daily bread. There is a flourishing Band of Hope. The Y. W. C. A. also reaches a large number of young women living in Paris.

An English chemist suggesting that in addition to the word poison a list of antidotes be printed on the labels of bottles containing poisons, the Boston Traveller suggests the following inscriptions to be printed on the labels of bottles containing alcoholic poison:

It biteth like a serpent,
It stingeth like an adder.
Death is in it!
Touch not! Taste not!

Here is a scene from life.

Eight prominent Professors of Chemistry in different parts of the United States were asked to analyze Ivory Soap. It was the concentration of the best knowledge and skill of this country upon one small cake of soap. What was the result? Every test was a triumph. Its purity was summed up in one word—REMARKABLE.

Copyright 1890, by The Procter & Gamble Co.

EVERY MAN OR WOMAN WHO IS INTERESTED IN Children WILL BE INTERESTED IN

ST. NICHOLAS,

The Century Co.'s magazine for young folks. St. Nicholas contains every month the best collection of stories for boys and girls that it is possible to make—nearly a hundred pages, and pictures on almost every page. If you want a good magazine for a boy or girl to read, buy the Christmas number; for sale by all newsdealers. It costs a quarter.

"Place St. Nicholas in your household," says the School Journal, "and you need have no fear for the lessons taught your children." Subscription price, $3.00 a year; single numbers, 25 cents. Subscribe through your bookseller or newsdealer, or remit direct to the publishers by check, draft, money- or express-order, or in registered letter.

THE CENTURY CO., 33 East 17th Street, New York.

DO YOU INTEND TO VISIT THE WORLD'S FAIR?

IF SO, send us your name and address, and we will explain to you how you can visit THE FAIR AT THE LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENSE, while increasing the pleasure of the same. Separate department for ladies. Address at once

THE VISITOR'S GUIDE AND AID ASSOCIATION, 116 & 118 La Salle St., CHICAGO, ILL.

FREE by return mail, full descriptive circulars of MOODY'S NEW and MOODY'S IMPROVED TAILOR SYSTEMS OF DRESS CUTTING. Revised to date. These, only, are the genuine TAILOR SYSTEMS invented and copyrighted by PROF. D.W. MOODY. Beware of imitations. Any lady of ordinary intelligence can easily and quickly learn to cut and make any garment, in any style, to any measure, for ladies, men and children. Garments guaranteed to fit perfectly without trying on. Address MOODY & CO. CINCINNATI, O.

A MODERN BATH.
The Latest and Best.
Quick Self-Heating, or Toilet Cabinet in place of Heater. No bath-room required. Ornamental, Inexpensive, Complete, Practical. Desirable for either city or town. Send 2ct. stamp for Cat'al'ge.
THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB Co.
180 S. Canal St. Chicago.

ESTABLISHED 1850.
"Out of each nook by dingle and brook
The Healing blossoms lean and look."

A POT OF PRECIOUS OINTMENT | Dr. O. P. Brown's HERBAL OINTMENT (Great External Remedy) reaches disease through the pores, heals inflammation, banishes pain. 25cts. Druggists or by mail. J. Gibson Brown, 47 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
Beware of imitations. Notice autograph of STEWART HARTSHORN on label and get the genuine Hartshorn.

NEW MAGIC LANTERN
STEREOPTICONS AND LANTERN SLIDES
For Amateurs, Public Lectures, and the Home Circle. PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENTS ARE PROFITABLE. J. B. COLT & CO., manfrs., 16 Beekman St., New York 189 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. Mention this paper.

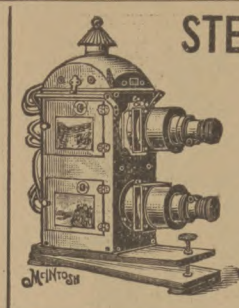
MAGIC LANTERNS
And STEREOPTICONS, all prices. Views illustrating every subject for PUBLIC EXHIBITIONS, etc. ☞ A profitable business for a man with small capital. Also Lanterns for Home Amusement. 236 page Catalogue free.
McALLISTER, Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y.

Bickford Family Knitter.
Knits everything required by the household, of any quality, texture and weight desired. A. M. LAWSON, 783 Broadway, N. Y.
Beware of cheap and worthless knitters.

LADY AGENTS wanted for Thomas' well known Health Corsets. Hand corded. BIG inducements. Thousands annually sold. Experience unnecessary. For terms write H. A. Thomas & Co., Niles, Mich.

DRESS REFORM.
If interested send for my free illustrated booklet describing Healthful Dress for women and children. MRS. S. W. PIKE, 73 Madison Street, Chicago.

AGENT made $71 in four days, selling my Electric Corsets, Belts, Brushes, Rings. 100 per ct profit Cash Prizes. Samples free. DR. BRIDGMAN, B'way, N. Y.



STEREOPTICONS
AND Lantern Slides
FOR THE
"SCHOOL,"
The Sabbath School
THE CHURCH.
Write for Catalogue.
Mention UNION SIGNAL
McIntosh Battery and Optical Co., Chicago.

THE
HARVEY ACADEMY
Prepares for college, for business, and for the shop. It is located in the temperance town of Harvey, near the Columbian Exposition, and its students have great advantages in connection with the Fair. Those who are willing and able to work earn money enough to pay their tuition and boarding.
Winter term begins January 4.
Address
L. BEERS, M. A., Supt.,
HARVEY, ILL.

Hotel keepers, grocers, druggists and private people have tried imported and domestic mineral water, and all with one voice agree that is the best. It is bottled pure just as it flows from the famous "Manitou" Soda Spring. It has more sparkle and effervescence than any other known mineral water. It is a splendid aid to digestion, and a panacea for the stomach, liver and kidney troubles, and as an appetizer it has no equal. People like it. If they use it once they want it again.

Manitou
Table Water

Unexcelled for Family, Club and Restaurant use packed in cases of 100 Pints and 48 Pints.
Convenient forms for Dealer and Consumer
Address for literature
Manitou Mineral Water Co., Manitou Springs, Colo
Sold by all first-class groceries. Also by all druggists

FREE
To Every Reader of This Paper
No Money Required.
Cut this out and send it to us with your full name and address and we will send you this elegant watch by express for examination, and if you think it equal to any $10.00 watch, pay our sample price, $1.98, and express charges, and it is yours. We send with the watch our guarantee that you can return it at any time within one year if not satisfactory, and if you sell six we will give you one free. Write at once as we shall send out samples for 60 days only.
Address
—THE—
NATIONAL MFG. AND IMPORTING CO.
334 Dearborn St.
Chicago, Ill.

The Union Signal

AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

"THOU HAST GIVEN A BANNER TO THEM THAT FEAR THEE; THAT IT MAY BE DISPLAYED BECAUSE OF THE TRUTH."

Volume XVIII.—No. 52.] CHICAGO, December 29, 1892. [Price $1.00 per Year in Advance

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE.

Dynamiters are at work in Dublin.

Congress adjourned last week for a holiday recess.

Christmas services were held all over the land last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone arrived in Biarritz, France, December 22, for the season of rest.

James G. Blaine still holds fast to life, although his death is expected at any moment.

An appeal has been issued from St. Petersburg for the famine sufferers in the Province of Tula.

Winnebago county, Ill., W. C. T. U. held a memorial service December 22, for Miss Mary Allen West.

The first number of an evening paper advocating the annexation of Canada to the United States was issued in Toronto, December 21.

In a race of the ocean greyhounds the City of Paris, a twin screw steamship, was beaten by the Eutruria, which arrived at Liverpool December 24, four hours ahead.

The official call for the Columbian Catholic Congress to convene at Chicago, September 4, 1893, under the honorary president, Cardinal Gibbons, was issued December 24.

Rev. Father McGlynn was reinstated in his priestly functions by Mgr. Satolli, arbiter from Pope Leo, December 23, an amicable settlement having been accomplished.

The investigating committee of which the Earl of Onslow is chairman reports favorably of General Booth's enterprise for the redemption of "Darkest England," and declares him innocent of fraud or dishonest acts.

The sessions of the French Chambers during the week past have revealed still more disgraces connected with what is now called the great Panama Canal fraud the disclosures forming a crisis in the history of France.

Haverhill, Mass., the birthplace of John Greenleaf Whittier, honored his memory December 21, by an elaborate service in memoriam to which poets and authors from all over the country were bidden. Edward Everett Hale, D. D., of Boston, led in prayer, Edward D. Mead, editor of the New England Magazine, delivered an impressive eulogy, and Will Carleton rendered a rare, poetical tribute.

IT was shown conclusively last week by witnesses before the House committee which is investigating the sweating system in large cities, that the evil continues unabated in all large manufacturing centers except Boston, where the state laws have been so effectively enforced as to lessen it greatly. Chairman Warner states that Philadelphia and Cincinnati are the worst centers for the sweating system and of lowest sanitary conditions.

PROMPTLY on the opening of Congress the Chicago open-Sunday clique was on hand, pressing for a repeal of the ordinance which closes the Columbian Exposition on Sunday. It is to be hoped that there will be no abatement of vigilance on the part of the friends of the Sabbath in every part of the country. They may be assured that the enemies of the Sabbath will leave no stone unturned. The belief is strong here that there is money to be made by an open Fair on Sunday. Money, and money alone, is the inspiration of the movement.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET has arranged a welcome for our president to be given on the 9th of January at Exeter Hall, which will be one of the most notable ever recorded in the annals of philanthropic work. Addresses two minutes long are to be made by the most distinguished representatives in England of the different churches, reform guilds, philanthropic societies, etc. Lady Henry will preside, and we shall give a full account of the addresses and proceedings, which will make our readers even better acquainted than they are now with the leaders of Christian thought and action in the mother country.

AN international Sunday-school building in connection with the Columbian Exposition is now an assured fact, since Congress has voted to close the gates on Sunday. It is proposed to erect a fifty thousand dollar building on grounds adjacent to the Exposition, which shall be a center of evangelistic effort, as well as an exhibit of a model Sunday-school building and the growth and progress of the Sunday-school from the beginning of such schools in England through the pioneer work in this country to the present satisfactory international lesson system. It is proposed to offer premiums for the four best plans of the building, and to raise the building fund by personal subscriptions of one dollar up and by Sunday-school collections of ten cents for each officer and teacher, and one cent for each scholar. This money should be sent to R. W. Hare, treasurer of the Illinois state Sunday-school association, 240 Fifth Avenue, Chicago. Mr. B. F. Jacobs, the well-known Sunday-school leader, is chairman of the committee, which insures a judicious and effective management.

A NEW book in the Chicago market is a "Handbook of Charities." Charity is such a popular word these latter nineteenth century days, it has become a cloak used by hosts of fraudulent solicitors. It is to protect the generous and ready givers that this book has been issued by the Illinois conference of charities and correction, for distribution among the philanthropic. It is interesting reading matter. Two million, seven hundred and eighteen dollars was expended last year for charity in the state of Illinois. More than one million of this amount was expended in Chicago alone. Aside from the state institutions there are one hundred and fifty organizations, rendering aid to nearly two hundred thousand people. These are not all paupers, many of them requiring help but once or twice. But by far the greater number of the beneficiaries are entirely dependent upon these freewill offerings, for such they are. The list of organizations includes scores of children's asylums, such as foundlings' homes, industrial schools, orphans' homes, newsboys' home, day nurseries, free kindergartens and waifs' mission. While the city papers point with pride to the remarkable list of charitable organizations and beneficiaries we cannot help but feel that the city's pride is at once the city's shame, for we notice that the growth of such institutions keeps pace with the growth of the saloons.

Two significant events along the line of the much discussed "Southern Problem" are the invitations given the Rev. Dr. Thirkield to speak before the North Georgia and the South Georgia conferences of the Methodist Episcopal church south, at their recent sessions upon "The Education of the Negro." Dr. Thirkield has been for nine years at the head of Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta, Ga., the only exclusively theological institution of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal church North and is known throughout the south as the fearless champion of the rights of the negro. His welcome at both conferences was even more significant than his invitations. At the former his remarks were received with true southern enthusiasm, calling forth such storms of applause that the presiding bishop, Fitzgerald, was obliged to call for order, and at other times, his hearers were melted to tears. While he said nothing to stir up strife or ill-will, Dr. Thirkield's plea was on the same broad ground on which he would have presented his subject to a northern audience. After his speech, the conference promptly raised $1,100 for Payne institute, the institution under the patronage of their church for the higher education of the negro. The South Georgia Conference also warmly welcomed him and pledged that their conference should raise $700 for the same purpose. Such things as these prove that "the world do move," and that the southern people are moving along as rapidly as mankind are wont to upon questions of moral reform.

OUR English friends are nothing if not practical. At very great public meetings they have pledge tables, not only at the front, but in the rear of the hall with committees to look after the signings. If we could introduce this single custom the membership of the W. C. T. U. would be increased one-third within a year. We bring our speakers, work up our meetings, but do not provide as we ought to take care of the fruits of victory.

AT last the particulars concerning Miss West's death have reached us. Day after day has the mail been scanned for foreign letters, but not until the morning of December 27, did envelopes bearing the now familiar Japanese stamp lie on our desk. Then there were twelve of them, written in various parts of the Empire, and from the United States Consul at Tokio, from Mr. and Mrs. Winn, at whose hospitable home, in Kanazawa, she died, from Dr. Frances E. Clark, whose Christian Endeavor tour took him at that time to Nagoya, from Mrs. Caroline Van Pelten, a missionary who expected to return in January with Miss West (and who will now come alone, bringing her personal effects) from Mr. Tsuda, who with Mr. Sho Nemoto, was instrumental in opening up their way, from the English physician, officially declaring the cause of her death, and from other native and foreign missionaries. As we are holding the paper to insert this paragraph, we can only epitomize the contents of these precious letters. They show unanimously that the grief is universal. Says one: "She is mourned all over the Empire, short as her stay has been." And another: "I cannot begin to tell you how sadly and deeply affected every one is by this heavy blow." We learn from the letters (which will be published in full later) that Miss West caught a heavy cold, by getting her clothes wet while waiting for a steamer to go from Negoya to Yokkaichi. That was about November 15 (dates indefinite). But she disregarded her cold, speaking at the latter place and at Kyoto and Osaka from three to five times a day. In order to reach Kanazawa, she had to travel two days in a jolting jinrikisha. She halted but once in this hundred mile journey and that was at Fukui. There, weary and worn, she addressed a large audience at the missionary's house, and started the next morning, after a sleepless night, to finish her long, tedious journey. Reaching the home of her old and dearly beloved pupil, Mrs. Lila Willard Winn, she exclaimed, "Oh, I am so sick." She went at once to her room, was assisted to bed, and never left it again. This was November 23. In one week she had gone to her heavenly home. Her disease was pronounced congestion of the liver by the skilled physician, Dr. Miller, who arrived after her death, but heard all the symptoms described by Mr. and Mrs. Winn, who have had much experience in sickness; there being none but native physicians within a long distance, Dr. Miller was summoned from Kobe. He asserts that no treatment could have saved her life, that her disease was probably latent and augmented by her heavy cold. She knew from the first that her sickness was serious, and begged her good friends to save her life, but on the day of her death she grew very peaceful and reconciled, and said, "I want to go." She died a few minutes before seven o'clock in the evening, and so quiet and calm was the ending that those around the bed scarcely knew when the last breath was drawn. The body was carefully enbalmed. The funeral services at Kanazawa occurred December 4, and were spoken in both the English and Japanese tongues. Her body was borne on the shoulders of men, led by her devoted friend, Sho Nemoto, to the nearest railway station, one hundred miles away, whence it was shipped to Tokio for a service on the tenth ultimo. About the middle of January, when the body will have arrived in Chicago, also full particulars of the Tokio funeral, we will issue a handsome memorial supplement to THE UNION SIGNAL. "She is a self-immolated martyr to the cause of Christian temperance in Japan and the world," writes a high Japanese official.

1893.

BY WARNER SNOAD.

Wave back past troubles! let the Old Year go,
With scant and curt regrets—'tis ever so.

As roses faded, as the lost west wind,
The empty dreams—his farewell leaves behind.

Turn to the threshold! greet the blithe New Year
With hearty welcome and with glad good cheer.

Strong as a giant, with a magic staff—
His goblet, fain with eager lips we'd quaff;

The golden visions on his nod which wait,
Must needs be benisons for us from fate.

Yet when the New Year fades, our lives will be
One milestone nearer to eternity!

Lit by that knowledge—out of God's good store,
Make this year holier than all years before.

London, Eng.

HOLIDAYS AND HOLY DAYS.

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

(Concluded.)

Grumbling, unwilling, yet overpowered by the action the silent woman's will, he turned about and went back at Christmas morning through the creaking snow. He d come up slowly and his bells had only tinkled now d then—now he drove swiftly and they jingled and rat-d—those merry Christmas bells. The icy drops on the der twiglets glistened like jewels in the sun. The ys with rosy cheeks and merry smiles ran with their ds and fastened on behind. Their merry laughter and outs sounded to her like something far away. She met leigh laden with young people sitting in the midst of en Christmas boughs. They had been to the forest ting the Christmas trees for the homes of the children d for the decoration of the church. They were merry d bright. They were getting a foretaste of the Christ-as joy. She looked at them scarcely comprehending at it all meant. Christmas was before them. It had me to an end for her.

And it had come to an end once for all. The heart to y again was taken out of her. Since that morning there d been only the torpor, the hard work and the bitter ars. The shut up life made no new friends, but the heery little editor who had visited the hospital in that wful time of fever and delirium and there had found her, ould not be treated like a stranger and so had come to e almost the only friend of Sarah Walton's lonely life. The little chair in the corner of the editorial sanctum was he only spot outside of her home where the dressmaker as at ease. Here she read the latest books. Here she ometimes was persuaded to share the noonday cup of chocolate, made by no skillful fingers, over the editor's fire. Here it was that the story of the mother and the homestead, and the mortgage and the fire had been told, one night, when the day's work was done and there was only the firelight to keep the shadows out of the room.

Here, too, it was that the editor's words at the opening of this sketch were said, and after the white-faced woman had gone out into the crowds that filled Tremont street, eager with their Christmas buying, the little editor sat thinking.

"I ought to have labored with her perhaps," she said. "I ought to have told her that it did not matter so very much whether we ourselves had Christmas joys if only we made other hearts happy, and helped them to the sight of Him whose precious birthday is so dear to us all. Not only because of what He gave us in giving Himself, but because it gives us the chance to do something for Him through what we do for poor, sorrowing people. All that is the dear Lord's truth and perhaps I ought to have talked to her about it, but it seemed a little preachy, as it went through my head. All I could do was just to put my arm around her and sit quiet with her and look into the fire. Poor, dear soul; if only she might learn what real Christmas means, she would lose all sense of loss in her joy at what she might be able to give. But I do not know any way to open her eyes, except to give her a glad Christmas of her own and show her that somebody loves her enough to be sorry that she had missed the gladness of all these years."

And so the thoughts ran on. But before another Christmas came around these thoughts had crystallized into a wonderful work and that work is the sequel of this story.

A company of young girls numbering sixty, many of whom were Y's and all of whom were Daughters of the King, wearied of the pin-cushion piety that kept them making fancy articles worth ten cents for which they beguiled other people to give fifty, and using the fifty cents in indiscriminate almsgiving and sentimental pauperizing of the poor. They had tried this way because one of the principles of the order to which they belonged was that they should try various ways of making life brighter for other people until through their trying should come wisdom and experience that would show them how to help wisely and well. In this frame, dissatisfied with themselves and with the work that expended their forces without helping the world to be better, they called a conference and invited the editor and she told them the Christmas story.

They set themselves to work to create a Christmas home. The woman with the thin lips and the pale blue eyes who had seen her Christmas hope in ashes told the editor one day that "she did not care what became of the old lot where the homestead stood." "All right," says the editor, "deed it to me then." And on that spot arose another home full of all simplicity and of the sweetness of orderly quiet, and the girls furnished the house, and they went out from Boston for a grand frolic a week before Christmas. They got old John to light the fires again, and they put a Christmas tree in the parlor, and they made little gifts, each one of them, for two rooms, plain yet dainty, for which they had a special use. They loaded the Christmas tree with toys for all the poor children of the town, and then remembering that the little woman who was to find her first Christmas there liked to be alone, they went away and left the editor and her friend to make a Christmas journey.

"You need not object," says the editor, "I have my heart set on it, and I am going to have you go up into the country with me and spend the holiday. I am going right up near your old home, and you shall say to me that you never had so happy a time before."

"But I cannot go there, I cannot bear it."

"That is something that you must get over," said the little editor, who, being much younger, could afford to treat her friend maternally. "Now do not say another word about it, but just give yourself to me for that day."

And so the two went up together, and the boy with the same old vehicle, and we suspect the same old muffler tied down over his ears, drove the two women where he had driven one two years before.

The Christmas morning was as fair as it had been that other radiant day. The ride was almost a silent one, only under the buffalo robe a strong, warm hand held tightly another that was very thin and cold. And thus the horses came again to the top of the hill and the smoke curled again up through the elm trees, and the pale lips drew themselves into a tight line to hold back a bitter, choking something in the throat. And still they went on and stopped at the new house behind the elms, where, during all that winter day the dressmaker was left to be, as much as ever she would, alone. The little editor let her wander unnoticed through the rooms where not only the warmth of the firelight, but the glow of love had made Christmas for her, the tired old soul, which softened and melted until the eyes opened to see and the heart to feel the love of the Giver in this marvelous Christmas gift.

"It is all so beautiful! it is all so wonderful!" she said, as the two friends sat in the twilight, "but of course it cannot be for me."

"Yes, it is for you, every bit, first and foremost for you, but it is to be in the years to come some blessing to other people, too. Just how the blessing is to come is for you to say, and for you to give. The place is God's Christmas gift to you. It is a spot where those of us who have learned to love you and my dear circle of girls may come sometimes for a frolic or for a rest. The home is yours. You are its mistress, we, when we come, and all the rest who come, are just your guests."

And three years have gone by since that Christmas home was opened, and there each year its mistress has been its hostess, and the guests with which the place has been kept filled, have been God's suffering ones and poor. The wearied women who have known no vacation, summer or winter, come here for summer rest. The convalescents from hospitals near and far come here for their final recuperation. The Home sends the worn-out mothers from the farm-houses back refreshed to their kitchens, and the shop girls to the counters, and the woman who "cuts and fits" goes back with the needles all extracted from the pin-cushion of her soul, to look for good and not evil in her human customers' ways.

The pen-people, too, have their own corner in the Christmas Home, and many bright thoughts have been penned, and many a message that has strengthened these weary workers has been written on the garden seat under those spreading elms.

The world is full of lonely and weary women to whom no holidays have ever come, but the world is becoming fuller and fuller of those whose business it is to find Christ's ways of showing "good-will to men," and so making the holidays of our human life into the holy days of God.

New York City.

THE LATE ELECTION.

The Votes are Counted—What Next?

BY NEAL DOW.

The votes have been counted; the result is known; the balance sheet is made up; the loss and gain have been ascertained. Prohibition has lost nothing; a great many ballots have been thrown away, but not one has been lost of the party making war upon the saloons. We who are embarked in that great undertaking are sure to win. It is only a question of time. God is upon our side; we have only to do our best and patiently to wait His pleasure. What next?

There was never a political party in this country from '75 to this day which had in view a purpose so important as ours to the wealth and power of the nation and to the prosperity and happiness of the people, to wit: The prohibition, the annihilation of the traffic in strong drink. I am confident that a large majority of our people desire that this dreadful trade shall not be permitted to spread broadcast over the country poverty, pauperism and crime, with all the horrors coming from them; ignorance, brutality, ruffianism and degradation, with the certain result that our institutions will be overthrown by it, as Lord Macaulay confidently predicted that they must be, and some strong hand would be demanded to protect society from the brutal domination of the mob.

The party that saved the nation from annihilation in the sixties has been put out of power in the government, and the party that sought to destroy it has been put into its place by a very large majority of the popular vote. I do not care to consider the probable causes of this extraordinary decision of the people, nor of the methods adopted on the one side to obtain success and on the other to retain power. It is sufficient for us Prohibitionists to know that the Republican party has suffered a tremendous defeat, an event of surpassing importance to us who have devoted our lives to the great work of protecting our people from the infinite mischief of the saloons, and have conscientiously believed that we could never win with that great political organization standing firmly between us and our purpose. It has been well known for some years to all who are well informed as to the politics of the country that success to the Republican party was impossible without the coöperation of the rum vote, and with that view the party has employed all possible means to win the confidence and cordial support of that great power. In 1888 it won by the help of the saloons and slums of New York; in 1892 it has lost by the abandonment of its allies.

The Republican party was great and strong in Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut; there was prohibition in those states; the Republican party repealed that law, substituting license for it, and all the world knows now how the party stands there. In many other states it also repealed prohibition. The Republican party was organized as a protest against slavery because it was inconsistent with the general good and with the rights of mankind. The party was made up of the better part of the people of all parties who wished in a practical way to defend the right and oppose the wrong in the matter of American slavery. The liquor traffic inflicts far more mischief upon the nation, and far more misery upon the people than slavery ever did. The Republican party recognized that fact and assumed the rôle of opposition to the saloon as well as opposition to slavery. That great Republican paper, the New York Tribune, was from the birth of the policy of prohibition its ablest and most earnest friend and advocate. How is it now? All that is changed. The relation of the Democratic party to the grog-shops is not more intimate, cordial and irrevocable, and with everything bad associated with that devilish institution than the Republican party's now is. The Democratic party and the saloon by natural affiliation were drawn together by mutual attraction. The Republican party as a matter of deliberate calculation of party interest, sought and effected an alliance with the great rum power as a matter of party policy, thus sacrificing the dearest and most important national interest to the hope of mere party success. I do not believe that the latter elements of the Republican party can be permanently held to support a policy which tramples under foot the law of God. The Republican party deliberately assumed the rôle of supporter and defender of the grog-shop. It hoped to win votes in that way, but its expectations have not been realized; it has failed, and finds it impossible to withdraw, even if it wishes to do so, from its foul alliance with the liquor traffic which inflicts far more mischief upon the nation, and far more misery upon the people than all other sources of evil combined. I have said that the association of the Republican party with the saloon was a matter of deliberate calculation.

In 1888 I was a guest of a friend in Albany, N. Y., and was called upon by a gentleman standing high in the councils of the Republican party. In course of conversation he said an arrangement had been made with the liquor interest by the Republican party by which the full support of the party should be given to the saloons in exchange for the liquor vote.

I said I was not prepared to accept that, because the Republican party was largely made up of the education, culture, refinement, intelligence, virtue and piety of the people. The leaders must see that these elements of the party could not long be held to support such a policy.

He replied that however strange and improbable such a statement might appear, it was nevertheless true within his personal knowledge, and it was for that reason that he had withdrawn from the party.

In a short time after that conversation an editorial appeared in the leading Republican journal of the country entitled, "Force, No Remedy," which was as vicious and illogical an attack on prohibition as I had ever seen in any pronounced advocate of the rum interest. I saw then that my informant's statement to me was true. Since then the policy of the party has been steadily and uniformly in harmony with a policy of protection and support of the saloon.

Now the Republican party is no longer in a position, nationally, to be of material help to its friends, the rum-sellers; but in the states where it continues to be dominant, we shall see unmistakable proof that it is yet true to its alliance with the grog-shop. Every intelligent man, then, can see that the Prohibitionists are quite right in their belief that the saloons can never be suppressed in the lifetime of the Republican party. This affiliation of the party with this sum of all villainies, the saloon, is as manifest in the states which it yet controls as it has been in New York, Michigan and Ohio.

I may properly say here, that from the day of its birth I had been one of its most enthusiastic and loyal adherents, up to the time when I became satisfied, beyond all possibility of doubt, that it was irrevocably committed to the support and defense of the liquor traffic. I am the same Republican now that I ever was, all but the rum. Heaven helping me, I will never, for any consideration, lend vote, voice or influence, however humble, in any direction, however remote or incidental, to the perpetuation of the saloon. Any one, it seems to me, who lends voice or vote in any manner to support it must be considered responsible for all the sin, shame and horror coming from it. The Republican party is laid up in dock now; can any honest man who believes the saloon to be the greatest curse of the time to our country and to our people, lend help of head or hand or vote to set it afloat again? If not,

WHAT THEN?

My view is that we keep up an active and continuous agitation of this whole temperance question, not forgetting the personal interests involved in the practice of entire abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, this point to be more generally dwelt upon and elaborated than has been our habit for the few past years. This can be done in entire harmony with a thorough exposition of the misery, wretchedness and ruin coming to the nation and to millions of people from the saloons, which can never be diminished except by the prohibition and suppression of the drink trade. We have four years now in which to do this work. We have a great many temperance papers published in all parts of the country, some of them conducted with great ability. These should be strongly supported as necessary to our success. We have a large corps of able advocates whose character and social position will insure for them a patient and respectful hearing. Let us keep them constantly in the field. In the earlier days of the prohibition agitation we had little or no direct help from women. Now all that is changed and our power and influence upon public opinion has been at least doubled by the accession to our fighting force of great numbers of them whose work on the platform and in the press is fully equal to the best that man can produce.

BUT THE IMPORTANT THING TO DO is to bring the churches face to face with their duty to God and their country in connection with the warfare now going on between temperance men and women and the devil's most powerful agent for evil now existing. I believe it is conceded on all hands that the vast influence of the churches has not been brought to bear against the liquor traffic, that greatest enemy of God and man. I do not suggest any reason for their attitude towards this great strife which they could by a word convert to a victory. It is enough that we now call loudly and persistently for their help; exhorting them, praying them to "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty."

We have among the churches many able men, thoroughly our friends in our warfare against the saloons, whose great ability has made them prominent throughout the country and everywhere among English-speaking peoples. These men would command the confidence and respect of all classes of people throughout the country, and by their help this work could be thoroughly accomplished; without it, the result might be doubtful. Early in the temperance agitation the Rev. Dr. John Marsh, of New York, and the Rev. Dr. Justin Edwards, of Massachusetts, and others, whose names do not occur to me, donated themselves to missionary work among the churches and the effect was very great. Dr. Edwards made one address in Portland upon the essential immorality of the liquor traffic. The effect of it was that every church member engaged in that business (and they were many) abandoned it immediately. I know that some excellent men believe the churches are now doing their share of this work. I offer two anecdotes here that express very clearly my view of it.

One day not long ago I met in the street one of our most prominent citizens, a church member without spot, a temperance man and Prohibitionist, a most influential citizen. He said:

"Mr. Dow, I am greatly disappointed that the temperance cause has made so little progress the last fifty years."

"Well, Mr. Blanc, don't you know the reason?"

"No, I cannot even guess what it is."

"It is this and only this, Mr. Blanc; when we have an out-and-out fight with the grog-shops, you, and such as you, are on their side."

He protested against this as not being the fact.

"Didn't you vote for Mr. Black for mayor at the last election?"

"Yes, but there was no rum in that."

"Why, Mr. Blanc, it was all rum; there was nothing in it but rum, though you did not know it, because you did not take the trouble to find out."

Two days after that I met an eminent D. D. in the street whom I knew very well, an admirable man, very prominent in Maine from his ability and personal influence, heartily a temperance man and enemy of the saloon. He stopped me and said, alluding to the late municipal election:

"Mr. Dow, it will take a very long time to put the saloons down, if you ever do, by the method you now adopt, carrying the matter to the ballot box."

"Yes, doctor, perhaps it may be so; but we shall keep on working and hoping. If it takes a long time to win, as you suggest, the reason, and only reason, is this; that you, and such as you, do not help. If you and such as you would help, we would win to morrow."

The good doctor didn't stop to say good-morning, but was off with a thought perhaps that had never occurred to him.

The Christian at Work, October 29, 1891, said:

"The liquor traffic exists in this country to-day only by the sufferance of the membership of the Christian churches. They are the masters of the situation so far as the abolition of the traffic is concerned. When they say 'Go,' and vote 'Go,' it will go."

The New York Independent, July 21, 1892, said:

"When the Christian papers of the whole country shall publish such vigorous denunciations of the crime of lynching as are found in The Christian Observer, of Louisville, Ky., this horrible practice will soon come to an end all over the country, for the Christian sentiment can dominate the nation."

Is all this true? If true, then failing to exert this great power, where lies the responsibility for the continuance of all the sin, shame, crime and horror of the liquor traffic?

Portland, Me.

LABOR AND THE DRINK QUESTION—CORRELATED REFORMS.

BY LADY HENRY SOMERSET.

(From address at National Convention, Denver.)

I feel that we, as a temperance body of women, dare not ignore one of the greatest questions that confronts us in this age, and because we are engaged in fighting a great evil, it should never for one moment cause us to shut our eyes or to close our ears to that which is also demanding the attention of every thinking man and woman.

This labor question to-day racks the old world and the new. It is with us a burning question, and I will go further and say that I know that in England the temperance cause will never triumph until we have faced these great difficulties side by side with it. We weaken no great question because we ally it to other questions that are equally true. We weaken never our position because we are facing all of the evils of our day, and I hold that only when the temperance cause shall build itself upon the true social foundations of a right and righteous government in all things, shall we ultimately succeed, and therefore, I am glad and thankful when these three great political movements, temperance, suffrage and the labor question go hand in hand.

I have the honor of being on the committee of the Woman's Trades Union of London, and therefore I have had some insight into the intricacies of this great and difficult labor movement. I am not prepared to give you all the pros and cons which meet us at every turn, but this I know, that until we as a great Christian nation face the thought that a fair day's work demands a fair wage, and that no accumulated riches make it possible for any man to grind down other men and women, so long shall we never occupy a true and real position.

I am sometimes amused when I take up the newspapers of this country, and I read their marvelous tales of the immense riches of the English aristocracy. I often feel that when I speak upon this labor question I may be somewhat misunderstood, for it may be hinted that I stand here as a capitalist to condemn other capitalists with regard to this labor movement, but I think that if you, in this great, prosperous country, had any idea of the difficulty that landowners in my country have to face, you would be greatly astonished. Land in England is now a drug in our market. It is impossible to sell vast tracts of estates which are only a burden to their owner; and I can tell you to-night, that often and often in the country districts I can point out to you, and on many of my own estates, land which is fetching only two dollars and a half per acre. You know nothing of this state of things in America, but in England the landowners at this moment occupy one of the most difficult positions that it is possible to imagine. But I hope and pray, believe and know, that out of this very evil good will come, and that these great estates that have been heaped together, field to field and acre to acre, will soon be a history of past days, and that by and by our fair land will be so equally divided that all shall be owners of the soil, and to that day I am looking as eagerly as any, and if I had it in my power to hasten it, believe me that nothing that can come to me through being an English landowner would prevent my hastening such a good and glad time.

We are dealing with this labor question in England in a very practical manner. I think that the women of the W. C. T. U. will admit that it is very rarely that your president and I disagree upon any question, but I will confide to you that there is one question upon which we are constantly disagreeing, and that is, that I claim that in fact our country is more democratic than yours. I claim that we are more democratic, because I maintain that our people have more voice in the government of the land than you have.

If our government pass a measure which our people disapprove of, have we to wait four years to get rid of the government? Certainly not. They are out in two months. And I suppose there is not a man or a woman here who does not fully understand what that must mean, and how every politician is straining and striving to represent the wishes of the people that can set him aside so easily. The last election in England is perhaps the best object lesson of this that we have ever heard of. We have not gone through such a great political crisis within the last forty years as this last election. Never, I must maintain, have such great issues been in the balance, and never in the history of all our country has woman played so prominent a part in the political struggle.

When Mr. Gladstone brought forward what is called the Newcastle program, that is to say, the program which he was to present to the country, and to which he first gave utterance at Newcastle, he for the first time incorporated in that political utterance the plank of temperance reform, and why did he do so? Have we looked upon Mr. Gladstone—whom I for one love and admire as loyally as any woman in England—have we looked upon Mr. Gladstone as a great temperance reformer? Certainly not. Mr. Gladstone has been eloquent upon many reforms, but upon the temperance question he has been universally silent. Mr. Gladstone, sometime back, gave us a bill that he called the Grocers' Licensing Bill, which I maintain has done more to ruin the women of England than any other bill that has ever been passed through the House of Commons. He empowered grocers at that time to sell wine and beers, and the women of England who up to then were a comparatively sober people, were thus enabled to procure, in a quiet, respectable way, that which has been until this present day, their ruin; and thousands of women have bought drink of their grocers, and had it placed on the family bill as tea and coffee, who would never have been seen inside a saloon. But in spite of Mr. Gladstone's delinquency on all these questions, in spite of the many times in which he has tripped on temperance reform, Mr. Gladstone came out and pronounced himself strongly in favor of all that could tend to reform upon this great subject. You know that whenever people do better, we always forgive them the past, and when Mr. Gladstone, at this last election, came out in this character, we looked upon it very much as the judge did when the Irish jury came forward and said, "My Lord, we wish to say that we find that the man who stole the horse is not guilty."

The reason that temperance reform was incorporated in the Liberal program was not because the hearts of those Liberal leaders were bursting with a great desire to liberate England from her greatest evil. I am an optimist, but I am not such an optimist as that. The reason that they incorporated that plank was because public opinion would not let them do otherwise; because the hearts of the working classes were set upon reform; because all over the land deputations of working men met the candidates for election, and insisted that they should pledge themselves to this reform, and that was the reason we obtained it. The measure to which they are pledged is one which we believe will eventually get prohibition for England. We have, as you know, no divided governments; we have not the advantages of being able to have samples of legislation. We are obliged to pass a law which shall be so framed that it shall affect every part of our country at the same time, but we are bringing forward a bill which shall grant the privilege to districts to have prohibition where they so desire it.

When I want to feel that I am really braced up, that this great fight is going forward, that we have victory before us, I always buy the papers of the liquor dealers, and when I see the complimentary tones in which they speak of the temperance reformers, and especially of your humble servant, to whom they did the honor of giving the name, the "Modern Joan of Arc," I feel my spirits rise visibly, and as I often travel long distances to speak at those different political meetings, I am accustomed to pore over those papers in order to get inspiration for the evening. I never am more glad than when we get the goats and the sheep well separated, for I believe that the only time when right is likely to triumph is when we have so weeded our political parties that we are perfectly, clearly sure on which side we are likely to find those whom we are interested in placing.

Liberal women at our great annual convention, in deference to Mr. Gladstone's age, in deference to all that he has been as a leader to the English people, agreed that we would not make woman's suffrage a test question at the next election. In spite of this when the discussion came up before the House of Commons, the speeches were such as would gladden the hearts of all the women here present. The matter was no longer treated as a question to be ridiculed and scoffed at. It was treated as one of the most serious questions of the day, and on either side magnificent speeches were made in favor of giving women the vote. But that discussion was one that was memorable in the history of this great movement, and when a division was taken and only twenty-two votes were recorded against granting woman's suffrage, I consider that we are not far off from having gained a great victory.

It is right that England should lead the way upon such a question as that. It is right that the mother should show the daughter what is the right and the best way to act in such a great and grand crisis, and I sincerely trust that the time may come when I shall be able to announce to an American audience that the women of England have the full ballot. It is needed in this land. It is needed far more in my own. In a nation in which one of the principal papers that has hitherto supported the liquor traffic can bring out a series of articles called, "England's Shame," in which the drunkenness of English women is set out in a manner that would break the heart of almost every reader, it is time that the women of my land should rise up and say, "We will have placed in our hands that which can protect us from this ever encroaching evil. We will have the power granted to us to say that our daughters shall be kept in the purity and the bloom of their maidenhood; that our young men shall be sent out safe from the toil and the snare that has dragged them down to perdition so long." It is time that the women of the nation should go out beyond the garden gate, and should be able with the encircling love to be all that their hearts long to be to those whom they have given to this world; that they should be allowed to protect those children for whom they have gone into the great Gethsemane of pain, and whom they have given to be men and women for the nation.

We are attempting in England to correlate these great questions of labor reform and of the drink curse. We are weighted down by poverty of which you know nothing; we who have so many men out of employ; we who have so many women working from eight in the morning until eight at night for the pittance of a dollar and twenty-five cents a week; we who know what it is when a great jam factory went out on a strike because the women had to work seven, eight and ten hours a day, few of them earning more than two dollars a week; we know what these things are when in six hours after they went out on the strike, that jam factory was once more filled with hands; we know what over-population means. We know what these terrible problems are which face us on all sides; but in the midst of all we say that the greatest tyrant in our free land is undoubtedly the liquor traffic. What wonder then that our hearts rise in hope when the women of England are so facing this question that at our last convention we passed the strongest possible resolutions in favor of prohibition and temperance reform.

These great causes can only rest upon a righteous foundation. We hear men say, "Why should women mix themselves in politics?" I thank God that I believe there is no nation under heaven where the women are so keenly interested in politics as the English nation, and it is because they have realized that politics is only those larger questions that affect the whole world outside the four walls of home, and that if this boasted home is to be real and true and dear to women's hearts, it is because the world is her family and every suffering child her own.

"God is a good worker, but He loves to be helped," runs the Basque proverb.

PURITY IN LITERATURE AND ART.

BY ANTHONY COMSTOCK.
Secretary of New York Society for Prevention of Vice.

At the Centennial in 1876 there was displayed a master work of art in the art gallery, which represented Rizpah defending the dead bodies of Saul's seven sons. As I remember this picture, Rizpah stood before the seven gallows upon which were suspended these seven sons of Saul, with disheveled locks floating in the wind, her right hand raised with a bludgeon in its grasp. With a look of grand fortitude and determination she is pictured beating back the birds of prey by day and the beasts of prey by night, in order to prevent the mutilation of these dead bodies. This picture to my mind is typical of the noble women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with this exception, they stand not in defence of the dead but for the living.

Man's greed has made it necessary for our mothers, our wives and our sisters to come from the sanctity of home, to beat back the worse than beasts of prey by night and birds of prey by day from destroying the youth and beauty of this land. In other words, this band of noble women stands for principles that are high as heaven and as well established as the everlasting hills. The encroachments of the great crime breeders, intemperance, gambling and evil reading, vices which are operated for personal gain by a few unscrupulous men and women, as compared with the multitude of victims of their greed, have rendered it necessary that there should be a home defence. As I understand the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, it is a work of prevention as well as a work of healing. It is a work of sympathy as well as a work of uplifting. It is a grand and magnificent administration of love in the Master's name—a helping hand reached out to the tempted, to the stricken, to the unfortunate.

To prevent the seed sowing of evil is to prevent a harvest of corruption. While you are careful as to what shall go through the mouth to burn up nerve and tissue, do not forget that through the eye and the ear there is constantly carried into memory's store-house—the chamber of imagery in the heart of our boys and girls—that which is to remain to exert a lasting and often pernicious influence upon their future lives. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

The words of the prophet Jeremiah in his lamentation over the sins of the Jews are fitting words to be respoken concerning the terrors that assail mankind to-day: "Yet, hear the word of the Lord, oh, ye women, and let your ear receive the word of his mouth, and teach your daughters wailing and every one her neighbor lamentation." "For death is come up into our windows and is entered into our palaces to cut off the children from without and our young men from the streets."

After nearly twenty-one years' personal effort and contact, I might say hand-to hand conflict with the evils that assail the youth of this nation, I am firmly convinced that there is nothing so much to be dreaded in the home, in society, in church or in state, as the enervating, degrading influences that are thrown upon the imagination of our youth through the devil's printing press. Evil thoughts are an introduction to every debasing practice, whether it be intemperance, gambling or the grosser crimes that follow in their wake, and associated with, indeed, are part and lot of the two first named.

The W. C. T. U. can do what no one else can do in this department of work. It can educate the mothers and impress upon them the necessity of watchfulness over the minds and hearts of their children. Parents need to keep a surveillance over the influences that dominate the minds of their children. Evil thoughts are the precursors of evil deeds. From the seed-sowing of vice is gathered the harvest of crime. Combine intemperance with evil reading, and it is an influence more to be dreaded than the microbes of smallpox, scarlet fever or Asiatic cholera.

I would suggest first that great care should be taken by each of the superintendents to ascertain and secure (if they have not already) suitable laws in each state. I then would recommend that these laws be rigidly enforced. To this end it requires a healthy public sentiment, a quickening of the public conscience, an arousing of chivalry on behalf of our boys and girls.

We must throw around the youth of this nation a greater defence while they are in a helpless and immature condition, or the future of this nation must suffer in consequence of our neglect. In the name of the Master I plead for the young men and maidens of the nation. Let each member of the W. C. T. U. feel that the individual, personal responsibility of saving the twenty millions of children in this country rests upon her. Feeling this responsibility, let all gird on the whole armor of faith and prayer, and if they cannot do all that they would like, let them be faithful in little things, each day doing with their might whatsoever their hands find to do, as unto God and not unto men.

New York City.

THE PERSONAL EQUATION—STIMULATION OF WILL.

BY GEORGE M. HAMMELL.

The drink-habit is symptomatic of will paralysis; that is to say, of the decadence of supreme moral functions. It is an effect of precedent lapse of volitional energy, an internal surrender to evil, a degradation of moral ideals. For, even if it be granted that the appetite for intoxicants has been transmitted according to the immutable laws that govern the inter-relations of body and spirit, and that its unfortunate inheritor has the odds against him in the battle of life, the fact stands, however we may account for it, that the drunkard's will-power is impaired. Of course, he still possesses remains of pluck, and it is yet possible for him, knowing his weakness, to put himself under the care and control of others stronger than himself, who can protect him against malign influences, or stir him to self-respect and strenuous endeavor of self-control.

An incident in my pastoral life illustrates this. Returning from the "city" to my home in the suburbs, I saw, as I entered the "dummy," a man, evidently drunk, sitting close to the end of the car.

"What's the matter?" I asked.

"Been off!" was the reply.

"What do you mean by that?" I continued.

"Well, I've been drunk!"

"That's bad," I ventured to remark.

"Yes, I know it; but I can't help it. I've signed the pledge. I've prayed over it. My wife, as good a woman as ever lived, has prayed for me, and on her knees has begged me not to do it."

"Well," said I, "suppose that I should declare that you haven't sufficient will power to control yourself; that you can't help getting drunk! what would you say?"

For a moment he sat in silence, and then exclaimed, "I believe I can!

"Give me your hand on that," I said, and he pledged himself then and there to totally abstain, henceforth, from the use of intoxicants.

I have never seen him since, and know nothing of his history; but, partially intoxicated as he was that evening, he had sense enough to see that the whole question of his conduct of life was a question of will; and that, though he condoned his own offences, he could not justify his own plea, when formulated as an accusation.

Under the stimulus of an appeal to that latent element of free-will which constituted him a man, and not an automaton, he asserted his moral potency and the possibility of a permanent self-control. He had been confronted by a crisis; he had suddenly had a vision of the Ideal, and he had judged himself by the invariable standards of conscience. He had seen himself as he was—as he might have been, as he might become. A "chance" as his meeting the preacher-passenger appeared to be, contained the germ of a change of purpose. His touch with another man had made, for the time, at least, another man of him.

Malvern Place, Cincinnati, O.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM MISS WILLARD.

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I cannot tell you with what a sense of loss some of us are going forward with our inevitable daily routine amid the wearisome jar of this vast metropolis. The past year has witnessed greater bereavements in our own heart-circles, our homes and our blessed circle of comradeship than any other since we clasped hands in the holy war. It seems incredible when one looks down the list of the Illinois W. C. T. U. and finds two hundred and fifty names of local workers who have passed away this year, and then remembers that from Illinois has gone a household saint, beloved throughout the white-ribbon army, a gracious and gifted young editor, and now the veteran general, tried and true, who presided so long and faithfully over the destinies of our official organ.

Both our editors whom we have lost were natives of the "Prairie State"; they knew its broad prairies and deep, bright sky; they were a part of its brave, kindly civilization; they were educated in its schools, and had thoroughly imbibed its fearless and progressive spirit. It was Miss West who first named her younger coadjutor, Miss Ames, for the position for which she proved so adequate and which she adorned by her beautiful gifts and character. We all know what a severe stroke it was to Miss West when this strong, helpful ally was stricken by her side. So many of Miss West's near kindred have departed within two or three years that it seemed as if this last bereavement was more than she could bear and continue to carry the heavy burdens of her daily round of editorial duty. Her friends and associates at Headquarters felt that it was positively essential that she should have change of scene and occupation.

She concurred in this view and went to California in January, 1892, but a few weeks after the death of Miss Ames. In the quiet and peace of a beautiful home there, to which she had often been invited by friends who were as near to her as her own country, Miss West recovered her physical tone and, with that indomitable spirit known by all who knew her well, she resumed white-ribbon work by magnifying her office as superintendent of the school of methods, through which we endeavor to teach our principles and plans to the local workers everywhere. She seemed most happy, and was, as always, most successful.

The trip to Japan was a spontaneous thought, which seemed to come at the same time almost to her and to her associates at home. I think our letters crossed hers expressing willingness to go and ours asking if she would undertake the embassy. We had often talked of it, and Miss West had a fervent missionary spirit; indeed, she had been a leader in the foreign missionary society of her own church. I received bright and cheering letters from her, written in Oregon on the eve of her departure and a touching acknowledgment of a little book sent her as a souvenir of my blessed mother, who loved her, and to whom, especially after the death of her own dear mother, she was devotedly attached. I had hoped to send these letters for publication in THE UNION SIGNAL, but left them in America that extracts might be made for the memorial volume soon to be issued concerning "Saint Courageous."

We were at a loss to know how it came about that this Greatheart of reform, who went to a far country with health restored and full of enthusiasm for the work to which she had long looked forward, came to her death so suddenly, and I am not apprised of the reason—it takes so long to hear, even in these days of "rapid transit," but a letter dated about six weeks later than the letter of Miss West may help us to a partial explanation.

Our friend, Mr. Sho Nemoto, to whom Miss West went, is a graduate of the University of Vermont, an accomplished Christian gentleman, whose home and heart are open to our white-ribbon workers. He wrote to our Headquarters that "there had been nothing to equal Miss West's reception since the days of Grant Ulysses," and our good friends across the sea, without the slightest wrong intention, took up the work so heartily that we may infer that Miss West in that new climate, found herself physically unequal to the exigencies of the situation.

3 KOTOHIRA S., TOKIO, JAPAN,
October 29, 1892.

DEAR MADAM:—Miss West is working very hard; the program for her we made was one lecture a day, but after Miss West reached Tokio many societies and people, publicly and personally, ask her to speak in meetings. Hence, Miss West is giving lectures two or three times a day. We do not like to ask her so much every day, but cannot help, as the matters became so. She will be here from the 17th of October till the 7th of November. Pray for us for this great movement. Miss West will work in Japan till the 29th of December. Invitations come from many places in the Empire, so she has no time to go to China.

Yesterday afternoon from 3 to 5 Miss West spoke at the University Lecture Hall, which was full of audience. In the evening, from 6:30 p. m. till 9:30 she spoke again at Friends' Chapel, where we found many who stood out of the door. To-day Miss West will have three meetings. In the morning and afternoon she will be at the Ladies' Missionary meetings, and in the evening will speak at the P. church, Pukiji.

To-morrow will be Sunday and she will have mass-meeting at the Presbyterian church for pastors and Christian workers. I trust temperance work will be in favor by Christians hereafter more effectually.

Next Monday we shall have the garden party. I hope Miss West will enjoy to take fresh air in the garden possessed by the war department.

Miss West will start for the southwestern provinces: November 9, Shiguoka; 16, Nagoya; 12, Yotekaichi; 14, Kanagama; 27, Kioto; 29, Osaka; December 2, Kobe; 4, Nagasaki; 23 to 29 Yokohama and Tokio again.

Expect to sail for San Francisco on the 29th of December; if Miss West will not stay in Honolulu she will reach the Golden Harbor on the 12th of January, 1893. This time her full power is so richly given to the Eye of the Eastern Continent, so all parts of the East will be lighted by the work you represented.

The work is indeed successful, as Tokio W. C. T. U. will next Monday newly adopt rules which will make the union real and powerful in the future work. This is the great result we expected. I hope and pray that Tokio women will be one in the spirit of good work and love, so they may work for temperance cause harmoniously. This movement is just prevailing by Miss West's work. So I wish you to tell our dear president, Miss Willard, about this good news that comes up by her prayer "For God and Home and Every Land." I wish you to convey this news to THE UNION SIGNAL, Miss West is well and happy.

Yours, SHO NEMOTO.

It is so everywhere, the rising tide of the world's greatest reform threatens to draw in its leaders and its rank and file to premature weariness, disease and death. We grieve over our Mary Allen West because it seems so pitiful that she should die so far from home, "a stranger in a strange land," but as the soldier said on the eve of a battle for his country's freedom:

"Grim death or soon or late awaits us all;
To fight in freedom's cause is something gained,
And nothing lost to fall."

Our brave general has fallen at her post with her face to the foe; her death renders the soil of Japan forever sacred to all white-ribboners, and the fragrance of her memory gilds that far distant country with a perpetual charm. Many shall follow in her footsteps, and shall linger beside her earthly resting-place, while their chastened spirits shall aspire to those heights of devotion which her footsteps trod in security and strength. Greatly will she be missed by our army of readers, who had learned to know her style and to admire her wide, free outlook on all the reforms of the day, for we had no woman in our ranks whose habit of mind and heart were more truly hospitable. Tenderly will her name be cherished in ten thousand homes where little children receive "care and culture" and have been helped by the book she wrote for mothers, who had herself a mother-heart, and whose ministrations to her army of pupils so long as she was a teacher and superintendent of county schools, were the fit preparation for the wider work as an author, an editor, a temperance organizer, a reformer and philanthropist. Somehow, "I cannot make her dead," who was so very much alive, and I prefer to think that even as these lines of affectionate recognition and remembrance are penned here, her released and glorified spirit may be cognizant of the work-a-day ways of the comrades with whom she kept step for eighteen hallowed years of our white ribbon pilgrimage.

God grant that we may be more diligent and faithful because she was so faithful and so diligent, and that we may go forward with the same sunshine on our faces that now glorifies her own from the heavenly heights that command the world that is, and that better world that is to come.

Believe me, yours in this faith,

Frances E. Willard

London, December 7, 1892.

WORK IN JAPAN.

(Continued from last week.)

DEAR UNION SIGNAL:—I am sure all readers of THE UNION SIGNAL to whom his name is so familiar will be glad, as I was, to know more of the history of Mr. Nemoto. He was a retainer of Prince Tokugawa, one of the mightiest of the Daimios, of the same house as the reigning Shogon at the time of the revolution which resulted in the deposition of the Shogon and confiscation of the property of the Daimios. After this event, Mr. Nemoto, then not much more than a lad, was employed in the Yokohama post-office where he learned a slight knowledge of English. With this came, as usual in Japan, a desire to visit America and learn more. He went to California, spent two years studying in Oakland public schools, then four in Hopkins Academy from which he graduated.

These six years he supported himself by work outside of school hours. Now, seeing the promise there was in him, kind friends became interested in having him take a full college course, for which he had an intense desire. Among these was Mr. Parmalee Billings, then connected with western railroads, but residing in New England. Through his influence and by his aid Mr. Nemoto went through the University of Vermont. At the time of his graduation his old lord, Prince Tokugawa, was Japanese minister at Rome; his wife was tired staying there, and knowing that Nemoto was soon to return to Japan, he wrote, asking him to come to Rome and escort the Princess and her attendant home. This he did, returning by the way of India, thus completing the world-round journey commenced eleven years before. He is now in government employ, in the foreign office, and a most devoted worker in everything for the good of Japan.

He has a lovely wife, graduate of one of the mission schools, and a bright baby boy named for Mr. Billings whom he holds in most grateful remembrance. At his death, Mr. Billings left Nemoto a sum of money which he devotes religiously to the publication of temperance literature under the title of "The Parmalee Billings Leaflets." Nor is he the only one who thanks Mr. Billings. A leading judge of the Hakkaido courts called on me to ask, among other things, that I would go and see Mrs. Billings and thank her for what she and her husband have done for Japan through their kindness to Mr. Nemoto, and to tell her its influence was felt all through Japan, as I am sure it is. How much better investment of money is this than to spend, as one woman did here last week, a greater sum for an inlaid cabinet?

If I am telling you more of the workers than of the work, it is partly that you may understand the latter better, but more that through personal acquaintance we may be closer united in this work and realize that though of different countries, we are all one in the Beloved and in labor for God and Home and Every Land.

Tokio is an immense city, with a population as great as that of Chicago, and even more divided into sections by innumerable canals and the three great walls and moats of the Imperial Palace. The committee who made out program for my work there wished me to speak in every section, and arranged for and advertised for this before my arrival. I was most anxious to have workers' meetings to train for work my specialty. It resulted in my doing both, with much unexpected work thrown in. During the three weeks of the Tokio campaign I held thirty meetings there and five in Yokohama; these, with innumerable consultations and necessary writing kept me so busy I had scarcely time to eat. I never could have done the work if it had not been so thoroughly planned, and every assistance rendered by the local committee, of which Mr. Nemoto was chairman, Mr. Ando, Mrs. Yajama and other efficient ladies and gentlemen members.

Mrs. Yajama, whose name stands in our directory as president of Japan, is a remarkable woman. Past middle age, she was in active life during the revolution and several of her family being prominent actors therein, she too, took an active part. She is now a widow and the Japanese head of the Presbyterian Girls' School of Tokio. By Japanese law, all schools must be nominally in the hands of Japanese, so all have Japanese presidents. By virtue of this office, Mrs. Yajama presides over the deliberations of the board of trustees, composed of foreign ladies and gentlemen, and does it with acceptance and dignity. She presided over the majority of my meetings in Tokio, and in every way proved most efficient. But she does not speak English, nor do any of the officers of the Tokio Woman's Society, or the so-called Japan union. This shut them off so completely from knowledge of our work that during the years since Mrs. Leavitt organized them, they had gone off in many directions, modifying their constitution and the pledge itself till they no longer required total abstinence and so could not be considered a W. C. T. U. Then, divisions had arisen among them so that the hardest work I have had to do in Japan has been to reconcile these differences and reunite the factions on a true basis. This is now accomplished and steps are being taken for a real Japan W. C. T. U. composed of unions I may find, resurrect or form all over Japan.

The plan I have adopted in order to avoid the rock on which the former union split is to have for the National union, and so far as possible for all local unions, an English-speaking Japanese president, and a Japanese foreign president, that thus communication may be kept open with the World's Union. A national convention of all temperance societies in Japan, men and women, is to be held in Tokio December 17, 18 and 19, at which time I hope the organization of the national union may be consummated.

Most unexpectedly I found myself confronted by the high license fallacy, the temperance societies having sent in a petition to the last Diet asking for it. All the leaders in Yokohama and Tokio, even Mr. Nemoto, believed it the best thing to do, but they do not believe so any longer. Mr. Nemoto says that if I had not done anything else in Japan, converting them on this point is worth my coming here. The Hakkaido society never were caught in this trap.

Everywhere I urge petitioning Parliament for a scientific temperance instruction law, which they do not have, as I heard they had before coming here. The Hakkaido society has adopted this as a definite line of work, and at the December convention I trust it will be included in the plan of work for the Empire.

Another thing accomplished is systematizing the translation of literature, that one section may not duplicate the work of another in this line; arranging for translation of literature along the lines—evangelistic, purity, juvenile, mothers' meetings, railroads, and miscellaneous, and for a central depot of supplies at Tokio, from which societies all over the country can purchase literature. A beginning is also made in press work by the election of two editors, Japanese and English, to have oversight of this department and to keep the page full in the Scripture Union, offered us by Dr. Whitney, its editor.

Mr. Tsuda has translated the second book of the Pathfinder series, I have written the preface, and it is now in the hands of the printers. Photographs have been made of my charts (with which all sorts of audiences have been delighted) and doubtless will be used in magic lantern lectures, of which they are very fond. The great Petition has been translated and so vigorously circulated I hope to bring home thousands of Japanese names. We are also working up the children's pledge and expect to gladden Anna Gordon's heart with many links to her lovely chain.

I wish I could tell you of the beautiful children's work started in Yokohama by Miss Symons of the M. E. Mission who says she received inspiration thereto from the temperance lessons in Mrs. Meyer's Training School, and of many touching and encouraging incidents. But there is too much work to be done to tell about it now.

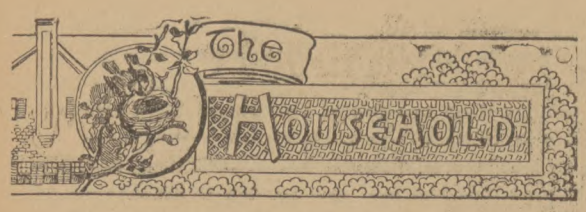
Besides the work laid out for me unexpected doors have opened, which all felt I must enter. I have spoken by unsolicited invitation before the Educational Association of Noble Ladies, Princess Mori, president, in the Peeresses' School, the lecture room of the Imperial University packed full of students, before the Red Cross Society of Tokio, and many other non-Christian associations that have never invited a foreigner to address them.

The Red Cross Society is the most aristocratic association in Japan, the Empress being nominal president and one of the imperial princesses presiding. The meeting was in the Red Cross Hospital, the finest institution of the kind I have ever seen, of whose board of directors Viscount Sano is chairman.

After the lecture, in which I brought in non-alcoholic medication, though I knew their drug-room was well stocked with alcoholics, the Princess, in behalf of the directors, conferred on me an honorary life-membership in the society, with its silver medal, an honor never bestowed upon an American before, "not even General Grant," they told me, nor on any foreigner but one Russian prince. This decoration has already brought me favors from Japanese officials and invitations to speak before the Red Cross Society of Kyoto, and the Medical College there.

MARY ALLEN WEST.

En route in Japan.



BE PATIENT WITH THE LIVING.

Sweet friend, when thou and I art gone
  Beyond earth's weary labor,
When small shall be our need of grace
  From comrade or from neighbor;
Passed all the strife, the toil, the care,
  And done with all the sighing—
What tender truth shall we have gained,
  Alas, by simply dying?

Then lips too chary of the praise
  Will tell our merits over,
And eyes too swift our faults to see
  Shall no defect discover;
Then hands that would not lift a stone
  When stones were thick to cumber
Our steep hill-path, will scatter flowers
  Above our pillowed slumber.

Sweet friend, perchance both you and I,
  Ere love is past forgiving,
Should take the earnest lesson home—
  Be patient with the living!
To-day's repressed rebuke may save
  Our blinding tears to-morrow;
Then, patience, e'en when keenest edge
  May whet a nameless sorrow.

'Tis easy to be gentle when
  Death-silence shames our clamor.
And easy to discern the best,
  Through memory's mystic glamor;
But wise it were for thee and me,
  Ere love is past forgiving,
To take the tender lesson home—
  Be patient with the living.

—Good Cheer.

TREASURES IN HEAVEN.

BY ADA M. MELVILLE.

It was the day after Christmas. Sitting opposite to each other, one morning, on a crowded street-car were two men. One was apparently not over thirty, but his face was pale, sad and fear haunted. His neighbor was far from young; the hoary crown of sixty years adorned his head. But his face—God bless it for its simple, honest gladness, born of a heart at one with its Maker and in love and charity with all the world. He was looking quietly and keenly about when his eyes met those of the young man who faced him. He started, glanced again, frowned, as if in perplexity, hesitated, and then with an outright laugh of happy recollection sprang forward, caught at a strap with one hand and brought the other down with playful force upon the young man's shoulder.

"Howdy, Art! Howdy? Don't recollect me, do you?"

"Art" stared at him a full half minute, then a bright look of recognition flashed across his face.

"Well, I declare! It's Mark Wilson, father's dear old friend. Where in the world did you come from? I am glad to see you. How do you do anyhow?"

It was an interesting little scene and every one in the car enjoyed it—the young man's hearty welcome and his friend's almost boyish delight at the meeting.

"It must be ten years since we last saw each other. I could not have been gladder to see any one than I am to see you, Mr. Wilson. Are you just the same as ever? Never get a bit discouraged? How are you so happy all the time?"

"Ah, I've got so much reason, Art. Why, the Lord is so good to me I can't help it! Are you discouraged?" looking with fatherly tenderness into the face of his young friend.

"I've a hard row to hoe. I've told no one, but I think I would tell you. It would be a relief."

"You may. But tell the Lord, first. Don't leave Him out. And where are you living? I want to see you in your home."

"Let me see you alone, first. Are you at a hotel? I will come there then and we will have a long talk. I am in deep trouble. I am so glad to see your bright face."

The younger man jumped off the car shortly after, and the other went on to his hotel. That night a letter was mailed addressed to a small country town. It read thus:

"DEAR WIFE:—Whom do you suppose I met to-day? Arthur Knowlton. He is a man now—our boy-friend has grown up. Do you remember the time his father and I were chums, both courting you at once? I always loved this boy. He looks like my old chum—your old sweet heart. There's something wrong with him; he says he is in trouble. Perhaps the Lord means me to help him. He has a wife and two little children."

The next evening Mark Wilson piled the coal high in the grate and pulled the chairs out of their unsociable rows, in an effort to make the room look more homelike for his expected guest.

"Ah, here you are, Art! This is a pleasure. There, take this chair. Can't say much for this room after the sitting-room at the farm. You haven't forgotten it, have you? Well, lad, and how have the years been? Tell me all about yourself."

Arthur Knowlton avoided the direct object of his visit for some time, but he evidently could not talk easily about other things; so pushing away his chair he began to pace the floor, saying hurriedly, "I may as well tell you the whole miserable story. I know I can trust you. You asked me a while ago if I am a Christian. I have just—a week ago—decided to live a Christian life, and that is the whole trouble."

"What? What? A Christian? Trouble?"

"I will explain. My wife became a Christian over a year ago. She has led me to her way of thinking. I have not been a good man. I smoked and drank. I gambled, ran in debt. I borrowed money—some would say it was borrowing. I am book-keeper and cashier, you know. I fixed it up so no one knew. Then—"

"Arthur!" The blue eyes, gentle enough usually, suddenly blazed beneath the crown of snowy hair. The kind face grew grieved and stern. "Do you mean you stole the money entrusted to your care?"

The young man winced as if a blow had been aimed at him.

"I meant to save up and put it back, and—"

"How long has this gone on, my son?"

"A year."

"You have taken—?"

"Nine hundred dollars in all."

There was a long silence. Arthur was the first to speak.

"Mr. Wilson—"

"Call me uncle, as you used to when you were little."

"Uncle—Uncle Mark, I must be a good man. I must give up these things that were spoiling my life. I must serve God. But—"

"But you must make that theft right. Oh, man, how could you?"

A dry sob was all the answer, then the recital went brokenly on.

"You see I loved my wife and couldn't bear to see her and the babies poor. But I loved wine and cards, too. My salary was not enough for all, and now—"

"Arthur, how much have you got toward making this right?"

"Not one cent. If I tell the firm I will lose my position. My character is ruined. My family—"

"My son, we must talk it over with the Lord."

What a prayer it was! The angels must have stopped their joyous songs to listen as the old saint communed with his most intimate Friend and presented the cause of the erring but repentant soul.

"And now, O Lord, we leave the matter in Thy hands. Come what will, this child of Thine will do right. He has put sin away from him forever. He is anxious to make amends. Do Thou take care of him, his precious wife and innocent children. Show us the way before us, oh, our Father, and to Thee we will give praise forever. Amen."

"My son, there is but one thing for you to do. In the morning we will go together to your employers and you will tell them the whole story. The consequences you must abide by."

"But I can't pay a cent."

"Confess the debt first. We will both keep praying. Why, lad, it will be the very best Christmas you have ever had, for you belong to Him now! You are all His now, aren't you?"

"Soul and body, Uncle Mark."

"Bless His name! He will help you. Obey Him, then trust Him."

The meeting the next morning was an unusual one, behind locked doors—the senior member of the firm, the hitherto trusted book-keeper, the white-haired old man.

"He is the son of my old friend—as honorable a Christian man as ever walked. The lad has just embraced his father's faith. That is how he comes to be here. Give him one more chance. He will serve God, hereafter, not men, and be the most trustworthy man in your house. Give him a chance—it's Christmas time—give the lad a chance, for Christ's dear sake," Uncle Mark pleaded.

And they did. He was allowed to retain his position. No one save the three present should know the facts. The money was to be replaced as fast as Arthur could save it.

"Does your wife know?" asked Mr. Wilson, as they walked away, both too deeply thankful for free expression in words.

"No. Ought she to know?" He leaned on his old friend now, and was eager for advice.

"You'd better tell her. I know it's hard. It'll be hard for her, too. But you must tell her."

"Come home with me. Come and help me just this once more. You will comfort her."

So they went to the pretty home and Mark Wilson met the fair young wife and tender little ones. The confession was made. Love was there, Christian love and Christian faith, and they stood the test.

"It must be paid, Arthur," were Jennie Knowlton's first words after the bitterest was over.

"I know it, but how? I have nothing laid by. My month's salary, even, is spent in advance. There are some smaller debts to be met, too."

"We must sell everything we possibly can spare, rent some cheap rooms, and—begin over."

She was a brave little woman, but it wasn't easy to "begin over" after five years of married life in which ease almost to the extent of luxury had been predominant.

"I can't see your home comforts sold, Jennie!"

"But you will, you must. What are these things," waving her hands toward handsome carpet, curtains, pictures and furniture, "compared to our honor as Christians?"

The old man left them then with tears in his eyes and broken words of prayer and benediction on his lips. On reaching his room he took a well-worn Bible from his valise, and turned the pages over while his face shone with a light unspeakable. He stopped at last where passages were heavily underscored, and read softly, his face still shining:

"Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt and where thieves do not break through and steal: for where your treasure is there will your heart be also."

He bowed his head over the open page for a time, and then, with the glow of rapture still unclouded began to write a letter—it grew to be a very long letter—to the faithful wife at home.

It lacked but two days to New Year. With feverish haste Jennie Knowlton had been busy and in the two large rooms down stairs were gathered all the salable articles that had adorned the pretty home. A placard "For Rent," hung near the front door. No one knew all that the plain piece of cardboard stood for, of heroic resolve and honest purpose. No New Year preparations were under way. "We will keep the season this time by prayer and thanksgiving" the wife had said.

New Year's eve came, and the plain supper was just over. The children were asleep. Outside, the streets were merry with the sound of sleighbells, but there were no outward manifestations of joy within the dismantled home—only deep devotion and peace as the result of righted wrongs.

The bell rang, followed by the opening of the door. It was Uncle Mark.

"I just thought I'd run in and say good-by. Wife and I have never spent the first day of the New Year apart yet and it's rather late to begin bad habits now. No, no, don't thank me—why, bless you, it was the Lord's doing! He always takes care of those who put their trust in Him."

They chatted on awhile longer, and then knelt for a last word of prayer together. Very tenderly the old saint committed them to the Master's care, and as he prayed, true joy throbbed in the chastened hearts.

"Good by! good-by! God bless and keep you both. Keep up a brave heart, Arthur. Be good to him, Jennie. Be good to each other. May you have a God-blessed day to-morrow. Good-by!"

He was gone, leaving in the hands that had so warmly clasped his, an envelope. They examined the contents together. Words failed them. There, in plain writing, which they could not dispute, was a receipt from Arthur Knowlton's employers in full for the nine hundred dollars, bearing the date January 1, 189,— and with it a check for one hundred dollars. A few lines accompanied the inclosures:

"Accept these as from the Lord. The silver and the gold are all His. May He make you rich in heavenly grace. MARK WILSON."

. . . . . .

They did not learn till years after that the dear old man had given up in that gift the dream of years. "When we have a thousand dollars laid by," he had said, "wife and I will rest from our labor." The sum had amounted to a little more than a thousand, but as he wrote his wife, "You and I are hearty yet. We have not many years ahead of us, and the young folks have the best of their lives. We will still have plenty left for a rainy day. I feel as if the Lord wants these children of His to have the happiest New Year of all their lives. Let's help Him make it so for them, wife!"

So the home was saved and two young hearts watched the old year out and the new year in with humble, thankful joy.

Away in a quiet country home, two silver-crowned heads bowed in glad prayer and praise to Him in whose heavenly coffers they had laid up beyond the blight of moth and rust, rich and eternal treasures.

Chicago, Ill.

THE FREE EVENING SCHOOLS OF CHICAGO.

BY MRS. NICO BECH-MEYER.

There is a sign on a pole inside the fence just where you turn the corner. On it is painted with large letters, "Free Evening Schools," and then the hours and the branches of tuition.

It is the great city calling its citizens—those who are citizens and those who wish to become so; it intends to make them all fit for the discharge of a citizen's highest duty—that of governing a country with wisdom. Thus it reaches out after them, trying to get some slight idea of wisdom laid down in those brains, which were destined to be filled with it. And at the same time it tries to diminish the number of crimes, if by ever so small a percentage, and to work toward temperance, even if the results seem of little value.

Following where the sign points go up the steps, walk in through the long, well-lighted hall to large, airy rooms, which are ready there and waiting, if somebody might do so well for themselves as to come in and fill up the seats

There are five or six rooms in some of those schools. In most of them just the common branches are taught; in a few book-keeping and shorthand writing are added.

The most mixed classes are probably to be found in the rooms where language is taught; it is those rooms that the many foreigners seek, men of all ages, thirty-five years old, some already commencing to show decline in the silvering of the hair, young boys, brimful of humor, believing that the world is all to become theirs; people of all nations, dark-complexioned Southerners, red-cheeked, blue-eyed Northerners, quick, easily impressed Hungarians, Roumanians, South-Germans, heavy and slow North-Germans, Russians, with the talent for language peculiar to the nations of the Slavonic race, Polish Jews, combining the polished, almost slavish, courtesy of a long, down-trodden race, with a truly well-meant desire to be helpful to everybody. A few Scandinavians are seen, too; as soon as they open their mouths to say one English word it is plainly told that they of all are standing nearest the English language.

The feminine element is in considerable minority. Some of the young girls are sensible and diligent; they are commonly those employed as servant girls in wealthier families. The daily contact with comfort and order shows unmistakably forth in their manners and appearance; most likely they are well-reared themselves, since they value home life enough to prefer the less free situation as servant-girl for that of the shop-girl. They are always scrupulously clean and neatly dressed.

Then there is the shop-girl. She is the one who hardly ever brings paper or book along; she is always "just coming from the shop." The stylishly made dress is of cheap goods, and encircles a throat, which, to all appearance, for several days has not been in contact with water; hands and fingernails are in a similar condition, but the bangs are carefully crimped.

You get the impression that her main object in making her appearance is to get acquainted with somebody from the stronger side of humankind; if you wrong her it is her own fault.

But they never heed her. The majority of them are men with intelligence; that is the first impression you get by stepping in and meeting all those up-turned faces. A few of them are even men with the education of a scholar; if you cannot make yourself understood to them in English you may use German, French, or even Latin, to the same individual.

They are all cleanly, some carefully dressed. Here they come from the harness shop, the carpenter bench, from the engine and machine-shop, tired from the work of the day, but bent on one thing, they must learn the language of their new fatherland; their success in life depends upon it.

Two of them, a gardener, and an engineer who is near his forty years, have come all the way out from the World's Fair. The majority of them are Germans. A closer acquaintance with them does not give the impression that das grosze Vaterland really is one state with one mind, as it is represented to be. If you are in doubt about the truest translation of a word, and "the Rhinelander" politely gives his suggestion, the Hanoveranian on the back seat will be sure to mutter something about "Rhineland Germans," and "the purest German is known to be spoken in Hanover." If you speak to them about the United States, the endowments of nature peculiar to states, the various scenery, peaceful or wild, and you try to compare that of Pennsylvania with that of some German state, you will immediately feel that here is dangerous ground to be trodden; four, five rise half up in the seat, all endeavoring to show that this can only be said about the state where they were born; they are so eager that they pour forth a whole string of those inexhaustible German adjectives, forgetting that they are expected to express themselves in English.

A few are filled with a German's contempt for all which has not originated drauszen in the great fatherland. But as a rule they are enthusiastic for America; those who have been here for any length of time have even taken up the intense interest in politics so common among Americans. It was a little difficult to get them quieted down on the evening after election. "Cleveland got there—Harrison is in the soup and Fifer too," a greenhorn commenced writing, but slowly and half ashamed wiped it out, when his attention was called to the fact that this could hardly be termed school work.

It is a very difficult task to give to those people—half of whom hardly are able to say good evening in English, the first evening they come—a knowledge of the English language. And the difficulty is increased, when you, after a hard struggle, have brought them in line and feel that now there is hope of managing them as one class; then some evening the door opens and in walk three, four young men, who arrived in America only four or six weeks ago! When to this is added, that there may be three, four students in such a room who never saw letters in any language, their parents never could afford to send them to school, then it will be seen that a night school-room may give hard work to say the least. But it is work of an extremely grateful and satisfying kind.

Such a room presents a field very much in need of temperance work. During one week's teaching, a teacher who knows how to gain the ear of the scholars will find out that those foreigners have, with one or two exceptions, carried with them their home land's indifference, if not to say spite against the temperance teachings. The merest approaching to this subject showed me that there was nothing to do except to leave the question alone, till towards the end of the term. The great obstruction is their inability to understand logically combined thoughts and reasoning in the English language.

Such a task would have to be undertaken with so careful a hand, with so fine an understanding of the strength and weakness in human nature, that I do not see how anybody in a foreign language, even after a whole winter's study, could undertake it with any success. Still, if it was a teacher who had won their hearts perfectly, I think he or she would succeed with a great many; if the truth itself did not strike them, the conviction of some other mind stronger than theirs might do it. The teacher who knows several languages, will, of course, here have the greatest advantage.

My plan is, before the term closes, to get permission to use one evening for a temperance lecture delivered both in English and German. If nobody at all should be profited by it I should think the fault mine.

Chicago, Ill.

A THOUGHT FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

BY MARY H. ABEL.

The father of the family is evidently not flourishing on the diet that suffices for the other members. There have been unusual draughts on his nervous energies, and one result is enfeebled appetite and assimilative power. Such men are well known to the physician: nervous, of pasty complexion, having no organic disease, but showing a growing incapacity for carrying on their daily work; a condition that is due to many causes, but which becomes finally a case of mal-nutrition with all its attendant consequences.

Now suppose that it is impossible to send this man away to some expensive cure or resort? Try what an improved table will do, having first stipulated that time enough shall be given for the eating and digesting of the meal and that all unrestful conditions shall be banished.

Suppose this family to have been accustomed to spend a half hour at dinner and now an hour is judged none too much. How shall the time be filled in? Evidently by serving the food in more courses, with all those pleasant intervals for talk and laughter that do much to cheat dyspepsia of its prey. The house mother may have voted soup a needless bother, but it must now be forthcoming, and it shall be hot and finely flavored; and there must be dessert, not of pie nor pudding unless it be a very simple one, but of fruit and varied trifles over which the family may linger and chat. If the means of the family allow, another course, as a salad may well precede the dessert.

But there is one point in the otherwise good dinner that is almost sure to be neglected, what may be called the tasters. "We have an invalid to feed, there must be nothing indigestible," but a due amount of well-flavored acid is a necessary part of food, and even heightens its digestibility. There is nothing wicked about maitre d'hotel butter on the steak with its fine flavor of lemon juice and parsley, even though it be a "sauce" with a French name. Such tasters are a far better addition to the meal than the sweet jellies and custards that we are far too fond of. The monotony and lack of flavor in much of our cookery, especially in the line of acids, is the best excuse for wine at dinner.

It will surely be found that in most of those cases of threatened invalidism where under-nutrition is a feature, such changes as these in the family table will do much toward that healthy stimulation of the system that enables it to take in the requisite amount of food. Alas, for such, if the family fare is settled past change, solid and monotonous!

Ann Arbor, Mich.

TEMPERANCE TEMPLE ITEMS

BY MATILDA B. CARSE.

Therefore I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.—Mark 11: 24.

From the address of the able state president of Kansas, Mrs. S. F. Grubb, published in Our Messenger, we copy the following beautiful tribute to the Temple: "The completion and success of the Temple in Chicago, and its occupancy by our forces, with its advantages of beauty, central location and general fitness as a beacon, not only of temperance principles but of success under difficulties, has put the organization a long step in advance in the eyes of business men. To erect, furnish and equip a building costing a million and one hundred thousand dollars, without a dollar to begin on, pay interest on loans, make its bonds trustworthy, and give it a firm and reliable character as an investment, shows a financial ability never surpassed in the world: and the financial ability of women has always been considered a most vulnerable point—the unprotected spot in the heel of Achilles. That 'Temple Beautiful' stands as a monument of faith and works united, and is a glory to the organization."

***

Miss Lillian M. Phelps, St. Catharines, Ontario, in writing in regard to the tablet of Mrs. Letitia Youmans, for which Canada has just completed the payment by sending its last $50, says: "The tablet the Canadian women are placing in the Temple in honor of our friend and comrade Mrs. Youmans, gives us a great deal of satisfaction. The office is doubly honored, first to give a world-wide public recognition of one of the remarkable women of our country and to help a little in this wondrous, loving epistle known and seen of men—the Woman's Temperance Temple. It is always a pleasure to me to know that we in Canada have our little corner in that Temple, and to feel that 'sich good times are in the world and we're in it.'" Northbridge, Mass., sends $4 to the Miss Tobey tablet; $4 is sent for the Frances J. Barnes tablet by Emily B. Stokes, Philadelphia, Pa., and $1 from the Y's of Prophetstown, Ill. Twenty dollars come from Addison, Mich., W. C. T. U. for the Elizabeth Comstock memorial, and $50 from Miss Eliza B. Swan, second payment on a memorial tablet to her mother. Miss Swan pays this money from the first profit received from the sale of her book, "The Opal Queen." Ten dollars and forty-two cents come from the Nebraska state union, to be credited to the Mrs. Hitchcock tablet. The Manistee, Mich., W. C. T. U. sends $13.63 for the Mrs. Peter's tablet.

***

The following unions have sent $1 each to the Willard and Whittier memorials: Winchester, Va.; Tracy, Minn., and Chelsea, Mass. One dollar each is sent to the Willard and Whittier memorials by Mrs. C. L. Wood, Hamburg, Ill. The following unions have each sent $1 to the Willard window: Angola, Ind.; Belmont, N. Y.; Rockville, Conn.; Powellton, Ill. Friend, Neb., W. C. T. U., sends $2.50 to the Willard window; Yonker Hill, Neb., union sends $1 to the Whittier clock and $1 to the Hitchcock tablet. Dora Harris, Ypsilanti, Mich., sends $1 each to tae Willard and Ames windows. The Maro, Oregon, W. C. T. U., sends $1 to the Jane E. Weeden tablet; Millville, Neb.,W. C. T. U., sends $2.65 to the Mrs. Sheldon tablet Wenonah, Neb., union sends $5 to the Mrs. Crane tablet.

***

Mr. O. L. Munger, of Chicago, Ill., sends $200 to place the name of his wife, Mrs. Julia M. Munger, and Mrs. L. C. Latimer in Willard Hall. It is blessed to be able to give as Mr. Munger has, but no doubt the small gifts of those who have very limited means will count according to heaven's arithmetic as large as the munificent donations of the rich. Our good and faithful missionary friends, Rev. and Mrs. Geo. H. Hudson, Osaka, Japan send us every year something for the Temple. They now send $1, and wish it credited to their second little son Ellis. Mr. Hudson writes: "We take great pleasure in addressing you at the Temple, and rejoice with you in its completion." Another self-sacrificing missionary, Miss Ruth Ranney, of Burmah, sends us $2.55 which her mother writes, "Was the penny-a-day amount she had been putting by for the Temple while on a visit to Chicago. She would like to have it credited to the Mary C. Leavitt tablet." Mary E. Green, Honolulu, sends $1, she wishes it were a million. Mrs. J. P. Bodine, Flemington, N. J. sends the contents of her mite-box for three months, the amount being $10. We can but wish we had an army like Mrs. Bodine. The following veterans have sent us money: Mrs. Emily Crawford, Brazil, Ind., $1 on her eighty-first birthday. "I thought I would celebrate my seventieth birthday by sending the contents of my mite-box, four dollars, for our magnificent Temple," writes Mrs. L. H Hyslop, Nebraska City, Neb.

***

Mrs. M. J. Phipps, Eldorado Springs, Mo., writes: "Enclosed find draft for $3.68. I made one dollar of it selling corn-balls. I am sixty years old." The Misses DuBris, Springfield, Ill., send $5 as a birthday present for their mother, Mrs. Sarah T. DuBris, Wichita, Kan., who was an old Crusader.

***

Less than $20,000 Temple Trust Bonds remain unsold. We would like by February first to have the entire issue disposed of. Mrs. N. M. Hinsdill, Grand Rapids, Mich., has been the largest purchaser of bonds during the week, her purchase being $5,000 worth. Mr. H. C. Speer, 237 La Salle street, is the proper person to address in regard to the Bonds.

The Union Signal
AND WORLD'S WHITE RIBBON.

ORGAN OF THE WORLD'S AND NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

FRANCES E. WILLARD, MARY ALLEN WEST, } Editors-in-Chief.
LADY HENRY SOMERSET, Contributing Editor.
MARGARET A. SUDDUTH, Managing Editor.
MRS. HARRIET B. KELLS, Office Editor.
Published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association.
MRS. F. H. RASTALL, Business Manager.
The Temple, Cor. Monroe and La Salle Streets, Chicago, Ill.

Entered at the Post-office, Chicago, Ill., as second-class matter.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

MRS. MATILDA B. CARSE, President.
MRS. L. A. HAGANS, Treasurer. MARY ALLEN WEST, Secretary.

DEPT. BOOKS AND LEAFLETS.—ALICE M. GUERNSEY, Editor.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

President.—MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD, Evanston, Ill.
Corresponding Secretary.—MRS. CAROLINE B. BUELL, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.
Recording Secretary.—MRS. MARY A. WOODBRIDGE, Ravenna, Ohio.
Assistant Recording Secretary.—MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, Portland, Me.
Treasurer.—MISS ESTHER PUGH, Office: The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be. —Tennyson.

But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. To Him be glory both now and forever.—II Peter 3: 18.

OUR BILL OF FARE.

This number being just between the old year and the new, there is necessarily a mingling of the two holidays, the first poem being a glance ahead by our good English friend, Warner Snoad. Mrs. Dickinson finishes her Christmas story, which sounds true enough and practical enough for real life. Neal Dow contributes a thoughtful article on "What Next?" being one of our regular series on Reform Forces. Lady Henry Somerset's closing address at the Denver Convention on "Labor and Drink," is full of potency. Anthony Comstock pleads for pure literature for the youth for whom he has labored for twenty-one years. Rev. George M. Hammel illustrates the power of an ideal. Miss Willard speaks words of appreciation in memory of our translated senior editor, and the last letter probably ever penned by Miss West is sadly concluded. The Household story is written by Miss Ada M. Melville, THE UNION SIGNAL's capital book-reviewer. Mrs. Nico Bech-Meyer describes "Chicago's Evening Schools." Mrs. May H. Abel gives a practical hint to housewives, and Mrs. Carse supplies the ever fresh Temple Items.

A LONDON TEMPERANCE MEETING.

This spicy news-letter from our editor-in-chief will be eagerly read by every subscriber:

A notable temperance meeting was held in Westminster town hall, London, on the evening of December 5. Archdeacon Farrar presided and made a vigorous speech, in which he took strong ground for local prohibition, Sunday closing, closing on election days, and the prohibition of the sale of intoxicants to children. In the course of his address he threw down upon the table before him three pamphlets, each containing a speech made by an English politician during the recent elections, by a man who is now a member of Gladstone's cabinet. This was much cheered by the audience, as an object lesson showing that the dominant party is committed, not only by its platform, but by its leaders, to the temperance cause. Mr. W. S. Caine, a well-known temperance leader, who is a member of Parliament, made a thoroughly convincing speech in favor of the lines of legislation which Archdeacon Farrar had laid down. Four hundred bills have been adopted by Parliament at different times in the effort to control the liquor traffic by licensed law, but that had proved ineffectual, as everybody would admit. Who had ever heard of anybody dying of total abstinence?

Mr. Caine had recently spoken in a town where the mayor in making the opening address said that total abstinence was a good thing, but he himself was a moderate drinker. Whereupon Mr. Caine in coming forward to speak had asked the mayor this question:

"Mr. Mayor, since you have spoken favorably of our cause, permit me to ask you this question: Should you not be glad to learn that the number of total abstainers in this city had increased?"

"Assuredly I should," was the reply.

"Will you not then increase their number by one?" pursued Mr. Caine, taking up a pledge card and handing it to the mayor.

This was an argument so pointed that the mayor could not well avoid its conclusion, and had the grace and the goodness then and there to put his name to the pledge.

"We have a million paupers in this nation," said Mr. Caine, "they are not total abstainers. We have an army of criminals, very few of them are total abstainers, except in prison, where it seems to agree admirably with their health." He spoke in the terse, pointed, lawyer-like fashion of a member of Parliament, and was heartily cheered by the great audience.

Following him came Lady Henry Somerset, whose statesman-like utterances are received in America with so much enthusiasm. She came out strongly for prohibition by law, prohibition by politics, and prohibition by woman's suffrage, her position being rousingly cheered by the audience. We jotted down two amusing stories by which she clinched her points.

"When I was in Denver, Colorado, where they are fond of illustrating the simple-mindedness of Eastern people who come to the prairies and the mountains and the far west, I was told that a young Bostonian entered a restaurant in the rough surroundings of a mining town. The bill of fare was an ambitious one, and included quail on toast, which juicy morsel the young man proceeded to order, whereupon the proprietor, drawing a pistol from his pocket, pointed it at the harmless new-comer, and said in stentorian tones, 'You'll eat hash.' It is in this fashion that we must approach a rough and tumble political party, not intimating what we should like, but telling them positively what we will have, for they must feel that whether it suits them or not, the temperance party is now coming up into so much of power that it is in a position to tell legislators what it will have, and to take no denial, and tolerate no delay.

"One time I was coming along a steep path among the mountains of Switzerland and saw before me a wandering showman, with a weary looking bear. My curiosity was excited, and I called out to the man, 'How do you expect to make that huge animal with its long claws dance for the people in the next village at your bidding?' 'Oh,' said he, with a broad smile, 'there is no trouble about it, I just pull the string and he dances as long as I wish and as fast as I pull." The story comes back to me in these years of campaigning, and I feel more and more assured that what we have to do to make the political bear dance to our tune is simply to pull the string long enough, strong enough and as fast as we can."

No speaker was more warmly and heartily received than Lady Henry Somerset. At the door sat a representative of the Salvation Army, who gave a leaflet containing a poem, prefaced by the following words:

"Hoping that these few verses will do at least a private's duty in the coming battle, they are dedicated with kind permission to Lady Henry Somerset, who has sounded the reveille, who has unfurled the flag and leads the way, like Joan of Arc, to the salvation of her country."

Next came the renowned Canon Wilberforce, grandson of the great liberator and son of the famous Bishop of Winchester. Upon this gifted man, by the transmigration of genius, rests the weight and wisdom of three generations. He was evidently a prime favorite, and made an inimitable speech, in which head, elbows and knees were all constituent parts, as well as features, voice and words. Canon Wilberforce is an unreportable speaker. He moved a resolution—indeed, the meeting was for the purpose of having two resolutions moved and seconded—each one of the four who performed this duty making a speech in support thereof. The Canon began by proposing a conundrum. He said: "Why is this resolution like a fainting lady in an audience? Because the sooner it is carried out the better." At this there was great applause, for the audience was so packed, in aisles as well as seats, that such a catastrophe as he described was imminent. He then went on to say: "You all seem very happy and full of victory. But enthusiasm is cheap; it can be worked up in any audience on any subject, if the speakers know what they are about, but what I want to see is conviction that will work itself out into ballots. A good many of you remind me of a story told about a colored man who lived down South, over in America. He was very fond of going to revival meetings and saying that he 'expected the Angel Gabriel would come to his house before long and call him to his celestial home,' but although Sambo was very pious in meeting he was not by any means the best behaved man in the neighborhood when he had left the meeting, and he had often been heard to say to some of his boon companions that he did not mean all that talk, that he was fond of getting it off inside the church. So after a while they decided to show him up in his own light, and in the heart of the night some of them went to his house, and pounding on the door, called out in sepulchral voices, 'The Angel Gabriel am come to call Sambo to his celestial home!' But he would not answer. They repeated the call several times with still more solemn emphasis, until at last that worthy cried out in a high key, 'Sambo not at home; gone away for three months.' Now that is the trouble with you men, you clap your hands everywhere (except in your pockets!) at the meeting, but when we come to you at the polls and ask you to vote for the direct veto you cry out, 'Sambo not at home; gone away for three months,' and snap your jaws together like a steel trap. But that joke is too old, that trick won't work any more; if God be God, serve Him, if Baal, serve him. The crisis is on, and you have simply got to take sides, so tell us now in the vote at this resolution and in the vote at the polls which side you are on."

And now I come to the last speaker of all and one that brought down the house like no other. It was Ben Tillett, and Ben Tillett is a man of the people, a socialist, laboring man, and the rest of it. Nothing less than a temperance demonstration would have brought that short figure in its plain working clothes into the lofty, wainscotted hall of Westminster, on the same platform with a noblewoman and distinguished ecclesiastics of the state church, but his subject proved that the true and only enduring aristocracy is that of intellect and character. Ben Tillett is an alderman of London corporation; he has a clear, sonorous voice, which breaks a little now and then because of much speaking in the open air. He has long, thin hands, a noble brow, a smooth face with a skin of finest texture, full, honest blue eyes, and plenty of brown hair that tosses about at its own sweet will. He said he was glad to be here because he heard no canting talk from the speakers who had preceded him, they had not singled out the working men to criticise, but had laid about them in right manful fashion, and had distributed the blame equally where it belonged, upon the rich and the poor. His voice trembled with earnestness as it rang out through that great hall, saying: "If I had the wine of the West End tables and the beer of the pot-house bars tonight, I could feed every hungry child in London." He gave a pathetic description of a working man, a friend of his, a great elephant of a fellow, he said, and good-natured as he was big. He liked to go down on all fours and play horse with his children on the floor of his little home, letting the whole six of them hang on at a time, himself as much a child as they; but, oh, the pity of it! "When that chap is drunk, good-hearted as he is, how the little ones slink away into the corners, because they are afraid of father, and he almost shakes the life out of the trembling body of his wife, whom he loves better than he does himself when he is sober. Now if you come to get that chap when it is all over with, and ask him to put in a direct veto vote, he will be one of the first, for he will be glad to give a lick to them that are his worst enemies. 'I will help all I can,' he said, in tones that thrilled the hearts of all, 'and we all will. You may count upon the working men.'"

The whole audience cheered Ben Tillett, and I am sure that everybody there thanked God for such as he and Tom Mann and John Burns, the two great leaders with whom he is associated, who are doing battle for our holy cause.

Take it all in all I never attended a more stirring and effective meeting. They received me most kindly, and I had the pleasure of telling them that no demonstration that could be made in this country could go beyond that which we extended to their leader, Lady Henry Somerset, on her two visits to the shores of the land that had enshrined her forever in its heart.

Next morning I looked over the leading London papers and they had no report whatever of this splendid temperance demonstration. "The conspiracy of silence" has crossed the sea.

CHRIST AND THE WOMAN—A CHRISTMAS THOUGHT.

In this Advent season, when the song of the angels over the manger in Bethlehem is re-echoing round the earth for the nineteen hundred and ninety-third time, science and philosophy, philanthropy and religion are propounding an old-new question to the world. They are not only asking, but with the dignified insistence, the persistent assurance of those who have a right to ask, they demand an answer to "What think you of Christ?" "What shall His birth mean to me?"

For nineteen hundred years religion has claimed the sole right to answer, has denied to science and philosophy and philanthropy the ability to reply, or the power to comprehend the mission of the Christ. But with a freedom and a grace engendered by nineteen centuries of the Christ-life, to-day each one is saying to the other: "Tell me what think you of Christ, and I will tell you what He is to me."

With this liberty to watch each for an own revelation, and with a reverent altruism which listens to interpretation of another's vision, there has come a Christ hunger no other age has known. "Glory to God in the highest, for there is born to you this day a Saviour," now comes on human lips, filled with a music, freighted with a larger hope, blessed with a redeeming power to which that long-ago angel song was a stranger. That day it was said: "They shall call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins"; but this day heart repeats to heart, "Emmanuel—God with us."

Just in proportion as men realize this will they say: "Not here, nor at Jerusalem; they that worship shall worship in spirit and in truth," and will refuse to accept a scheme of divinity in the place of Christ—God with us. The exaltation of humanity was the Christ-mission and the mystery of the Incarnation; not to bring God down to man, but to lift man up to God. The mystery of the birth and death were one; "And I, if I be lifted up shall draw all men unto me."

But Christ is risen surely as He was born, and His first human touch after "the stone was rolled away" was the exaltation of woman, the unrecognized half of humanity weeping at the tomb. He consecrated her the messenger of the resurrection, by the command, "Go and tell my disciples." It is one of the most common themes of the pulpit to tell what Christ has done for woman. Yet through all the ages, with remarkable inconsistency, the church has shaken its venerable head at the women who have dared to proclaim the risen Christ, and has said: "Not with my apostolic benediction."

So bewildered woman has "pondered all these things in her heart"; and, like the holy mother, has joyed in the blessed music of the Christ voice, while but dimly understanding the glory of motherhood, and the power conferred upon her by the divine recognition. She has found it hard to reconcile her experiences of life, the mind of Christ and her own soul; the preacher she has needed was some one to interpret her to herself. She has been the victim of artificial systems and traditions. Christ came to place no new thing in her life and heart, but to open her eyes, and the world's eyes to see the tremendous possibilities within herself, and to energize her into a life which should reflect the vital truth of the Incarnation—"the bringing the spiritual realm into this life, without waiting to find it in the next."

The old philosophers sought with unswerving devotion after the truth—fact: whatever should stand the test of demonstration; the realities that science takes out of the realm of hypothesis labels, "It is written"—on the rocks, in the air, in distant Jupiter, in the blood, the mind, the soul of man—and hands down to the future as universal law for yesterday, to-day and forever.

But Christ was born the Truth, and tore away the webs of sophistry and tradition in which men had enmeshed themselves as in a chrysalis. He revealed that only in acceptance of the real is there salvation for this life or the life to come. All else is shadow, not substance. To speak the truth is not the whole truth. The great Brighton preacher said: "Mere veracity is a small, poor thing; it is merely the correspondence between some particular statement and facts; truth is a correspondence between a man's whole nature and reality."

The most important training a woman can give herself or her children is to realize that there is death in the false, and life in the real alone; in other words—to see things as they are in relation both to one's own self and to others. To go into life thus fortified means the world under one's foot. That which nobody can afford is to hold an untrue judgment of any subject or person, because in so doing there is lost the correspondence with the Spirit of all truth, born in Bethlehem while angels sang. Like a glass of water into which a ray of pure light is shot and comes out on the other side broken and distorted, so that soul, as Mary Lowe Dickinson has well said, will have a truth shot straight into it, to come out twisted and perverted.

And herein comes the test of the woman's movement which stirs the world to-day. Will she accept and hold to the real only, or bewilder herself with her desires and the shadows of the past?

Much is said now-a-days to honor the efforts and progress of woman; but the exaction each woman should make of herself and of the "woman's movement" is, that the realities of her mental, moral and physical disabilities should be bravely faced, like other facts, without terror of criticism, manifest even in fine women, which, as said recently in a private letter by a noted "woman's woman," "is one of our most damaging weaknesses; a well-rounded, noble character is impossible, in full, where it exists. The books swarm with high-colored pictures of women before whom everything gives way, yet who are full of presumption, of half-knowledge, of conceit and self-assurance. Let us demand criticism as we demand the surgeon's knife for festering sores; be sure there will be poultices enough and salves and ointments. We do not need them so much as we need the play of electric forces, of free wind and fresh air in these women-souls, tender and shrinking from each one, because long disuse has made them masses of morbidly sensitive nerves. That there are hundreds of noble women should not hinder us from puncturing our own weaknesses and being content to see the bubble burst. As woman is in man's power, how many of us know that a man's soul is often at the mercy of a woman too wedded to rigid lines to save alive him or herself. What is this 'terror of criticism' but a needless apprehension, a fear born of the shadow in which women walk. Let us help all women by telling facts as they are."

Under her new conditions, as under the old, woman can only save her life by losing it. Under the perpetual manifestation of spiritual forces "dust to dust" is spoken only of the false; the real will survive.

Woman has given her heart's best, her all, to woman's uplifting. She cannot afford to cheapen by prejudice or half knowledge, or material vision that person or cause on which she has ventured so much. To her in a peculiar blessedness it has been given to know the mystery of the Incarnation and its glory; the more should each one remember:

"Though Christ a thousand times in Bethlehem be born,
If He's not born in thee, thy soul is all forlorn.'

AN OBJECT LESSON FROM OUR SOCIAL SYSTEM.

The death of Jay Gould has, of course, called forth universal comment from the press. These comments cannot have been pleasant reading to his friends. Notwithstanding the kindliness of human nature which leads men to speak only good of the dead, there has been scarcely a kind word spoken of the dead millionaire. The fact that not one penny of his enormous millions was given to a charitable or benevolent purpose has earned such scathing criticism that it is doubtful whether any other rich man will, for the sake of his friends if not for his own memory, dare to die without making some benevolent bequests.

The whole life of Gould is subjected to the same denunciation. One church paper says, "While noble fortunes were tottering, and men, widows and orphans were being beggared, he gazed unmoved upon the ruin he had caused. When there was none able to dispute him, he transferred all that went down in the wreck into his own coffers."

This, more or less modified, is the tone of the comments upon the dead lion. The Voice, however, in a few sentences has probed to the depths of his career and laid bare the causes which produced Jay Gould. It says, "Let us give him his due. The conditions of society were largely responsible for his career. . . . He accepted the conditions as he found them and played the game adroitly and successfully."

It is by no means certain that Jay Gould did more than apply to its inexorable, logical results the foundation principle of our competitive system, that each man's gain is every other man's loss, and vice versa. What we call enterprise resolves itself in the last analysis to in some way overreaching some one else. We watch the markets carefully and take advantage of others to sell when our produce is high and buy when the commodities we desire are low. Certain classes of persons denounce as unchristian the receiving of a high rate of interest upon money, but the truth is that money is just as much a marketable commodity as anything else and there is no more injustice in getting what we can for it than in doing the same with any other commodity. The trouble is with the system. One and all, we are helpless slaves to it. At the most we can only make the best of it. At best, the principles which we are obliged to act upon are very largely those so bitterly denounced in Jay Gould.

We do not mean to say that all are equally guilty. There is a vast difference between taking the utmost advantage of the conditions which make us a society of Esaus and in modifying them as much as possible. The man who pays his employés liberal wages, instead of grinding them down to the lowest market price; who takes no unfair advantage of his fellow merchant and who holds all that he acquires as the wealth of God, and himself but its steward, is a long way removed, from such a character as that of Jay Gould, and yet it remains true that by the cruel necessities of our social conditions the pathway of even such an one is often "over the wrecked lives and fortunes of other men."

In these cases it is the system, not the man, who is to blame, and we cannot extricate ourselves from the system. A man may believe that "private property is robbery," but he must himself hold property or be a beggar. He may consider our present financial order utterly wrong—he must nevertheless adjust himself to it or starve.

And this points very clearly to another truth worthy of our consideration; namely, that Jay Gould will have his successors. It is folly for any to comfort themselves with the thought of his death. He was not an excrescence, but a legitimate outcome of our civilization, and the causes which produced him will produce others like him. Indeed, he has many successors now, though perhaps none as yet who show equal ability. The truth which the Anglo-Saxon race early learned, and which is one of the most important secrets of its marvelous success in the development of civil liberty is that the death of an individual tyrant amounts to nothing. Other nations, again and again, passed through bloody revolutions to achieve a change of rulers, to exchange the despotism of one house for the despotism of another. Not so the Anglo-Saxon. From the first it has recognized that the trouble was with the system not with men, and has directed its energies to improving the system. It could leave John monarch for it gave him "four-and-twenty overlords." William of Orange complained that the English people trusted him less than the despot whom he had overthrown, but his pleas availed nothing, and the revolution of 1688 resulted as all previous ones, in institutions which secured the rights of the people without regard to the monarch who occupied the throne.

Our present social troubles are not different in this respect from those of the past. Such a career as that of Jay Gould is not to be laid at the door of any one man. We must look deeper for the causes, the remedy involves a more or less radical revision of our social system. Until that is accomplished, we must all remember that our own houses are made of more or less glass, and are easily broken. The love of Jesus Christ alone will cause us to care for our fellow-men.

Hark! Hark! the music of the merry chime!
The King is dead! God's blessing on the King!
Welcome with gladness this new King of Time.
—Mrs. Webster.

***

The statement which has been going the rounds of the press regarding the appointment by General Booth, of La Marechale Booth-Clibborn as his successor is, I am told in a private letter from no less an authority than the commander's private secretary, J. G. Hallimond, entirely without foundation. No one knows who is appointed nor probably will know till the commander's death. Long may he live to guide the onward march of the Salvation Army!

***

The late Sir William Gull, who was one of England's most celebrated physicians, once said, "It is my deliberate opinion that seven out of every twelve patients I am called to attend could be saved if people would only go to bed directly they are ill; it is the only safe course, and owing to this neglect medical men are almost invariably sent for when their services are many hours too late to stay the mischief of serious disease."

***

I hear that a bright little lawyer, Miss Mary A. Green, of the Boston bar, conducts the Woman's Council to great satisfaction the present season.

***

Rev. Thomas Dixon, Jr., the preacher who so fearlessly attacks Tammany Hall, in his lecture on "Modern Cities" said: "The man who prays like an angel on Sunday and votes like a devil Monday will find himself in the clutches of the devil at last. People say we must wait for public sentiment before we can have better laws. I tell you laws are fifty years behind sentiment now, and enforcement of law is a hundred years behind sentiment. Our cities must be saved, or our nation is lost, and if they are saved they must be saved by the churches."

***

An English worker writes me in this humorous but rueful fashion: "Whenever a clergyman of the church of England takes the chair in our temperance meetings, he commences by reciting one of the Collects that begins in such a manner as to indicate about what we have to expect from him: Prevent us, oh, Lord, in all our doings!"

***

The following inscription adorns a bell recently set ringing in a church steeple of Pittsburg, Pa.:

This bell in honor of the holy name of Jesus.
Donated to St. Joseph's Church.
By Messrs. E. Frouenheim and L. Vilsack,
Proprietors of the Iron City Brewing Co.,
A. D. 1892.
Right Rev. Richard Phelan, IV Bishop of Pittsburg.
Rev. George Palleman, rector of St. Joseph's Church.
Laudentur.
Jesus, Marie, Joseph.

Comment is unnecessary.

***

Colonel Ritter: "No political party in the history of the country has ever advanced so much in the line of education as the Prohibition party has in the past four years.

"There has been no anti-saloon action on the part of Republicans and no anti-sumptuary legislative action on the part of the Democrats.

"We haven't the consistency, we haven't the integrity, we haven't the courage of the liquor league. When we get that the work's done.

"The platforms of the Prohibition party could be written in the language of the creed of any church.

"There isn't a national air that can be sung with a liquor dealer in the procession.

" What would be the consequence if we were to quit the field?

"We must have a party into whose convention no liquor dealer can come as a delegate.

"When I get into the legislature or into Congress I shall propose a measure providing for a school for the feeble-hearted.

"I would rather vote for what I want and be defeated than vote for what I don't want and be successful.

"Men are anxious for peace but although not a prophet I venture to prophesy: there will be no peace in politics; no peace in social life; no peace in commercial life; no peace in the church of God until this question is settled and settled right. So I am in for war and warn the saloon-keepers that what we mean is death to their business."

ON DUTY.

MICHIGAN ETCHINGS.

Bleak December! but dark days do not deter us, for, as Miss Willard says, we are "persistent as fate."

The first district sends the first etching, a "just like other folks" invitation to a reception given by the Central union to Mrs. Geo. W. Scripps to hear the full report of the National Convention. They send with it their new enrolling card, which is very complete. Names of officers, plan of work, object of membership, dues, $1, pledge and the cordial motto, "Come thou with us and we will do thee good" are all upon it.

At our county convention we appointed a superintendent for Hackley Hall funds, our state treasurer, Mrs. May.

The report comes from Swartz Creek union of a mite-box for that purpose, and from Gaines also, in the sixth district, a good report of their first year's work and a liberal planning for the next, under the departments of L. T. L., lumbermen and mothers' meetings. An L. T. L. of twenty-one members has been organized by Mrs. W. E. Aldrich, our new county president.

Under the head of L. T. L. work Mrs. Green, our indefatigable state superintendent, writes: "This work in our state is being better understood, and the autograph cards for the World's Fair are rapidly coming in.

"At the fourth district convention an entire evening was set aside for the children, and conducted by the district superintendent.

"In the upper peninsula, Negaunee seems to be taking the lead, having a large class studying for diplomas and keeping step with all the new ideas.

"At Crystal Falls, one of the twelfth division Legions, are loyal soldiers brave and true. In the first district there are two new companies, one at Wyandotte, one under Willard W. C. T. U., Detroit; all the Detroit unions now except one conduct L. T. L's."

The tenth district convention was held at Standish. There was a good attendance; the reports of superintendents of scientific instruction, evangelistic, and other departments were encouraging. There were papers on the following subjects: "Representation as a Right"; "Inebriety as a Disease"; "Licensed Protection"; "The Relation of the W. C. T. U. to Society Beer Drinking."

Mrs. McClurkin, who lives in this district, in an address entitled "Goliath and David," fairly captured the audience. Goliath was the liquor traffic daring the temperance hosts who fear to meet the foe. The little Prohibition party is the David who has gone out to meet the champion, while the great temperance hosts are watching the battle, fearful of results and preferring compromise.

Mrs. Carrie Faxon was elected to the presidency made vacant by the election of Mrs. Parish to the office of state corresponding secretary.

In the early days of the W. C. T. U. I remember at Kalamazoo state convention, an earnest, bright woman who gave us a gospel lesson upon "Those in bonds as bound with them." In to day's Tribune I read of her home for discharged prisoners in Detroit, a neat, loving, Christian home, where to all boys she is mother, "The Prisoners' Home." Over six hundred ex convicts, fresh from the prisons, have entered that weatherbeaten door within the past four years, the door at 259 Willis Avenue. Mrs. d'Arcambel is a cheery, talkative woman. She is very busy and is heart and soul at work for her "boys" as she calls them. This is the practice of the gospel she taught us that day.

Mrs. S. A. Morrison, of Wayne, national superintendent of almshouse and asylum work sends me her annual report as given at the National. The summing up is, "The Master knows if the work has been done whether we do or not. To all I would bid Godspeed, toward another year of labor. We have no reason for despondency; the states are at work and we can truly thank God for what has been accomplished and take courage."

Miss L. J. Newcomb sends to our state paper an article on dress reform, a plea for right kind of dress, waist, proper length of skirt, and broad, comfortable shoes. Her closing thought is: "This reform lies at the foundation of all efforts towards better living."

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin has been at Kansas City, St. Louis and Chicago much of the time since the National Convention. She gives Michigan dates at present.

Mrs. Holman, state superintendent for lumbermen's work, says, "In the three states, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, there are over one hundred thousand men, many of whom spend the better part of their lives in camps. Let us be faithful and in haste to do our work."

Our thoroughly earnest state superintendent of franchise, Mrs. R. M. Kellogg, has a new plan which I will pass along. A franchise banner is to be awarded at the state convention to the district reporting the most work done, including the number of county and local superintendents, the number of lectures and public meetings, subscribers to suffrage papers, leaflets distributed, discussions procured in the union, the longest list of names on petitions and any other suffrage work.

Mrs. Parris, hour new corresponding secretary, has been very successful in the sale of the state minutes, less than fifty remaining on hand. In summing up election returns she says: "The Prohibition vote shows a handsome gain over 1888. Reforms come slowly but surely. It takes a long time to plow and to sow, and till, but the harvest is sure to come for reformers as well as farmers." For the assurance of one He set His bow in the cloud, for the other He said, "All power is given me in heaven and in earth."

I close my letter with the hum of children's voices planning for the Christmas time in my ears, and with "the Christmas thought" written for our Michigan union by our beloved president, Mary T. Lathrap:

Once more across the weary earth
Shines out the Bethlehem star,
Once more the day of Jesus' birth
Swings heavenly doors ajar;
And even lips that seldom sing—
Take up the olden strain
Of peace on earth, good will to men,
The world is glad again.

'Tis not enough that Christ was born
Beneath the star that shone,
And earth was set that fairest morn
Within a golden zone.
He must be born within the heart
Before He finds this throne,
And brings the day of love and good
The reign of Christlike brotherhood.

MRS. C. H. JOHNSON,
State Reporter, Flint.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

THE WORK MARCHES ON.

I am sure all who attended our tenth annual convention held in San Bernardino, both delegates and visitors, feel that it was a blessed privilege to be there. The beautiful decorations, the inviting lunches served in the church dining rooms, the cordiality of our reception by citizens, ministers and our own white-ribboners, all told the same sweet story of a generous hospitality.

The convention was called to order at 3:30, at the close of an all-day executive meeting, and before adjournment the work of organization was completed and the convention ready to begin its regular work.

The first evening we were made to feel still more at home by the royal welcome extended to us by Professor Richardson, on behalf of the citizens, Rev. G. W. White, of the ministers, and Miss G. T. Stickney, of the union. Mrs. Stephens, president of West End union, Los Angeles, spoke the thanks of the convention in most gracious words; then followed the address of our president, Mrs. N. P. J. Button, in which she reviewed the work of the state since its organization, congratulated us upon our gains, and pointed out much more to strive for.

The report of the corresponding secretary showed ninety unions, a paid-up membership of over eighteen hundred, every county organized, thirty-three L. T. L's, with a membership of about fifteen hundred, thirty-four medal contests and the work generally in an encouraging condition.

The reports of the county presidents and state superintendents showed much work done along the different lines and more planned for.

On the second evening were presented the Sunday question and suffrage. The latter was thrown open to the convention for discussion, and all present were invited to take part. A very animated expression of opinion followed, from which it was very evident that the majority of the women present wanted to vote and the majority of the gentlemen wanted them to do so.

Following the discussion was a very able paper on the prohibition of the liquor traffic, by Mrs. Jennie E. Clippinger.

The election the next morning showed an almost unanimous wish on the part of the delegates to retain the same officers who had served the previous year. The report of flower mission, by Miss Alice Sudduth, was especially interesting, and drew out many touching incidents of the good results of this work, and how beautifully it is fitted to reach the lonely, the wretched or the sin-hardened heart. Among the numerous missions of this department it was related how almost every Sunday morning these sweet messengers of God's love were put into the hands of the gripmen on the cable cars in Los Angeles, telling them that some one was mindful of them through their wearisome hours of Sunday labor.

The last evening the Y's took possession of the program, and made it sweet and spicy and delightful with their songs, reports, recitations and good common sense papers. As our White Ribbon said: "Ah, if we old ladies had only been Y's when we were young!"

The work of raising the debt of $25,000 on our temperance temple in Los Angeles was inaugurated at this convention.

The plans for a canvass for subscriptions were presented, and received with such enthusiasm that then and there with no urging, five thousand dollars was pledged, and every assurance given that our delegates would, on their return home, do all in their power to help lift the whole amount.

The raising of this debt has been our work for the past two months. Over nineteen thousand dollars has been pledged, and there now remains but a little more than five thousand to raise. This amount will be subscribed ere long, for never in any cause has there been witnessed such concert of action, such perfect harmony and love, such faithful service and self-sacrifice as these two months have called out.

All of our members were asked to pledge five dollars apiece. Some pledged and went into walnut groves to pick walnuts to earn the money; some said they would wear their last year's bonnet another year and so save the amount; some pledged not knowing where the five dollars was to come from, but they took it to our Father in prayer, claimed His precious promises and the money in several cases came to them in unlooked for ways.

Our dear "Mother Ransom," over seventy years of age, pledged one hundred dollars, with not a dollar in sight, saying the Lord told her to do it and she has already raised more than half of it.

One dear white-ribboner came to me with the tears in her eyes and said, "I am going to give you the most precious thing in all the world to me, it is all I have to give; these quarters that were put upon my dead child's eyes ten years ago."

A man lay dying in the hospital, one who had been a drinking man and reclaimed and brought to know the Christ's redeeming love by one of our members. As he lay upon his bed she told him about the temple and how hard we were working to lift the debt, and he reached his hand under his pillow and drew out all he possessed and said, "Take this to them with my dying prayer for their success."

Almost every day the mail has brought us letters containing pledges, every dollar of which meant faith, devotion to a cause, and a "self-restraint box." The very richest gifts have come to many of our hearts through this labor of love. We have learned more fully the "patience of faith," the surety of the sweet promises, and the single-heartedness and oneness of purpose of our beloved comrades.

Our next state convention will be held in the spring and we are going to make it a jubilee meeting, if our debt is all raised, and it will be.

Mrs. Bullock came to us from the National Convention for three months' work. She commenced in San Luis Obispo county, on the twentieth of November, has re-organized two unions, San Miguel and Paso Robles, and although the rain has poured down a good part of the time, has added sixty five new members. She is now in Santa Barbara county where she will visit every union, and several new points to organize.

MARY E. GARBUTT,
State Reporter, Temperance Temple, Los Angeles.

INDIANA JOTTINGS.

"The world is rolling heaven's way,
And ripening in her sorrow;
Take heart—who bears the cross to-day
Shall wear the crown to-morrow."

This song of the heart expresses the deepest feelings of Indiana prohibition reformers. Our enemies counted us thirteen thousand votes, clearly suppressing at least eight thousand, but it will certainly bring about the repeal of the infamous law which denied us watchers at the polls. We are not out of heart; we feel that our ranks are filled with true and tried men who will vote together until victory or death comes; then this nucleus will be the cohesive force around which all reform elements must cluster.

November 17 about four hundred of our workers from all portions of the state met in council at Indianapolis and the campaign of '94 and '96 were opened with fresh zeal and high courage. This assembly was highly representative and much was done that will result in great good to the cause. In Vigo county, the enemy's stronghold, we not only held our own but made substantial gains. Terre Haute's vote showed much increase of sentiment, and we now have voters in each ward, and every precinct except one. We do not yet know what the overwhelming defeat of the Republican party may mean to us, but all things will work together for good to us if we keep the faith. Victory cannot be far distant.

The Eastern Province Herald, of Port Elizabeth, Cape of Good Hope, South Africa, recently received by your correspondent, gives highly favorable accounts of the work of our Alice R. Palmer, the World's W. C. T. U. missionary to South Africa. The annual convention of the Province was held at that time at Port Elizabeth, as was the South African Temperance Alliance. The annual addresses of Miss Pride, president of the Dominion W. C. T. U. and of Hon. A. Wilmot, president of the Alliance, were full of beauty and power, showing how akin we are on this great question of the home. Y evening was a prominent feature in the W. C. T. U. Convention, reminding us of our own Y evenings. The force and originality of thought of each speaker is enjoyable, and our work cannot but prosper there. Miss Palmer was an honored speaker on the program of the evening. She addressed the convention frequently, and was principal speaker in the meetings for the natives. As we read how useful our "Alice" is becoming abroad, we cannot but rejoice. Our prayers, sisterly sympathy and confidence follow her in all her journeyings.

The local unions of the state are not idle. In Vigo county at the recent convention, Mrs. L. M. Harding, of Terre Haute, was elected president. The reports given showed the Frances Willard and West Side unions are taking steps toward building chapels in parts of the city where the people have no place of worship. The Frances Willard union will build in the southwest part of the city near the tool works; the West Side in the neighborhood of the water works. These efforts deserve the sympathy and coöperation of all good people.

Hendricks county writes of a delightful annual convention, Mrs. Denny was their speaker. Reynolds reports a year of active work.

Union county has just held its third annual meeting, and Jay county her sixth convention with great success.

From Angola comes a carefully prepared report of their work by Mrs. Vella Lewis. This letter should stimulate each local union to care in reporting work done.

Mrs. Fields has been in active service since state convention.

Newburgh, Hope, Maples, Westfield all write of active work done.

Allen, Elkhart and Johnson counties have held excellent annual conventions.

Scottsburg union is "holding the fort" with great perseverance.

Since last writing your correspondent has held seventy-five public meetings, has had twenty-five conversions. A few evenings ago, upon returning home after an evening's work, she was much surprised to find a friend's house all lighted up and full of temperance friends from the Total Abstinence Club, Prohibition Club, Royal Templars and the Frances Willard W. C. T. U. A bountiful lunch was served and the writer was made the grateful recipient of useful gifts. May God bless the kindly hearts who planned the pleasant surprise.

Hoagland, Converse and North Manchester all write of good work done.

Marion and Clay counties have each held excellent annual conventions, and Noble county convention was certainly a model one.

The Y girls have not been idle since the National Convention. Miss Dickson has been busy visiting and strengthening unions.

It is with deep regret we record the illness of our state corresponding secretary. Miss Lodie Reed has been quite a sufferer all summer and fall, but we hoped the rest and trip to Denver might help her, but since her return she has been so ill her friends have been sent for. May the Lord speedily restore her to health is the prayer of our white ribbon host. Miss Reed's long years of faithful service should be rewarded by a furlough long enough to secure for her complete recovery.

The L. T. L. work of the state will continue to grow in the hands of Mrs. Straw, and Miss Farley, the organizer, is busy in the field.

Millgrove union mourns the loss of Brother Barr, a faithful brother-in-law; Spencerville union the loss of the husband of Mrs. Mary Shutt, Nellie Stahl, daughter of the president of Blackford county union, H. S. Simpkins, husband of the president of the St. Joe union, Jas. S. Rogers, honorary member of the Dana union, and C. K. Bryan, honorary member of the Shelbyville union, have all passed into the beyond. One by one our workers go, but the Lord leads other recruits into our ranks.

SADIE B. WHISTLER,
State Reporter, Terre Haute.

NEW JERSEY.

THIS SIDE AND THE OTHER.

Our autumnal "feast of ingathering," which was so rich in fruitage, sent out many experienced sowers, who have been sowing seed from Sussex in the north to Cape May in the south, and from the Delaware on the west to the Atlantic seaboard; and already we hear of shoots springing up, which in the harvest time will yield fruit, we trust, an hundred fold!

I once asked a lawyer how there could be such difference in the testimony of witnesses at a murder trial of considerable notoriety in our locality. One seemed to contradict the other. "Surely," said I, "some are swearing untruthfully." He replied, "Not necessarily so, it all depends on the angle from which his impressions were received when first viewing the victim."

This gave me a new thought in gathering up the successes and failures of our cause. If we look at the work from the educational standpoint among the children, the development of our women, the change in the public pulse toward our organization, and over and above all that God is on our side, there is much cause for thankfulness. But if we perceive and think only of the ceaseless toiling, praying, and talking for prohibition for the past four years, and the seemingly meager results for the effort put forth, we are not lifted up on a very high pinnacle by the accession of a few hundred more votes in the state for protection.

"But right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win."

Therefore, if our incoming legislature is overwhelmingly against us, and race track men will sit as members of that body and the present outlook is for a clean sweep for evil legislation,

"To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin!"

I told you in my last letter that Mrs. Hunt would be called into the state in the interest of scientific temperance instruction if the complexion of the legislature would warrant it. No doubt, from the above remarks you conclude she will not be called just yet and your conclusions are right.

After the smoke of the battle had cleared, the defeated party of "sympathy and morality" began to look about for the cause and some ons on whom to put the blame; they decided that "the Prohibitionist could have redeemed the state from rum and the race track evil." If this be true, the responsibility is overwhelming. But to us this decision could not be reached unless all the Prohibition votes were drawn from the Republican party, and no Republicans among the advocates of the race track evil; facts are far more mighty than theories, and the fact is we have two at least, among our legislators who are sent in the interest of the turf to balance the two Democrats known to be for the same measures.

Instead of arraigning the Prohibitionist who votes for a principle, the patriotic citizen would better look after the socialistic labor vote—for the first time having a candidate for governor in the field, and scarcely any organization, yet polled a vote for over thirteen hundred in the state.

To listen to the different solutions of the cause for the increased Democratic victory is quite amusing. One, "It is tariff"; another, "The silver question"; another, "The Prohibitionists"; another, "The immigration of the lower class, who of course all voted for Cleveland."

Immigration should certainly be restricted, but I cannot conclude that all of this baser sort voted for the Democratic candidates. I base my decision upon the vote in my own city and county, which cast, as is common at the national election, its usual Republican majority, and this in face of the fact that for two years back we have been feeling the influence of the influx from this lower strata of foreigners.

In our city, as well as elsewhere in the state, bribers, men of high repute, from each of the dominant parties, were arrested, and held under high bail to appear at court, but the grand jury failed to indict. Sequel, each party afraid of the other!

Thus we cannot but conclude, if ever the slum of political corruption is purged of its vileness, a new element must be introduced to cut out this cancerous sore which is eating out the health of the body politic! Lying as we do midway between two of our largest eastern cities, we are naturally the dumping ground for them of their surplus evil, as well as good, so we not only have our own evils to contend with, but those of adjacent territories, and our work is exceedingly difficult.

But from the action of the Law and Order League of Monmouth county, who have carried their difficulties to the United States grand jury, the call of the Camden churches for the speedy trial of the "Duke of Gloucester," the aroused citizens of Cumberland county, and especially those of Vineland, where, by its original charter, no saloon has ever been allowed, but who by the decision of the county excise commission are to have one, the gauntlet has been thrown down and war has been declared!

Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the parties to whom the license has been granted, also a writ issued restraining them from selling until the further order of the court, also a supreme court certiorari, summoning them and the county commission to appear shortly in Trenton.

Col. H. H. Hadley, of the Florence mission, New York, held two most successful meetings in Library Hall recently. At one he had a number to pledge themselves to try to save one person this year. Already we learn one of the number has been the instrument of saving the one upon whom he put his prayers and efforts, a man who had not been to church for sixteen years, rescued and converted.

Colonel Hadley brought out the fact very forcibly that "rescue work" was not temperance work alone but conversion, and the thought was emphasized that the man must be converted before he was asked to sign the pledge, and to this we heartily agreed. But all the while as he talked and sang, the question kept running through my mind, why not take the short cut, and vote out the saloon? Then this extra effort to help one amid so much temptation could be used for others; while now, the same one has to be picked up so often.

No saloons in city or valley would solve many problems which now sorely vex us! God hasten the day when the issue of saloon or no saloon shall be the battle cry before the day of decision, then will the Christian people hold the balance of power, not the saloon as now! But as our work is "educational, not legislative," we women must "learn to labor and to wait," drive a nail here, take up a stitch there, sow seeds everywhere, then, some day, the building will be erected, the garment finished, the fruit gathered, and the full fruition of our hopes realized—the land free from the bondage of the saloon.

N. L. CAMINADE,
State Reporter, Trenton.

FLORIDA.

NEWS FROM THE FLOWERY STATE.

The second annual convention of Volusia county W. C. T. U. was convened at Somerset Park, Lake Helen, November 22, 23. The weather was such as only Florida can boast at this season of the year, very bright and clear, in which the blood bounded through the veins, and the uselessness of alcoholic stimulants was made apparent in a stronger way than could have been done by wordy argument. We assembled in the "Wigwam," our temporary home for the school of methods, the president, Mrs. E. A. Hill, of Orange City, in the chair. Devotional exercises were led in an impressive manner by our well-beloved Mrs. Babcock, of De Land union, and included singing of the hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," with prayer by Rev. I. M. Auld, of New Smyrna.

The roll-call showed fourteen delegates present. Committee on courtesies, credentials and resolutions were appointed. Mrs. Herrick, corresponding secretary, gave a report of the condition of the various unions. There are many things to discourage, but the report showed a growing activity and encouraging progress along the various lines of work.

Mrs. Webster, of Lake Helen, gave a report of estimates for work on the auditorium, and urged the organization of a working league in each union whose contributions should be devoted to a certain part of the building. Resolutions to that effect were passed. The cost of the building was estimated at $2,000. Lake Helen has been very generous in donations of land. The site of the auditorium is a gift of Miss R. E. Berger, and is a very pretty location.

The following fraternal delegates were then presented to the convention: Rev. J. Macy, Lake Helen; I. M. Auld, New Smyrna, and Mrs. Hamilton, of Ormond, mother of the author of the "White Ribbon Vibrations." The school of methods was then discussed, and each union urged to take an interest in the building, as it is state property.

The morning exercises were closed by prayer, led by Mrs. E. T. Thorpe, of Sanford. The air was redolent with sweets from the rose garden near by, as we passed out to dinner which was served in the open air, under a vine-covered arbor, much to the delight of our Northern friends. Boutonnières of wild flowers, tied with a white ribbon, were passed on a tray, and sold for the benefit of the auditorium fund. The afternoon was devoted to an animated discussion of the various phases of the temperance question.

In the evening the Congregational church was thrown open and soon filled to its utmost capacity. The opening hymn, "America," was sung with great enthusiasm. Rev. H. Noble, of Lake Helen, led in prayer. The Lake Helen orchestra favored us with choice music. A fine paper was read by Mrs. Thorpe, of Sanford. She gave a résumé of the reforms necessary for the advancement of the human family. The colored juveniles were introduced and sang. Mrs. Babcock, president of De Land union, read an able essay entitled, "The Attitude of the Christian Church toward the Temperance Question." Our famous whistler, Mrs. Nellie Palmer, of Eau Claire, Wis., favored us with "The Mocking-bird," and the "Whip-poor-will." Mrs. Hamilton, of Ormond, entertained us with a paper entitled, "A Place in the Church for Temperance Work," written by Capt. Henry Shaw, of the life-saving station.

Some thrilling jubilee songs were well rendered by the colored juveniles. Our state evangelist, Mrs. E. Springer Oliver, was introduced, who made brief remarks, telling of the work she had planned to do as she visited the different towns in the country. In her remarks as chairman of the convention, Mrs. Will said, "Nothing which occurred during my recent visit to Denver, Col., so impressed me with the sublimity of our cause, nor was any sight so inspiring, not even that of the grand old Rockies themselves, as the sight of the four engines, each with its train of coaches filled with white-ribboners from all parts of our country, as they saluted each other across the basin in the heart of the Rocky Mountains. The fact that three hundred and eighty-two accredited delegates met in that far-off western land, involving as it did wearisome journeys over mountains, seas and plains, to clasp hands in a holy warfare against the power of a gigantic, a legalized evil, was truly significant of the fact that the spirit of the Woman's Crusade is still abroad and aggressively active in our country. One of the thoughts expressed by Lady Henry Somerset which impressed me forcibly, was: 'The best that one can do along the road of life is to make the pathway plain for those who follow after.'"

A generous collection was taken up by Mrs. E. L. Robinson, and on motion was placed in the hands of Mrs. Webb, of De Land, the treasurer of the school of methods, for the auditorium fund; the exercises were concluded by singing, "Light in the Darkness."

Wednesday morning the election of officers took place, and in the afternoon the reports of superintendents were listened to with pleasure. The general feeling prevailed that each superintendent had given much time and labor to make her special line of work as near perfect as possible. Strong resolutions were submitted to the convention, and were adopted as a whole. An invitation was accepted to hold our next convention at Ormond on the Halifax river, November, 1893.

The Hillsborough county convention, held some months since at Limona, was both interesting and profitable. Mrs. Turner was elected president. Among the resolutions passed was one sympathizing with our beloved leader, Miss Willard, in her recent bereavement. They also passed a resolution indorsing and heartily sustaining the school of methods at Somerset Park, Lake Helen. An offer was made by Mrs. Avery, of Limona, of one hundred and sixty acres of land, and a little cottage to be used as a home for orphans, and to be under the control of the W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Hamilton, of Ormond, has just organized a colored Loyal Temperance Legion at Lake Helen of thirty-five members, also one at Orange City, and a new W. C. T. U. at the Baptist church in De Land.

A petition has been circulated, and every effort made by those in sympathy with the liquor dealers to revive the open saloon in this county. Their principal argument seems to be that as the jugs and blind tigers are still in existence, they must have the revenue to enrich our towns. Large mass-meetings have been held in the principal towns, and saloon and anti-saloon have been thoroughly discussed. The election took place to-day, December 5, with the result that the county voted anti-saloon by an overwhelming majority.

MRS. EMMA L. ROBINSON,
State Reporter, Orange City.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

WINTER WORK.

The winter's work is being taken up in earnest through out the state. Unions that have languished through the intense heat of the summer are planning much good work, the poor and needy are being clothed by willing hands, and winter will find our corps of white-ribboned sisters eager to alleviate suffering and to give the word that encourages, cheers and strengthens.

"Just a single bright smile to some one in distress,
A kind word to some ragged boy,
These will often go farther than money to bless
And fill a sad heart with joy.

"Just a bunch of fresh flowers for an invalid's room,
A line to a dear, absent friend,
These will often do more to dispel pain and gloom
Than all of the gold you can spend."

Nashua union held a meeting in honor of their president and recording secretary, and to express regrets at their retiring from office after five years' faithful service. Beautiful etchings were presented by Mrs. John Dane in behalf of the union. Mrs. Casey, the police matron, was present at this meeting and presented her need of clothing of all kinds for the unfortunate ones that are placed in her care. The Nashua ladies are constantly providing them.

There is a strong determination to secure a home for friendless women and girls. Subscriptions have been received and it is hoped that the public will become interested.

Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, Sunday-school superintendent of the World and National W. C. T. U., lectured in Nashua at a union service in the two Congregational churches to a large and appreciative audience.

At the last regular meeting Mrs. E. M. Shaw reported the dedication of the Columbian Exposition, at which she was present, in an interesting and instructive manner. Letters were read from two young girls who had gone out from a confinement in the police station, thanking Mrs. Casey and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union for their kindness, and promising a better life in the future. Anything the public can do to help these falling, if not fallen girls, and lighten the labors of the matron, is helping on God's work.

At the state convention held at Laconia Mrs. F. H. Bailey was reëlected state superintendent of press work, also state reporter for THE UNION SIGNAL.

A stirring event took place at New Market lately. The hall was crowded to enjoy the Demorest medal contest and the fine musical treat which accompanied it. The singing by three young ladies and the chorus of thirty-five boys was very attractive. The medal was awarded to Miss Lena Hoar, subject, "A Glorious Monument." The judges were Rev. J. H. Fitts and Rev. E. Smiley, of South New Market and Miss A. E. McIntire, of Exeter. A second prize was given by the W. C. T. U. (a book of Whittier's poems) to Harry Haines who spoke "The Deacon's Match."

Hopkinton W. C. T. U. held their first Demorest contest this fall. The interest in the speakers drew a good house. The judges were Dr. Crane, Dr. Davis and wife from Concord, and the medal was awarded to Miss Minnie B. Huntoon. Two other ladies came within one mark. Another contest is in preparation, and here let me testify to the value of this work, although it was much effort to secure six speakers for our contest (we were allowed eight) the event proved a great success and set the ball in motion. Thanks to our courage in carrying through the first, the second is thronged with ready workers. Touch the child, you draw the parent and a good audience is the result, though not the end of this educational training.

The tenth anniversary of the founding of the W. C. T. U. of Franklin was observed at the Congregational church and served to bring out a large number of active and honorary members. Mrs. C. C. Page presided over the meeting and reported the various branches of work. There were ten members when founded, now there are one hundred. Good music was furnished by kind friends.

Let it be said to the credit of some of our rural towns, that no liquor was seen and no intoxicated person about the voting rooms at the last presidential election, a happy comparison to years gone by. May it prove the dawning of a better day. At last spring town meeting in Nashua, the boys and girls held a mock town meeting in regular form. They issued their town warrant, put two regular tickets upon the field bearing the names of both boys and girls. They elected town officers and went through the regular work with a zeal and honesty that proves they are fitting themselves for actual service in the future.

A grand time was had Saturday, November 12, in Whitefield, N. H., a beautiful village among the White Mountains. The local W. C. T. U. dedicated a handsome iron fountain. They were assisted in the exercises by the L. T. L. The inscription on the fountain is: "Presented by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, A. D., 1892." The gift is highly appreciated by the citizens.

Our state has just taken up this "W. C. T. U. fountain" department, with Mrs. Kate H. Brown as superintendent. We hope much from this new branch. Any society of persons who desire to do something in this direction for humanity will do well to write her.

MRS. F. H. BAILEY,
State Reporter, Hopkinton.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

MISSOURI'S evangelistic superintendent, Mrs. R. B. Hall, has removed from Stockton to Carthage.

REV. GEORGE VIBBERT has been conducting a series of very successful meetings under the care of the Delphi, Ind., W. C. T. U.

MRS. HANNAH T. BOND, of Fayette, Mo., has been appointed president of the eleventh district in place of Miss E. P. Babb, resigned.

DEMOREST medals and books for Missouri can be procured only at W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Kansas City. Miss Ellen D. Morris will answer all calls promptly.

AN illustrated lecture, "The map-maker of Genoa; his life and times," by M. J. Kelly, B. A., was given in Willard Hall, Chicago, Wednesday evening, December 21, for the benefit of the Anchorage Mission.

MR. W. M. F. ROUND, corresponding secretary of the prison association of New York, will visit Chicago during the latter part of January, making several addresses upon the branches of his work.

A COPY of Mrs. Lucy Washington's poems, "Memory's Casket," has been sent to each of the eight contestants for the diamond medal at the Denver Convention through the generosity of the author.

A KIND friend to the W. C. T. U. of Moline, Ill., was Mrs. Ann Atkinson, whose legacy of $800 for the work of the union was accepted with deep thankfulness and appreciation by her sorrowing co-workers.

GEORGE W. BAIN, of Kentucky, will deliver a lecture on Sunday afternoon, January 8, in Chicago, for the West Side W. C. T. U. Subject, "Girls and boys, nice and naughty, or the pendulum of life."

HYMAN HATCH, who passed away at a ripe old age October 21 was an honorary member of the South Elgin, Ill., W. C. T. U. since its organization ten years ago. He was an exemplary citizen and faithful friend.

ONE of the first to join the Farmers' Valley, Pa., W. C. T. U., was Mrs. L. E. Crossmyre, whose death occurred November 19. She was highly esteemed by all and her departure is deeply regretted by those who knew her.

A POINTED and logical sermon which was a power for the temperance cause, was that delivered by the Rev. Dinwiddie, at Sterling, Col., a few Sabbaths ago by request of the local W. C. T. U. An L. T. L. is soon to be organized there.

MRS. L. E. BAILEY, of New York, called at the Temple last week on her way to California for a lecture tour. She reported good progress for the Prohibition or People's church of Newburgh, N. Y., and left the little church paper, published quarterly, in which over six hundred dollars are reported toward the building fund.

MRS. EMILIE UNDERHILL BURGESS, of Highland, N. Y., National lecturer for the department of peace and arbitration, has been giving lectures upon this subject for two weeks during December in Oswego county, N. Y. Great interest has been manifested by the audiences who have listened to the presentation of this grand truth, and much benefit given spiritually to the work.

MRS. AMANDA STRONG, state president, made an eleven days' trip among the unions of the western part of eastern Washington. She visited six unions and organized one; twenty-four new members were secured, and one honorary life member. Mrs. Strong held public meetings in the evening, and afternoon meetings with the women at which time she gave such instruction as was most needed by the unions.

TERRILL college, located at Decherd, Tenn., is a normal school whose teachers are active Prohibitionists. Last month the girls and boys held a regular presidential election, polling one hundred and seventy-three votes, eighty-one of which were cast for Bidwell, and seventy-nine for Cleveland, seven for Weaver and six for Harrison. The students served as judges, clerks, etc., and are now well posted on party platforms and the Tennessee election laws.

THE Y's of Winnipeg, Canada, conduct through their evangelistic department, a reading room, which must prove of great benefit to those who take advantage of its privileges. Monday evening, educational classes; Tuesday evening, sewing and dressmaking; Wednesday, gospel meeting; Thursday, sight singing and physical culture; Friday, social, and each alternate Saturday evening, a medical lecture is provided. Each class is in charge of a competent teacher.

MISS BELLE KEARNEY, of Mississippi, National organizer of the Y's, has just completed a month's successful work in Louisiana, in which time a large addition of W. C. T. U. and Y unions has been made to the state. Miss Kearney fills appointments in Texas during December, but will organize for Louisiana during February, for Alabama during March and for Mississippi during April. She has added materially to the Louisiana treasury as well as its number of unions.

Official Communications.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEMPERANCE KINDERGARTEN WORK FROM NATIONAL SUPERINTENDENT.

DEAR SISTERS:—As superintendent of kindergarten department for the National W. C. T. U., I have accepted the space offered so kindly by the Kindergarten News, hoping through this medium to reach a great number of kindergartners within and without the temperance ranks.

Then I hope also to gain the attention of the American mothers and lead them to study more thoroughly the child-nature and the relation of kindergarten methods to the great reforms we have on our hearts.

Will you give me "a lift" in this undertaking for the sake of our common reverence for motherhood and our common devotion to all that develops the best in childhood?

PLANS OF WORK FOR KINDERGARTENS.

At the National Annual Convention just closed at Denver, the following suggestions were made for work under the kindergarten department:

Schools of Methods at summer Chautauquas should introduce the theory and practice of kindergarten as part of its curriculum. If a practical kindergartner cannot be secured for this work, send for help to the National superintendent.

MOTHERS' MEETINGS.

We must cultivate women who are the educators of the human race, else the new generation cannot accomplish its task. Therefore it is very essential that the study of child-nature and how to develop it aright should be a part of the study of every mothers' meeting. Send to Mrs. Young, 10 Van Buren street, Chicago, Ill., for plans of kindergarten extension by correspondence, prepared especially for mothers' classes by the Chicago Kindergarten College. The following will help in this study, Childhood, its Care and Culture, by Mary Allen West, Household Education, Harriet Martineau, Bits of Home Talk, by H. H., Kindergarten Magazine, contains the latest and best thought and method. Price $1.50. Address Woman's Temple, Chicago. The Kindergarten News, Buffalo, N. Y., has a well selected list of books which can be had for a two-cent stamp on application.

FREE KINDERGARTENS.

Science, religion and morals teach that neglect results either in death or degeneration. Plants and animals grow rank and wild without care. What will be the result of neglected childhood? Who can estimate its extent? Reformers shall ponder well these thoughts, and do all in their power to care for the weakest of all creatures God has made, the children. Their weak instincts put them at the mercy of their surroundings, and their helplessness appeals to us eloquently. Therefore start free kindergartens and you build for temperance and righteousness to come. Send to the Kindergarten News for information and catalogue of materials for starting one.

PUBLIC KINDERGARTENS.

Public opinion rules in America, says Bryce, in "American Commonwealth," therefore I say make public opinion by circulating literature and by public lectures on the various phases of kindergarten work. Mrs. Lucretia W. Treat, principal of Grand Rapids, Michigan Training School, is a very acceptable speaker, because she talks of that which she has tried in her years of practical work.

Miss Elizabeth Harrison is the Frances Willard of kindergarten reform; address her 10 Van Buren street, Chicago, Ill. The National superintendent may be able to make some engagements in the spring and summer.

By offering to support a kindergarten in a public school building for a year, you will be giving an ignorant public and an indifferent school board an object lesson which may result in the adoption of the system as part of the school work. Legislation needs influencing, also; a law incorporating the kindergarten as part of the state public school system, should be passed in every state.

Please have these suggestions read in the union meeting, and have a superintendent appointed in state and local societies to carry out these plans.

MARY E. MCDOWELL,
Evanston, Ill., 117 Maple Ave. Nat. Supt.

PETITION OF THE WORLD'S WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION FOR THE PROTECTION OF THE HOME

Addressed to the Governments of the World.

Honored Rulers, Representatives and Brothers:

We, your Petitioners, although belonging to the physically weaker sex, are strong of heart to love our homes, our native land, and the world's family of nations.

We know that clear brains and pure hearts make honest lives and happy homes, and that by these the nations prosper, and the time is brought nearer when the world shall be at peace.

We know that indulgence in Alcohol and Opium, and in other vices which disgrace our social life, makes misery for all the world, and most of all for us and for our children.

We know that stimulants and opiates are sold under legal guarantees which make the Governments partners in the traffic, by accepting as revenue a portion of the profits, and we know with shame that they are often forced by treaty upon populations, either ignorant or unwilling.

We know that the law might do much, now left undone, to raise the moral tone of society, and render vice difficult.

We have no power to prevent these great iniquities beneath which the whole world groans, but you have power to redeem the honor of the nations from an indefensible complicity.

We therefore come to you with the united voices of representative women of every land, beseeching you to raise the standard of the law to that of Christian morals, to strip away the safeguards and sanctions of the state from the drink traffic and the opium trade, and to protect our homes by the total prohibition of these curses of civilization throughout all the territory over which your Government extends.

NAMES. | RESIDENCES.

We must have one million names this year. Will not men and women, youths and maidens, boys and girls, who love the great cause of home protection, paste this petition on a nice, white sheet of paper and circulate it to the best of their ability, sending the names to Miss Alice E. Briggs, Rest Cottage, Evanston, Ill.?

Our Library Table.

Lovers of Lowell—and who does not love that rare, strong, sweet, spirit—will welcome a volume entitled LOWELL'S PROSE WORKS which comprises six lectures on "THE OLD ENGLISH DRAMATISTS," — Marlowe, Webster, Chapman, Beaumont and Fletcher, Massinger and Ford —in which the author shows himself in the character of a keen, deserving, yet generous critic. The frontispiece is a beautiful portrait of Lowell himself.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., New York.

PROSE IDYLS, by John Albee. These are just what the brief title calls them, poems in prose—poems of reflection, poems of joy and sorrow, odd scraps of leisurely philosophy, quaint romancings with unexpected turns of quiet humor. A thoroughly non-practical, delightful little volume, not without its words of wisdom here and there and bright with many loving touches of nature—in the material world and in the human heart.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

THE EVERY DAY OF LIFE, by the Rev. J. R. Miller, D. D. This is one of the helpful books. Written in a simple, unaffected style, it deals with the problems on the soul-side of our lives in a hearty, glowing way that cannot fail of giving comfort and inspiration to those who read. Dr. Miller does not talk away from his theme—life in its every-day dress of perplexity and pain, but talks through and through it, illuminating it with a light that emanates from a soul clear-lit in itself by the true Light, Christ.

Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York and Boston.

William Elliot Griffis is the author of JAPAN: IN HISTORY, FOLK-LORE AND ART, published as one of the Riverside Library for young people. The volume is charmingly adapted to young readers, and has no lack of attraction for those older. The author in a very happy manner links the past Japan with the present, and avoiding tediousness of narration, puts his reader readily en rapport with this gentle people who are fast advancing into the highest planes of civilization. The book is valuable for reference and as readable as any "story-book."

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

STIRRING THE EAGLE'S NEST is the title of a volume of sermons, practical discourses, by Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D., late pastor of the Lafayette Avenue church, Brooklyn. The "discourses" which are really warm soul-to-soul talks, thrill with spiritual fervor and are weighted with intense earnestness. Every sentence tells. Every paragraph is pointed. Every chapter is a complete whole with one purpose visible throughout—"Christ and Him crucified."

Published by the Baker & Taylor Company, 740 Broadway, New York City.

Margaret Deland, perhaps best known as the author of "John Ward, Preacher," has sent out to her large circle of readers, "The Story of a Child," which is at once original, quaint, intensely interesting and valuable for the delineation of child-character. The child is Ellen, a warm-hearted, affectionate little one with an over-active imagination, a great dramatic instinct and a touch of morbid sensitiveness. These characteristics under a wise mothering might have been carefully directed into healthful channels, but the grandmother, who in spite of her love for Ellen was stern and repellant, thinking it her duty to be so, misunderstood the tender little life and many were the mishaps, serious and amusing, that came to Miss Ellen. A bit of a love story is dexterously interwoven through the agency of minor characters, making a story not easily laid down till entirely read.

Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston and New York.

Among the Columbian Historical Novels is the fourth in the series, POCAHONTAS, A STORY OF VIRGINIA, by John R. Musik. Pocahontas is a name to conjure with on this continent, a name that strikes a sympathetic chord, a name which can hardly fail to awaken a passing regret that a race capable of producing so noble a type of womanhood should have been doomed to extinction in the inevitable struggle for race supremacy. The author has done wisely in selecting her as the heroine of the historic drama of that period; while truth demanded that she and that splendid type of heroic manhood from the Old World, Captain John Smith, should be assigned the leading parts. As in the preceding volumes of this series, an Estevan plays an important part, the Estevan of "Pocahontas and Virginia" transferred to English soil becomes plain Phillip Stevens. Young folks particularly will be delighted in the possession of a copy of this book and it will not fail to instruct them in heroism and inspire patriotism.

Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York City.

A cream of tartar baking powder. Highest of all in leavening strength.—Latest United States Government Food Report.

Royal Baking Powder Co.
106 Wall St., N. Y.

Two Stepping Stones

to consumption are ailments we often deem trivial—a cold and a cough. Consumption thus acquired is rightly termed "Consumption from neglect."

Scott's Emulsion

not only stops a cold but it is remarkably successful where the cough has become deep seated.

Scott's Emulsion is the richest of fat-foods yet the easiest fat-food to take. It arrests waste and builds up healthy flesh.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

Asthma The African Kola Plant, discovered in Congo, West Africa, is Nature's Sure Cure for Asthma. Cure Guaranteed or No Pay. Export Office, 1164 Broadway, New York. For Large Trial Case, FREE by Mail, address KOLA IMPORTING CO., 132 Vine St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

WHICH ONE SHALL WE SEND YOU

EACH CATALOGUE IS COMPLETE IN ITSELF.

Accordions, Auto Harps, Auto Harp Music, Banjos, Banjo Music, Violins, Violin Music, Violin Bows, Clarinets, Flutes, Violin Cases, Clarinet Music, Flute Music, Guitars, Cornets, Violin Repairing, Guitar Music, Cornet Music, Harmonicas,

C. C. STORY, 26 and 28 Central St., Boston, Mass.

RHEUMATISM POSITIVELY CURED.

Also Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia, Numbness, and Blood Disorders, resulting from excesses, impaired circulation, or sluggish liver, by wearing

TRADE MARK. DR. BRIDGMAN'S full-power ELECTRO-MAGNETIC RING, a quick and reliable remedy, as thousands testify, and it WILL CURE YOU

"Offices of the New York Bottling Co., N. Y.

"Dr. Bridgman's Ring quickly cured me after years of intense suffering from Rheumatism. Ten thousand dollars would not buy mine if I could not obtain another. I confidently recommend it to all. "GEO. W. RAYNER, "President."

"Dr. Bridgman's Ring has performed most miraculous cures of Rheumatism. "O. VANDERBILT, N. Y."

"I have not had a twinge of Rheumatism since wearing Dr. Bridgman's Ring. JUDGE REYNOLDS, "N. Y. City."

Thousands of others offer similar testimony.

We have supplied these rings to Harrison, Cleveland, Blaine, Depew, Gladstone, Bismarck, and other eminent men. Their effect is marvellous. Price $1 plain finish, and $2.50 heavy gold plated. All sizes. For sale by Druggists and Jewellers, or we will mail it postpaid, on receipt of price and size.

There is absolutely no other ring but Dr. Bridgman's possessing real merit for the cure of Rheumatism. Beware of imitations.

The A. Bridgman Co., 373 Broadway, N. Y.
—AND—
1124 MASONIC TEMPLE, CHICAGO.

$2,000 GOLD COIN for Best Work made from CLASCO Twilled Lace Thread

Time for Sending in Articles EXTENDED.

Send for Circulars and particulars.

Illustrated Crochet Books, Nos. 1, 2 and 3, 10 cents each. 12 Nice Tidy Patterns, 5 cents each. 12 Bed Spread Patterns, 5 cents each, all postpaid. Either of above books sent free with an order for 12 patterns.
GLASGO LACE THREAD CO., Glasgo, Conn.

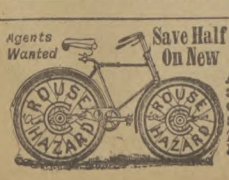
CENTRAL SUPPLY CO. CHICAGO

SAWYER'S Pocket Encyclopedia,

Containing over a million facts and figures. Giving general information on all subjects to all professions and occupations and a library in itself, will be sent, postage paid, to any address, upon receipt of 35 cents. Mention this paper.

CENTRAL SUPPLY CO., CHICAGO

Agents Wanted



Save Half On New BICYCLES

A $25 cycle for $12; others as low. Largest & oldest dealers in the U. S. We sell everywhere. Easy payments if desired. Cata. free. ROUSE, HAZARD & CO. G St., PEORIA, ILL.

Publisher's Notes.

THE UNION SIGNAL.

Subscription Rates for 1892.

UNIFORM RATES.

One copy per year in advance	$1.00
" " " 3 months	.25
" " " 1 month	.10
For distribution at Conventions, County Fairs, etc., per 100 copies	1.70

OTHER PAPERS ISSUED BY THE W. T. P. A.

The Oak and Ivy Leaf, published monthly. Price per year	$ .25
Young Crusader, monthly one copy, (12 Nos.) per annum	.15

Address all orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

HOW TO DO IT.

The subjoined method has our hearty indorsement:

I want to see the Crusader in more of the Sunday-schools, and have generally found it can be accomplished if there is an earnest W. C. T. U. woman in the church or Sunday-school who will place the matter before the Sunday-school committee, and urge it. But as the woman must be a working member of that individual church, it has occurred to me that it might be a good plan for the vice-presidents of each local union to be appointed a committee to act in conjunction with the local superintendent of literature in this matter, and it be generally understood that one of the duties of the vice-president is to see that the Crusader is used at least monthly in her Sunday-school. If this meets your approbation will you make the suggestion to the workers? STATE SUP'T LOYAL LEGION.

It is hoped that local unions will earnestly recommend this plan to the vice-presidents.

READ THIS.

We have just completed arrangements with the publishers of Current Topics, a fine new magazine of great value, and can furnish it together with THE UNION SIGNAL for $1.50 per year. This is a very fine opportunity to secure good reading at a nominal cost. Current Topics is a live, sixty-four page monthly magazine, and a marvel at the price offered. It contains articles from the leading thinkers of the country on popular subjects. As a special feature, in each issue will appear articles direct from the different officials of the World's Fair, informing the readers upon this great enterprise. Mrs. Potter Palmer, president of the Board of Lady Managers, begins a series of articles in the first issue. Every number will also contain choice poetry and fiction.

Old and new subscribers alike can have the benefit of this offer—$1.50 for both, separately, $1 each.

READY.

Columbus is ready to tell you "what he found." The frontispiece represents the boy, Columbus, seated on a post, with his foot resting on a ring for the fastening of ships to the docks. The face is strong and worthy of study. It is from a photograph of the original statue in marble in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. The book contains 270 pages of attractive print with side titles, helping the child-reader to grasp the thought of the page. The contents are of exceeding interest, and will be eagerly read by the young people for whom it was written, as well as by their seniors. It should be in every home.

Price $1, worth $1.50. Address orders to
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL.

Read what they say. Comment is not necessary:

Rev. E. S. Ufford, author of that beautiful hymn and its music, "Throw out the Life Line," says: "I am sure the White Ribbon Hymnal will have a world-wide circulation. It is beautifully printed, and the compiler has shown excellent taste in its make-up."

Chas. T. Kimball, of Green Bay, says: "I am more than pleased with the systematic grouping of beautiful pieces in the White Ribbon Hymnal. Like its predecessors, the two books of Marching Songs and the Y. W. C. T. U. Song Book, it is a gem. There is no doubt as to its future. At the great meeting in Exeter Hall, London, January 9, where Miss Willard will be welcomed by the United Temperance Societies of Great Britian, the music will be rendered by a chorus of 500 voices with orchestral accompaniment, and the selections will all be taken from the new White Ribbon Hymnal and Y. W. C. T. U. Song Book."

Subscribers Secured Simply Showing Single Specimen.

$10,000.00
In Cash Bonus Prizes.

First Prize,	$3,000.00
Second Prize,	1,750.00
Third Prize,	1,250.00
Fourth Prize,	1,000.00
Fifth Prize,	800.00
Sixth Prize,	750.00
Seventh Prize,	500.00
Eighth Prize,	250.00
Ninth Prize,	200.00
Tenth Prize,	150.00
Eleventh Prize,	100.00
Twelfth Prize,	85.00
Thirteenth Prize,	75.00
Fourteenth Prize,	50.00
Fifteenth Prize,	25.00
Sixteenth Prize,	15.00
	$10,000.00

One of these amounts, as a bonus, will be paid in addition to a cash commission on every bona fide yearly subscriber to Godey's Magazine to the individual who complies with conditions and secures and remits $3.00 each for the necessary number of yearly subscribers applying to each prize. Remember you get a cash commission on every subscription for which $3.00 is sent, in any event, and if active, it is possible for you to secure any one of these prizes, but only one.

A committee to consist of three representative men, ex-Postmaster General Thomas L. James, President of Lincoln National Bank, N. Y., chairman, Mr. Frederick W. Seward, Ass't Secretary of State Lincoln Cabinet, Hon. E. Prentiss Bailey, Editor of Utica Observer and Chairman of N. Y. State Board of Civil Service Commissioners will judge in the distribution of prizes. For further necessary particulars send stamp this hour for our "PRIZE PROPOSITION."

GODEY PUBLISHING CO.,
21 Park Row, New York City.

A complete novel, every number, expensively illustrated—everybody's feature.

Water color portraits with autographs of living Society leaders an irresistable charm.

The seventy odd Books reviewed by John Habberton a unique guide to those who read.

From $35

WE DO IT EVERY TIME! Save you from $50 to $200

HOW DO WE DO IT?

We sell from our factory at wholesale prices direct to the public, saving them all agents' and dealers' exorbitant profits. We are doing a marvellous business. One thousand Pianos and Organs per month. WONDERFUL, but true! To prove it, send for our new catalogue, illustrated in colors. It is FREE to any address. Examine it, and you will see that we are selling

ORGANS and PIANOS For CASH and on EASY PAYMENTS

at prices that are simply WONDERFULLY LOW. We have now some of the finest styles of Organs and Pianos ever manufactured. Our new catalogue shows all the latest. Our twenty-sixth annual special offers are now ready. We have bargains in all styles and at all prices. Organs from $35. Pianos from $175, for cash or on easy payment. We have the largest direct trade in the world. We have a larger factory and employ more men than any firm doing a direct business. You can visit our factory FREE if you live within 200 miles of us.

. . . NOTE . . . We are absolutely responsible for all our contracts.

REFERENCES: First National Bank, and all the great Commercial Agencies.

From $175

NO SATISFACTION, NO PAY! All instruments shipped on free trial warranted for ten years.

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE AT ONCE TO

CORNISH & Co. Old Established & Reliable Washington, NEW JERSEY.

Recommended for Comfort, Support and Fine Form. Combines best features of Corset and Waist. Much worn by women and misses unable to bear a rigorous garment. Snug fitting, beautifully made Jackson Favorite Waist. Warranted. Equal to any $1.25 Waist. White, Drab, Gold, Black. Genuine marked CCC. 7,000 dealers sell it. Sent post paid for $1. CORONET CORSET CO. JACKSON, Michigan.

For 6 cts. postage and addresses of ten friends the Housekeeper's Weekly, 14 N. 9th, Phila., sends FREE a supply of safety cases for mailing coins, and one number of that charming magazine. MARION HARLAND [illegible]

PRINTING OUTFIT 15c

COMPLETE, 4 alphabets rubber type, type holder, bottle Indelible Ink, Ink Pad and Tweezers. Put up in neat box with directions for use. Satisfaction guaranteed. Worth 50c. Best Linen Marker, Card Printer, etc. Sets names in 1 minute, prints 500 cards an hour. Sent postpaid 15c; 2 for 25c, Cat. free. E. H. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 Cortlandt St. N. Y. City.

RHEUMATISM If you suffe
ECZEMA it's your ow ault. Address Dr. W. H
ROSS, Grand Rapids, Mich

BORSCH-OPTICIAN 103 E. ADAMS ST. CONSULT US ABOUT YOUR EYESIGHT

SHINGLING THE RUM-SELLER'S ROOF.

BY REV. ROBERT WHITAKER.

One night a poor wretch in a wayside saloon,
Who lingered half-drunken about,
Heard the voice of the rum-seller's wife, as she said,
"Go, put yonder drunken fool out."
The rum-seller laughed as he shrewdly replied,
In tones that would brook no reproof,
"Let him stay if he will, he's doing no harm,
The fellow is shingling our roof."

CHORUS—
Are you shingling the rum-seller's roof?
Are you shingling the rum-seller's roof?
While your own house decays, are you spending your days,
In shingling the rum-seller's roof?

The months passed away, but he came not again,
The rum-seller noted with pain.
And seeking him out, with hospitable air,
He begged his "old friend" to explain.
"You want me to visit again your saloon,
And ask why I linger aloof?
With thanks for your kindness allow me to say,
Because I am shingling my roof."

Ye men who are shingling the rum-seller's roof!
By robbing yourselves and your own,
Remember the winter of life draweth nigh,
And soon will the summer have flown.
'Twill little avail in the day of God's wrath,
To offer high heaven the proof,
That your house is now desolate only because,
You've shingled some rum-seller's roof.

And woe to the man with the rum-seller's heart,
Who covers himself at the cost
Of manhood and womanhood, marred and despoiled;
Whose gain is that others are lost.
In the day when his house shall fall in on himself,
The weight of his sins shall have proof,
When the lost whom he ruined shall crush him and cry,
"We shingled the rum-seller's roof."

Salem, Oregon.

A NEW YEAR'S SHOT.

BY CHARLES N. SINNETT.

"It will quicken up your hearing."

"Help straighten out your lame knee, too."

"And steady your nerves, so that you can hit something when you fire again, Gunner!"

Those were a few of the teasing words which some of the Starrett Island boys shouted to Nathan Hurst.

It was New Year's, and the anniversary of his mother's death. He had felt all the morning that it was the loneliest day which had ever dawned upon him.

The boys had noticed his sad look. They thought that he might be tempted to taste the liquor they offered him.

"His father couldn't stand the smell of it when he was provoked or lonesome," one of the fellows had whispered. "He'd clutch at it like a madman."

But Nathan did not reach out his hand toward the bottle. He looked off toward the graveyard. That view also took in the lonesome house where he had lived with his Uncle Dan since his father had gone away and never been heard from; his mother buried on the hill, his uncle waiting to scold him, the boys determined to annoy him all the day. What should he do? His heart ached. But he did not once offer to touch the poisonous stuff which one of the boys held out to him again.

"I would not taste that though I could not hear a word and had two crooked knees and knew it would make me well." That was what Nathan said firmly but kindly, and then went limping down to the beach.

But not so fast but that Link Hutton shouted after him, "You'd make a fine preacher. Nobody'd need an ear trumpet when you spoke. Only you'd have to aim your sermons better than you do your gun."

"Gunner," another lad called shrilly.

The fellows all laughed. Slow to hear, lame, and so nervous that his attempts to shoot sea fowl usually ended in failure, they felt that they were far superior to him.

But while they hurried into the fish-house to have "a good New Years time" with the liquor, Nathan launched his old dory. He had carried his gun to the shore with him and now laid it carefully in the bow of the boat.

The wind howled and the cold fog blew in from sea. But Nathan did not seem to heed either as he rowed away towards the South Ledges.

Only once did he stop and rest upon his oars. That was when these swift thoughts flashed through his mind. "The ducks often swim close into shore in a day like this. If I was just careful, and kept from getting nervous I might go back with more of them than any of the boys ever killed at one time."

But another thought followed these, "Your mother never felt like that towards any one who had wronged her."

With that remembrance he checked his bitter feelings and rowed on.

But he landed on the South Ledges. When he had crept carefully over to their leeward side he saw two sea ducks. Both of them were large. They were swimming nearer to the rocks all the time. When they dove a few times more he felt sure that they would be within easy range of his gun. And Uncle Dan, who was so lame with rheumatism, had been wishing for a duck for the last two days. Indeed, he had said to Nathan more than once, "If you were smart and bright you'd shoot me one. But it's no use to send you. You couldn't hit a fowl right at the muzzle of your gun."

What was that that Uncle Dan had called after him as he came out of his lonesome house that very day?

"You'd better bring me back a duck for a New Year's present."

How that had hurt him. But his mother's dying words had calmed him as the remembrance of them had when he was rowing out to the Ledges.

"Nathan," she had said, "you must never forget that Christ came to the world for those who hated and despised Him. You will love Him. If any should speak harshly to you, I am sure that you would try and do all that you could for them in the true Christian spirit."

He ought, then, to get the ducks for Uncle Dan and the boys. But suppose he fired and missed them? Wouldn't the shot be heard by the boys? Wouldn't they watch until he got back and shout his old nickname? Yes, he was sure of all this. He seemed to hear the rocks echoing, "Gunner!" But he aimed, and fired. The ducks struggled on the water for a moment and then dove as though they were not badly hurt. And then a cry from seaward. Was that some one shouting, "Gunner"? He bravely looked. The fog lifted, and there was a spar with some one lashed to it tossed on the crest of the wave. The boy limped over the rocks, launched his dory, and saved the man at the peril of his life. When he rowed into the harbor the boys saw him coming. Nathan knew how they thronged to the edge of the beach. He expected to hear their shrill taunts about his New Year's shot. But he rowed bravely on. The happy light in his face brightened all the time.

"They're waving their caps. I believe they know me, Nathan," said the rescued man in the stern of the dory.

When the boy looked around he couldn't help hearing their cheer, "Hurrah for Nathan and his father!"

"Must have seen us from the hill with a spy-glass," the boy said gratefully, and rowed on with all his might.

The boys rushed down and dragged the dory far up on the beach. And how they shook Nathan's hand!

"I was wrecked last night in the fog. I should have been lost but for him," said Skipper Hurst. "And I should have been lost in my sins but for my wife's prayers. They were leading me home a trusting man, When I heard that gun I said, 'Maybe that's my dear boy Nathan that I've left so long.' I called with all my powers. He got me."

"But he gave us a better New Year's shot before he went off to the Ledges," said Link Hutton. "We all meant to drink and carouse. But what he said about his not touching the poison—that went straight to my heart. We threw the liquor away before he was half way out of the cove. We never mean to touch a drop again. We'll help you both to have a first-rate New Year's Day." And they kept their word.

Chesterfield, N. H.

THE SWEETEST THINGS OF EARTH.

What are the sweetest things of earth?—
Lips that can praise a rival's worth;
A fragrant rose that hides no thorn;
Riches of gold untouched by scorn.
A happy little child asleep;
Eyes that can smile though they may weep;
A brother's cheer: a father's praise;
The minstrelsy of summer days.
A heart where never anger burns;
A gift that looks for no returns;
Wrong's overthrow; pain's swift release;
Dark footsteps guided into peace.
The light of love in lover's eyes;
Age that is young as well as wise;
An honest hand that needs no ward;
A life with right in true accord.
A hope-bud waxing into joy;
A happiness without alloy;
A mother's kiss; a baby's mirth—
These are the sweetest things of earth.

—Emma C. Dowd.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:—A happy New Year to you all I know you had a merry Christmas for you had been planning and looking forward to it for so long. Did you not enjoy the giving just as much as the receiving? Perhaps more? Yes, because Christ has taught it is more blessed to give than to receive, and it is so.

Now there's another year just beginning. What a long time a year is! But not too long for us temperance workers, is it? There's so much for us to do, and happy service In His Name for others will make the time fly, oh so fast! Yours, "to improve the shining hours,"

Aunt Janie

COZY CORNER LETTERS.

We all like THE UNION SIGNAL, especially the Cozy Corner. I like that name real well. Please answer and tell me if I have filled the blanks in "Our Thanksgiving Dinner" correctly. May I be a little niece of yours? From HATTIE KELLOGG.

Indianola, Neb.

Indeed you may, Hattie. Your answers to the Thanksgiving puzzle were right.

This is my second letter to you. I like to read the letters from my cousins all over the country. I belong to the Mission Band. We had an entertainment on Thanksgiving. We had nuts and candy. We got four dollars clear.

MINNIE SINCLAIR.

That must have been a very pleasant entertainment. I am glad to hear from you again.

We would like to join the Loyal Temperance Legion. There is none here. Is there any way that we can become members? We are eleven and nine years old. Mamma takes THE UNION SIGNAL and we read the Cozy Corner.

OSCAR A. BECKWITH.
IVAN C. BECKWITH.

Ilia, Garfield Co., Wash.

Yes, boys, I think you can become active members and a part of the great Loyal Temperance Legion. First I would write to your state superintendent of L. T. L., asking to have your names enrolled and what the membership fee may be. If you have no state superintendent write to the National superintendent, Mrs. Helen G. Rice, 1597 Washington street, Boston. Then I would send for The Young Crusader, the paper which tells what the L. T. L. is doing all over the world. Send to the W. T. P. A., 1110 W. C. T. U. Temple, Chicago, Ill.; fifteen cents per year. By getting other boys and girls interested, first thing you knew, there would be a real live L. T. L. as a result of your efforts; for some good temperance worker who loved children would be sure to come and be your leader Try it, boys, and tell the Cozy Corner how you succeed.

SOFT-SHELLED NUTS.

135.

A NEW YEAR ENIGMA.

I am composed of thirteen letters.
My 8, 2, 12 is a domestic animal.
My 1, 9, 10, 11 is something that boys and girls like in winter.
My 6, 7, 4 is commonly seen on farms.
My 3, 13, 5 is a verb meaning to possess.
My whole is a good resolution for the new year.

JOSIE E. COBBEY.

136.

CHARADE.

My first you'll not deny
Is a very little thing,
Not larger than a fish's eye
Or little birdie's wing.

My second it is very true,
One sees on public street,
In church or hall or school room,
Where the little children meet.

My whole a poet pure and brave,
The humblest had his love;
He seemeth dead but lives in peace,
With holy ones above.

A. L.

ANSWERS TO PUZZLES PUBLISHED DECEMBER 8.

126. S-tan-d. H-eave-n. A-skin-g. K-now-n. E-ye-s. S-hut-s. P-lea-d. E-art-h. A-si-a. R-is-e. E-as-t: SHAKESPEARE.

127. For God and Home and Native Land.

128.
A C E R
C A R O
E R R S
R O S E

129. 1. A rolling stone gathers no moss. 2. Spare the rod and spoil the child.

Correct answers: Maggie Childs; Leonora B. Perrine.

A DETROIT MIRACLE.

A GREAT TRIUMPH FOR MEDICAL SCIENCE.

Particulars of One of the Most Remarkable Cures on Record Described by the Detroit News--A Story Worth a Careful Perusal.

DETROIT, MICH., December 28, 1892.

A case has just come to light here, the particulars of which are published in the Evening News, which will be read with considerable interest, as it records the remarkable achievement of a medical discovery, which has already won great and enduring fame. The story is told by the News as follows:

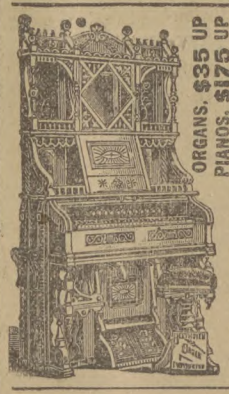
The following paragraph, which appeared in the News a short time ago, furnished the basis of this information—a case that was so wonderfully remarkable that it demanded further explanation. It is of sufficient importance to the News' readers to report it to them fully. It was so important then that it attracted considerable attention at the time. The following is the paragraph in question:

"C. B. Northrop, for 28 years one of the best known merchants on Woodward avenue, who was supposed to be dying last spring of locomotor ataxia, or creeping paralysis, has secured a new lease of life and returned to work at his store. The disease has always been supposed to be incurable, but Mr. Northrop's condition has greatly improved, and it looks now as if the grave would be cheated of its prey."

Since that time Mr. Northrop has steadily improved, not only in looks, but in condition, till he has regained his old-time strength.

It had been hinted to the writer of this article, who was acquainted with Mr. Northrop, that this miraculous change had been wrought by a very simple remedy called Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. When asked about it Mr. Northrop fully verified the statement, and not only so, but he had taken pains to inform any one who was suffering in a similar manner when he heard of any such case. Mr. Northrop was enthusiastic at the result in his own case of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It was a remedy that he had heard of after he had tried everything he could hope to give him relief. He had been in the care of the best physicians who did all they could to alleviate this terrible malady, but without any avail. He had given up hope, when a friend in Lockport, N. Y., wrote him of the case of a person there who had been cured in similar circumstances by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The person cured at Lockport had obtained his information respecting Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from an article published in the Hamilton, Ont., Times. The case was called "The Hamilton Miracle," and told the story of a man in that city who, after almost incredible suffering, was pronounced by the most eminent physicians to be incurable and permanently disabled. He had spent hundreds of dollars in all sorts of treatment and appliances only to be told in the end that there was no hope for him, and that cure was impossible. The person alluded to (Mr. Mr. John Marshall, of 25 Little William St., Hamilton, Ont.), was a member of the Royal Templars of Temperance, and after having been pronounced permanently disabled and incurable by the physicians, was paid the $1,000 insurance disability provided by the order for its members in such cases. For years Mr. Marshall had been utterly helpless, and he was barely able to drag himself around the house with the aid of crutches. His agonies were almost unbearable and life was a burden to him, when at last relief came. Some months after he had been paid the disability claim he heard of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and was induced to try them. The result was miraculous; almost from the outset an improvement was noticed; and in a few months the man whom medical experts had said was incurable, was going about the city healthier and stronger than before. Mr. Marshall was so well known in Hamilton that all the city newspapers wrote up his wonderful recovery in detail, and it was thus as before stated, that Mr. Northrop came into possession of the information that led to his equally marvelous recovery. One could scarcely conceive a case more hopeless than that of Mr. Northrop. His injury came about in this way: One day nearly four years ago, he stumbled and fell the complete length of a steep flight of stairs which were at the rear of his store. His head and spine were severely injured. He was picked up and taken to his home. Creeping paralysis very soon developed itself, and in spite of the most strenuous efforts of friends and physicians the terrible affliction fastened itself upon him. For nearly two years he was perfectly helpless, and could do nothing to support his strength in the least effort. He had to be wheeled about in an invalid's chair. He was weak, pale and fast sinking when this timely information came that veritably snatched his life from the jaws of death. Those who at that time saw a feeble old man wheeled into his store on an invalid's chair, would not recognize the man now, so great is the change that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have wrought. When Mr. Northrop learned of the remedy that had cured Mr. Marshall in Hamilton, and the person in Lockport, he procured a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through Messrs. Bassett & L'Hommedieu, 95 Woodward avenue, and from the outset found an improvement. He faithfully adhered to the use of the remedy until now he is completely restored. Mr. Northrop declares that there can be no doubt as to Pink Pills being the cause of his restoration to health, as all other remedies and medical treatment left him in a condition rapidly going from bad to worse, until at last it was declared there was no hope for him and he was pronounced incurable. He was in this terrible condition when he began to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and they have restored him to health.

Mr. Northrop was asked what was claimed for this wonderful remedy, and replied that he understood the proprietors claim it to be a blood builder and nerve restorer, supplying in a condensed form all the elements necessary to enrich the blood, restore the shattered nerves and drive out disease. It is claimed by the proprietors that Pink Pills will cure paralysis, rheumatism, sciatica, palpitation of the heart, headache, and all diseases peculiar to females, loss of appetite, dizziness, sleeplessness, loss of memory and all diseases arising from overwork, mental worry, loss of vital force, etc. "I want to say," said Mr. Northrop, "that I don't have much faith in patent medicines, but I cannot say too much in praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The proprietors, however, claim that they are not a patent medicine in the sense in which that term is used, but a highly scientific preparation, the result of years of careful study and experiment on the part of the proprietors, and the pills were successfully used in private practice for years before being placed for general sale. Mr. Northrop declares that he is a living example that there is nothing to equal these pills as a cure for nerve diseases. On inquiry the writer found that these pills were manufactured by Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y., and Brockville, Ont., and the pills are sold in boxes (never in bulk by the hundred) at 50 cents a box and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams, Medicine Co., from either above addresses. The price at which these pills are sold makes a course of treatment with them comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment. This case is one of the most remarkable on record, and as it is one right here in Detroit, and not a thousand miles away, it can be easily verified. Mr. Northrop is very well known to the people in Detroit, and he says he is only too glad to testify of the marvelous good wrought in his case. He says he considers it his duty to help all who are similarly afflicted by any word he can say in behalf of the wonderful efficacy of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. If any of THE UNION SIGNAL readers want any further information, we feel sure Mr. Northrop would willingly oblige them, as he has the writer in relating these facts to him.



ORGANS, $35 UP
PIANOS, $175 UP

FREE.

Our large 24-page Catalogue, profusely illustrated, full of information on the proper construction of Pianos and Organs. We ship on test trial, ask no cash in advance, sell on instalments, give greater value for the money than any other manufacturer Send for this book at once to

BEETHOVEN ORGAN CO., WASHINGTON, N. J. P. O. Box 701

A CENT SENT BENT.

Manufacturer of
"CROWN" PIANOS AND ORGANS.

WELL SPENT, is a cent sent to Bent, (your address, on postal) if you wish a Piano or Organ I want verses about the "Crown" goods, and give Pianos, Organs, etc., for the best ones. Ask and learn how it's done. Catalogue free. GEO. P. BENT, (Clerk No. 52), Chicago, Ill. (Estab. 1870).

IF YOU WANT

Work that is pleasant and profitable send us your address immediately. We teach men and women how to earn from $5 per day to $3,000 per year without having had previous experience, and furnish the employment at which they can make that amount. Capital unnecessary. A trial will cost you nothing. Write to-day and address

E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, ME.
Box 1150.

Publisher's Notes.

TESTIMONIALS.

Lady Gay.

From the Writer:—"Lady Gay" is a child's book, about real children, written by one who loves them and whose book makes others love them, too. In these degenerate days, when so much worthless stuff is published in children's books and most of the children's magazines are filled with stories that a careful mother has to "edit" as she reads them aloud, in order to make them safe for her little ones to hear, it is a delight to find such a good, wholesome, natural story of child life as Mrs. Archibald has written. If grown folks, moreover, do not enjoy "Lady Gay" quite as much as the children will, one reader, at least, is very much mistaken. Mrs. Archibald is a living contradiction of the slander that a woman can not be a humorist. A delightful humor characterizes her book and makes the unconscious humor of the children she tells about seem all the more enjoyable. Altogether, "Lady Gay" is a most enchanting book, and parents will do well to remember it when birthdays or the Christmas holidays come round."

The Young Crusader.

"What a dear little Crusader it is and how much good it is doing. I feel proud to be invited to speak a little word to all your boys and girls."

"I consider The Young Crusader a child's paper without a peer, pure and clear, sweet and helpful from beginning to end, and I am constantly pressing it upon the workers in Sunday-school department to get up clubs for it. "It is fast growing in popularity, and needs but to be seen to be appreciated. Send for sample copies to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

STILL OPEN.

Several readers have sent inquiries to this office regarding the scholarship in Phillips Business College, and whether the offer to give it for one NEW subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL is still open. In answer we take pleasure in saying that it is, and we hope a thousand or more of our readers, young and old, may take advantage of it. Let us hear from you without delay.

Miss Willard writes that Miss Helen Hood "has set in to make THE UNION SIGNAL a power in England. She will get subscribers 'hand over fist.'"

How many in this country will enter into competition with her? Please report.

EVERYBODY WILL WANT

A copy of "CHILDHOOD; ITS CARE AND CULTURE," by Mary Allen West, as a memento of the great hearted editor who has been so helpful in the past, and who will still speak the words of helpfulness to multitudes of mothers and teachers through the pages of this popular book. Wherever Miss West was known the book will be in great demand.

Do you not want to help place it in the homes where it is needed? By so doing you will help others and in so doing help yourself. If you do, send for circulars giving terms to agents.

"CHILDHOOD; ITS CARE AND CULTURE," is sold only by agents or by the

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

TEMPERANCE MUSIC.

The value and utility of singing in religious work is very generally recognized. Temperance workers might also add much to the efficiency of their labors by the use of rousing songs at their meetings. A few solos, quartettes or choruses well rendered will have a good effect in attracting attention, arousing interest and generating enthusiasm. Of course arrangements are made at all your meetings with these facts in mind. In doing so remember that the second edition of the White Ribbon Hymnal is now ready. It is needless to remind you that it was compiled by Miss Anna Gordon, which is a guarantee of its fine quality. Price 35 cents.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

The "Junior Partners" is finding favor everywhere. Remember it is a book for business men and when they have read it they want their wives and children to read it. It is sold by subscription only or sent from this office on mail orders. Agents wanted. Splendid terms. Apply to

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

3 RULES.

EAT properly,
SLEEP soundly,
BREATHE deeply,

and you ought to live 100 years. But you can't do either if you are suffering with Catarrh. This is a foul disease—so offensive and annoying. Aerated Oxygen, used night and morning, cures the worst cases. Physicians recognize its value. Send for pamphlet.

Send for Pamphlet.
Aerated Oxygen Compound Co., Nashua, N. H.
Chicago Office: 3 & 4 CENTRAL MUSIC HALL.
New York Office: 19 BEEKMAN STREET.

SOLD BY FIRST-CLASS DEALERS

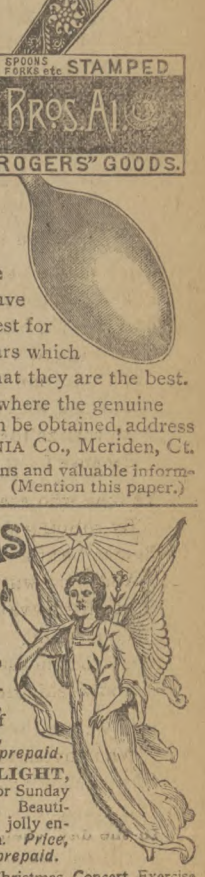
SILVER PLATED SPOONS FORKS etc STAMPED
1847 ROGERS BROS. A1
ARE GENUINE "ROGERS" GOODS.

These goods have stood the test for nearly 50 years which proves conclusively that they are the best.

If you are not sure where the genuine 1847 Rogers Goods can be obtained, address the MERIDEN BRITANNIA CO., Meriden, Ct.

Illustrations of latest designs and valuable information will be mailed you. (Mention this paper.)

CHRISTMAS MUSIC.



New Cantatas, Concert Exercises and Anthems.

EMANUEL, a sacred cantata, in the form of oratorio, by W. A. Ogden. The story of Emanuel told in song. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

SANTA CLAUS' DELIGHT, a merry Christmas Cantata for Sunday schools, by Chas. H. Gabriel. Beautiful music, pretty scenes and a jolly entertainment for the children. Price, 30c.; $3.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

JOY-BELLS, a new Christmas Concert Exercise for Sunday schools, by J. H. Fillmore. Pretty music, recitations, and readings. Price, 5c.; 55c, per dozen post-paid; $4.00 per 100, not prepaid.

HARK! WHAT CELESTIAL SOUNDS, a chorus anthem for choirs, by J. B. Herbert. An anthem of unusual beauty. Price, 10c.

☞ A full descriptive list of all our Christmas Cantatas, Concert Exercises, and Anthems mailed free.

FILLMORE BROS., 141 West Sixth Street, Cincinnati, O., or 40 Bible House, N. Y.

5000 BOOK AGENTS WANTED FOR DARKNESS AND DAYLIGHT

OR LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue work "In His Name" in the great under-world of New York. By Mrs. HELEN CAMPBELL. Introduction By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D.D.

A wonderful book of Christian love and faith. 250 illustrations from flash-light photographs of real life. 41st thousand. The fastest selling book ever published. Agents Wanted,—both Men and Women. ☞ We Give Credit, Extra Terms, and Pay Freights. Outfit free. Write for Circulars to A. D. WORTHINGTON & CO., Hartford, Conn.

Also 5,000 Lady Agents Wanted on Special Terms for

WORTHINGTON'S MAGAZINE

A New, Choice, splendidly illustrated Monthly for Father, Mother, Son, or Daughter. Brimfull of good things for all,—a $4 magazine for $2. The Brightest, Purest, Best and Cheapest. Mary A. Livermore, Helen Campbell, Rev. Dr. Francis E. Clark, and scores of others write for it. The best chance ever offered to Lady Agents. Write for particulars. Address as above.

NEW MAGIC LANTERN

STEREOPTICONS AND LANTERN SLIDES

For Amateurs, Public Lectures, and the Home Circle. PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENTS ARE PROFITABLE. J. B. COLT & CO., manfrs., 16 Beekman St., New York 189 La Salle St., Chicago, Ill. Mention this paper.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL

in your own home. First class Sewing Machines shipped anywhere to anyone at wholesale prices. All latest improvements. Warranted five years. Complete set of attachments FREE. Send for catalogue. Standard Singer Machines, $9.50 to $15.50 $50 Arlington Sewing Machine for $19.50 $60 Kenwood Sewing Machine for $23.50

CASH BUYERS' UNION, 160 W. Van Buren St. B 26 Chicago.

IMPROVED HALL TYPEWRITER.

The best and most simple machine made. Interchangeable Type into all languages. Durable, easiest running, rapid as any. Endorsed by the Clergy and literary people. Send for Illustrated Catalogue. Agents wanted. Address N. Typewriter Co., 611 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

Mme. M. YALE'S

LA FRECKLA
ELECTRIFIES THE WORLD.

BEAUTY IN A BATH.

La Freckla, the Great Mineral Water discovered by Mme. M. Yale, that Celebrated Woman Chemist. It is the only known natural water that has the power of Purifying the Skin and making a Complexion Beautiful.

LA FRECKLA

was named La Freckla because it is a sure cure for Freckles—all one has to do is to bathe the face in it a few times, when the Complexion becomes radiantly beautiful and Every Freckle disappears as if by magic. It removes any spot or stain from the Skin in the same way, only it seems to favor Freckled Faces.

Mme. Yale's own complexion is the most perfect ever seen. Her lovely neck and arms are so perfect one has to look closely to make sure they are not marble, and her face is as fair as the lily and as pink as the rose.

LA FRECKLA

will make any woman who uses it as fair as she.

Price $1.00. For sale by all Druggists, or shipped by Mme. Yale. Address all letters to

MME. M. YALE,
COMPLEXION SPECIALIST,
37 W. 14th St., New York.
46 State St., Chicago, Ill. Mme. M. Yale Co.
Send 6 cents postage for Beauty Book just out.

BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS FOR THE HAIR AND SKIN.

An elegant dressing, Prevents baldness, gray hair, and dandruff. Makes the hair grow thick and soft. Cures eruptions and diseases of the skin. Heals cuts, burns, bruises and sprains. All druggists or by mail 50 cts. 44 Stone St. N.Y.

BEAUTIFUL QUEEN MAB'S

curious eccentricities are illustrated by fine original engravings, in Dr. O. P. Brown's unique Shakesperian Almanac for 1893. One or more sent for distribution among friends, on receipt of address on postal. J. GIBSON BROWN, 47 Grand Street, Jersey City, N. J.

MENDING TISSUE

Repairs clothing better than needle and thread; Silk, Satin, Cotton and Woolen, Kid Gloves, Macintoshes, Umbrellas, etc., all colors. Sample yard, 10c. Three yards, 25c. Twelve yards, 65c. Stamps taken. Agents wanted. Address STAYNER & CO., Providence, R. I.

LADIES without previous business experience are making immense sales of Mme. McCABE'S CORSETS AND WAISTS. Send for agents' terms.
St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

See Name "EVER READY" on back of each DRESS STAY you buy. Take none but them.
YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Michigan.

LADY AGENTS wanted for Thomas' well known Health Corsets. Hand corded. BIG inducements. Thousands annually sold. Experience unnecessary. For terms write H. A. Thomas & Co., Niles, Mich.

DRESS REFORM.

If interested send for my free illustrated booklet describing Healthful Dress for women and children. MRS. S. W. PIKE, 73 Madison Street, Chicago.

$22. FIRST CLASS CURTAIN DESK Four and a Half feet long. Unlimited variety in stock and to order.
American Desk & Seating Co.
270-272 Wabash Av., CHICAGO, U.S.A.

THE BABY will be given a beautiful birthday card if the mother will send baby's name and age to Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt. This is done to advertise LACTATED FOOD. The food that SAVES BABIES' LIVES.

ROCK BOTTOM Prices on Dry Goods, Groceries. Everything you eat, wear or use. Send for FREE Illustrated Catalogue to
H. R. EAGLE & CO., 68 Wabash Av., Chicago, Ill
We do not sell liquors in any shape.

SPECIALTIES for AGENTS Ladies and Gents.
Rubber Gloves & Dress Shields, Convertible Wire Baskets, Self Threading Needles, Handy Button, and many others. Catg. free. CHICAGO SPECIALTY CO. 134 Van Buren St. Chicago

WALL PAPER. Good Paper, 3c. Gold Paper, 5c. Large package of beautiful samples and guide, "How to Paper," sent FREE. ALFRED PEATS, Wall Paper Merchant. 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO, ILL.

HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES. Agents Wanted. Catalogue free
Cline Mfg. Co., 67 W. Wash. st., Chicago

BEATTY Piano, Organ, $33 up. Want agents Cat. free. Dan'l F. Beatty, Washton, N. J.

Publisher's Notes.

OUR DAY,
A Record and Review of Current Reform.
JOSEPH COOK, EDITOR.

ASSOCIATE EDITORS.

Frances E. Willard. Prof. J. E. Rankin, D.D.
Mrs. Mary H. Hunt. Anthony Comstock.
John H. Barrows, D. D. Ex-Pres. Cyrus Hamlin, D. D.
Rev. Jas. B. Dunn, D. D.
Ex-Pres. G. F. Magoun, D. D. Rev. R. G. McNiece, D. D.
Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts.

With a large number of noted men and women as associate editors. It should be in every home and every library.

PRICE: Single numbers, . . . $.25
Yearly subscription, . . . 2.50

Published by
WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
The Temple, Chicago, Ill.

A SPLENDID OFFER.

After careful deliberation it has been decided to make the following very liberal offer to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL:

Fully believing that it would be one of the greatest aids to our cause, as has been said again and again in these columns, if THE UNION SIGNAL were more generally read, and being unable to personally canvass all the territory of all the local unions, nearly 10,000 of which are scattered over this country, and desiring your help in this direction, the proposition here outlined is made to all ages and sexes. It is a very fine opportunity for you to secure a valuable and beautiful New Year's gift, if you do not secure it before Christmas.

NOTE.—To any one, young or old, readers of "Aunt Jane's Cozy Corner" included, who will send us a club of eight new subscribers at one dollar each, we will forward promptly one of our beautiful W. C. T. U. solid silver after-dinner coffee souvenir spoons. These spoons have the die of the Crusade Church at Hillsboro, Ohio, imprinted in the bowl; Miss Willard's picture embowered in the National floral emblem, the trailing arbutus, on the handle, while the top of the handle is surmounted by the world belted with the white ribbon. The back of the handle has the World's floral emblem, the water lily, and the initials of the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. It is both beautiful and valuable, being of solid sterling silver.

REMEMBER, we will send an after-dinner coffee spoon, polished or oxidized, for eight subscribers at one dollar a year.

FOR TEN subscribers at one dollar each, we will send a similar spoon with gilded bowl.

FOR TWELVE subscribers we will send a tea spoon of the same design, or with the Temple in the bowl, instead of the Crusade Church.

FOR FIFTEEN subscribers at one dollar each, we will send a teaspoon with gilded bowl.

FOR EIGHTEEN subscribers at one dollar each we will send an orange spoon, polished or oxidized, with the Temple or the Crusade Church in the bowl.

FOR TWENTY subscribers at one dollar each, we will send an orange spoon with gilded bowl.

This offer is open until January 1st, 1893.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

WHAT THEY SAY OF THE REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA WHICH MANY HAVE BOUGHT.

In the ordinary course of business a newspaper receives many letters from its subscribers and others, and many containing inquiries, requests, congratulations and other evidences of an interest in their paper. Of late this correspondence has been largely added to by the receipt of many strong letters extolling the merits of the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA which our readers have been so fortunate as to obtain at the very low figure and reasonable terms which we offer. These letters come from every state in the Union and all tell one tale, that of pleasure at receiving this grand work, which they could not well afford to be without even at a higher price. Elsewhere we print a few of these letters received. This offer is to continue for a limited period only, and you should avail yourself of it now if you have not already done so.

WOMAN'S TEMP. PUB. ASS'N,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE
Total Abstinence Life Association
OF AMERICA.

WOULD YOU LIKE

To attend the World's Fair at our expense, and to read, free of charge, for one year, our paper, the "TOTAL ABSTAINER"? If so, please send your name and address to this office for further particulars.

902-905 Royal Insurance Bldg.,
165-173 Jackson Street,
CHICAGO, ILL.

GEN. W. F. SINGLETON, - President.
REV. A. J. JUTKINS, - Vice-President.
A. BONNELL, - - - - Secretary.
S. M. SINGLETON, - - Treasurer.
E. S. ATWOOD, - - - Medical Director
J. D. KNAPP, - - - Supt. Agencies

SPECIAL FEATURES.

Every policy holder is positively a total abstainer from alcoholic beverages.
This is the ONLY Company that does not insure the drinker.
And is, therefore, the only Company in which teetotalers should be insured.
Its risks are unquestionably the best.
Its death-rate for 1891 was over 50 per cent below the average mortality of all other companies.

It has the lowest expenses—only $2.20 per $1,000 insurance for 1891.
It has the lowest average premium charge.
No premiums are required in old age.
Policy contract simple, definite, equitable and limited as to cost.
Its life policies have cash and paid-up values after probable life.
It has an adequate reserve fund.
Expenses of management limited to $3.00 per $1,000 insurance per annum.

FINANCIAL EXHIBIT.

Number of policy holders,	5,500
Guarantee Fund,	$ 92,000.00
Amount paid to beneficiaries,	210,000.00
Insurance in force,	11,000,000.00

COMPARISON FOR 1891.

All old Line Companies averaged per $1,000 insurance,	Death Claims $14.55	Expenses $15.07
Total Abstinence Life Ass'n averaged per $1,000 insurance,	" 5.65	" 2.20

AGENTS WANTED
Address A. BONNELL, Secretary.

POLITICS AND RELIGION do not go "hand in hand" but wherever you find a careful housekeeper and tidy home, you will find a Hartman Flexible Wire Mat at the outer door.
HARTMAN MANUFACTURING CO., Beaver Falls, Pa.
Branches: 102 Chambers St., New York; 508 State St.; Chicago; 51 and 53 S. Forsyth St., Atlanta, Ga. Catalogue and testimonials mailed free.
Our Mats have brass tag attached stamped "Hartman."

TOBACCO HABIT

HILL'S CHLORIDE OF GOLD Tablets will completely destroy the desire for Tobacco in any form in from 3 to 5 days. Perfectly harmless, cause no sickness, and may be given in a cup of tea or coffee, without the knowledge of the patient, who will voluntarily stop Smoking or Chewing in a few days.

For sale by all first-class druggists, or sent by mail on receipt of $1.00. Ask for HILL'S Tablets, and take no others.
Particulars free by mail. Address THE OHIO CHEMICAL CO., 51, 53, and 55 Opera Block, LIMA, O.

EASILY CURED

IMPERIAL DRIVING BIT.

Positively cures tongue-lolling, prevents side-pulling. With this Bit the most vicious, unmanageable horse can be driven by a lady. It does not annoy a tender mouth. Sample Bit sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of price. No. 16, in Fine Nickel Plate, $2. No. 17, in Fine X C Plate or Japan, $1. Satisfaction guaranteed. IMPERIAL BIT & SNAP CO. 672 Wis.-st. Racine, Wis

DR. BRINKERHOFF'S
PILE COMPOUND

Has been in constant use for 15 years. A certain class of cases treated successfully at their homes. All we ask for it is an investigation and trial.

CHALMERS, IND., May 22, 1892.
DR. BRINKERHOFF, Chicago, Ill.:
Your Compound has cured me. I can recommend it highly.
WM. BURNS.

References:—A. M. Billings, Pres. Home Nat'l Bank, Chicago; J. B. Harris, M.D., Helena, Mont.
Pamphlet Reference Card (60 names) and Symptom Blank (by mail) 10 cents. Address,
W. C. BRINKERHOFF, M.D.,
McVicker's Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

HEADQUARTERS FOR LOW PRICES!
SCALES OF EVERY VARIETY.
A 1,000 Articles Less than Wholesale Prices.

Carriages, Buggies, Wagons, Carts, Sleighs, Harness, Safes, Sewing Machines, Blacksmiths' Tools, Bone Mills, Feed Mills, Cider Mills, Corn Shellers, Feed Cutters, Lawn Mowers, Land Rollers, Road Plows, Dump Carts, Steel Scrapers, Sinks, Fanning Mills, Stoves, Kettles, Jack Screws, Hand Carts, Wire Fence, Letter Presses, Coffee and Spice Mills, Guns, Pistols, Bicycles, Tricycles, Cash Drawers, Clothes Wringers, Meat Choppers, Trucks, Lathes, Engines, Watches, Organs, Pianos, Etc.
Send for free Catalogue and see how to save Money.
151 S. Jefferson St., CHICAGO SCALE CO., Chicago, Ill.

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU DO IT FOR THE MONEY. $12 Buys a $65.00 Improved Oxford Singer Sewing Machine; perfect working reliable, finely finished, adapted to light and heavy work, with a complete set of the latest improved attachments free. Each machine guaranteed for 5 years. Buy direct from our factory, and save dealers and agents profit. Send for FREE CATALOGUE.
OXFORD MFG. COMPANY, DEP'T 20, CHICAGO, ILL.

ONLY 10% ABOVE FACTORY COST
$8.87 buys a $65.00 Singer Style Machine.
$18.98 buys Highest Grade modern style machine in the world. 25 different styles at intermediate prices. Warranted 10 years.
We are the only manufacturers selling machines direct. Send for catalogue C50
Terms for securing a sewing machine FREE
CHICAGO SEWING MACHINE CO. Chicago, Ill.

BAKER'S COCOA.
ABSOLUTELY PURE. Unlike the Dutch Process, no Alkalies or Dyes used.

VOSE & SON'S PIANOS
EXCEL IN BEAUTY, TONE AND TOUCH.

Piso's Remedy for Catarrh is the Best, Easiest to Use, and Cheapest.
CATARRH
Sold by Druggists or sent by mail. 50c. E. T. Hazeltine, Warren, Pa.

FAT PEOPLE

YOU can reduce your weight permanently from 10 to 15 pounds a month at home, secretly, without starving, sickness or injury, by the use of
DR. CLARKE'S HOME TREATMENT.
Perfected in many years' practice. Causes no Wrinkles or Flabbiness. Stout Abdomens, Difficult Breathing, relieved by sure scientific methods. No experiments. Guaranteed. Best References. Price within reach of all. Write today. Positive proofs and testimonials free.
DR. F. B. CLARKE,
DRAWER 133, CHICAGO, ILL.

PARALYSIS CURED without medicine. Rheumatism, Spinal Diseases and Dropsy easily cured. Address Dr. C. I. THACHER, 6, Central Music Hall, Chicago, for a valuable book FREE to all.

LINCOLN TEA. Guaranteed to cure Constipation Liver and Kidney trouble. Blood and Complexion Purifier. Send for sample. Sold by all Druggists.
McCLURE DRUG CO., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

DEAFNESS AND HEAD NOISES CURED by Peck's Invisible Ear Cushions. Whispers heard Successful when all remedies fail. Sold by F. Hiscox, 853 B'way, N.Y. Write for book of proofs FREE

AGENTS WANTED ON SALARY
or commission, to handle the New Patent Chemical Ink Erasing Pencil. Agents making $50 per week. Monroe Eraser Mf'g. Co., X 213, La Crosse, Wis.

FROM MAINE TO MEXICO.

WHAT EVERYBODY SAYS, MUST BE SO.

Among the hundreds of our readers who have taken advantage of the offer to supply them with a set of the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA at such a phenomenally low figure, and on three months' time, it would be strange, indeed, if very many were not grateful therefor. That they are more than pleased is evinced from the unsolicited testimonials printed below, and which are but a few of the hundreds received. Here is what some of them say:

SOUTH BEDDINGTON, MAINE, Nov. 17.

I received the set of REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA some days ago, and am much pleased with it.

MRS. JOSEPH W. FARNSWORTH.

CELINA, MERCER CO., OHIO, NOV. 12.

I inclose P. O. order for the balance due on the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. I want to say a good word for the work. It is a library of useful knowledge in itself, and should be on the book shelf of every family. It is what I have been wanting for years, and am much pleased with it now that I have got it.

J. R. OLIVER.

TROY, N. Y., NOV. 23.

Have received the 20 volumes REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA, for which many thanks. Will you send me a second set, the same as I have just received for the same price; if so send them, and I will forward the money immediately?

1630 Fifth Ave. MRS. A. A. HAWLEY.

EAST LIVERPOOL, OHIO, Dec. 1.

I find the books very useful, indeed. Think that with care they will last many years, even in the Association Reading Room, where so many have access to them. I am pleased with them.

Sec'y Y. M. C. A. ARTHUR E. GAZELEY.

GREENFIELD, OHIO, Nov. 19.

I acknowledge the receipt of the entire 20 volumes of the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. Am delighted with them, and consider $10 a small sum for such a mine of information.

MRS. T. DEPOY.

HARRIS, TENN., NOV. 17.

The REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA was received some time back, and which I conceive to be worth twice the amount asked.

T. A. TURNER.

SPRINGFIELD, MO., NOV. 17.

I am well pleased with my books; wouldn't take double the amount for them and risk the chance of getting another set.

ANDREW EVANS.

ATLANTA CITY, N. J., Dec. 1.

I send you a postal note for the set of REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. I thought I would rather send the whole, instead of waiting three months. I liked it very much. I want it for the Atlanta City Working Boys' Free Reading-Room. It will make an excellent reference book for them. The print is very good, and I think it remarkably cheap.

MRS. A. S. VALENTINE, Treasurer.

ALLEGHENY, PA., Dec. 2.

Please find inclosed balance due you on my set of REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. Am much pleased with the set, and have talked them up considerably. The Savings Bank is quite unique and pretty.

LAURA CLULY.

18 Marion Ave.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., NOV. 29.

The 20 volumes REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA were duly received and am very much pleased with them. I send you a check in full.

REV. ROBT. GRAHAM.

2417 N. College Ave.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., NOV. 23.

I am in receipt of the 20 volumes REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA ordered. There is certainly a large amount of information in this work for the money.

EDWIN W. RICE, D. D.

Editor The American Sunday-School Union.

O'NEILL, NEB., NOV. 28.

Inclosed find draft for balance due on the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. I am well pleased with the books.

Pres. Elkhorn Valley Bank. BERNARD MCGREEVY.

LAS VEGAS, MEXICO, NOV. 24.

I have received the 20 volumes of the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA, and am much pleased with them.

S. W. CURTIS.

WHY IT IS THE BEST.

THE REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA is revised up to the year 1890. There is no other encyclopedia published that is not from ten to thirty years behind the times. It is true that some of them issue supplements, but these are separate from the encyclopedias proper, and are charged for separately. In other words, all the encyclopedias except the REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA are old, out of date, and to get the latest facts, statistics, etc., you must buy another set of books called "Supplements" or "Annuals."

The REVISED ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA is complete and contains the latest statistics, discoveries, inventions, etc., etc. It is the best encyclopedia for the people of America, because it treats of all matters pertaining to America, from the American standpoint, and gives late information on all subjects.

HERE IS YOUR OPPORTUNITY.

CUT THIS OUT AND SEND TO THE UNION SIGNAL.

PUBLISHERS UNION SIGNAL:

Please deliver to me the entire set of 20 volumes of Revised Encyclopedia Britannica, as above described, together with your Dime Savings Bank, for which I enclose One Dollar, and further agree to remit 10 cents a day (remitting the same monthly) until the remaining $9.00 is fully paid.

Name .....

Postoffice .....

County .....

State .....

On receipt of only One Dollar we will forward to you, charges prepaid, the entire set of 20 volumes, the remaining $9 to be paid at the rate of 10 cents a day, (to be remitted monthly). A beautiful dime savings bank will be sent with the books, in which the dime may be deposited each day. This edition is printed from new, large type on a fine quality of paper, and is strongly bound in heavy manilla paper covers, which with proper care will last a lifetime. Bear in mind that the entire 20 volumes are delivered to your address, with all charges paid to any part of the United States, Mexico and Canada.

This is a special offer made to the subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL, and will remain open until January 1st only.

Publisher's Dep't.

GOOD WORDS FOR OUR DAY.

OUR DAY is one of the very best periodicals which I read. I find it worth while to read it more carefully than any other. It is invaluable to ministers. No other arsenal, among contemporary publications, is so full of strong, sharp weapons for the battle of the Lord. Single lectures of Mr. Cook's are worth several good volumes of Apologetics. OUR DAY is a bright harbinger of the Millennial Day. Cordially yours,

JOHN HENRY BARROWS.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11, 1892.

OUR DAY has been upon our Reading Room tables from its very beginning, and we have a complete set upon our library shelves. It is invaluable to our students, furnishing, as it does, material for the discussion of the live questions and great reforms of our time. No periodical in our extended list is more in demand.

Sincerely yours, JOSEPH L. DANIELS,
Librarian Olivet College.

OLIVET, MICH., Oct. 12, 1892.

The merit of OUR DAY is the merit of Joseph Cook. It deals with live and burning questions in a courageous way. It blinks at nothing, shrinks from nothing, but goes straight forward and says its say on whatever subject demands the attention of the hour. Not all of the views and positions of the publications are acceptable to all. In an age of free thought and free speech this would be too much to expect. But its utterances on whatever questions it speaks are sure to be brave and strong and worthy the careful consideration of whoever is interested in the progress of society and the coming of the kingdom of Christ.

F. A. NOBLE,
Union Park Congregational Church.

CHICAGO, Oct. 18, 1892.

W. C. T. U.

HERE IT IS. WHAT?

WHY, THE BEAUTIFUL

SOUVENIR SPOON

Which we have been preparing for our workers and those making a collection of spoons. Here are our rates for the different styles, all made of Solid Sterling Silver:

Single teaspoon . . .	$2.25;	gilded $2.75
" orange spoon	2.50;	" 3.00
After dinner coffee sp'n	1.50;	" 1.75

Send all orders to

Woman's Tem. Pub. Ass'n,
THE TEMPLE,
Chicago, Ill.

THE WHITE RIBBON HYMNAL.

COMPILED BY

ANNA A. GORDON

OLD—NEW—TESTED—FRESH

OLD because it contains the favorites of White Ribboners everywhere, the songs which have become their watchwords.

NEW because rich treasures of word and song have been prepared for its pages.

TESTED because its hymns have borne the wear and tear of use.

FRESH because it rings clear and sweet for the home, the nation, and the truth of God.

It is divided into the following sections:

Devotional Meetings	Mass Meetings
Evangelistic Services	Prohibition Rallies
Gospel Temperance Meetings	Special Days
Memorial Services	Closing Hymns

Responsive Scripture Readings

PRICE, $ .35.

Woman's Temperance Publishing Association,
The Temple, Chicago.

Signal Notes.

THE number of all kinds of distilleries opened last year in the United States was two thousand one hundred and six.

ABOUT one hundred of the women at Harvard Annex are graduates of other colleges. One hundred and three courses are open to them.

THE Danes are wise in their day and generation, for it is said that all, high and low, rich and poor, teach their daughters to be self-supporting.

THE Wine and Spirit Gazette evidently understands the situation to-day when it says, "Prohibition and liquor selling are natural enemies."

IN England, inebriate asylums are left entirely to private enterprise, a much less satisfactory way to care for drunkards than in state institutions.

A SCOTTISH paper says that the definition of "double-decker" in America is "a man who tries to carry a saloon on one shoulder and a Sunday-school on the other."

NORWAY has two hundred and fifty officers and four hundred soldiers in the Salvation Army, and Sweden has eleven hundred soldiers and five hundred and fifty officers, all the work of one brave woman.

IT IS the testimony of Mr. Dolgoff, a noted Russian novelist and translator, that no other nation of the civilized world has done as much as the American to assist Russia during her famine distress and that a solid foundation of mutual friendliness has been laid.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK, than whom no one is more capable of intelligent observation, believes that the church fair is often the primary department of gambling. When one considers how frequently the raffle in one form or another is seen at such fairs, the statement is probably only too true.

THE Vienna Working-women's Union has had twenty-five years of active existence and has had twelve thousand pupils in attendance on its schools. They have helped hundreds to become bread-winners and to get work; from the sewing-school alone over five thousand workers have gone out.

IN Scotland there are twelve thousand, five hundred lunatics of one kind or another, an increase of one hundred and sixteen per cent since 1858, while the population shows an increase of thirty-seven per cent. It goes without saying that the per cent of "drink lunatics" is larger than of any other.

ONE of the flower missions at the North End, Boston, is conducted differently from most others in that the flowers are carried to the homes instead of the hospitals, and the distributors are girls from the same district. The ladies in charge say that the best result of the work is seen in the influence it has on these girls.

A CONGREGATIONAL conference in Massachusetts recommends that temperance prayer-meetings be held, not spasmodically but regularly, to be regarded as much a matter of course as the missionary meetings. Would there were many conferences who would not only recommend but carry out such sentiments.

THE testimony of all scholars as to their religious faith is always prized. A friend once asked Tennyson what he thought of Jesus Christ. They were walking in the garden at the time. Tennyson stopped by a beautiful flower and said simply. "What the sun is to that flower Jesus Christ is to my soul. He is the sun of my soul."

THE result of the examinations in Wales by the London University of Arts and Science speaks well for the women of that principality. Of the forty-one successful candidates, twenty were women. It is hoped by 1894 that Wales will possess a university of her own and it will probably contain a larger proportion of women than any other institution of its kind.

What is Compound Oxygen?

A modern medical agent with air for its base. This is greatly enriched with Oxygen, the life-giving and sustaining element of air. Then the whole is magnetized. Finally these subtle elements are so combined and confined that they may be transported and released at will.

Now what will this do? In the light of 23 years of wide and widening experience, we say briefly—relieve and cure an incredible number of physical ills. Colds, Catarrh and Consumption; Asthma, Neuralgia and Rheumatism; Dyspepsia, Debility and Nervous Prostration are among the more numerous and important.

Over 60,000 carefully recorded cases are in our office and at your disposal, or a book of 200 pages is yours for the asking.

We have proof for those who doubt, and relief for those who suffer. Will you have it? Address DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, or Chicago, San Francisco, New York, and Toronto, Ont.

"Why is it that people do not learn that Ivory Soap prevents chapped hands? After washing the hands with Ivory the skin is soft and pleasant to the touch, while with almost every other soap, it is harsh and uncomfortable."

"Exactly. But fashion affects imported articles. So it buys imported soap. Of course it costs more. This one fact is regarded as convincing proof of its superior quality. If it cost less it would not be accepted as a gift. Instead of comparing results people judge by cost. But it is not the soap which costs; it is the 3000 miles of distance and the import duties."

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

A WORD TO THE WISE.
CERTAIN ADVERTISEMENTS FROM TRADE RIVALS, who fear the phenomenal success of

Van Houten's Cocoa

in America, contain innuendoes against it, and appeal to the authority of Dr. SYDNEY RINGER, Professor of Medicine at University College, London, Author of the Standard "Handbook of Therapeutics."

This eminent physician ACTUALLY writes as follows:—

"From the careful analyses of Professor ATTFIELD and others, I am satisfied that Messrs. VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is in no way injurious to health, and that it is decidedly more nutritious than other Cocoas.—It is certainly "Pure" and highly digestible.

The quotations in certain advertisements from my book on Therapeutics are quite misleading and cannot possibly apply to VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA."

The false reflection on VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA is thus effectually repelled and the very authority cited to injure it, has thereby been prompted to give it a very handsome testimonial.

GUARANTEED.

WILL CURE YOUR CATARRH
Hay Fever, Catarrhal Deafness, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Headache, La-Grippe, Etc.,
Or Money Refunded!
We mean just what we say. Medicine enough to last four months with each medicator. Price complete by mail $1.50.

The medicine is put on sponge in enlarged part of medicator. Insert twin tubes in nostrils, single tube in mouth, then blow; thus your lungs force highly medicated air into all parts of the head and throat.

AGENTS ARE REAPING A RICH HARVEST.
Send for terms, testimonials and further particulars.
Ramey & Co., 85 Dearborn street, Chicago.

We have thousands of testimonials like these for proof that we can cure all head and throat troubles. Write us. Ladies make good agents. No experience required.

A Physician of 26 Years' Practice, says:

I have used your Medicator in my practice, and I know of no instrument so good for the introduction of Inhalent Medicines to the nose, throat and lungs. By your instrument the patient can send the medicine to the lungs, throat and all parts of the head. It is very useful in the treatment of Catarrh, La Grippe and kindred troubles. T. M. TRIPLETT, M. D.

CHICAGO, ILL., Jan. 10, 1892.

RAMEY & CO., 85 Dearborn St., Chicago.

I have been using one of your Catarrh Cures, with Medicator, and am well pleased with it. It has performed a wonderful cure for me for an aggravated case of catarrh long standing. I consider your method of curing Catarrh, La Grippe, etc., as the best known treatment, and cheerfully recommend it.

C. S. NELLIS, 6240 Yale St.
With the U. S. Express Co.

7% CHICAGO MORTGAGES.

For sale on improved Real Estate, worth double the amount of mortgage.

THOS. J. BOLGER & CO.,
99 Washington St.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

HOLIDAY RATES TO CANADIAN POINTS

In addition to the half-rate Canadian excursions December 20, 21 and 22, the Wabash Line will sell tickets from Chicago to all Canadian points at a fare and one-third for the round trip, December 23, 24, 25, 30 and 31, and January 1, good to return until January 3. Office, 201 Clark Street.

Prejudice often acts as a bar to prevent a man from sampling a good thing. Prejudice has to-day caused many people in this country to drink an inferior table water, when the best on earth can be had for asking, viz.:

Manitou

One trial will convince you of the truth of this statement, and if you take it once you will take it always.

Unexcelled for Family, Club and Restaurant use. packed in cases of 100 Pints and 48 Pints.
Convenient forms for Dealer and Consumer
Address for literature
Manitou Mineral Water Co., Manitou Springs, Colo.
Sold by all first-class groceries. Also by all druggists.

FINELY ILLUSTRATED BOOK

descriptive of Florida and the Southern country, mailed free to any address upon receipt of ten cents in stamps. Charles L, Stone, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad, room 415 First National Bank Building, Chicago.

A VERY POPULAR TRAIN

on the CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RAILWAY leaves Chicago, daily, at 10 P. M. It is called

"THE BIG FIVE"

is only one day out, and passengers arrive at Denver, Pueblo or Colorado Springs early the second morning.

The "ROCK ISLAND" has become a popular Colorado Line, and the train above referred to is Vestibuled, and carries the "ROCK ISLAND'S" excellent Dining Car Service.

JNO. SEBASTIAN, G. T. & P. A.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

STOP-OVER PRIVILEGES DISCONTINUED

To avoid manipulation and illegitimate use of its tickets, the Wabash Railroad Company has found it necessary to discontinue the granting of stop-over privileges on all kinds and classes of tickets, and after January 1st, 1893, passengers will be obliged to purchase tickets from point to point. The new arrangement, however, which will be fully explained by any of the Company's Agents, will be found to be equally as convenient to the traveling public as the old, while the Company will be enabled to protect itself from imposition.

Free Admission Tickets to the World's Fair are being offered by the Chicago Scale Company. Send them your address.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

Always a fierce — often an apparently hopeless struggle, is that which we are daily waging ourselves and see going on around us on every hand. We should be guarded and strengthened by the triple armor of health, hope and energy, to be successful. Many a brave warrior on the high road to victory has been stricken down by disease, his accumulated means exhausted in vain efforts to recover health; his wife and little ones deprived of their protector and supporter, left penniless at his death. He feels life waning, gradually slipping from his grasp, and with the dread consciousness and the appalling knowledge that his dear ones must face approaching penury, he must meet the King of Terrors. A sad picture, but one not overdrawn in the slightest. Yet there is help for him if he but knew it. Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda will restore his waning strength, renew his wasted flesh, check the malady that is consuming him, if it be one within the scope of this medicine of many uses. It is a food—it is a tonic—it is an eradicator of Scrofula and the seeds of Consumption. It has won the high regard of physicians not only by the signal results it accomplishes in cases of chronic disease, but also by its palatable qualities. It is in fact a medicine of the highest rank, and is so esteemed.

HOLIDAY EXCURSIONS VIA PENNSYLVANIA LINES.

December 24th, 25th, 26th and 31st, 1892, and January 1st and 2d, 1893, excursion tickets will be sold from stations on the Pennsylvania Lines West of Pittsburgh to points on those lines in Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky and West Virginia. Return coupon valid until January 3d.

The "new Godey's" for January brings with it a delightful holiday breath. What with "A Christmas Witch," "Yule Tide," "Christmas in Paris" and "Christmas Bells," one feels that the New Year is not "all forlorn" so far as good cheer goes. See their advertisement on another page.

MRS. JONES' FRIENDS.

Carrie.—How I pity poor Mrs. Jones; what a thoughtless husband she has."

Minnie.—"Is that so? I always thought him 'the pink of perfection'."

Carrie.—"Away from home he is, but he never lightens his wife's cares any, and seems to think she never tires; why, all last spring, when it was so muddy he wouldn't buy one of those Hartman Wire Mats, that had such a run at Clark's hardware store, and whenever I called on Mrs. Jones it seemed as though she had a broom or a mop in her hand cleaning up after her children or her husband."

Minnie.—It does make a big difference, no mistake, about the housework; since Charlie bought a Hartman Mat for our front door, I haven't had to sweep half as much as before, and that fearful smell which we used to endure when we had a cocoa mat is done away with."

Carrie.—"One thing sure, the Hartman Flexible Steel Wire Mats are ahead of anything I ever saw; they wear forever, will not hold vermin or breed disease, and are really a sanitary necessity."

Moral: Be sure when you purchase, your mat has brass tag attached stamped "Hartman."

DO NOT CIRCULATE

UNIV. OF MD. COLLEGE PARK
a3143002937393 56
3 1430 02937393 5